1 2 3
4
5
6
7
8	UNITED STATES	DISTRICT COURT,
9	WESTERN DISTRIC	CT OF WASHINGTON
10	AT SE	CATTLE
11
	BILL WALKER,	BRIEF IN SUPPORT OF MOTION SEEKING
	PLAINTIFF,	DECLARATORY AND INJUNCTIVE RELIEF IN
	VS.	FINDING UNCONSTITUTIONAL THE FAILURE OF CONGRESS TO CALL A CONVENTION TO
	THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA,	PROPOSE AMENDMENTS UPON RECEIPT OF
	Defendant	PROPER NUMBER OF APPLICATIONS BY THE
		SEVERAL STATES AS PRESCRIBED IN ARTICLE V OF THE UNITED STATES
		CONSTITUTION.
		C. A. No.

_
3	TABLE OF AUTHORITIES	. 7
4	ARTICLE CITATIONS	. 7
5	SUPREME COURT CITATIONS	. 8
6	OTHER COURT CITIATIONS
7	GENERAL REFERENCE CITATIONS
8	STATUTORY AND CONGRESSIONAL CITATIONS
9	CONGRESSIONAL RECORD CITATIONS
10	APPLICATIONS
11	RECESSIONS
12	MISCELLANOUS CITATIONS
13	INTRODUCTION
14	PURPOSES OF MOTION AND ORDER
15	ARGUMENTS SUPPORTING JUDICIABLITY OF ACTION
16	JURISDICTION
17	VENUE
18	REMEDY SOUGHT
19	STATEMENT OF FACTS
20	STANDING OF PLANTIFF TO BRING SUIT
21	INTRODUCTION
22	REQUIREMENTS OF STANDING ESTABLISHED BY THE COURT
23	FEDERAL STANDING: THE CAPLAN OPINION
24	SUMMATION
25	SPECIFIC ISSUES OF STANDING
26	ISSUE OF STANDING (1): DENIAL OF RIGHT TO VOTE
27	ISSUE OF STANDING (2): DENIAL OF RIGHT TO ASSOCIATE
28	ISSUE OF STANDING (3): DENIAL OF RIGHT OF REDRESS
29	ISSUE OF STANDING (4): VIOLATION OF THE DOCTRINE OF SEPARATION OF POWER
30	ISSUE OF STANDING (5): DENIAL OF RIGHT TO SEEK PUBLIC OFFICE
31	ISSUE OF STANDING (6): VIOLATION OF CONSTITUTION PER SE
32	THE TRANSGRESSION OF FAIRCHILD
33 34	THE OVERLOOKED IMPERATIVES
3 4 35	THE COURT JUSTIFICATION OF STANDINGTHE SUIT AND EQUITY ISSUE
36	THE EQUAL PROTECTION EFFECT
30 37	THE STIPULATIONS OF STANDING
3 1 38	THE RECALCITRANT GATEKEEPER
30 39	STANDING: THE FINAL BASTION OF PLESSY?
40	THE PER SE ASSERTION—SHUTTLESWORTH AND BROWN
41	THE POLITICAL QUESTION ISSUE
42	THE OBVIOUS PLOY
43	A TEXTUALLY DEMONSTRABLE CONSTITUTIONAL COMMITMENT
44	A LACK OF JUDICIALLY DISCOVERABLE STANDARDS
45	AN INITIAL POLICY OF CLEARLY NONJUDICIAL DISCRETION
46	A LACK OF RESPECT DUE COORDINATE BRANCHES OF GOVERNMENT
47	UNQUESTIONING ADHERENCE TO A POLITICAL DECISION ALREADY MADE
48	THE QUESTION OF POTENTIAL EMBARRASSMENT
49	THE SPEECH AND DEBATE CLAUSE—A PROTECTION, NOT AN IMMUNITY
50	SUMMATION OF JUDICIABLE ARGUMENTS
51	CONSTITUTIONAL CONVENTION OR CONVENTION TO PROPOSE AMENDMENTS: WHAT'S THE	100
52	DIFFERENCE?	206
53	CONSTITUTIONAL CONVENTION HISTORY
54	INTRODUCTION
55	EVENTS LEADING UP TO THE CONVENTION OF 1787
56	THE CONSTITUTIONAL CONVENTION OF 1787 AND THE GREAT COMPROMISE
57	INTRODUCTION TO THE AMENDATORY PROVISION
_ ,

MAY 29JUNE 11: THE VIRGINIA PLAN	221
JUNE 29JULY 23: MISCELLANEOUS CONCERNS	225
JULY 26AUGUST 6: COMMITTEE OF DETAIL	228
AUGUST 30SEPTEMBER 10: ARTICLE XIX	232
SEPTEMBER 12SEPTEMBER 17: ARTICLE V	236
SUMMARY OF RECORD REGARDING PRIMARY ISSUES	242
AMENDMENT (SINGULAR) VS. AMENDMENTS (PLURAL)	246
	-
CONTRACTS—IMPLIED AND EXPRESSED POWERS
	CONGRESSIONAL PROPOSALS ATTEMPTING TO LIMIT ARTICLE V LEGISLATIVE HISTORY.  POLITICAL PRE-CONDITIONS FOR CALLING A CONVENTION TO PROPOSE AMENDMENTS. INTRODUCTION THE NECESSARY AND PROPER CLAUSE PRE-CONDITION THE SINGLE SUBJECT PRE-CONDITION INTRODUCTION. THE BASIS OF THE SAME SUBJECT PRE-CONDITION THE ERRONEOUS HISTORIC BASIS OF THE SAME SUBJECT PRE-CONDITION. A BRIEF SUMMATION OF THE HISTORY OF ARTICLE V. THE RIGHT OF DISCUSSION ISSUE LEGISLATIVE ISSUES REGARDING SAME SUBJECT PRE-CONDITION. INSUFFICIENT APPLICATIONS PRE-CONDITION THE CONTEMPORARY PRE-CONDITION THE CONTEMPORARY PRE-CONDITION THE EX POST FACTO "PROBLEM". THE 27" AMENDMENT "PROBLEM" THE 27" AMENDMENT "PROBLEM" THE PROTECTIONISM MOVEMENT PRE-CONDITION CONGRESSIONAL CALL SANS STATE APPLICATIONS PRE-CONDITION THE PROTECTIONISM MOVEMENT PRE-CONDITION THE RATIFICATION "VETO" PRE-CONDITION THE THE LIMIT RATIFICATION "PROBLEM" SUMMATION ON PRE-CONDITIONS THE INBULITY OF STATES TO LIMIT AN ARTICLE V CONVENTION DECISION AND RECESSION INTRODUCTION THE IMPORTANCE OF THE "LITTLE" WORDS DECISION RECESSION THE TREATY OF PARIS AND THE CONVENTION INTRODUCTION THE TREATY OF PARIS AND THE CONVENTION UNTRODUCTION WHAT IS A SUBJECT? WHAT IS A CUTIZEN? WHAT IS A CONTRACT?

1	CONGRESSIONAL POWER AND TREATIES	408
2	THE TREATY OF PARIS-IMPLIED AND EXPRESSED POWERS?	411
3	ARTICLE I—THE CRUX OF THE CONTRACT	413
4	EXECUTORY OR EXECUTED?	413
5	IMPLIED OR EXPRESSED POWERS	418
6	THE GREAT SEPARATOR	422
7	THE TERMS AND CONDITIONS OF INDEPENDENCE	424
8	THE NON-SOVEREIGN CONGRESS	431
9	THE SUPREME COURT: CONGRESSIONAL SOVEREIGNTY THROUGH THE BACK DOOR?	432
10	THE COURT RULINGS: AN ACCIDENTAL BACK DOOR?	435
11	THE EARLIER DECISIONS	437
12	COLEMAN: THE "FINAL" WORD?	445
13	THE EFFECT OF COLEMAN	451
14	WHAT'S WRONG WITH THIS PICTURE?	452
15	THE INFINITE WELL
16	THE 21 ST AMENDMENT "PROBLEM"	479
17	THE LIMITED POWERS OF THE COURT
18	THE CONVENTION AND THE AMENDMENTS	491
19	INTRODUCTION	491
20	THE NINTH AMENDMENT	492
21	THE TENTH AMENDMENT
22	THE COURTS AND THE 10 TH AMENDMENT
23	THE STATES, THE 10 TH AMENDMENT AND THE CONVENTION	509
24	SUMMATION
25	THE FOURTEENTH AMENDMENT
26	INTRODUCTION
27	IMMUNITY AND PRIVILEGE CLAUSE
28	THE APPORTIONMENT ARGUMENT OF SENATOR TYDINGS
29	COLEMAN, APPORTIONMENT, AND THE 14 TH AMENDMENT
30	REYNOLDS V. SIMSTHE DISSENT OF JUSTICE HARLAN
31	THE 14 TH AMENDMENT, SECTION 2 "PROBLEM"
32	WHAT'S GOOD FOR THE GOOSE
33	THE EFFECT OF SECTION 2 ON THE CONVENTION CALL
34	CONSTITUTIONAL PROVISIONS EFFECTING CONVENTION AND CONGRESS
35	THE POWER OF INTERNAL AFFAIRS
36	EQUAL PROTECTION CLAUSE AND "FILLING IN THE DETAILS"
30 37	THE FREEDOM OF DEBATE ISSUE
3 1 38	OTHER INTERNAL POWERS OF THE CONVENTION CREATED BY THE CONSTITUTION.
30 39	ELECTION PROVISIONS
	INTERNAL POWERS
40	LIMITATIONS, IMMUNITIES OR PROHIBITIONS
41	THE STATES' RESPONSIBILITY IN PREPARING FOR THE CONVENTION
42	THE MONEY TRAP
43
44	THE CONGRESSIONAL APPROPRIATION ALTERNATIVE
45	THE COURT APPROPRIATION ALTERNATIVE
46	THE CONVENTION APPROPRIATION ALTERNATIVE
47	THE CONVENTION CREDIT CARD ALTERNATIVE
48	THE STATE APPROPRIATION ALTERNATIVE
49	SUMMATION
50	THE "VIRTUAL" CONVENTION
51	CONVENTION VOTING PROCEEDURES BY THE STATES
52	ONE STATE, ONE VOTE
53	ONE VOTE, ONE DELEGATE
54	THE EQUALITY OF THE STATES
55	THE EFFECT OF SECTION TWO, $14^{ ext{TH}}$ AMENDMENT
56	PASSAGE OF AN AMENDMENT PROPOSALTHE PROPER RATIO
57	THE UNANIMOUS VOTE
58	THE THREE-QUARTERS VOTE
59	THE MAJORITY VOTE	640

1	THE FINAL OPTION
2	THE QUORUM ISSUE	645
3	COUNTING THE PENDING APPLICATIONS	649
4	THE QUESTION OF SINGULARITY	650
5	AN APPLICATION IS AN APPLICATION	654
6	STATE APPLICATIONS FOR A CONVENTION	658
7	INTRODUCTION
8	THE BIG PICTURE
9	TABLE 1-STATE APPLICATIONS FOR A CONVENTION
10	THE RECESSION MYTH
11	TABLE 2-STATES APPLYING FOR A CONVENTION
12	TABLE 3-STATE RECESSIONS
13	THE "GENERAL" AND "SPECIFIC" APPLICATIONS
14	THE "SAME SUBJECT" MYTH
15	COMBINING GENERAL AND SPECIFIC APPLICATIONS
16	TABLE 4—GENERAL APPLICATIONS, NON SPECIFIC
17	TABLE 5-GENERAL APPLICATIONS, NON SPECIFIC
18	TABLE 6-SAME SUBJECT APPLICATIONS, PART I
19	TABLE 6-SAME SUBJECT APPLICATIONS, PART II
20	TABLE 7—CAPLAN MATERIAL, PRE-1900 APPLICATIONS
21	TABLE 8-PRE-1912 APPLICATIONS INCLUDING CAPLAN MATERIAL
22	TABLE 9-SAME SUBJECT APPLICATIONS INCLUDING CAPLAN, PART I
23	TABLE 9—SAME SUBJECT APPLICATIONS INCLUDING CAPLAN, PART II
24	CONGRESS' FAILURE TO CALL A CONVENTION
25	SUMMATION
26	THE COURT'S DILEMMA
27	CONCLUSION
28	APPENDIX AEVIDENCE OF PERSONAL INJURY IN SUPPORT OF STANDING
29	EXHIBIT 1
30	LETTER FROM ATTORNEY GENERAL OF WASHINGTON TO PLAINTIFF, MAY 9, 1994	697
31	EXIBIT 2	699
32	WASHINGTON STATE AGO OPINION NO. 4, 1983	699
33	EXHIBIT 3	706
34	TEXT OF PROPOSED INITIATIVE SUBMITTED BY PLAINTIFF	706
35	EXHIBIT 4	709
36	LETTERS TO WASHINGTON STATE SECRETARY OF STATE MUNRO BY PLAINTIFF	709
37	STIPULATION REGARDING MATERIAL REFERRED TO IN OCT.19 LETTER
38	APPENDIX BEXAMPLES OF VARIOUS APPLICATIONS FILED BY THE STATES FOR A
39	CONVENTION	715
40	GENERAL APPLICATION
41	GENERAL APPLICATION WITH REFERENCE TO REASON FOR GENERAL CONVENTION	_
42	APPLICATION FOR A CONVENTION FOR A SPECIFIC REASON
43	APPLICATION FOR A SPECIFIC TOPIC OR SUBJECT ONLY
44	APPLICATION FOR SPECIFIC SUBJECT WITH A RECESSION STIPULATION
45	APPENDIX C1973 REPORT OF THE ABA SPECIAL CONSTITUTIONAL CONVENTION STUDY
45 46	COMMITTEE
47	RECOMMENDATION
48	INTRODUCTION
40 49	ISSUES PRESENTED
50	RECOMMENDATIONS
51	DISCUSSION OF RECOMMENDATIONS
52	CONCLUSION
53	CITATIONS
54	APPENDIX A
55	APPENDIX B
56	PART ONE: A TABULATION OF APPLICATIONS BY STATES AND SUBJECTS
57	PART TWO: A HISTORY OF APPLICATIONS
58	BIBLIOGRAPHY	. 82

1	APPENDIX DREBUTTAL OF 1973 REPORT OF THE ABA SPECIAL CONSTITUTIONAL
2	CONVENTION STUDY COMMITTEE	727
3	INTRODUCTION	727
4	THE ABA REPORT PROPOSALS	728
5	CONCLUSIONS AND RECOMMENDATIONS OF THE ABA REPORT	729
6	CONGRESS MAY REGULATE THE CONVENTION	729
7	REBUTTAL
8	CURRENT APPLICATIONS DO NOT SATISFY THE TWO-THIRDS REQUIREMENT	732
9	REBUTTAL
10	LEGISLATION NECESSARY FOR SAFEGUARDS	732
11	REBUTTAL
12	LEGISLATION PROTECTS THE CONSTITUTION	737
13	REBUTTAL	_
14	SPECIFIC RECOMMENDATIONGENERAL AND LIMITED CONVENTIONS
15	REBUTTAL
16	STATES MUST CONCUR ON A SUBJECT BEFORE CONGRESS MUST CALL A CONVENTION
17	REBUTTAL
18	THE ROLE OF THE EXECUTIVE
19	REBUTTAL	_
20	LIMITED JUDICIAL REVIEW OF CONGRESSIONAL ACTION REGARDING A CONVENTION
21	REBUTTAL	_
22	DELEGATES ELECTED TO THE CONVENTION
23	REBUTTAL	_
24	CONGRESSIONAL "POWER" AND THE CONVENTION
25	REBUTTAL
26	THE HISTORIC PERSPECTIVE OF THE ABA REPORT
27	REBUTTAL	_
28	A STATE VETO?
29	REBUTTAL
30	ONLY AMENDMENTS ON SINGLE SUBJECTS
31	REBUTTAL
32	APPENDIX BREBUTTAL	772

TABLE OF AUTHORITIES 1 2 ARTICLE CITATIONS 3 4 5 ABA Special Constitutional Convention Study Comm., Amendment of the 6 Constitution By the Convention Method Under Article V (1974) referred to in S. REP No. 135, $99^{th}$ Cong., $1^{st}$ Sess., (1985) 7 Bond & Engdahl, THE CONSTITUTIONAL CONVENTION, The Duties and Powers of 8 9 Congress Regarding Conventions For Proposing Amendments", Nat'l. Legal Center 10 for the Public Interest, (1987) 11 Buckwalter, Constitutional Conventions & State Legislators, 20 J. Pub. L. 543, 12 548 (1971) 13 Caplan, Constitutional Brinksmanship: Amending the Constitution by National Convention, (1988) 14 Connely, Amending the Constitution: Is This Any Way to Call for a 15 16 Constitutional Convention?, 22 ARIZ. L. REV. (1980) 17 Ervin, Proposed Legislation to Implement the Convention Method of Amending the Constitution, 66 MICH. L. REV. (1968) 18 ANTIFEDERALIST No. 49 19 20 THE FEDERALIST FARMER No. 4 THE FEDERALIST No. 1 21 THE FEDERALIST No. 39 22 23 THE FEDERALIST No. 40 2.4 THE FEDERALIST No. 43 25 THE FEDERALIST No. 47 26 THE FEDERALIST No. 49 2.7 THE FEDERALIST No. 76 28 THE FEDERALIST No. 78 THE FEDERALIST No. 85 29 Kern, A Constitutional Convention Would Threaten the Rights We Have Cherished 30 for 200 Years, 4 Det. C.L. Rev. 1087, 1089-90 (1986) 31 Martig, Amending the Constitution, Article V; The Keystone of the Arch, 35 32 Mich. L. Rev. 1253, 1255 (1937) (citing DOCUMENTS ILLUSTRATIVE OF THE 33 FORMATION OF THE UNION OF THE AMERICAN STATES, H.R. Doc. No. 398, 69th Cong., 34 35 1st Sess. 35 (1927)) PROPOSED PROCEDURES FOR A LIMITED CONSTITUIONAL CONVENTION, AEI Legislative 36

37

Analysis, 98th Congress, 2nd Sess.,(1984)

```
1 Rackoff, "The Monster Approaching the Capital": The effort to Write Economic
```

- 2 Policy into the United States Constitution, 15 AKRON L. REV. 733, 745 (1982)
- 3 Tribe, Issues Raised by Requesting Congress to call a Constitutional
- 4 Convention to Propose a Balanced Budget Amendment, 10 Pac LJ 638-50 (1979)
- 5 Tribe, The 27th Amendment Joins the Constitution, Wall Street Journal, May 13,
- 6 1992, A 15
- 7 Van Sickle, Boughey, "A Lawful and Peaceful Revolution: Article V and
- 8 Congress' Present Duty to Call a Convention for Proposing Amendments", 14 HAM.
- 9 L. REV. (1990)
- 10 Voegler, Amending the Constitution by the Article V Convention Method, 55
- 11 N.D.L. Rev. 355, 359 (1979) (quoting L. Orfield, THE AMENDING OF THE FEDERAL
- 12 CONSTITUTION 1 (1942))
- 13 79-75 Memo. Op. Att'y Gen 390 (1979)
- 14 16 Ops. Of the Office of Legal Council 102 (1992)

17 SUPREME COURT CITATIONS

- 20 Ware v. Hylton, 3 U.S. 199 (1796)
- 21 Hollingsworth v. Virginia, 3 U.S. 378 (1798)
- 22 Calder v. Bull, 3 U.S. 386 (1798)
- 23 United States v. Cooper, 4 U.S. 341 (1800)
- 24 Marbury v. Madison, 5 U.S. 137 (1803)
- 25 United States v. Fisher, 6 U.S. 358 (1805)
- 26 Hepburn v. Ellzey, 6 U.S. 445 (1805)
- 27 Fletcher v. Peck, 10 U.S. 87 (1810)
- 28 Martin v. Hunter's Lessee, 14 U.S. 304 (1816)
- 29 McCulloch v. Maryland, 17 U.S. 316 (1819)
- 30 Trustees v. Woodward, 17 U.S. 518 (1819)
- 31 Farmer's & Mechanics' Bank of Pa. v. Smith, 19 U.S. 131 (1821)
- 32 Gibbons v. Ogden, 22 U.S. 1 (1824)
- 33 Ogden v. Saunders, 25 U.S. 213 (1827)
- 34 Brown v. Maryland, 25 U.S. 419 (1827)
- 35 Foster v. Neilson, 28 U.S. 253 (1829)
- 36 Craig v. Missouri, 29 U.S. 410 (1830)
- 37 State of Rhode Island v. Commonwealth of Massachusetts, 37 U.S. 657 (1838)
- 38 Holmes v. Jennison, 39 U.S. 540 (1840)
- 39 Prigg v. Commonwealth of Pennsylvania, 41 U.S. 539 (1842)

- 1 Pollard v. Hagan, 44 U.S. 212 (1845)
- 2 Cary v. Curtis, 44 U.S. 236 (1845)
- 3 Luther v. Borden, 48 U.S. 1 (1849)
- 4 Reeside v. Walker, 52 U.S. 272 (1851)
- 5 Kennett v. Chambers, 55 U.S. 38 (1852)
- 6 Dodge v. Woolsey, 59 U.S. 331 (1855)
- 7 Gilman v. City of Philadelphia, 70 U.S. 713 (1865)
- 8 Texas v. White, 74 U.S. 700 (1868)
- 9 Ex parte McCardle, 74 U.S. 506 (1869)
- 10 Hepburn v. Griswold, 75 U.S. 603 (1869)
- 11 In re State Tonnage Tax Cases, 79 U.S. 204 (1870)
- 12 Slaughterhouse Cases, 83 U.S. 36 (1872)
- 13 Chicago B&Q Railroad Co. v. Otoe County, 83 U.S. 667 (1872)
- 14 The Township of Pine Grove v. Talcott, 86 U.S. 666 (1874)
- 15 Woodson v. Murdock, 89 U.S. 351 (1874)
- 16 Minor v. Happersett, 90 U.S. 163 (1875)
- 17 Kohl v. United States, 91 U.S. 367 (1875)
- 18 United States v. Cruikshank, 92 U.S. 542 (1876)
- 19 Knote v. United States, 95 U.S. 149 (1877)
- 20 Wheeling, P.& C. Transport Co. v. City of Wheeling, 99 U.S. 273 (1878)
- 21 United States v. Germaine, 99 U.S. 508 (1878)
- 22 Missouri v. Lewis, 101 U.S. 22 (1879)
- 23 Ex parte Siebold, 100 U.S. 371 (1880)
- 24 Ex parte Clarke, 100 U.S. 399 (1880)
- 25 Hall v. State of Wisconsin, 103 U.S. 5 (1880)
- 26 Jarrolt v. Moberly, 103 U.S. 580 (1880)
- 27 Kilbourn v. Thompson, 103 U.S. 168 (1881)
- 28 United States v. Lee, 106 U.S. 196 (1882)
- 29 United States v. Harris, 106 U.S. 629 (1882)
- 30 Escanaba Co. v. Chicago, 107 U.S. 678 (1883)
- 31 United States v. Gale, 109 U.S. 65 (1883)
- 32 Ex parte Yarbrough, 110 U.S. 651 (1884)
- 33 Head Money Cases, 112 U.S. 580 (1884)
- 34 Barbier v. Connolly, 113 U.S. 27 (1884)
- 35 United States v. Price, 116 U.S. 43 (1885)
- 36 Hart v. United States, 118 U.S. 62 (1886)
- 37 Yick Wo v. Hopkins, 118 U.S. 356 (1886)
- 38 Hayes v. State of Missouri, 120 U.S. 68 (1887)
- 39 In re Coy, 127 U.S. 731 (1888)

- 1 Lake County v. Rollins, 130 U.S. 662 (1889)
- 2 In re Loney, 134 U.S. 372 (1890)
- 3 Field v. Clark, 143 U.S. 649 (1892)
- 4 United States v. Ballin, 144 U.S. 1 (1892)
- 5 Virginia v. Tennessee, 148 U.S. 503 (1893)
- 6 Marchant v. Pennsylvania R. Co., 153 U.S. 380 (1894)
- 7 Austin v. United States, 155 U.S. 417 (1894)
- 8 United States v. Realty Company, 163 U.S. 427 (1896)
- 9 Plessy v. Ferguson, 163 U.S. 537 (1896)
- 10 In re Chapman, 166 U.S. 661 (1897)
- 11 Allen v. Smith, 173 U.S. 389 (1899)
- 12 Stearns v. State of Minnesota, 179 U.S. 223 (1900)
- 13 Davis v. Burke, 179 U.S. 399 (1900)
- 14 Burton v. United States, 202 U.S. 344 (1906)
- Williamson v. United States, 207 U.S. 425 (1908)
- 16 Twining v. New Jersey, 211 U.S. 78 (1908)
- 17 Coyle v. Smith, 221 U.S. 559 (1911)
- 18 Pacific States Telephone & Telegraph Co. v. Oregon, 223 U.S. 118 (1912)
- 19 United States v. Mosley, 238 U.S. 383 (1915)
- 20 Missouri Pacific Railway Co. v. Kansas, 248 U.S. 276 (1919)
- 21 State of Rhode Island v. Palmer, 253 U.S. 350 (1920)
- 22 Hawke v. Smith, 253 U.S. 221 (1920)
- 23 United States ex rel. Widenmann v. Colby, 265 F. 998, 999 (D.C. Circ. 1920)
- 24 Newberry v. United States, 256 U.S. 232 (1921)
- 25 Dillon v. Gloss, 256 U.S. 368 (1921)
- 26 Fairchild v. Hughes, 258 U.S. 126 (1922)
- 27 Leser v. Garnett, 258 U.S. 130 (1922)
- 28 Frothingham v. Mellon, 262 U.S. 447 (1923)
- 29 Edwards v. Cuba R.R., 268 U.S. 628 (1925)
- 30 Myers v. United States, 272 U.S. 52 (1926)
- 31 Barry v. United States ex rel. Cunningham, 279 U.S. 597 (1929)
- 32 The Pocket Veto Case, 279 U.S. 655 (1929)
- 33 United States v. Sprague, 282 U.S. 716 (1931)
- 34 United States v. Smith, 286 U.S. 6 (1932)
- 35 Powell v. Alabama, 287 U.S. 45 (1932)
- 36 Williams v. United States, 289 U.S. 553 (1933)
- 37 Snyder v. Commonwealth of Massachusetts, 291 U.S. 97 (1934)
- 38 United States v. Chambers, 291 U.S. 217 (1934)
- 39 Long v. Ansell, 293 U.S. 76 (1934)

- 1 Railroad Retirement Bd. v. Alton Railroad Co., 295 U.S. 330 (1935)
- 2 Carter v. Carter Coal Co., 298 U.S. 238 (1936)
- 3 United States v. Butler, 297 U.S. 1 (1936)
- 4 De Jonge v. Oregon, 299 U.S. 353 (1937)
- 5 Herndon v. Lowry, 301 U.S. 242 (1937)
- 6 Cincinnati Soap Co. v. United States, 301 U.S. 308 (1937)
- 7 Wright v. United States, 302 U.S. 583 (1938)
- 8 Coleman v. Miller, 307 U.S. 433 (1939)
- 9 United States v. Classic, 313 U.S. 299 (1941)
- 10 United States v. Darby Lumber Co., 312 U.S. 100 (1941)
- 11 United States v. Saylor, 322 U.S. 385 (1944)
- 12 United States v. South-Eastern Underwriters Ass'n., 322 U.S. 533 (1944)
- 13 Saunders v. Wilkins, 152 F. 2d 235 (1945)
- 14 Bell v. Hood, 327 U.S. 678 (1946)
- 15 United Public Workers v. Mitchell, 330 U.S. 75 (1947)
- 16 Christoffel v. United States, 338 U.S. 84 (1949)
- 17 United States v. Texas, 339 U.S. 707 (1950)
- 18 United States v. Louisiana, 339 U.S. 699 (1950)
- 19 Dyer v. Sims, 341 U.S. 22 (1951)
- 20 Tenney v. Brandhove, 341 U.S. 367 (1951)
- 21 United States v. Rumely, 345 U.S. 41 (1953)
- 22 Brown v. Board of Education, 347 U.S. 483 (1954)
- 23 Ullmann v. United States, 350 U.S. 422 (1956)
- 24 Watkins v. United States, 354 U.S. 178 (1957)
- 25 Kinsella v. United States ex rel. Singleton, 361 U.S. 234 (1960)
- 26 Eastern R.R. Presidents Conference v. Noerr Motor Freight, 365 U.S. 127 (1961)
- 27 Poe v. Ullman, 367 U.S. 497 (1961)
- 28 Baker v. Carr, 369 U.S. 186 (1962)
- 29 Russell v. United States, 369 U.S. 749 (1962)
- 30 Edwards v. South Carolina, 372 U.S. 229 (1963)
- 31 Gray v. Sanders, 372 U.S. 368 (1963)
- 32 Griffin v. County School Bd. Of Prince Edward County, 377 U.S. 218 (1964)
- 33 Reynolds v. Sims, 377 U.S. 533 (1964)
- 34 WMCA, Inc. v. Lomenzo, 377 U.S. 633 (1964)
- 35 Maryland Committee v. Tawes, 377 U.S. 656 (1964)
- 36 Davis v. Mann, 377 U.S. 678 (1964)
- 37 Roman v. Sincock, 377 U.S. 695 (1964)
- 38 Lucas v. Colorado General Assembly, 377 U.S. 713 (1964)
- 39 Wesberry v. Sanders, 376 U.S. 1 (1964)

- 1 Fortson v. Toombs, 379 U.S. 621 (1965)
- 2 Griswold v. Connecticut, 381 U.S. 479 (1965)
- 3 United States v. Johnson, 383 U.S. 169 (1966)
- 4 Miranda v. Arizona, 384 U.S. 436 (1966)
- 5 Dombrowski v. Eastland, 387 U.S. 82 (1967)
- 6 Whitehall v. Elkins, 389 U.S. 54 (1967)
- 7 Flast v. Cohen, 392 U.S. 83 (1968)
- 8 Williams v. Rhodes, 393 U.S. 23 (1968)
- 9 Shuttlesworth v. City of Birmingham, 394 U.S. 147 (1969)
- 10 Kirkpatrick v. Preisler, 394 U.S. 526 (1969)
- 11 Powell v. McCormack, 395 U.S. 486 (1969)
- 12 Data Processing Service v. CAMP, 397 U.S. 150 (1970)
- 13 Jenness v. Fortson, 403 U.S. 431 (1971)
- 14 California Motor Transport Co. v. Trucking Unlimited, 404 U.S. 508 (1972)
- 15 Bullock v. Carter, 405 U.S. 134 (1972)
- 16 United States v. Brewster, 408 U.S. 501 (1972)
- 17 Gravel v. United States, 408 U.S. 606 (1972)
- 18 Roe v. Wade, 410 U.S. 113 (1973)
- 19 Doe v. McMillan, 412 U.S. 306 (1973)
- 20 United States v. SCRAP, 412 U.S. 669 (1973)
- 21 Kusper v. Pontikes, 414 U.S. 51 (1973)
- 22 Storer v. Brown, 415 U.S. 724 (1974)
- 23 American Party of Texas v. White, 415 U.S. 767 (1974)
- 24 Eastland v. United States Servicemen's Fund, 421 U.S. 491 (1975)
- 25 Warth v. Seldin, 422 U.S. 490 (1975)
- 26 Buckley v. Valeo, 424 U.S. 1 (1976)
- 27 National League of Cities v. Usery, 426 U.S. 833 (1976)
- 28 U.S. Steel Corp. v. Multistate Tax Commission, 434 U.S. 452 (1978)
- 29 Kimble v. Swackhamer, 439 U.S. 1385 (1978)
- 30 Illinois Elections Board v. Socialist Workers Party, 440 U.S. 173 (1979)
- 31 United States v. Helstoski, 442 U.S. 447 (1979)
- 32 Missouri v. NOW, 620 F.2d 1301 (8th Cir.), cert. Denied 449 U.S. 842 (1980)
- 33 Idaho v. Freeman, 529 F. Supp. 1107 (D.C.D. Idaho, 1981)
- 34 Valley Forge College v. Americans United for Separation of Church and State,
- 35 Inc., et al., 454 U.S. 464 (1982)
- 36 NAACP v. Claiborne Hardware Co., 458 U.S. 886 (1982)
- 37 North Dakota v. United States, 460 U.S. 300 (1983)
- 38 Anderson v. Celebrezze, 460 U.S. 780 (1983)
- 39 Immigration and Naturalization Service v. Chadha, 462 U.S. 919 (1983)

```
Uhler v. AFL-CIO, 468 U.S. 1310 (1984)
 1
 2
     Montanans For A Balanced Budget Committee v. Harper, 469 U.S. 1301 (1984)
 3
     Garcia v. San Antonio Metropolitan Transit Authority, 469 U.S. 528 (1985)
     Air France v. Saks, 470 U.S. 392 (1985)
 4
     Bowsher v. Synar, 478 U.S. 714 (1986)
 5
     United States v. Sitka, 666 F. Supp. 19,22 (D. Conn. 1987)
 6
 7
     Meyer v. Grant, 486 U.S. 414 (1988)
     OPM v. Richmond, 496 U.S. 414 (1990)
 8 Metropolitan Washington Airports Authority v. Citizens for the Abatement of 9
     Aircraft Noise, 501 U.S. 252 (1991)
10
11
     Gregory v. Ashcroft, 501 U.S. 452 (1991)
     Department of Commerce v. Montana, 503 U.S. 442 (1992)
12
     Lujan v. Defenders of Wildlife, 504 U.S. 555 (1992)
13
     New York v. United States, 505 U.S. 144 (1992)
14
     U.S. Term Limits, Inc. v. Thornton, 514 U.S. 779 (1995)
15
16
     United States v. Hays, 514 U.S. 1002 (1995)
     Seminole Tribe of Florida v. Florida, 517 U.S. 44 (1996)
17
     Printz v. United States, 521 U.S. 98 (1997)
18
     Reno v. ACLU, 521 U.S. 844 (1997)
19 20
     Dunn v. Commodity Futures Trading Commission, 519 U.S. 465 (1997)
     El Al Israel Airlines, Ltd. v. Tsui Yuan Tseng, 525 U.S. 155 (1999)
21
     Alden v. Maine, 119 S.Ct. 1138 (1999)
22
     Nelson v. Adams USA, Inc., 99-502 (2000)
23
24
25
26
27
28
29 30
31 32
33
                                 OTHER COURT CITIATIONS
34 35
36
     Attorney-General for Canada v. Attorney-General for Ontario and Others, L.R.
37
     A.C. 326, 347 (1937)
     State ex rel. Mullen v. Howell, 107 Wash. 167, 181 Pac. 920 (1919)
38
        BRIEF IN SUPPORT OF CONVENTION
```

GENERAL BRIEF ARGUMENTS
PAGE 13

```
United States v. Baugh, 9th Circuit Court of Appeals, #9810224, (1999)
 2
 3
 4
                               GENERAL REFERENCE CITATIONS
 5
 6
     THE HARVARD CLASSIC, AMERICAN HISTORICAL DOCUMENTS 1000-1904, (C. Eliot ed.
 7
 8
     PRECEDENTS OF THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES (Washington: 1907), Sec. 3483
 9
     (A. Hinds)
10
     THE RECORDS OF THE FEDERAL CONVENTION OF 1787,(1911),&(rev. Ed 1937), 11 (Farrand)
     THE LAW OF TREATIES, British Practice and Opinions, A.D. McNair (1938)
12
     2,3,4 ELLIOT'S DEBATES (1937)
13
14
     A CONCISE HISTORY OF THE AMERICAN REPUBLIC (2d ed. 1983)
15
     (Morison, H. Commager & Leuchtenburg)
     THE AMENDING OF THE FEDERAL CONSTITUTION 1 (1942)
16
     (Orfield)
17
     A CONSTITUTIONAL CONVENTION: THREAT OR CHALLENGE (1981) (Edel)
18
19
     CONSTITUTIONAL CONVENTIONS: THEIR NAUTRE, POWERS AND LIMITATIONS (1917) (Hoar) 20
     A MORE PERFECT UNION: THE MAKING OF THE UNITED STATES CONSTITUTION (1987)
2.1
     (Peters)
22
     UNFOUNDED FEARS: MYTHS AND REALITIES OF A CONSTITUIONAL CONVENTION (1989) 23
     (P. Weber & B. Perry)
     CONGRESSIONAL QUARTERLY'S GUIDE TO THE U.S. SUPREME COURT, 2^{\text{ND}} EDITION, (1992)
24
25
     (Witt)
     ENCYCLOPEDIA OF THE SOCIAL SCIENCES (1934)
26
27
28
29
30
                         STATUTORY AND CONGRESSIONAL CITATIONS
31
32
33
     S & H.R.J. Res. 3 1st Conq., 1st Sess., 1 Stat. 97-98 (1789)
34
35
    14 Stat. 428, (1867)
36
     15 Stat. 706,707 (1868)
37
    15 Stat. 709 (1868)
```

BRIEF IN SUPPORT OF CONVENTION GENERAL BRIEF ARGUMENTS PAGE 14

- S. Rept. No. 1335, 54th Congress, 2nd Sess.(1897)
- 2 96 Cong. Rec. 3250 (Message from President Truman accompanying Reorg. Plan No.
- 3 20 of 1950)
- 4 S. 2307, 90th Cong., 1st Sess. (1967)
- 5 Congressional Budget and Parliament Control Act of 1974, Pub. L. No. 93-344,
- 6 88 Stat. 297 (1974)
- 7 Pub. L. No. 95-100, 91 Stat. 994 (1977)
- 8 Equal Rights Amendment Extension, Hearings before the Senate Judiciary
- 9 Subcommittee on the Constitution, 95th Congress, 2nd Sess.,(1978)
- 10 Equal Rights Amendment Extension, Hearings before the House Judiciary
- 11 Subcommittee on Civil and Constitutional Rights,  $95^{th}$  Congress,  $1^{st}/2^{nd}$  sess.
- 12 (1977-78)
- 13 H.J. Res. 638, 95th Congress, 2nd Sess., 92 Stat. 3799 (1978)
- 14 S. 119, S. 2812, H.R. 3373, 98th Cong., 2nd Sess; S. 40, 99th Cong., 1st Sess,
- 15 (1985)
- 16 Rep. No. 135, 99th Cong., 1st Sess.,(1985)
- 17 Balanced Budget & Emergency Deficit Control Act of 1985, Pub. L. No. 99-177,
- 18 Title 2,99 Stat. 1038 (1985)
- 19 Pub. L. No. 99-177, 99 Stat. 1039, 1062 (1985)
- 20 Pub. L. No. 99-509, Title 7, 100 Stat. 1949 (1986)
- 21 S. 204,  $101^{st}$  Cong.,  $1^{st}$  Sess. (1989).
- 22 F.R. Doc. 92-11951, 57 Fed. Reg. 21187 (1992)
- 23 138 Cong. Rec. (daily ed.) S 6948-49, H 3505-06 (1992)
- 24 United States Code (as noted in text)

Applications

```
1 Annals of Congress 1103 (J Gales ed. 1790)
1 Annals of Congress 248 (J Gales ed. 1789)
33 Cong. Rec. 219 (1899)
33 Cong. Rec. 280 (1899)
34 Cong. Rec. 2560 (1901)
34 Cong. Rec. 2615 (1901)
34 Cong. Rec. 2680 (1901)
35 Cong. Rec. 112 (1901)
35 Cong. Rec. 117 (1901)
35 Cong. Rec. 117 (1901)
35 Cong. Rec. 1779 (1901)
35 Cong. Rec. 208 (1901)
35 Cong. Rec. 2344 (1901)
35 Cong. Rec. 2344 (1902)
35 Cong. Rec. 2707 (1902)
35 Cong. Rec. 2707 (1902)
37 Cong. Rec. 24 (1903)
37 Cong. Rec. 276 (1903)
38 Cong. Rec. 4959 (1904)
39 Cong. Rec. 2447 (1905)
40 Cong. Rec. 138 (1905)
40 Cong. Rec. 4551 (1906)
41 Cong. Rec. 2497 (1907)
41 Cong. Rec. 3011 (1907)
41 Cong. Rec. 3072 (1907)
42 Cong. Rec. 163 (1907)
42 Cong. Rec. 164 (1907)
42 Cong. Rec. 164 (1907)
42 Cong. Rec. 359 (1907)
42 Cong. Rec. 5906 (1908) (1907)
42 Cong. Rec. 894 (1908)
42 Cong. Rec. 895 (1908)
42 Cong. Rec. 895 (1908)
42 Cong. Rec. 895 (1908)
43 Cong. Rec. 2025 (1909)
43 Cong. Rec. 2065 (1909)
43 Cong. Rec. 2071 (1909)
43 Cong. Rec. 2115 (1909)
43 Cong. Rec. 2667 (1909)
43 Cong. Rec. 2670 (1909)
44 Cong. Rec. 127 (1909)
44 Cong. Rec. 1620 (1909)
44 Cong. Rec. 50 (1909)
45 Cong. Rec. (1910) (1907)
45 Cong. Rec. (1910) (1907)
45 Cong. Rec. 3035 (1911) (1903)
```

BRIEF IN SUPPORT OF CONVENTION GENERAL BRIEF ARGUMENTS PAGE 16

```
45 Cong. Rec. 7113 (1910) (1901)
45 Cong. Rec. 7113 (1910) (1901)
45 Cong. Rec. 7114 (1910) (1901)
45 Cong. Rec. 7114 (1910) (1903)
45 Cong. Rec. 7114 (1910) (1907)
45 Cong. Rec. 7114 (1910) (1907)
45 Cong. Rec. 7115 (1910) (1902)
45 Cong. Rec. 7115 (1910) (1907)
45 Cong. Rec. 7115 (1910) (1908)
45 Cong. Rec. 7116 (1910) (1901)
45 Cong. Rec. 7116 (1910) (1903)
45 Cong. Rec. 7116 (1910) (1907)
45 Cong. Rec. 7116 (1910) (1907)
45 Cong. Rec. 7116 (1910) (1908)
45 Cong. Rec. 7117 (1910) (1903)
45 Cong. Rec. 7117 (1910) (1907)
45 Cong. Rec. 7117 (1910) (1908)
45 Cong. Rec. 7118 (1905)
45 Cong. Rec. 7118 (1910) (1901)
45 Cong. Rec. 7118 (1910) (1903)
45 Cong. Rec. 7118 (1910) (1907)
45 Cong. Rec. 7119 (1910) (1901)
45 Cong. Rec. 7119 (1910) (1903)
45 Cong. Rec. 7119 (1910) (1903)
45 Cong. Rec. 7119 (1910) (1908)
46 Cong. Rec. 2411 (1911)
46 Cong. Rec. 4280 (1911)
46 Cong. Rec. 4339 (1911)
46 Cong. Rec. 651 (1911) (1910)
47 Cong. Rec. 1298 (1911)
47 Cong. Rec. 1842 (1911)
47 Cong. Rec. 187 (1911)
47 Cong. Rec. 1873 (1911)
47 Cong. Rec. 2000 (1911)
47 Cong. Rec. 2188 (1911)
47 Cong. Rec. 3087 (1911)
47 Cong. Rec. 661 (1911)
47 Cong. Rec. 85 (1911)
47 Cong. Rec. 98 (1911)
47 Cong. Rec. 99 (1911)
49 Cong. Rec. 1433 (1913) (1912)
49 Cong. Rec. 2463 (1913)
49 Cong. Rec. 2464 (1913) (1912)
50 Cong. Rec. 116 (1913)
50 Cong. Rec. 120 (1913)
50 Cong. Rec. 1796 (1913)
50 Cong. Rec. 2290 (1913)
50 Cong. Rec. 2428 (1913)
50 Cong. Rec. 42 (1913)
53 Cong. Rec. 2442 (1916)
```

```
60 Cong. Rec. 11 (1920)
60 Cong. Rec. 31 (1920)
67 Cong. Rec. 456 (1925)
69 Cong. Rec. 455 (1927)
71 Cong. Rec. 2590 (1929)
71 Cong. Rec. 3369 (1929)
71 Cong. Rec. 3856 (1929)
75 Cong. Rec. 3299 (1932)
75 Cong. Rec. 45 (1931)
75 Cong. Rec. 48 (1931)
75 Cong. Rec. 57 (1931)
79 Cong. Rec. 10814 (1935)
79 Cong. Rec. 10814 (1935)
84 Cong. Rec. 2509 (1939)
84 Cong. Rec. 3320 (1939)
84 Cong. Rec. 985 (1939)
86 Cong. Rec. 3407 (1940)
86 Cong. Rec. 3439 (1940)
87 Cong. Rec. 1729 (1941)
87 Cong. Rec. 3172 (1941)
87 Cong. Rec. 3370 (1941)
87 Cong. Rec. 3812 (1941)
87 Cong. Rec. 4537 (1941)
87 Cong. Rec. 8904 (1941)
89 Cong. Rec. 2516 (1943)
89 Cong. Rec. 2516 (1943)
89 Cong. Rec. 2728 (1943)
89 Cong. Rec. 2944 (1943)
89 Cong. Rec. 3761 (1943)
89 Cong. Rec. 4017 (1943)
89 Cong. Rec. 5690 (1943)
89 Cong. Rec. 7523 (1943)
89 Cong. Rec. 7524 (1943)
89 Cong. Rec. 7525 (1943)
89 Cong. Rec. 8220 (1943)
89 Cong. Rec. 8220 (1943)
90 Cong. Rec. 4040 (1944)
90 Cong. Rec. 6141 (1944)
95 Cong. Rec. 4568 (1949)
95 Cong. Rec. 4571 (1949)
95 Cong. Rec. 5628 (1949)
95 Cong. Rec. 6586 (1949)
95 Cong. Rec. 6587 (1949)
95 Cong. Rec. 7000 (1949)
95 Cong. Rec. 7686 (1949)
95 Cong. Rec. 7689 (1949)
95 Cong. Rec. 7893 (1949)
95 Cong. Rec. 8285 (1949)
97 Cong. Rec. 10716 (1951)
97 Cong. Rec. 2936 (1951)
```

```
97 Cong. Rec. 3939 (1951)
97 Cong. Rec. 5155 (1951)
97 Cong. Rec. 6033 (1951)
98 Cong. Rec. 1056 (1952)
98 Cong. Rec. 1057 (1952)
98 Cong. Rec. 1057 (1952)
98 Cong. Rec. 1225 (1952)
98 Cong. Rec. 1225 (1952)
98 Cong. Rec. 1496 (1952)
98 Cong. Rec. 4003 (1952)
98 Cong. Rec. 742 (1952)
98 Cong. Rec. 947 (1952)
98 Cong. Rec. 947 (1952)
99 Cong. Rec. 10052 (1953)
99 Cong. Rec. 10623 (1953)
99 Cong. Rec. 320 (1953)
99 Cong. Rec. 320 (1953)
99 Cong. Rec. 9180 (1953)
99 Cong. Rec. 9864 (1953)
101 Cong. Rec. 1532 (1955)
101 Cong. Rec. 2086 (1955)
101 Cong. Rec. 2270 (1955)
101 Cong. Rec. 2274 (1955)
101 Cong. Rec. 2840 (1955)
101 Cong. Rec. 2840 (1955)
101 Cong. Rec. 2861 (1955)
101 Cong. Rec. 8397 (1955)
101 Cong. Rec. 8776 (1955)
102 Cong. Rec. 7240 (1956)
102 Cong. Rec. 7304 (1956)
103 Cong. Rec. 10863 (1957)
103 Cong. Rec. 12787 (1957)
103 Cong. Rec. 4831 (1957)
103 Cong. Rec. 6471 (1957)
103 Cong. Rec. 6472 (1957)
103 Cong. Rec. 6473 (1957)
103 Cong. Rec. 6474 (1957)
103 Cong. Rec. 6475 (1957)
103 Cong. Rec. 8085 (1958)
104 Cong. Rec. 8058 (1958)
105 Cong. Rec. 1709 (1959)
105 Cong. Rec. 1834 (1959)
105 Cong. Rec. 2793 (1959)
105 Cong. Rec. 3083 (1959)
105 Cong. Rec. 3085 (1959)
105 Cong. Rec. 3220 (1959)
105 Cong. Rec. 4329 (1959)
105 Cong. Rec. 4398 (1959)
106 Cong. Rec. 10749 (1960)
106 Cong. Rec. 14315 (1960)
```

```
106 Cong. Rec. 14401 (1960)
107 Cong. Rec. 2154 (1961)
107 Cong. Rec. 2742 (1961)
107 Cong. Rec. 2759 (1961)
107 Cong. Rec. 2799 (1961)
107 Cong. Rec. 4454 (1961)
107 Cong. Rec. 4715 (1961)
107 Cong. Rec. 7484 (1961)
108 Cong. Rec. 5051 (1962)
109 Cong. Rec. 10241 (1963)
109 Cong. Rec. 10441 (1963)
109 Cong. Rec. 10441 (1963)
109 Cong. Rec. 10441 (1963)
109 Cong. Rec. 10442 (1963)
109 Cong. Rec. 11530 (1963)
109 Cong. Rec. 1172 (1963)
109 Cong. Rec. 1173 (1963)
109 Cong. Rec. 11852 (1963)
109 Cong. Rec. 11852 (1963)
109 Cong. Rec. 11853 (1963)
109 Cong. Rec. 14638 (1963)
109 Cong. Rec. 14639 (1963)
109 Cong. Rec. 14767 (1963)
109 Cong. Rec. 14767 (1963)
109 Cong. Rec. 14779 (1963)
109 Cong. Rec. 14808 (1963)
109 Cong. Rec. 15105 (1963)
109 Cong. Rec. 15107 (1963)
109 Cong. Rec. 15362 (1963)
109 Cong. Rec. 2071 (1963)
109 Cong. Rec. 2072 (1963)
109 Cong. Rec. 2278 (1963)
109 Cong. Rec. 2278 (1963)
109 Cong. Rec. 2281 (1963)
109 Cong. Rec. 2765 (1963)
109 Cong. Rec. 2768 (1963)
109 Cong. Rec. 2769 (1963)
109 Cong. Rec. 3274 (1963)
109 Cong. Rec. 3274 (1963)
109 Cong. Rec. 3788 (1963)
109 Cong. Rec. 3854 (1963)
109 Cong. Rec. 3855 (1963)
109 Cong. Rec. 3982 (1963)
109 Cong. Rec. 3982 (1963)
109 Cong. Rec. 4050 (1963)
109 Cong. Rec. 4050 (1963)
109 Cong. Rec. 4457 (1963)
```

```
109 Cong. Rec. 4469 (1963)
109 Cong. Rec. 4778 (1963)
109 Cong. Rec. 4779 (1963)
109 Cong. Rec. 4779 (1963)
109 Cong. Rec. 4900 (1963)
109 Cong. Rec. 5014 (1963)
109 Cong. Rec. 5250 (1963)
109 Cong. Rec. 5581 (1963)
109 Cong. Rec. 5867 (1963)
109 Cong. Rec. 5868 (1963)
109 Cong. Rec. 5868 (1963)
109 Cong. Rec. 5947 (1963)
109 Cong. Rec. 6438 (1963)
109 Cong. Rec. 6657 (1963)
109 Cong. Rec. 6659 (1963)
109 Cong. Rec. 6930 (1963)
109 Cong. Rec. 6931 (1963)
109 Cong. Rec. 7060 (1963)
109 Cong. Rec. 7277 (1963)
109 Cong. Rec. 7287 (1963)
109 Cong. Rec. 9942 (1963)
109 Cong. Rec. 2768 (1963)
110 Cong. Rec. 10013 (1964)
110 Cong. Rec. 5659 (1964)
110 Cong. Rec. 5922 (1964)
110 Cong. Rec. 7371 (1964)
110 Cong. Rec. 7484 (1964)
110 Cong. Rec. 7616 (1964)
110 Cong. Rec. 9875 (1964)
111 Cong. Rec. 10016 (1965)
111 Cong. Rec. 10673 (1965)
111 Cong. Rec. 10673 (1965)
111 Cong. Rec. 10922 (1965)
111 Cong. Rec. 10922 (1965)
111 Cong. Rec. 11163 (1965)
111 Cong. Rec. 11488 (1965)
111 Cong. Rec. 11713 (1965)
111 Cong. Rec. 11802 (1965)
111 Cong. Rec. 12110 (1965)
111 Cong. Rec. 1216 (1965)
111 Cong. Rec. 1216 (1965)
111 Cong. Rec. 1229 (1965)
111 Cong. Rec. 12853 (1965)
111 Cong. Rec. 1402 (1965)
111 Cong. Rec. 14144 (1965)
111 Cong. Rec. 14163 (1965)
111 Cong. Rec. 14308 (1965)
```

```
111 Cong. Rec. 1437 (1965)
111 Cong. Rec. 14458 (1965)
111 Cong. Rec. 15699 (1965)
111 Cong. Rec. 15764 (1965)
111 Cong. Rec. 15769 (1965)
111 Cong. Rec. 15769 (1965)
111 Cong. Rec. 15770 (1965)
111 Cong. Rec. 164 (1965)
111 Cong. Rec. 18171 (1965)
111 Cong. Rec. 18476 (1965)
111 Cong. Rec. 18999 (1965)
111 Cong. Rec. 19379 (1965)
111 Cong. Rec. 19534 (1965)
111 Cong. Rec. 19740 (1965)
111 Cong. Rec. 19775 (1965)
111 Cong. Rec. 20839 (1965)
111 Cong. Rec. 21105 (1965)
111 Cong. Rec. 24720 (1965)
111 Cong. Rec. 24723 (1965)
111 Cong. Rec. 25237 (1965)
111 Cong. Rec. 26073 (1965)
111 Cong. Rec. 26167 (1965)
111 Cong. Rec. 27482 (1965)
111 Cong. Rec. 2777 (1965)
111 Cong. Rec. 2948 (1965)
111 Cong. Rec. 3061 (1965)
111 Cong. Rec. 3061 (1965)
111 Cong. Rec. 3304 (1965)
111 Cong. Rec. 3304 (1965)
111 Cong. Rec. 3304 (1965)
111 Cong. Rec. 3714 (1965)
111 Cong. Rec. 3714 (1965)
111 Cong. Rec. 3722 (1965)
111 Cong. Rec. 3722 (1965)
111 Cong. Rec. 3990 (1965)
111 Cong. Rec. 4064 (1965)
111 Cong. Rec. 4083 (1965)
111 Cong. Rec. 4320 (1965)
111 Cong. Rec. 4395 (1965)
111 Cong. Rec. 5800 (1965)
111 Cong. Rec. 5817 (1965)
111 Cong. Rec. 5820 (1965)
111 Cong. Rec. 6175 (1965)
111 Cong. Rec. 6183 (1965)
111 Cong. Rec. 6917 (1965)
111 Cong. Rec. 7259 (1965)
111 Cong. Rec. 880 (1965)
111 Cong. Rec. 880 (1965)
111 Cong. Rec. 881 (1965)
111 Cong. Rec. 94 (1965)
```

```
111 Cong. Rec. 94 (1965)
112 Cong. Rec. 199 (1966)
112 Cong. Rec. 199 (1966)
112 Cong. Rec. 200 (1966)
112 Cong. Rec. 43 (1966)
112 Cong. Rec. 44 (1966)
112 Cong. Rec. 44 (1966)
113 Cong. Rec. 10118 (1967)
113 Cong. Rec. 11175 (1967)
113 Cong. Rec. 11743 (1967)
113 Cong. Rec. 17634 (1967)
113 Cong. Rec. 18007 (1967)
113 Cong. Rec. 20893 (1967)
113 Cong. Rec. 6384 (1967)
113 Cong. Rec. 6766 (1967)
113 Cong. Rec. 7126 (1967)
113 Cong. Rec. 8004 (1967)
113 Cong. Rec. 8496 (1967)
115 Cong. Rec. 11987 (1969)
115 Cong. Rec. 12249 (1969)
115 Cong. Rec. 24116 (1969)
115 Cong. Rec. 35587 (1969)
115 Cong. Rec. 36153 (1969)
116 Cong. Rec. 20672 (1970)
116 Cong. Rec. 20919 (1970)
116 Cong. Rec. 21309 (1970)
116 Cong. Rec. 21369 (1970)
116 Cong. Rec. 22778 (1970)
116 Cong. Rec. 22906 (1970)
116 Cong. Rec. 23765 (1970)
116 Cong. Rec. 41879 (1970)
116 Cong. Rec. 5479 (1970)
116 Cong. Rec. 5499 (1970)
116 Cong. Rec. 6097 (1970)
116 Cong. Rec. 6221 (1970)
116 Cong. Rec. 6877 (1970)
117 Cong. Rec. 11841 (1971)
117 Cong. Rec. 12210 (1971)
117 Cong. Rec. 16574 (1971)
117 Cong. Rec. 19801 (1971)
117 Cong. Rec. 21712 (1971)
117 Cong. Rec. 22280 (1971)
117 Cong. Rec. 2789 (1971)
117 Cong. Rec. 30887 (1971)
117 Cong. Rec. 30905 (1971)
117 Cong. Rec. 3175 (1971)
117 Cong. Rec. 41598 (1971)
117 Cong. Rec. 4632 (1971)
117 Cong. Rec. 5020 (1971)
117 Cong. Rec. 527 (1971)
```

```
117 Cong. Rec. 5303 (1971)
117 Cong. Rec. 541 (1971)
118 Cong. Rec. 11444 (1972)
118 Cong. Rec. 11445 (1972)
118 Cong. Rec. 11885 (1972)
118 Cong. Rec. 11885 (1972)
118 Cong. Rec. 16214 (1972)
118 Cong. Rec. 33047 (1972)
118 Cong. Rec. 33259 (1972)
118 Cong. Rec. 5282 (1972)
118 Cong. Rec. 6501 (1972)
119 Cong. Rec. 10675 (1973)
119 Cong. Rec. 11446 (1973)
119 Cong. Rec. 11446 (1973)
119 Cong. Rec. 11515 (1973)
119 Cong. Rec. 11835 (1973)
119 Cong. Rec. 12408 (1973)
119 Cong. Rec. 14234 (1973)
119 Cong. Rec. 14421 (1973)
119 Cong. Rec. 14421 (1973)
119 Cong. Rec. 14428 (1973)
119 Cong. Rec. 16324 (1973)
119 Cong. Rec. 17022 (1973)
119 Cong. Rec. 18190 (1973)
119 Cong. Rec. 1939 (1973)
119 Cong. Rec. 7282 (1973)
119 Cong. Rec. 7282 (1973)
119 Cong. Rec. 8089 (1973)
119 Cong. Rec. 8091 (1973)
119 Cong. Rec. 8550 (1973)
119 Cong. Rec. 8689 (1973)
121 Cong. Rec. 12168 (1975)
121 Cong. Rec. 12175 (1975)
121 Cong. Rec. 12867 (1975)
121 Cong. Rec. 13433 (1975)
121 Cong. Rec. 19117 (1975)
121 Cong. Rec. 21065 (1975)
121 Cong. Rec. 24412 (1975)
121 Cong. Rec. 25312 (1975)
121 Cong. Rec. 27821 (1975)
121 Cong. Rec. 28347 (1975)
121 Cong. Rec. 29630 (1975)
121 Cong. Rec. 4730 (1975)
121 Cong. Rec. 5793 (1975)
121 Cong. Rec. 5793 (1975)
122 Cong. Rec. 1400 (1976)
122 Cong. Rec. 16814 (1976)
122 Cong. Rec. 23550 (1976)
122 Cong. Rec. 2740 (1976)
122 Cong. Rec. 3161 (1976)
```

```
122 Cong. Rec. 4090 (1976)
122 Cong. Rec. 4329 (1976)
122 Cong. Rec. 5572 (1976)
122 Cong. Rec. 8336 (1976)
122 Cong. Rec. 931 (1976)
122 Cong. Rec. 9735 (1976)
123 Cong. Rec. 10481 (1977)
123 Cong. Rec. 11041 (1977)
123 Cong. Rec. 11048 (1977)
123 Cong. Rec. 11888 (1977)
123 Cong. Rec. 13057 (1977)
123 Cong. Rec. 13301 (1977)
123 Cong. Rec. 13471 (1977)
123 Cong. Rec. 14649 (1977)
123 Cong. Rec. 14825 (1977)
123 Cong. Rec. 15539 (1977)
123 Cong. Rec. 15808 (1977)
123 Cong. Rec. 18419 (1977)
123 Cong. Rec. 18419 (1977)
123 Cong. Rec. 18869 (1977)
123 Cong. Rec. 18873 (1977)
123 Cong. Rec. 20659 (1977)
123 Cong. Rec. 22002 (1977)
123 Cong. Rec. 22002 (1977)
123 Cong. Rec. 2545 (1977)
123 Cong. Rec. 4797 (1977)
123 Cong. Rec. 9289 (1977)
123 Cong. Rec. 9603 (1977)
124 Cong. Rec. 11103 (1978)
124 Cong. Rec. 11437 (1978)
124 Cong. Rec. 11438 (1978)
124 Cong. Rec. 12011 (1978)
124 Cong. Rec. 12011 (1978)
124 Cong. Rec. 12011 (1978)
124 Cong. Rec. 12215 (1978)
124 Cong. Rec. 12397 (1978)
124 Cong. Rec. 12397 (1978)
124 Cong. Rec. 12544 (1978)
124 Cong. Rec. 12694 (1978)
124 Cong. Rec. 1292 (1978)
124 Cong. Rec. 14193 (1978)
124 Cong. Rec. 14584 (1978)
124 Cong. Rec. 14911 (1978)
124 Cong. Rec. 1662 (1978)
124 Cong. Rec. 17055 (1978)
124 Cong. Rec. 19683 (1978)
125 Cong. Rec. 10144 (1979) (1975)
125 Cong. Rec. 11203 (1979)
125 Cong. Rec. 11584 (1979)
125 Cong. Rec. 12888 (1979)
```

```
125 Cong. Rec. 13387 (1979)
125 Cong. Rec. 134 (1979)
125 Cong. Rec. 134 (1979)
125 Cong. Rec. 15227 (1979)
125 Cong. Rec. 15792 (1979)
125 Cong. Rec. 15852 (1979)
125 Cong. Rec. 16350 (1979)
125 Cong. Rec. 16351 (1979)
125 Cong. Rec. 19359 (1979)
125 Cong. Rec. 19470 (1979)
125 Cong. Rec. 2936 (1979)
125 Cong. Rec. 3007 (1979)
125 Cong. Rec. 3007 (1979)
125 Cong. Rec. 3196 (1979)
125 Cong. Rec. 3322 (1979)
125 Cong. Rec. 3427 (1979)
125 Cong. Rec. 3427 (1979)
125 Cong. Rec. 3522 (1979)
125 Cong. Rec. 3655 (1979)
125 Cong. Rec. 3656 (1979)
125 Cong. Rec. 3656 (1979)
125 Cong. Rec. 3657 (1979)
125 Cong. Rec. 3906 (1979)
125 Cong. Rec. 4071 (1979)
125 Cong. Rec. 4152 (1979)
125 Cong. Rec. 4372 (1979)
125 Cong. Rec. 4372 (1979)
125 Cong. Rec. 4372 (1979)
125 Cong. Rec. 4627 (1979)
125 Cong. Rec. 4702 (1979)
125 Cong. Rec. 4702 (1979)
125 Cong. Rec. 4861 (1979)
125 Cong. Rec. 5223 (1979)
125 Cong. Rec. 5368 (1979)
125 Cong. Rec. 5450 (1979)
125 Cong. Rec. 5953 (1979)
125 Cong. Rec. 7920 (1979)
125 Cong. Rec. 8108 (1979)
125 Cong. Rec. 9188 (1979)
125 Cong. Rec. 9368 (1979)
126 Cong. Rec. 10650 (1980)
126 Cong. Rec. 10790 (1980)
126 Cong. Rec. 1104 (1980)
126 Cong. Rec. 11389 (1980)
126 Cong. Rec. 5768 (1980)
126 Cong. Rec. 6172 (1980)
126 Cong. Rec. 8306 (1980)
126 Cong. Rec. 8360 (1980)
126 Cong. Rec. 8972 (1980)
126 Cong. Rec. 909 (1980)
```

```
126 Cong. Rec. 9337 (1980)
126 Cong. Rec. 9765 (1980)
127 Cong. Rec. 1524 (1981)
127 Cong. Rec. 19856 (1981)
127 Cong. Rec. 761 (1981)
128 Cong. Rec. 2917 (1982)
128 Cong. Rec. 798 (1982)
129 Cong. Rec. 10594 (1983)
129 Cong. Rec. 4942 (1983)
130 Cong. Rec. 4884 (1984)
130 Cong. Rec. 6892 (1984)
132 Cong. Rec. 1023 (1986)
132 Cong. Rec. 2548 (1986)
133 Cong. Rec. 4183 (1987)
133 Cong. Rec. 7728 (1987)
135 Cong. Rec. 232 (1989)
135 Cong. Rec. 3233 (1989)
135 Cong. Rec. 3528 (1989)
135 Cong. Rec. 998 (1989)
```

Recessions

```
97 Cong. Rec. 10973 (1951)
98 Cong. Rec. 4641 (1952)
98 Cong. Rec. 742 (1952)
98 Cong. Rec. 742 (1952)
99 Cong. Rec. 4311, 4434 (1953)
99 Cong. Rec. 6163 (1953)
100 Cong. Rec. 11943 (1954)
100 Cong. Rec. 9420 (1954)
101 Cong. Rec. 99 (1955)
115 Cong. Rec. 18411, 18714 (1969)
115 Cong. Rec. 18411, 18714 (1969)
115 Cong. Rec. 19353, 24111 (1969)
115 Cong. Rec. 19353, 24111 (1969)
116 Cong. Rec. 11548, 11942 (1970)
116 Cong. Rec. 11548, 11942 (1970)
116 Cong. Rec. 11548,11942 (1970)
134 Cong. Rec. 8312 (1988)
134 Cong. Rec. 8312 (1988)
135 Cong. Rec. 3528 (1989)
135 Cong. Rec. 5485 (1989)
S 529 (28JA) Cong. Rec. Index 1992
```

1 2 3

1
2	MISCELLANOUS CITATIONS
3
4	UNITED STATES DECLARATION OF INDEPENDENCE (1776)
5	TREATY OF PEACE WITH GREAT BRITIAN (Malloy, ed. Treaties, Conventions, Etc
6	Vol. I)
7	Alexis de Tocqueville, DEMOCRACY IN AMERICA (1835)
8	UNITED STATES ARTICLES OF CONFEDERATION (1781)
9	UNITED STATES CONSTITUTION (1788)
10	WEBSTER'S NEW TWENTIETH CENTURY DICTIONARY, UNABRIDGED, $2^{\rm nd}$ Ed. (1984)
11	BLACK'S LAW DICTIONARY 6 th ed. (1990)
12	U.S. TERM LIMITS, www.termlimits.org. (1997)
13

2 INTRODUCTION

3

4 There are two methods of amendment in the United States Constitution

5 which allow for legal and orderly change in the Constitution in order to

6 reflect the requirements, desires and needs of its citizens. This amendment

7 process is probably the most important aspect of the entire Constitution as it

8 gives the document its much vaunted flexibility and thus has allowed the 9 Constitution to remain viable and contemporary through two hundred years of 10 tumultuous United States history. As noted by James Iredell, in the North Carolina Ratifying Convention of 1787:

11 12 13

14 15

16

17

18 19

20

"The Constitution of any government which cannot be regularly amended when its defects are experienced, reduces the people to this dilemma—they must either submit to its oppressions, or bring about amendments, more or less, by a civil war. Happy this, the country we live in! The Constitution before us, if it is adopted, can be altered with as much regularity, and as little confusion, as any act of Assembly; not, indeed, quite so easily, which would be extremely impolitic, but it is a most happy circumstance, that there is a remedy in the system itself for its own fallibility, so that alterations can without difficulty be made, agreeable to the general sense of the people."

21 22

23

This "happy circumstance" is contained in Article V of the Constitution which reads:

242526

27 28

29 30

31

32 33

34

"The Congress, whenever two-thirds of both Houses shall deem it necessary, shall propose Amendments to this Constitution, or, on the Application of the Legislatures of two-thirds of the several States, shall call a Convention for proposing Amendments, which, in either Case, shall be valid to all Intents and Purposes, as Part of this Constitution, when ratified by the Legislatures of three-fourths of the several States, or by Conventions in three-fourths thereof, as the one or the other Mode of Ratification may be proposed by the Congress; Provided that no Amendment which may be made prior to the Year One thousand eight hundred and eight shall in any Manner affect the first and

_

&lt;sup>1</sup> 4 ELLIOT'S DEBATES 176-77 (1937).

- fourth Clauses in the Ninth Section of the first Article; and that no State, without its Consent, shall be deprived of its equal Suffrage in the Senate."<sup>2</sup>
- 3 If this "happy circumstance" exists and has apparently worked so well
- 4 for over two hundred years, then it is proper to pose the question of why the
- 5 issue of a convention to propose amendments should be entertained at all. Has
- 6 not Congress effected sufficient amendments to meet the needs of the people,
- 7 and is this not sufficient in satisfying those needs that the untried method
- 8 of a convention to propose amendments should be ignored by Congress?<sup>3</sup> Should
- 9 America undertake a perilous constitutional journey as the untested, untried
- 10 and (some think) unfettered convention to propose amendments purports to be?
- 11 The Constitution binds us together in a unique form of citizenship we
- 12 call America. That citizenship is based on the concept that the powers of the
- 13 government are derived from the consent of the governed; that the
- 14 Constitution is an expression of a contract between government and citizen;
- 15 that its provisions must be obeyed; that none, particularly those trusted to

BRIEF IN SUPPORT OF CONVENTION GENERAL BRIEF ARGUMENTS PAGE 30

 $<sup>^2</sup>$  U.S. CONST. art. V, reprinted in 2 M. Farrand, THE RECORDS OF THE FEDERAL CONVENTION OF 1787, pp. 662-663 (1911) [hereinafter 1,2,3 or 4 Farrand]. See also 4 M. Farrand, THE RECORDS OF THE FEDERAL CONVENTION OF 1787 (rev. Ed 1937).

The convention to propose amendments, however untried, is part of the Constitution. It is a major component in the concept of the separation of powers. By this single phrase, the Founding Fathers guaranteed that under no circumstances would all the sovereign power of the nation exist in the federal government. There would always remain a method whereby the states and the people could exercise control over the federal government. To place all power of amendment in the hands of the Congress is to create a dangerous concentration of power. The Congress has done this quietly and without approval by the people. This cannot be allowed.

As James Madison observed:

&quot;I believe there are more instances of the abridgment of the freedom of the people by gradual and silent encroachments of those in power than by violent and sudden usurpations." (Speech at the Virginia Ratifying Convention, June 16, 1788.

June 16, 1788.  $^4$  "The constitution of the United States is to be considered as emanating from the people and not as the act of sovereign and independent states." McCulloch v. Maryland, 17 U.S. 316 (1819).

- govern, are above its law5; that this nation suffers grievously when these 1
- concepts are subverted, and any subversion of that document must be prevented 2
- at all costs lest the entire document and its precepts be destroyed. 3
- 4 This is the responsibility of all citizens: not to give blind obedience
- to government, but instead to make responsible inquires into their 5
- 6 government's actions and policies. 6 That same citizenship demands leaders
- 7 whose job it is to listen and respond to those inquires and, should it be
- 8 found their actions or policies are in basic conflict with the Constitution,
- 9 to alter or abolish those conflicts so as to conform to the provisions of that
- 10 document, however inconvenient or cumbersome that may be.
- 11 Under the terms of the United States Constitution, when two-thirds of
- 12 the several states apply, Congress is mandated to call a convention to propose
- 13 amendments. Forty-nine states have applied for a convention to propose
- amendments. 8 On its face, that fact alone compels Congress to call a 14
- convention, which it has not, and compels the judicial system, under its oath 15

&lt;sup>5</sup> United States v. Lee, 106 U.S. 196 (1882). See infra text accompanying note

&lt;sup>6</sup> "Privileges and immunities of citizens of the United States...are only such as arise out of the nature and essential character of the national government...that among the rights and privileges of national citizenship recognized by this court are...the right to inform the United States authorities of violation of its laws." Twining v. New Jersey, 211 U.S. 78 at 97 (1908).

 $<sup>^{7}</sup>$  See supra text accompanying note 2.

&lt;sup>8</sup> See infra,

TABLE 2-STATES APPLYING FOR A CONVENTION, p.673.

According to the ABA Report, (see infra text accompanying notes 1589-1698) the state of Hawaii has made a single application (ABA Report p. 80) for a convention to propose amendments. However, this information has not been confirmed by latter research.

- 1 to support the Constitution, to enforce that document's provision and declare
- 2 such inaction by Congress, unconstitutional.

24 --until a convention to propose amendments is called by Congress all 25 applications filed by the state legislatures for a convention to propose serves to obstruct the intent of the convention clause of Article V of the United States Constitution;

22

- 1 amendments are in full force and effect and may not be voided by laches of
- 2 Congress failing to perform its constitutionally mandated duty specified in
- 3 Article V of the United States Constitution;
- 4 -- the state legislatures having fulfilled the two-thirds requirement of
- 5 Article V of the United States Constitution, and thus, among other reasons,
- 6 are not permitted under its terms from vetoing Congress in its mandated
- 7 obligation to call a convention to propose amendments any recession of any
- 8 application for a convention to propose amendments filed by any state is
- 9 unconstitutional;
- 10 -- the perimeter of Congress' call of a convention to propose amendments
- 11 were intended by the Framers to be a limited "minuscule" role which precisely
- 12 ends upon its issuance of a convention call;
- 13 -- Congress is denied any authority by the Constitution to legislate or
- 14 regulate any procedural or substantive matters concerning the convention to
- 15 propose amendments;
- 16 -- any issue of state malapportionment has no effect on the validity of
- 17 applications for a convention to propose amendments or on the obligatory
- 18 action of Congress to call such a convention, but in no way holds Congress
- 19 immune from the effects of Section 2 of the 14th Amendment;
- 20 -- the convention to propose amendments is constitutionally autonomous
- 21 with its own powers and authority, limited by the applicable provisions of the
- 22 Constitution, but is in no way subservient to any other branch of the United
- 23 States Government or any branch of state government in the execution of these
- 24 powers and authorities;

- 1 --Congress is obligated to pass any proposed amendment[s]from the
- 2 convention to the states for ratification either by state convention or
- 3 consideration in the various state legislatures and thus may not, in any
- 4 manner, "veto" any proposed amendment[s] made by the convention to propose
- 5 amendments;
- 6 --no member of the executive branch of the United States Government or
- 7 the several states, or any of its assigns, may, in any way, obstruct or
- 8 interfere with the calling of the convention to propose amendments, its proper
- 9 and legal business or any of its proposed amendment[s];
- 10 --under the terms of the  $14^{th}$  Amendment, the general operational powers
- 11 of Congress are equally granted to the convention to propose amendments in
- 12 order to permit it to execute its constitutional function and that these
- 13 general operational powers serve to answer the composition, authority and
- 14 other such matters related to the convention to propose amendments;
- 15 -- the doctrine of equal protection dictates the election of delegates to
- 16 the convention to propose amendments and precludes any other form of selection
- 17 such as gubernatorial or congressional appointment, the number of delegates,
- 18 and sovereign representation;
- 19 -- the terms and conditions of the Constitution prevent and preclude any
- 20 financial aid or regulation of the convention to propose amendments through
- 21 this avenue, either by Congress or the several states;
- 22 -- such constitutional terms and conditions also dictate the convention
- 23 to propose amendments be conducted, convened and held on the Internet in order
- 24 to be compliance with all terms and specifications of the Constitution;

- 1 -- the state legislatures having exercised their constitutional power in
- 2 applying for a convention to propose amendments have thus exhausted all state
- 3 power in the matter (until the issue of ratification of a proposed amendment
- 4 shall arise), the matter now becomes a power of the people under their right
- 5 to alter or to abolish;
- 6 --in it laches to call a convention to propose amendments as prescribed
- 7 and mandated by Article V of the United States Constitution, Congress has
- 8 violated the constitutional right of the people to alter or to abolish, thus
- 9 violating the Ninth Amendment of the Constitution;
- 10 -- any laches by Congress in failing to call a convention to propose
- 11 amendments is an act of tyranny which is contrary to the intent and spirit of
- 12 the Constitution as intended by its Framers;
- 13 -- the laches of Congress has violated not only the general right of the
- 14 people to alter or to abolish but several individual rights of the plaintiff
- 15 including, but not limited to, his right to vote in an election and right to
- 16 politically associate;
- 17 -- Congress being constitutionally mandated to call a convention to
- 18 propose amendments as specified in Article V of the United States
- 19 Constitution, the proper number of state legislatures having applied, and
- 20 Congress having refused to do so, the Court is obligated to determine that
- 21 the United States Congress, as a body of the whole, is in violation of the
- 22 Constitution and;
- 23 --it is entirely within the Court's constitutional power and duty to
- 24 compel Congress to fulfill its constitutional obligation and declare such
- 25 laches to refuse to call a convention to propose amendments unconstitutional

1	and issue such declaratory judgment as required compelling Congress to call
2	convention to propose amendments including stipulations and provisions
3	necessary to prevent any state or federal obstruction of a convention to
4	propose amendments in the execution of its constitutional duties.
5
6
7	ARGUMENTS SUPPORTING JUDICIABLITY OF ACTION
8	JURISDICTION
9
10	This Court has jurisdiction over this matter pursuant to 28 U.S.C. §
11	1331° and 28 U.S.C. § 1361.10
12
13
14	VENUE
15
16	Venue is proper in this District under 28 U.S.C. § 1391(e)(3). 11
17

 $<sup>^9</sup>$  "The district courts shall have original jurisdiction of all civil actions arising under the Constitution, laws, or treaties of the United States."

As this suit is a civil action arising under a question entirely contained within Article V of the United States Constitution, the district court clearly has original jurisdiction in this matter.

&quot;The district courts shall have original jurisdiction of any action in the nature of mandamus to compel an officer or employee of the United states or any agency thereof to perform a duty owed to the plaintiff."

&quot;A civil action in which a defendant is an officer or employee of the United States or any agency thereof acting in his official capacity or under color of legal authority, or an agency of the United States, or the United States, may, except as otherwise provided by law, be brought in any judicial district in which...(3) the plaintiff resides if no real property is involved in the action."

As the plaintiff seeks only declaratory relief and seeks no monetary damages, resides in the jurisdiction of U.S. District Court, Western District and is bringing action against the defendants only in their official capacities, venue is proper under this clause of U.S.C.A.

2

- This suit seeks declaratory judgment<sup>12</sup> against all defendants in their
- 4 official capacities and seeks relief compelling Congress to execute its
- 5 required ministerial constitutional duty<sup>13</sup> and act<sup>14</sup> to call a convention to
- 6 propose amendments as specified in Article V of the United States Constitution
- 7 together with other orders as necessary for such issues as hereinafter more
- 8 fully appear.

9

10

STATEMENT OF FACTS

12 "In a case of actual controversy within its jurisdiction,...any court of the United States, upon the filing of an appropriate pleading, may declare the rights and other legal relations of any interested party seeking such declaration, whether or not further relief is or could be sought. Any such declaration shall have the force and effect of a final judgment or decree and shall be reviewable as such." 28 U.S.C.A. § 2201.

"Declaratory judgment. Statutory remedy for the determination of a

"Declaratory judgment. Statutory remedy for the determination of a justiciable controversy where the plaintiff is in doubt as to his legal rights. A binding adjudication of the rights and status of litigants even though consequential relief is awarded. Brimmer v. Thomson, Wyo., 521 P.2d 574, 579. Such judgment is conclusive in a subsequent action between the parties as to the matters declared and, in accordance with the usual rules of issue preclusion, as to any issues actually litigated and determined. Seaboard Coast Line R. Co. v Gulf Oil Corp., C.A.Fla., 409 F.2d 879." BLACK'S LAW DICTIONARY 6th ed. (1990).

"Ministerial duty. One regarding which nothing is left to discretion—a simple and definite duty, imposed by law, and arising under conditions admitted or proved to exist." BLACK'S LAW DICTIONARY 6th ed. (1990).

14 "Ministerial act. That which is done under the authority of a superior; opposed to judicial. That which involved obedience to instructions, but demands no special discretion, judgment, or skill. Arrow Exp. Forwarding Co., v. Iowa State Commerce Commission, 256 Iowa 1088, 130 N.W.2d 451, 453. An act is 'ministerial' when its performance is positively commanded and so plainly prescribed as to be free from doubt. J.E. Brenneman Co., V. Schramm, D.C.Pa., 473 F.Supp. 1316, 1319. Official's duty is 'ministerial' when it is absolute, certain and imperative, involving merely execution of a specific duty arising from fixed and designated facts. Long V. Seabrook, 260 S.C. 562, 197 S.E.2d 659, 662.

"One which a person or board performs under a given state of facts in a prescribed manner in obedience to the mandate of legal authority without regard to or the exercise of his or their own judgment upon the propriety of the act being done. State, Dept. Of Mental Health v. Allen, Ind. App., 427 N.E.2d 2, 4; Gibson v. Winterset Community school Dist., 258 Iowa 440, 138 N.W.2d 112, 115." BLACK'S LAW DICTIONARY 6th ed. (1990).

Between 1790 and the present, the state legislatures have filed 564

3 applications with Congress for a convention to propose amendments. These

- 4 applications have come from 49 states. Article V of the United States
- 5 Constitution states [in part] that: "Congress ... on the Application of the
- 6 Legislatures of two-thirds of the several States, shall call a Convention for
- 7 proposing Amendments..." The plain language of the Constitution is explicit.
- 8 Congress must a call a convention to propose amendments when two-thirds of the
- 9 state legislatures shall apply, which they have.
- 10 Upon learning these facts from public record, the plaintiff in the year
- 11 1999 attempted to file for election as a delegate for a convention to propose
- 12 amendments. The plaintiff was denied this opportunity by the state of
- 13 Washington and the Congress of the United States because: (1) the state in
- 14 question (Washington) does not even have a law allowing for such a filing, and
- 15 (2) even if such a law did exist, Congress has vetoed the Constitution in its
- 16 refusal to call a convention despite the state legislatures having more than
- 17 satisfied the numeric count required under Article V. As congressional laches
- 18 preempts any state law by effectively nullifying that law, even if it does
- 19 exist, the plaintiff seeks relief from the unconstitutional congressional
- 20 action of refusing to call a convention as specified in Article V of the
- 21 United States Constitution. This laches violates the plaintiff's individual
- 22 rights and the people's right to alter or abolish their government.
- 23 Because the plaintiff cannot seek office, he has been denied a right of
- 24 citizenship to which he is entitled. Further, because an election has not been
- 25 held to elect convention delegates, he has been denied the right to vote in an

1	election to which he is entitled to vote. Because of congressional laches he
2	is unable to associate politically with any assurance of effect of that
3	association. For these reasons, together with other unconstitutional insults
4	by Congress to his rights, the plaintiff seeks relief from the Court.
5
6 7	STANDING OF PLANTIFF TO BRING SUIT
8	Introduction
9
10	The obligation of Congress to call a convention is well established. 15
11	Congress through its laches has failed to perform this obligatory duty.
12	Further, it is clear Congress has no intention of fulfilling this
13	constitutional duty. In failing to call a convention to propose amendments,
14	Congress has violated six of plaintiff's rights guaranteed to him in the
15	Constitution in a personal, particularized, concrete manner. Plaintiff
16	maintains congressional laches to obey clear, specific and plain
17	constitutional language to be judicially reviewable. Plaintiff maintains this
18	laches can be redressed by the Court within its usual powers as prescribed by
19	the Constitution.
20
21	Requirements of Standing Established By the Court
22

 $^{15}$   $\it See\ infra\ text,\ generally,\ STATE\ APPLICATIONS\ FOR\ A\ CONVENTION,\ p.658.$

BRIEF IN SUPPORT OF CONVENTION GENERAL BRIEF ARGUMENTS PAGE 40

1 Standing is defined as:
2 "...[A] concept utilize

"...[A] concept utilized to determine if a party is sufficiently affected so as to insure that a justiciable controversy is presented to the court; it is the right to take the initial step that frames legal issues for ultimate adjudication by court or jury. State ex rel. Cartwright v. Oklahoma Tax Com'n, Okl., 653 P.2d 1230,  $1232."^{16}$

The United States Supreme Court has established three specific standards which plaintiffs must satisfy order for a person to have standing to sue.

"It is now well settled that 'the irreducible constitutional minimum of standing contains three elements. First, the plaintiff must have suffered an "injury in fact"—an invasion of a legally protected interest which is (a) concrete and particularized, and (b) actual or imminent, not conjectural or hypothetical. Second, there must be a causal connection between the injury and the conduct complained of.... Third, it must be likely, as opposed to merely speculative, that the injury will be redressed by a favorable decision.'"

The Court requires the plaintiff<sup>18</sup> to show standing by demonstrating that the Congress has violated a specific legal right of the plaintiff in a manner that is clearly specific and direct in nature and that the Court can redress this violation by use of its constitutionally delegated powers.

Federal Standing: The Caplan Opinion

While the rules of standing have been laid out, the fact remains the courts have never addressed specifically a suit, case or controversy dealing with the convention to propose amendments. Hence, the question of standing as it relates directly to the convention to propose amendments is entirely unexplored, i.e., what is a "concrete" injury, what if anything may the

&lt;sup>16</sup> BLACK'S LAW DICTIONARY 6th ed. (1990).

&lt;sup>17</sup> United States v. Hays, 514 U.S. 1002 (1995)(quoting Lujan v. Defenders of Wildlife, 504 U.S. 555 (1992).

&lt;sup>18</sup> "The party invoking federal jurisdiction bears the burden of establishing these elements." Lujan v. Defenders of Wildlife, 504 U.S. 555 (1992).

- 1 courts redress, and are there "special" standing circumstances regarding this
- 2 provision of the Constitution?
- 3 Thus, as this suit is the first to present the courts with a question of
- 4 this nature, it is logical this suit not only present its standing issues, but
- 5 explore the matter in some depth so as to present all circumstances
- 6 surrounding the judicial standard.
- 7 The only textual discussion of standing in the courts in regard to the
- 8 convention to propose amendments is found in Caplan's 19 Constitutional
- 9 Brinksmanship. 20 Caplan wrote:

10

11

12

13

14 15

16

17

18 19

20 21

22

23 24

25

26 27

28

29

30 31

32 33

34

"The duty of Congress to call a convention may be viewed alternatively as the right to have a convention called. In the event of congressional noncompliance with the obligations of article V, that right may be vindicated in the courts. Suit would be brought after Congress determined that the conditions for a call had not been met: one or more applications were incorrect in form, or stale, or did not agree in subject matter with the rest. Or, equally likely, Congress would have ignored the petitions entirely. The suit would probably ask the federal court to order Congress to make the necessary determinations and, upon ascertaining that all requirements have been satisfied, to call a convention or in the alternative to propose the amendment.(1)

"Article V's reference to the state legislatures as the applying agents would be construed to endow them with standing---that is, eligibility to bring suit because of injury traceable to the defendant's unlawful conduct, a requirement inferred by the courts from article III---and to exclude other possible litigants such as the governors, the President, members of the general public, or a fraction of Congress.(2) No pro-convention member of Congress willing to bring suit against the majority could surmount the barriers erected by the courts, and individual members of the public would be ineligible as well.(3) Only the state legislatures, specifically those that had filed applications, would have standing to sue: only they could allege that their constitutionally guaranteed amending powers had been infringed by the inaction of Congress.(4) The defendants in a suit against a recalcitrant Congress would be the officers charged with tabulating the applications and possibly members of Congress themselves.(5)"<sup>21</sup>

&lt;sup>19</sup> For short biography on author, see infra text accompanying note 1547.
<sup>20</sup> Caplan, Constitutional Brinksmanship: Amending the Constitution by National Convention, (1988).

&lt;sup>21</sup> (1) United States ex rel. McLennan v. Wilbur, 283 U.S. 414, 420 (1931) (mandamus order will issue where the duty is "ministerial" and "plainly defined"); see 5 Annals of Cong. 530 (1796) (Rep. Lyman: calling an article V convention is "ministerial").

If Caplan's opinion is taken summarily, it appears to be the alpha and

- 2 omega of the matter. 22 Caplan, dispensing with any individual rights that
- 3 might be trampled in the process, permits only a state legislature 23 to bring

"One element of the case or controversy requirement is that appellees, based on their complaint, must establish that they have standing to sue. ... To meet the standing requirements of Article II, '[a] plaintiff must allege personal injury fairly traceable to the defendant's allegedly unlawful conduct and likely to be redressed by the requested relief.' ... We have consistently stressed that a plaintiff's complaint must establish that he has a 'personal stake' in the alleged dispute, and that the alleged injury suffered is particularized as to him. ... We have also stressed that the alleged injury must be legally and judicially cognizable. This requires, among other things, that the plaintiff have suffered 'an invasion of a legally protected interest which is ... concrete and particularized.'... And our standing inquiry has <sup>(2)</sup> In re Opinion of the Justices, 262 Mass. 603, 606 (1928) (article V excludes the voters from the amending process, vesting "all power over the subject... exclusively in the Legislatures of the several States"). The modern test for article III standing is set out in Valley Forge Christian College v. Americans United for Separation of Church and State, Inc., 454 U.S. 464, 472 (1982).

<sup>(3)</sup> Riegle v. Federal Open Market Committee, 656 F.2d 873, 881 (D.C. Cir.), certiorari denied, 454 U.S. 1082 (1981) (when the dispute is among members of Congress, i.e., is really about the lawmaking process itself, equitable discretion counsels dismissal). On the ineligibility of the general public, see Valley Forge, 454 U.S. at 482-83; Fairchild v. Hughes, 258 U.S. 126 (1922) (private citizen lacked standing to have  $19^{\rm th}$  amendment declared void).

<sup>(4)</sup> Note, "Proposed Legislation on the Convention Method of Amending the United States Constitution," 85 Harvard Law Review 1612, 1643 (1972). The Kansas legislators in Coleman had standing because of their constitutionally "adequate interest in maintaining the effectiveness of their votes." 307 U.S. at 438.

<sup>(5)</sup> United States ex rel. Widenmann v. Colby, 265 F. 998, 1000 (D.C. Cir. 1920)(action lies against official charged with proclaiming the adoption of amendments to federal Constitution). Caplan, Constitutional Brinksmanship: Amending the Constitution by National Convention, (1988). p.133.  $^{22}$  "Once Congress has received the correct number of applications, it must, if all other requirements are met, call the convention"; "Congress must determine whether the amendment proposed by the convention (if any) meet all constitutional requirements"; "In providing that 'on the Application of the Legislatures' Congress 'shall call a Convention,' article V implies that Congress is the agent entrusted to receive, inspect, and decide on the validity of applications, and that applications must be submitted to Congress to be counted toward a convention call." Caplan refutes this last statement in his own book in discussing specific state applications. Caplan, Constitutional Brinksmanship: Amending the Constitution by National Convention, (1988). Preface, p. ix, p. 94. See also infra text accompanying note 729. Or presumably a member of a legislature who actually voted for an application. Caplan is unclear on this important point. It is a point which the Court addressed recently in a case involving members of a legislature (in this case Congress) bringing suit when it said:

- 1 suit to compel Congress to call a convention should Congress, as it is doing
- 2 now, refuse to call a convention when the states have applied. Caplan
- 3 bequeaths only to the state legislatures, whose sterling record of resisting been especially rigorous when reaching the merits of the dispute would force us to decide whether an action taken by one of the other two branches of the Federal Government was unconstitutional. ... [W] must carefully inquire as to whether appellees have met their burden of establishing that their claimed injury is personal, particularized, concrete, and otherwise judicially cognizable."

Having established the standards on which members of a legislature must establish standing, the Court then addressed the specifics of the case before the bench saying:

"First, appellees have not been singled out for specially unfavorable treatment as opposed to other Members of their respective bodies. Their claim is that the Act causes a type of institutional injury (the diminution of legislative power), which necessarily damages all Members of Congress and both Houses of Congress equally. ... Second, appellees does not claim that they have been deprived of something to which they personally are entitled—such as their seats as Members of Congress after their constituents had elected them. Rather, appellees' claim of standing is based on a loss of political power, not loss of any private right, which would make the injury more concrete.

"If one of the Members were to retire tomorrow, he would not longer have a claim; the claim would be possess by his successor instead. The claimed injury thus runs (in a sense) with the Member's seat, a seat which the Member holds (it may quite arguably be said) as trustee for his constituents, not as a prerogative of personal power.

"[Appellees] have not alleged that they voted for a specific bill, that there were sufficient votes to pass the bill, and that the bill was nonetheless deemed defeated. In the vote on the Line Item Veto Act, their votes were given full effect. They simply lost that vote."

The Court then dispensed with appellees' claim saying:

"In sum, appellees have alleged no injury to themselves as individuals (contra Powell), the institutional injury they allege is wholly abstract and widely dispersed (contra Coleman), and their attempt to litigate this dispute at this time and in this form is contrary to historical experience. We also note that our conclusion neither deprives Members of Congress of an adequate remedy (since they may repeal the Act or exempt appropriations bills form its reach), nor forecloses the Act from constitutional challenge (by someone who suffers judicially cognizable injury as a result of the Act)." Raines v. Byrd, 521 U.S. 811 (1997) (emphasis added).

Clearly, Caplan's carte-blanche view that members of the state legislature have standing to sue must suffer at least two asterisks. First, based on the Court's language, it is logical to presume that even if a member of the legislature brought suit, that legislator must occupy a seat which was first occupied by a member who originally voted in favor of the convention application. Secondly, it can be argued such a legislator might not possess a sufficient personal stake in the matter to justify standing (as his "standing" arrived via official inheritance rather than by personal action) simply because the legislator in question could try again at resubmission of applications in order to compel Congress to obey the Constitution.

- 1 federal bureaucratic efforts to subjugate state sovereignty is well known, the
- 2 power of standing. To these iron-willed (?) legislatures, the author grants
- 3 sole right of redress, casting aside any effect the decision might have on the
- 4 lowly sovereign citizens who might be affected by the convention either being
- 5 called or not being called.
- 6 Because of the obvious constitutional importance of the issue facing the
- 7 Court, this suit is obligated to look more deeply into this single opinion
- 8 that also holds, without a shred of proof, that Congress shall be the sole
- 9 arbiter of the amendatory process.<sup>24</sup>
- 10 We begin by dissecting the various issues raised in Caplan's analysis of
- 11 standing:

12

13

14

15 16

17

18

"The duty of Congress to call a convention may be viewed alternatively as the right to have a convention called. In the event of congressional noncompliance with the obligations of article V, that right may be vindicated in the courts. Suit would be brought after Congress determined that the conditions for a call had not been met: one or more applications were incorrect in form, or stale, or did not agree in subject matter with the rest."

This suit does not dispute Caplan's contention that only those applications submitted to Congress can be counted toward a convention call. However, Caplan refutes his own contention "that Congress is the agent entrusted to receive, inspect, and decide on the validity of applications" in discussing specific state applications. See infra text accompanying note 729.

Caplan's standing argument is thus illogical on an important point even before it is more thoroughly examined: the author maintains the states have standing to sue because the actions of Congress contradict their intent, all the while maintaining Congress "as the agent entrusted to...decide on the validity of the applications" has the sole constitutional duty to do just that. Both statements cannot possibly be true. If Congress has the sole duty to decide on convention applications, the matter ends there. Only if it is accepted that Congress does not have such power do the states (or anyone else) have standing to sue.

The reason for this is obvious. If Congress is operating in an entirely constitutional manner, (in having sole constitutional power of decision) it cannot be said to be performing an act that in any way can be said to be doing injury, in any description, to anyone. Thus, one of the primary elements of standing is not present.

BRIEF IN SUPPORT OF CONVENTION GENERAL BRIEF ARGUMENTS PAGE 45

&lt;sup>24</sup> See supra text accompanying note 22.

1 As will be shown in greater detail later in this suit, the Founding

2 Fathers clearly did not intend to give Congress any discretion in the calling

3 of a convention to propose amendments. 25 Further, Caplan again repudiates

4 himself in his own work by pointing out Madison's interpretation of Congress'

5 "discretion" in refusing to call a convention: 26 that Congress has no

6 discretion in the matter. Caplan thus exposes another point of illogic in his

7 position. He holds the states and presumably the people have the right to 8 compel Congress to call a convention, while at the same time holding the 9 mechanism of that right, the call itself, is under the discretionary control of Congress which may then use that discretion to veto the right that Caplan 11 maintains the states and people possess.

12 13

14 15

16

17

10

"Or, equally likely, Congress would have ignored the petitions entirely. The suit would probably ask the federal court to order Congress to make the necessary determinations and, upon ascertaining that all requirements have been satisfied, to call a convention or in the alternative to propose the amendment."

18

19 20 21

22

23

24

25

Caplan ignores the most basic principles of separation of powers in this part of his argument regarding standing. He holds the Court can order Congress to put forward a specific amendment proposal, ignoring entirely that this would require the Court to approve the actual language of the proposed amendment to satisfy itself that its order had been fulfilled. This violates Article V because the amendatory process does not involve the judiciary in any manner. The simple fact is that Congress, like the convention, clearly has the

&lt;sup>25</sup> See infra text, accompanying notes 505-514.

&lt;sup>26</sup> See infra text accompanying note 514.

- 1 power to proposed amendments, and this power is delegated to no other
- 2 constitutional authority. Thus, the Court could not "order Congress...to
- 3 propose the amendment."
- 4 Secondly, Caplan, in referring to "Congress...upon ascertaining that all
- 5 requirements have been satisfied" clearly implies that Congress has the power
- 6 to establish requirements that need to be "satisfied" before it is required to
- 7 issue the call. The Constitution only mandates one requirement for the states
- 8 to satisfy: a numeric count of applying states. 27 All other "requirements"
- 9 therefore would have to be of a political nature which the Court has
- 10 repeatedly maintained it has no jurisdiction over. 28 Thus the Court could not
- 11 be used in any manner to "implement" these other "requirements." Congress
- 12 would have to stand alone in creating these "political requirements" without
- 13 the benefit of constitutional backing from the Court.
- 14 Thirdly, Caplan again implies Congress has discretion in the calling of
- 15 a convention by being able to establish such "requirements." As noted above,
- 16 Caplan refutes this position himself, thus defeating his own argument. 29
- 17 Fourth, Caplan's statement "or in the alternative to propose the
- 18 amendment" implies that only if the states have applied for a specific
- 19 amendment proposal are they justified to have standing. Caplan ignores the
- 20 Founding Fathers clear intent that the states need only numerically apply in
- 21 sufficient number for a convention to be called. 30 Thus, it can be reasonably

_

 $<sup>^{27}</sup>$  See supra text accompanying note 2.

&lt;sup>28</sup> See infra text accompanying notes 293,897,1053,1054,1056,1057,1072,1108,

&lt;sup>29</sup> See infra text accompanying note 729.

 $<sup>^{30}</sup>$  See infra text accompanying note 513.

1 deduced that Caplan's position on the states' standing is contingent not only

2 on a legislator first occupying a seat that was occupied by a member who

3 originally voted in favor of the convention application in question, not only

4 the legislator proving he can not try again at resubmission of the 5 application, but also that the application subject agrees with other state

6 applications. Obviously Caplan strikes far afield of the standards established

7 by the Court.<sup>31</sup>

8

10

11 12

13

"Article V's reference to the state legislatures as the applying agents would be construed to endow them with standing---that is, eligibility to bring suit because of injury traceable to the defendant's unlawful conduct, a requirement inferred by the courts from article III---and to exclude other possible litigants such as the governors, the President, members of the general public, or a fraction of Congress."

14 15

16

17

18 19 20 21

22

23

24

25

26

Caplan maintains the states have the right to standing, albeit with several caveats the Court has never considered as necessary to standing. The plaintiff certainly believes the states should have the right of standing, along with sovereign citizens, to compel Congress to obey the Constitution. Plaintiff also believes the standing the states need to satisfy should be no more narrow or stringent than any other standing before the courts.

But, in light of the Coleman<sup>32</sup> ruling granting Congress the "incidental" power to regulate and ultimately change the ratification votes by the states to whatever outcome Congress desires, <sup>33</sup> can it not be argued the Court has simultaneously removed standing from the states to sue in any amendatory question because it granted "exclusively and completely" to Congress "power

31 See infra text accompanying note 17.

_

<sup>32</sup> See infra text accompanying notes 1021-1108.

<sup>33</sup> See infra text accompanying note 917,1055.

- 1 over the amending of the Constitution to Congress alone."? Further, the
- 2 Court cannot summarily dispatch this obvious interpretation of the meaning of
- 3 Coleman that Congress has "exclusive[ly] and complete[ly]...power over
- 4 amending of the Constitution." Without the Court granting standing in a
- 5 subsequent related suit, there can be no suit for which the Court can rule,
- 6 and thus the words of the Court remain in effect. Thus it is trapped in its
- 7 own ruling leaving this interpretation (one, which based on the evidence
- 8 presented, Congress has taken full advantage of) to be available for use by
- 9 Congress. As the courts may have effectively eliminated the standing of the
- 10 states to sue, 35 this logically leaves only the sovereign citizen to pursue
- 11 the matter.

&lt;sup>34</sup> See infra text accompanying note 802.

This is not the only time the Court has addressed the issue of whether a state has standing to sue. The Court has made it clear a state is not automatically entitled to standing when it said:

&quot;In the first case, the state of Massachusetts presents no justiciable controversy, either in its own behalf or as the representative of its citizens. ...

&quot;The state of Massachusetts in its own behalf, in effect, complains that the act in question invades the local concerns of the state, and is a usurpation of power, viz. the power of local self-government, reserved to the states.

&quot;Probably it would be sufficient to point out that the powers of the state are not invaded, since the statue imposes no obligation but simply extends an option which the state is free to accept or reject. But we do not rest here. Under article 3, 2, of the Constitution, the judicial power of this court extends 'to controversies... between a state and citizens of another state' and the court has original jurisdiction 'in all cases...in which a state shall be a party.' The effect of this is not to confer jurisdiction upon the court merely because a state is a party, but only where it is a part to a proceeding of judicial cognizance. Proceedings not of a justiciable character are outside the contemplation of the constitutional grant. In Wisconsin v. Pelican Insurance Co., 127 U.S. 265, 289, 8 S. Sup. Ct. 1370, 1373 (32 L. Ed. 239), Mr. Justice Gray, speaking for the court, said:

&quot;'As to "controversies between a state and citizens of another state:"
The object of vesting in the courts of the United States jurisdiction of suits by one state against the citizens of another was to enable such controversies to be determined by a national tribunal, and thereby to avoid the partiality, or suspicion of partiality, which might exist if the plaintiff state were compelled to resort to the courts of the state of which the defendants were citizens. Federalist, No. 80; Chief Justice Jay, in Chisholm v. Georgia, 2 Dall. 419, 475; Story on the Constitution, 1638, 1682. The grant is of "judicial power," and was not intended to confer upon the courts of the United States jurisdiction of a suit or prosecution by the one state, of such a nature that it could not, on the settled principles of public and international law, be entertained by the judiciary of the other state at all."...

"What, then, is the nature of the right of the state here asserted and how is it affected by this statute? Reduced to its simplest terms, it is alleged that the statute constitutes an attempt to legislate outside the powers granted to Congress by the Constitution and with the field of local powers exclusively reserved to the states. Nothing is added to the force or effect of this assertion by the further incidental allegations that the ulterior purpose of Congress thereby was to induce the states to yield a portion of their sovereign rights; that the burden of the appropriations falls unequally upon the several states; and that there is imposed upon the states an illegal and unconstitutional option either to yield to the federal government apart of their reserved rights or lose their share of the moneys appropriated. But what burden is imposed upon the states, unequally or otherwise? Certainly there is none, unless it be the burden of taxation, and that falls upon their inhabitants, who are within the taxing power of Congress as well as that of the states where they reside. Nor does the statute require the states to do or to yield anything. If Congress enacted it with the ulterior purpose of tempting them to yield, that purpose may be effectively frustrated by the simple expedient of not yielding. In the last analysis, the complaint of the plaintiff state is brought to the naked contention that Congress has usurped the reserved powers of the several states by the mere enactment of the statute, though nothing has been done and nothing is to be done without their consent; and it is plain that that question, as it is thus presented, is political, and not judicial in character, and therefore is not a matter which admits of the exercise of the judicial power." Frothingham v. Mellon, 262 U.S. 447 (1923). (emphasis added).

What Caplan presumes is the fact that "legislatures as the applying agents would be construed to endow them with standing---that is, eligibility to bring suit because of injury traceable to the defendant's unlawful conduct..." entirely disregards the Court's already established standing proving concrete injury. As noted in Frothingham, the action of Congress placed no burden, i.e., injury on the states. While the plaintiff can demonstrate concrete injury to his rights, the same cannot be said of the states. The laches of Congress does not require the states to yield any sovereignty. Reduced, as the Court said, to its simplest terms, the laches of Congress in not a calling a convention to propose amendments despite the states satisfying Article V simply ignores the sovereign power, not reduces it. The states are still free to apply for a convention, the full extent of their sovereign power; the applications simply mean nothing to Congress as it may refuse to honor them.

Further, the states would be compelled in some manner to discuss Congress' ulterior purpose in its laches. They would be further compelled to allege that this usurped the reserved powers of the several states by the mere existence of the laches. As no other act by Congress exists, this would be the extent of their presentation. The Court has made it clear that such allegations fall into the realm of political question rather than judicial power and thus would be free to dispense the case due to lack of standing.

Thus, Caplan's contention of the states having standing as agents falls short on several points.

The states can only have standing if it assumed Congress must call a convention and has no discretion in the matter. Thus, if Congress does not call, there is an argument of injury. But Caplan holds that Congress does have discretion, i.e., the right to refuse or reject applications. If so, then the only power of the state, to apply for a convention, is unaffected, and thus the state has no standing. If, however, it is the intent of the application, to hold a convention, that is primary in the constitutional language, then certainly there is grievous injury to the states denying them a right to have a convention. This fact of standing to the states does not exclude the people from this process nor deny them standing.

Throughout all this process, the fact is the people possess the transcendent right to alter or abolish and thus have standing regardless of whether or not the states have standing. Simply put: several groups may have standing to sue on a particular issue. Caplan himself maintains it is the intent of the application that is paramount in this matter and thus refutes himself on the most critical point of the matter: the intent of the applications. (See infra text accompanying note 729.) Once the intent is established, Caplan's standing argument falls to the ground.

Caplan discusses the states as "applying agents." This term clearly implies the states are acting at the bequest of another party. In this case, clearly it is the citizens of that state seeking to use their right of redress to amend the Constitution. Caplan obviously presumes that as agent for the citizens this relationship somehow creates an exclusionary status barring the citizens from seeking redress for the laches of Congress.

An agent is defined as:

"A person authorized by another (principal) to act for or in place of him; one intrusted with another's business. Humphries v. Going, D.C.N.C., 50 F.R.D. 583, 587." BLACK'S LAW DICTIONARY  $6^{\rm th}$  ed. (1990).

If the Constitution is considered a contract for the purposes of this specific discussion, then it is clear the state in this instance cannot be construed as a general agency but rather must be viewed as a special agency.

The definition of special and general agency are defined as:

"General agency. That which exists when there is a delegation to all acts connected with a particular trade, business or employment. It implies authority on the part of the agent to act without restriction or qualification in all matters relating to the business of the principal." BLACK'S LAW DICTIONARY  $6^{\rm th}$  ed. (1990). (emphasis added)

"Special agency. One in which the agent is authorized to conduct a single transaction or a series of transactions not involving a continuity of service." BLACK'S LAW DICTIONARY  $6^{\rm th}$  ed. (1990). (emphasis added).

If the state acts as an agent for the citizens, then any general contract establishing a general agency must be the state constitution rather than the federal Constitution. Hence if the state is to be construed as a general agency, it must be under the authority of the general contract that is the state constitution. The federal Constitution grants certain specialized powers to the states, among them is convention application power, a power that is expended once the state has so applied, and hence when the state acts in this capacity as agent, it is in the form of special agency.

In the case of a state applying for a convention, the term "special agency" is most appropriate. The state is not authorized under the terms of Article V "to act without restriction... in all matters relating to ... the principal." Instead, Article V clearly limits the state to a "single

- 1 Clearly, this suit offers the opportunity for the government to complete
- 2 the circle of standing. If Coleman is affirmed by the Court and the government
- 3 succeeds in convincing the Court to reject plaintiff's standing, the only
- 4 possible interpretation is that Congress is sovereign, the Court having transaction" or "series of transactions not involving a continuity of service." The fact of special agency is self-evident in that once the state has applied for a convention it can take no further action until Congress calls a convention, which is based not on any further action of the agent (the state) but is based on the actions of other agents (the other states) over which the agent (the state) has no control. The state has therefore exhausted its entire assignment made with its principle (the citizens). There is nothing in Article V that gives the states any power beyond applying for a convention. Thus, there is a termination of the "continuity of service" provided to the principal (the citizens) by the agent (the states).

Simply because an agent (the states) performs a specific act desired by the principal (the citizens) does not revoke the principal's right to seek redress for that act independent of the agent. Where the agent acts lawfully and the action performed by the agent is in total fulfillment of the desires of the principal, in this case applying for a convention, then there is nothing in the doctrine of agency implying that such an act by an agent causes the principal (the citizens) to somehow forfeit the right of redress unless such forfeiture is expressly stated in the agreement between the agent and the principal.

In the Constitution, such exclusion of redress certainly is not expressed. An agent, it should be remembered, acts for a principal under the terms of a contract. In the case of Article V, all the contract calls for is that the state applies for a convention and nothing more. Thus, in this instance, no such forfeiture is stated in the Constitution, which serves as a contract between principal (the citizens) and the agent (the state). Indeed, if the Constitution is viewed as a contract, then under the Ninth and Tenth Amendments, citizens have retained undefined auxiliary powers that the special agent provision of Article V does not nullify. Under the First Amendment, citizens expressly retain the right of redress. So from a contract point of view (which is how Caplan views the matter with his reference to states being agents) the fact that the states act as agents does not remove the right of redress from the people. Thus, the right of redress is preserved for either agent or principal, and either may seek redress.

Further, the terms of any agreement between agent/principal terminates upon the agent fulfilling his contracted action. In this case, the filing of a convention application terminates the agent/principal relationship. The Constitution contemplates no further action by the states beyond filing the application. Any further action in the matter (assuming Congress obeys the Constitution) is left to the citizens to elect delegates who then hold a convention to propose amendments whose products are subject to the next prescript of Article V amendment process, ratification. Only then does either Congress or the states come back into the process, Congress in the minuscule role of determining the method of ratification, and the states in the role of either directly ratifying the proposed amendment through the legislatures or holding conventions for the citizens to do the same.

1 already established the states have questionable, if not invalid, standing in

2 the matter. The government having eliminated all challengers in the matter by

3 showing none have valid standing, Congress would be sovereign as it possesses

4 "exclusive[ly] and complete[ly]...power over amending of the Constitution."

 "No pro-convention member of Congress willing to bring suit against the majority could surmount the barriers erected by the courts, and individual members of the public would be ineligible as well. Only the state legislatures, specifically those that had filed applications, would have standing to sue: only they could allege that their constitutionally guaranteed amending powers had been infringed by the inaction of Congress."

It is neither contested nor debated that the Court in a recent suit<sup>36</sup> found that unless members of Congress met the three prerequisites of standing, they had no basis for suit, but again Caplan contradicts himself. He refers to these members of Congress "bring[ing] suit against the majority." Obviously this implies (a) a vote by Congress and (b) the acceptance by Caplan that Congress has discretion in the calling of a convention to propose amendments, a position entirely at odds with the intent of the Founding Fathers. Thus, if members of Congress were to bring suit, standing could be based on the simple

As to the individual citizen such as the plaintiff "be[ing] ineligible" as to standing to sue, this issue will be explored in more depth in the following sections of this suit.

fact that Congress acted in a clearly unconstitutional manner.

Caplan then maintains only those states that had filed applications (which according to most sources is every state in the Union) would have standing to sue. He states "only they could allege that their constitutionally 1 guaranteed amending powers had been infringed by the inaction of Congress." 2 However, Caplan ignores in this statement the obvious intent and effect of 3 4 Coleman. As the Court sanctioned the power of Congress to "veto" under the 5 guise of a political question the ratification vote of any state, 37 it is 6 obvious the "constitutionally guaranteed amending powers" of the states are no 7 longer "guaranteed." 8 9 "The defendants in a suit against a recalcitrant Congress would be the 10 officers charged with tabulating the applications and possibly members of Congress themselves." 11 12 13 Caplan's last point is out of date. No one under current federal law, in or out of Congress, is charged with tabulating state applications for a 14 convention. Further, under current law, the federal official charged with 15 16 proclaiming the adoption of a constitutional amendment cannot act until he 17 receives "official notice." Current law fails to provide a method for providing this "official notice." 38 Plaintiff takes no issue with his 18 19 conclusion of suing members of Congress. As the Constitution names no other 20 responsible party, it is conclusive the members of Congress must be defendants in their official capacity. 21 22

_

&lt;sup>36</sup> See Raines v. Byrd, 521 U.S. 811 (1997).

Summation

24

23

<sup>37</sup> See infra text accompanying note 917,1055.

<sup>38</sup> See infra text accompanying note 875.

1	While Caplan may appear to be attempting to "define" standing so as
2	permit the calling of a convention, a closer examination of the article shows
3	it is nothing more than a smokescreen, which if used as the basis of standing
4	serves to deny anyone- citizen, state legislator, or member of Congress- the
5	right of redress through the courts, thus preserving the unconstitutional
6	action of Congress to veto the Constitution by not calling a convention to
7	propose amendments. Caplan's analysis must therefore be summarily rejected in
8	favor of the well established prerequisites of standing, absent caveats or
9	special conditions imposed on them for the purpose of defeating a convention
10	to propose amendments call. Thus, if these prerequisites are satisfied, or
11	standing can otherwise be shown using a method the Court has already
12	permitted, it follows any citizen, regardless of official position, may bring
13	successful suit to compel Congress to fulfill its mandated constitutional
14	duty. Plaintiff now turns to the specific issues of standing in this suit.
15
16	Specific Issues Of Standing

Specific Issues Of Standing

17

18 Plaintiff raises six issues of standing in this suit:

- 19 1. Congress has denied plaintiff's right to vote in an election required by 20 the Constitution for the purpose of electing delegates to the convention to 21 propose amendments.
- 22 2. Congress has denied the right of plaintiff to associate for legitimate and legal political reasons and objectives. 23
- 3. Congress has denied a clearly defined method of redress specified in the 24 United States Constitution and thus prevented plaintiff from exercising his 25 First Amendment right in this manner. 26
- 27 4. Congress has violated the separation of powers doctrine in that it has 28 usurped, by its laches, the clear separation of powers between the federal 29 government and the states, but as well the separation of powers between 30 Congress and the people by attempting to assume their sovereignty granted 31 them by treaty.
- 32 5. Congress by its laches has denied plaintiff the right to seek and hold 33 public office.

1 2 3	6. The laches of Congress in not calling a convention to propose amendments when mandated by the Constitution is a violation of the Constitution per se.
4	Each of these issues will be examined in turn presenting evidence by the
5	plaintiff to demonstrate standing.
6
7
8
9
10
11	ISSUE OF STANDING (1): DENIAL OF RIGHT TO VOTE
12 13 14 15 16	Congress has denied plaintiff's right to vote in an election required by the Constitution for the purpose of electing delegates to the convention to propose amendments.
17
18	In order for the plaintiff to demonstrate an injury in fact by Congress
19	to his right to vote, it is clear he is required first to prove an election to
20	elect delegates to a convention to propose amendments must be held. Next he
21	must demonstrate that he is lawfully and legally entitled to participate in
22	this election. Finally he must prove that the action (or inaction) of Congress
23	directly is the cause of the obstruction for his inability to participate in
24	this election. This then establishes plaintiff's injury in fact. From this
25	point he can proceed to the other points of standing.
26	The difficulty of presenting "injury in fact" in this suit insofar as it
27	relates to holding an election is that nothing has occurred. No election of
28	this nature has ever occurred in the entire history of the United States.
29	Thus, history is of no help in proving this matter. Nor can any statute be of

1 any aid because Congress has never written one concerning the convention to

2 propose amendments. (No doubt because Congress wishes to retain its

3 unconstitutional exclusivity to the amendatory process<sup>39</sup>). This then leaves

4 only the power of inference from which to derive an answer as to whether or 5 not an election is required.

7

12

17

19

20

6 When a constitutional clause governing an action of Congress commands

Congress to act, and Congress then fails to act, it is inherently

8 contradictory to find that this congressional laches creates neither harm nor

9 injury. At some level, all law is intended to protect society from some harm.

10 The word "protect" in this context is self-evident. That a constitutional

11 clause, statute, ordinance or regulation may cause unanticipated mischief not envisioned by those who ordained it does not justify those regulated by that 13 clause, statue, ordinance or regulation to unilaterally abrogate this

14 direction, most especially where the society has provided a specific method to 15 alter or abolish the clause, statue, ordinance or regulation if so required.

16 It follows if Congress maintains it can veto constitutional clauses at will, then others regulated by different constitutional clauses can also veto these 18 clauses. As the intent of the clauses is clearly to protect society from harm, it is clear if the clauses are ignored or vetoed by those they are intended to regulate that society is now exposed to harm or injury it would have not have 21 otherwise suffered if the clauses were obeyed. Thus to veto or ignore any 22 constitutional clause's edict denotes a prima facie harm or injury.

-

&lt;sup>39</sup> See infra text accompanying notes 1054,1126.

- 1 What harm is done by Congress ignoring a convention call? The answer
- 2 lies in the determination of why the Founders put the convention to propose
- 3 amendments in the Constitution: to prevent tyranny by the national government.
- 4 Clearly, the convention to propose amendments provides that no matter what
- 5 course, abuse, action or direction the national government pursues, its power
- 6 may always be countered (and presumably neutralized) by the people through a
- 7 convention to propose amendments, thus preserving their rights as described in
- 8 the Constitution. 40 Consequently, if clauses of the Constitution are ignored
- 9 by the national government, the rights of the people preserved in the
- 10 Constitution may be voided, a harm or injury which is best described as
- 11 catastrophic, not non-existent.
- 12 True, the issue of standing in this suit deals with the denial by
- 13 Congress of a single vote by one elector in one election. This suit asks the
- 14 Court to examine a single droplet in the river of electoral power. 41 But for &lt;sup>40</sup> The evidence of this assertion is based on the amendatory procedure of the Constitution itself. It is possible for the states (and the people) to amend the Constitution without the national government. There are two points where the national government is involved in the amendatory procedure, but in both cases the national government is given no option to rescind or otherwise obstruct the states and the people.

On the other hand, the national government cannot amend the Constitution under any circumstances without the cooperation and agreement of the states and the people.

The Government urges us to limit standing to those who have 'significantly' affected by agency action. But, even if we could begin to define what such a test would mean, we that it is fundamentally misconceived. 'Injury in fact' reflects the statutory requirement that a person be 'adversely affected' or 'aggrieved,' and it serves to distinguish a person with a direct stake in the outcome of a litigation—even though small—from a person with a mere interest in the problem. We have allowed important interests to be vindicated by plaintiffs with no more at stake in the outcome of an action than a fraction of a vote, see Baker v. Carr, 369 U.S. 186; a $5 fine and costs, see McGowan v. Maryland, 366 U.S. 420; and a $1.50 poll tax, Harper v. Virginia Bd. of Elections, 383 U.S. 663. While these cases were not dealing specifically with 10 of the APA, we see no reason to adopt a more restrictive interpretation of 'adversely affected' or 'aggrieved.' As

- 1 the Court to fail to do so affords Congress the ability to dam the entire
- 2 river. Does this fact, that a significant number of electors, i.e., every
- 3 citizen who may wish to cast a vote in electing a convention delegate, has
- 4 been disenfranchised remove the matter from Court consideration because it is
- 5 in fact not an individual personal injury? Not specifically. The Court has
- 6 made it clear the fact a large number of people may share in an injury does
- 7 not present a basis to deny standing. 42
- 8 Plaintiff maintains the provisions of the Constitution, specifically the
- 9 equal protection clause, 43 lead to an inevitable conclusion: delegates to a
- 10 convention to propose amendments must be elected by the people. In turn, these
- 11 elected delegates represent the wishes and desires of the people who so choose

Professor Davis has put it: 'The basic idea that comes out in numerous cases is that an identifiable trifle is enough for standing to fight out a question of principle; the trifle is the basis for standing and the principle supplies the motivation.' Davis, Standing: Taxpayers and Others, 35 U. Chi. L. Rev. 601, 613. See also K. Davis, Administrative Law Treatise 22.09-5, 22.09-6 (Supp. 1970)." United States v. SCRAP, 412 U.S. 669 (1973).

The Court has made its position clear in this matter in at two least cases:

"To deny standing to person who are in fact injured simply because many others are also inured, would mean that the most injurious and widespread Government actions could be questioned by nobody. We cannot accept that conclusion...." United States v. SCRAP, 412 U.S. 669 (1973).

The Court has also said:

"Often the fact than an interest is abstract and the fact that it is widely shared go hand in hand. But their association is not invariable, and where a harm is concrete, though widely shared, the Court has found 'injury in fact.' See Public Citizen, 491 U.S., at 449-450. ('[T]he fact that other citizens or groups of citizens might make the same complaint after unsuccessfully demanding disclosure...does not lessen [their] assert injury.') Thus the fact that a political forum may be more readily available where an injury is widely shared (while counseling against, say, interpreting a statute as conferring standing) does not, by itself, automatically disqualify an interest for Article III purposes. Such an interest, where sufficiently concrete, may count as an 'injury in fact.' This conclusion seems particularly obvious where (to use a hypothetical example) large number of individuals suffer the same common-law injury (say a wide spread mass tort), or where large numbers of voters suffer interference with voting rights conferred by law." Federal Election Commission v. Akins, 524 U.S. 11 (1998) (emphasis added).

43 See infra text accompanying notes 1208-1244.

1 them. The appointment of delegates either by the state legislature or state

2 executive, other than for the purpose of replacing vacancies, is clearly

3 unconstitutional. 44 Plaintiff further maintains it is far too much a stretch

4 of constitutional intent to assume that because the convention is "vacant" its

5 entire membership can be appointed by state officials absent voter approval.

6 Having established that convention delegates must be elected, it follows that for such action to occur, there must be an election of these delegates.

8 Due to the laches on the part of Congress, this has not happened despite the 9 fact the Constitution mandates Congress must a call a convention and thus trigger an election of delegates. This laches presents the Court a unique 11 question. In most disputes involving voting violations, an election is held,

12 but for various reasons specific individuals are prevented from, in one manner or another, fully participating in that election. In this suit, however, the opposite is true: the national government has not removed the voters from the 15 election, but the election from the voters.

Is there any less violation of the Constitution in denial of the right to vote if the national government, by its laches, discriminates against even a single voter in an election it does hold, thus denying his vote, as opposed to the national government discriminating against all voters by not holding an election at all, thus denying all votes? If, for example, Congress voided elections for its offices when mandated by the Constitution, thus leaving its current officers in place, would a citizen have standing to sue to compel such

-

7

10

13

14

16

17

18 19 20 21

22

<sup>44</sup> See infra text accompanying note 1346.

- 1 elections? As the word "shall" is the operative word used in the Constitution
- 2 to compel such action in both Article V and the clauses regulating election of
- 3 members of Congress, 45 it is logical any argument defending such action in the
- 4 one instance must equally apply to the other. To discriminate otherwise will
- 5 be left to the wisdom of the Court to devise.
- 6 As with all rights of the people, there are two parts: the expressed
- 7 right and the mechanism of the right. The expressed right is that statement
- 8 contained or implied in the Constitution. The mechanism of the right is the
- 9 system (usually a function of government) necessary to effectuate that
- 10 expressed right. Each part of the right is impotent without the other.
- 11 In an election, the government provides the mechanism; the people
- 12 provide the right. This is demonstrated by the following hypothetical. If the
- 13 government provides all the "ornaments" of an election such as booths,
- 14 monitors, ballots, tally sheets, etc., but no citizen exercises his right to
- 15 alter and abolish $^{46}$  and thus does not vote, there is no election. The reason
- 16 is because no action of election has occurred. The intent of an election,
- 17 which is to gather sovereign input from the people so as to direct the
- 18 government in a course of action, is unsatisfied.
- 19 The reverse situation, where the people seek to vote but the government
- 20 holds no election, is just as invalid, because no action of election has
- 21 occurred here either. However, in this instance this reverse situation is not

-

 $<sup>^{45}</sup>$  See infra text accompanying notes 853,860; U.S. CONST., art. I, §2, §§ 1; U.S. CONST.  $17^{\rm th}$  Amend.

 $<sup>^{46}</sup>$  In this case using a relatively minor portion of the right to alter or abolish by voting in an up-or-down election.

- a hypothetical, but a reality. Congress in fact has failed to provide the - mechanism of a vote by its laches of not calling a convention to propose 2
- amendments when mandated by the Constitution. Thus, Congress has denied the 3
- plaintiff's and all other potential electors' rights to exercise their votes, 4
- a right the Court has characterized as "the most basic of political 5
- rights..."47 6
- 7 For a convention to occur, the states must apply, which they have, 48
- 8 thus compelling a convention call, followed by the people voting on convention
- delegates they wish to represent them at the convention. Thus, once the
- 10 numeric threshold of applying states established by the Constitution is
- 11 satisfied, the people have a vested right in the calling of a convention to
- 12 propose amendments, because they now are obligated to act if the
- 13 constitutional mandate of Article V is to be consummated. For Congress not to
- call a convention when constitutionally mandated, therefore, creates an injury 14
- in fact not only to the states but the people as well. 15
- But even if Congress has voided an election, 49 it is clear this fact 16
- 17 alone is not enough to prove standing. The Court requires that a demonstrable
- 18 harm or injury must be shown by the plaintiff in order to prove standing.

 $<sup>^{47}</sup>$  Federal Election Commission v. Akins, 524 U.S. 11 (1998).

&lt;sup>48</sup> See infra

TABLE 2-STATES APPLYING FOR A CONVENTION, p.673.

 $<sup>^{49}</sup>$  In this instance, no other conclusion is possible except that Congress alone is responsible for denial of voting rights. It is clear until Congress calls a convention to propose amendments, the individual states cannot act to hold these elections. The Founding Fathers did not allow in the Constitution for the states to act independently outside the confines of the Constitution because they realized this would lead to the breakdown of the entire document; the evidence is clear the states, having not acted on their own, either individually or collectively, understand this basic principle of constitutional construction. Congress is yet to learn it.

- 1 Therefore, the question becomes, if a single election, among the hundreds if
- 2 not thousands, mandated by either statute or Constitution is not protected,
- 3 what demonstrable harm is done to an individual citizen or even a group of
- 4 citizens who are denied the right to vote?
- 5 Clearly, the Court has recognized the importance of the right of vote.
- 6 It said:
- 7 "Privileges and immunities of citizens of the United States...are only 8 such as arise out of the nature and essential character of the national
- 9 government, or are specifically granted or secured to all citizens or persons
- 10 by the Constitution of the United States. ... Thus, among the rights and
- 11 privileges of national citizenship recognized by this court are... the right
- 12 to vote for national officers...and the right to inform the United States
- 13 authorities of violation of its laws."50
- Thus, the Court has recognized both the right of the people to vote and
- 15 their right to "inform" authorities of violations of [federal] law. This
- 16 ruling alone implies citizens have standing where the government denies
- 17 citizens their right to vote. If they did not have standing, how else could
- 18 the people "inform" "authorities" of such violations with the expectation of
- 19 redress except through the courts?
- 20 Does Congress have an overriding interest so pervasive to afford it the
- 21 right to veto the Constitution? That is to say, can the government in this
- 22 suit invoke the doctrine of sovereign immunity?<sup>51</sup> The answer is clearly not.
- 23 In the first place, Congress has enacted legislation specifically granting

_

&lt;sup>50</sup> Twining v. New Jersey, 211 U.S. 78 (1908).

&quot;Sovereign Immunity. A judicial doctrine which precludes bringing suit against the government without its consent. Founded on the ancient principle that 'the King can do no wrong,' it bars holding the government or its political subdivisions liable for the torts of its officers or agents unless such immunity is expressly waived by statute or by necessary inference from legislative enactment. Maryland Port Admin. V I.T.O. Corp. of Baltimore, 40 Md. App. 697, 395 A.2d. 145, 149." BLACK'S LAW DICTIONARY 6th ed. (1990).

- 1 redress for violations of civil rights. 52 Further, it has enacted several
- 2 criminal sanctions<sup>53</sup> against violations of civil rights including violation of
- 3 voting rights.<sup>54</sup> Further, Congress has removed by statute most of its tort
- 4 immunity to redress. 55 Despite the adage, "The King can do no wrong," the
- 5 fact is there is no king in the United States. As the people are the source of
- 6 all sovereignty and have assigned powers to the government via the
- 7 Constitution, it is clear the government by implication has already
- 8 "consented" to be sued where the government does not obey the Constitution

BRIEF IN SUPPORT OF CONVENTION GENERAL BRIEF ARGUMENTS PAGE 64

&quot;Every person who, under color of any statute, ordinance, regulation, custom, or usage, of any State or Territory or the District of Columbia, subjects, or causes to be subjected, any citizen of the United States or other person within the jurisdiction thereof to the deprivation of any rights, privileges, or immunities secured by the Constitution and laws, shall be liable to the party injured in an action at law, suit in equity, or other proper proceeding for redress..." 42 U.S.C.A. 21, § 1983. (emphasis added). <sup>53</sup> The plaintiff is not interested in invoking these criminal sanctions against members of Congress for violating his civil voting rights unless, by loss of his civil suit seeking redress of this violation, he shall have no other option to recover these rights.

<sup>54</sup> If two or more persons conspire to injure, oppress, threaten, or intimidate any person in any State, Territory, Commonwealth, Possession, or District in the free exercise or enjoyment of any right or privilege secured to him by the Constitution...or because of his having so exercised the same...They shall be fined under this title or imprisoned not more than ten years, or both..." 18 U.S.C.A. 13, § 241.

&quot;Whoever, under color of any law, statue, ordinance, regulation, or custom, willfully subjects any person in any State, Territory, Commonwealth, Possession, or District to the deprivation of any rights, privileges, or immunities secured or protected by the Constitution...shall be fined under this title or imprisoned not more than one year, or both..." 18 U.S.C.A. 13, § 242.

&quot;(b)Whoever, whether or not acting under color of law, by force or threat of force willfully injures, intimidates or interferes with, or attempts to injure, intimidate or interfere with...(A)voting or qualifying to vote, qualifying or campaigning as a candidate for elective office,... in any primary, special, or general election;(B) participating in or enjoying any benefit, service, privilege, program, facility, or activity provided or administered by the United States;...or(4)...participating lawfully in speech or peaceful assembly opposing any denial of the opportunity to so participate—shall be fined under this title, or imprisoned not more than one year, or both." 18 U.S.C.A. 13, § 245.

 $<sup>^{55}</sup>$  "The district courts shall have original jurisdiction,...of...(2)Any other civil action or claim against the United States,...founded either upon the Constitution, or any Act of Congress..." 28 U.S.C.A. 85, § 1346.

- 1 because the people have a right to ensure the government obeys the
- 2 Constitution their sovereign power has placed within it. 56 In willfully
- 3 disobeying the Constitution, the choice of immunity is not the choice of the
- 4 government, but of the people. In this instance, the government is no less
- 5 immune from redress than any individual citizen who violates constitutional
- 6 provisions because as a sovereign power the people clearly possess the
- 7 inherent right to preserve their sovereignty from any threat-even from a
- 8 government they have created to execute that sovereignty.

As noted in Fairchild, the people do have the right to require "that the government be administered according to law..." The Court made no distinction between statutory or constitutional law, and it thus is valid to assume the Court intended that government must be administered with respect to both types of law.

However, there is no validity in attempting to use Fairchild to defeat the issue of standing presented here. The Fairchild suit, as the Court noted, attempted to stop the legal amendatory process of the United States Constitution that, insofar as the Court determined, had been observed at each step by Congress and the states. In this case, however, the intent is to effect a legal and lawful amendment process which the evidence shows Congress has ignored and to enforce that provision of the Constitution, or to see "that the government be administered according to law..."

&lt;sup>56</sup> "The grounds of that decision [United States v. Colby, 49 App. D.C. 358, 265 Fed. 998 affirming a decree to dismiss] were that the validity of the amendment could be in no way affected by an order of cancellation, that it depended on the ratifications by the states, and not on the proclamation, and that the proclamation was unimpeachable since the Secretary was required, under Revised Statutes, 205 (Comp. St. 303), to issue the proclamation upon receiving from three-fourths of the states official notice of ratification, and had no power to determine whether or not the notices received stated the truth. But we have no occasion to consider these grounds of decision.

&quot;Plaintiff's alleged interest in the question submitted is not such as to afford a basis for this proceeding. It is frankly a proceeding to have the Nineteenth Amendment declared void. In form it is a bill in equity; but it is not a case, within the meaning of section 2 of article 3 of the Constitution, which confers judicial power on the federal courts, for no claim of plaintiff is 'brought before the court[s] for determination by such regular proceedings as are established by law or custom for the protection or enforcement of rights, or the prevention, redress, or punishment of wrongs.' .... Plaintiff has only the right, possessed by every citizen, to require that the government be administered according to law and that the public moneys not be wasted. Obviously this general right does not entitle a private citizen to institute in the federal courts a suit to secure by indirection a determination whether a statute, if passed, or a constitutional amendment, about to be adopted, will be valid." Fairchild v. Hughes, 258 U.S. 126 (1922).

1	This self-evident right therefore confers standing on the plaintiff
2	because he is entitled, as are all citizens of the United States, to take
3	whatever steps are necessary, within the legal bounds of the Constitution, to
4	protect his right to vote. For Congress to prevent the exercise of this most
5	basic right can only be described as a concrete personal injury of the most
6	serious order to the rights of the plaintiff, thus providing a more than
7	sufficient standing on which to bring suit. In order to do this the plaintiff
8	is obligated to delve into all aspects of the convention to propose amendments
9	in order to prevent any other laches by Congress and thus creating further
10	personal injuries.
11	Injury: The plaintiff has been denied his right to vote.
12	Causal Relationship: Congress by its refusal to call a convention to
13	propose amendments when mandated by the Constitution, has thus denied the
14	plaintiff the right to vote in an election that should be constitutionally
15	held.
16	Remedy: Remedy of injury to the plaintiff can be accomplished by the
17	Court compelling Congress to call a convention to propose amendments in
18	compliance with the clear language of the Constitution, thus triggering a
19	series of events leading to the election which Congress has denied the
20	plaintiff.
21
22
23
24
25
26
27

1 2 3 4 5 6 ISSUE OF STANDING (2): DENIAL OF RIGHT TO ASSOCIATE 7 8 9 Congress has denied the right of plaintiff to associate for legitimate 10 political objectives. 11 12 Congress' refusal to call a convention to propose amendments, a willful 13 and deliberate laches of mandated constitutional action, has allowed spurious myths to spring up like brambles about the convention to propose amendments. 14 15 This has been done for a single express purpose: to retain illegal, raw and 16 unconstitutional political power over the amendatory process of the 17 Constitution, an objective that is clearly self-evident, as no other citizen, 18 body, official or state in this nation benefits from the seizure of this power 19 except Congress. 20 An example of the brambles Congress has sown can be demonstrated by 21 quoting the words of Congress itself as spoken in its own record: "Popular discontent with the conduct of public affairs by the national 22 23 government and with the specific decisions of the Supreme Court have 24 stimulated state petition drives for particular amendments that have come remarkably close to forcing the call of a constitutional convention. Some 150 25 26 of the 400 petitions for a constitutional convention filed in the 196-year 27 life of Article V have been submitted in the past twenty years. A current 28 drive for the call of a convention is only two states short of the number

<sup>57</sup> "Proposed Procedures for a Limited Constitutional Convention" 98th Congress, 2d Session (1984), p.1. (emphasis added). There is no getting around the obvious propaganda of the emphasized words in this Introduction. Whether subtly hidden in these lines or boldly proclaimed in the Hatch Bill,(see infra required to initiate consideration of the validity of state petitions

Additional state activity threatens to make the convening of a convention a

(Footnote Continued Next Page)

29 30

31

reality."<sup>57</sup>

- 1 Such inflammatory words as emphasized are clearly meant to spawn fear in
- 2 the American public. A examination of their propaganda is in order.
- 3 In the first place, obeying the provisions of the Constitution does not
- 4 mean that something is forced. The Constitution is law of the land. One
- 5 complies with its provisions; one is not "forced." The only way the term
- 6 "forced" can be applied, therefore, is that the Constitution is "forcing"
- 7 Congress to obey the Constitution. Hence, the logical conclusion is that
- 8 Congress is stating that for it to obey the Constitution, it must be "forced"
- 9 to do so, i.e., compelled to do so against its collective will.
- 10 Second, Congress clearly holds it has the right to "consider...the
- 11 validity of state petitions. There is no language in the Constitution giving
- 12 Congress this power. But the propagandists of Congress presume, however
- 13 subtly, that it has veto power over the Constitution.
- 14 Finally, there is the word "threaten". Its meaning is self-explanatory.
- 15 And the deduction from its use by Congress is equally self-explanatory.
- 16 Obviously, Congress considers any action that reduces its powers, however
- 17 constitutional, to be a "threat" to its power. By use of such propaganda,
- 18 Congress instills fear in people with only one purpose: to defeat the
- 19 Constitution and retain unlawful, illegal and unconstitutional political power
- 20 over the amendatory process.

text accompanying notes 596-613) the obvious political goal of Congress is to strangle all freedom of the American citizen when comes to his rights in the convention to propose amendments.

- 1 This unwarranted fear caused by congressional laches has had a chilling
- 2 effect on the ability of the plaintiff to gather signatures for his initiative
- 3 movement, calling on his state legislature to apply for a convention. 58 This
- 4 chilling effect strikes at the heart of the entire electoral process, as well
- 5 as the full faith and credit clause of the Constitution. 59 Congress, without
- 6 Court determination or proper legislative action, has obstructed a lawful
- 7 state court decision. 60

10

11

12

13

14 15

16

17

- 8 The right of the people to peaceably assemble is clearly of national
- 9 character. As summed up by the Court:

"The right of the people peaceably to assemble for the purpose of petitioning Congress for a redress of grievances, or for anything else connected with the powers or the duties of the National Government, is an attribute of national citizenship, and, as such, under the protection of, and guaranteed by, the United States. The very idea of a government, republican in form, implies a right on the part of its citizens to meet peaceably for consultation in respect to public affairs and to petition for a redress of grievances." 61

- 18 Therefore, as citizens have the "right...to meet peaceably for
- 19 consultation in respect to public affairs," and if Congress negates this "core
- 20 political speech" 62 right, this clearly causes a concrete personal injury to

&lt;sup>58</sup> See infra, EXHIBIT 3, p.706.

&quot;Full Faith and Credit shall be given in each State to the public Acts, records, and judicial Proceedings of every other States. And the Congress may be general Laws prescribe the Manner in which such Acts, Records and Proceedings shall be proved, and the Effect thereof." U.S. Const., art. IV, § 1.

&lt;sup>60</sup> See infra, EXIBIT 2, Washington State AGO Opinion No. 4, 1983, p. 699. <sup>61</sup> United States v. Cruikshank, 92 U.S. 542 (1876).

<sup>62 &</sup>quot;The First Amendment is a value-free provision whose protection is not dependent on "the truth, popularity, or social utility of the ideas and beliefs which are offered." NAACP v. Button, 37 U.S. 415 (1963). "The very purpose of the First Amendment is to foreclose public authority from assuming a guardianship of the public mind... In this field every person must be his own watchman for truth, because the forefathers did not trust any government to separate the truth from the false for us.'" Thomas v. Collins, 323 U.S. 516 (1945). ...

&quot;'The freedom of speech and of the press guaranteed by the Constitution embraces at the least the liberty to discuss publicly and truthfully all

- 1 the plaintiff because plaintiff has specifically attempted to gather public
- 2 support for an initiative proposal specifically aimed at utilizing the
- 3 constitutional power that Congress has denied by its laches.
- 4 Any state objections to the matter were resolved in a Washington State
- 5 Supreme Court ruling some 80 years ago. 63 Thus, there is no conflict with
- 6 state law as was the case with other states initiatives that attempted to use
- 7 initiatives to have the state legislatures apply for a convention to propose
- 8 amendments. 64 As there is no state conflict, the only question of obstruction
- 9 of the Constitution lies with Congress, not the states.
- 10 The Supreme Court of the United States has discussed in numerous suits
- 11 the power of the government, either state or federal, to limit or otherwise matters of public oncern without previous restraint or fear of subsequent punishment.' Thornhill v. Alabama, 310 U.S. 88 (1940) at 101-102. The First Amendment 'was fashioned to assure unfettered interchange of idea for the bringing about of political and social changes desired by the people.' Roth v. United States, 354 U.S. 476 (1957). Appellees seek by petition to achieve political change in Colorado, their right freely to engage in discussions concerning the need for that change is guarded by the First Amendment.

"The circulation of an initiative petition of necessity involves both the expression of a desire for political change and a discussion of the merits of the proposed change. Although a petition circulator may not have to persuade potential signatories that a particular proposal should prevail to capture their signatures, he or she will at least have to persuade them that the matter is one deserving of the public scrutiny and debate that would attend its consideration by the whole electorate. This will in almost every case involve an explanation of the nature of the proposal and why its advocates support it. Thus, the circulation of a petition involves the type of interactive communication concerning political change that is appropriately described as 'core political speech.'" Meyer v. Grant, 486 U.S. 414 (1988).

The Court then cited two reasons why interference by the government in blocking petitions actions by the citizens was unconstitutional. The Court said:

"First, it limits the number of voices who will convey appellees' message and the hours they can speak and, therefore, limits the size of the audience they can reach. Second, it makes it less likely that appellees will garner the number of signatures necessary to place the matter on the ballot, thus limiting their ability to make the matter the focus of statewide discussion."

 $<sup>^{63}</sup>$  See infra, EXIBIT 2, Washington State AGO Opinion No. 4, 1983, p. 699.  $^{64}$  See infra text accompanying note 1114.

control the right of citizens to associate for political reasons. In a recent suit, the Court said:

"Appellants argue that even if the statue imposes some limitation on First Amendment expression, the burden is permissible because other avenues of expression remain open to appellees and because the State has the authority to impose limitations on the scope of the state-created right to legislate by initiative. Neither of these arguments persuades us that the burden imposed on appellees' First Amendment rights is acceptable.

"That appellees remain free to employ other means to disseminate their ideas does not take their speech through petition circulators outside the bounds of First Amendment protection. Colorado's prohibition of paid petition circulators restricts access to the most effective, fundamental, and perhaps economical avenue of political discourse, direct one-on-one communication. That it leaves open 'more burdensome' avenues of communication, does not relieve its burden on First Amendment expression. FEC v. Massachusetts Citizen For Life, Inc. 479 U.S. 238 (1986). Cf. Citizens Against Rent Control v. Berkeley, 454 U.S. 290 (1981). The First Amendment protects appellees' right not only to advocate their cause but also to select what they believe to be the most effective means for so doing."

As the State of Colorado attempted in its argument that as the initiative is a state created power, the state has the power to regulate it,

22 Congress may attempt this argument as well. Certainly it will be called on to explain all of its legislative attempts maintain regulatory control of the convention 66 should it choose to avoid the matter, as the Court has already answered the matter directly:

"Relying on Posadas de Puerto Rico Associates v. Tourism Co. of Puerto Rico, 478 U.S. 328 (1986), Colorado contends that because the power of the initiative is a state-created right, it is free to impose limitations on the exercise of that right. That reliance is misplaced. In Posadas the Court concluded that 'the greater power to completely ban casino gambling necessarily includes the lesser power to ban advertising of casino gambling 'Id., at 345-346. The Court of Appeals quite properly pointed out the logical flaw in Colorado's attempt to draw an analogy between the present case and Posadas. The decision in Posadas does not suggest that 'the power to ban casino gambling entirely would include the power to ban public discussion of legislative proposals regarding the legalization and advertising of casino gambling.' 828 F.2d, at 1456. Thus it does not support the position that the power to ban initiatives entirely includes the power to limit discussions of political issues raised in initiative petitions. And, as the Court of Appeals further observed:

'Posadas is inapplicable to present case for a more fundamental reasonthe speech restricted in Posadas was merely "commercial speech which does 'no more than propose a commercial transaction...'" Posadas, [425 U.S., at 340] (quoting Virginia Pharmacy Board v. Virginia Citizens Consumer Council, Inc., 425 U.S. 748, 762 (1976)).... Here, by contrast, the speech at issue is "at the core of our electoral process and of the First Amendment freedoms," Buckley, 424 U.S., at 39 (quoting Williams v. Rhodes, 393 U.S. 23, 32 (1968)}-an area of public policy where protection of robust discussion is at its zenith." Id. 1456-1457.'

BRIEF IN SUPPORT OF CONVENTION GENERAL BRIEF ARGUMENTS PAGE 71

<sup>65</sup> Meyer v. Grant, 486 U.S. 414 (1988).

<sup>66</sup> See infra text accompanying notes 593-613.

"We agree with the Court of Appeals' conclusion that the statute trenches upon an area in which the importance of First Amendment protections is 'at its zenith.' For that reason the burden that Colorado must overcome to justify this criminal law is well-neigh insurmountable."  $^{67}$

The Court then set a standard that applies as much to Congress as to the 13 State of Colorado, saying:

"The State's interest in protecting the integrity of the initiative process does not justify the prohibition because the State has failed to demonstrate that it is necessary to burden appellees' ability to communicate their message in order to meet its concerns." <sup>68</sup>

The Court then completed its order striking down Colorado's limitations on initiative saying:

"`[L]egislative restrictions on advocacy of the election or defeat of political candidates are wholly at odds with the guarantees of the First Amendment.' Buckley v. Valeo, 424 U.S., at 50. That principle applies equally to 'the discussion of political policy generally or advocacy of the passage or defeat of legislation.' Id. at 48. The Colorado statute prohibiting the payment of petition circulators imposes a burden on political expression that the state has failed to justify."  $^{69}$

As the Court noted in another suit:

"[T]he Constitution is filled with provisions that grant Congress or the States specific power to legislate in certain areas; these granted powers are always subject to the limitation that they may not be exercised in a way that violates other specific provisions of the Constitution."

In this same suit, the Court said:

"In the present situation the state laws place burdens on two different, although overlapping, kinds of rights—the right of individuals to associate for the advancement of political beliefs, and the right of qualified voter, regardless of their political persuasion, to case their votes effectively. Both of these rights, of course, rank among our most precious freedoms. We have repeatedly held that freedom of association is protected by the First Amendment. And of course this freedom protected against federal encroachment by the first Amendment is entitled under the Fourteenth Amendment to the same protection from infringement by the States. Similarly we have said with reference to the right to vote. 'No right is more precious in a free country

 $<sup>^{67}</sup>$  Meyer v. Grant, 486 U.S. 414 (1988).

&lt;sup>68</sup> Id.

&lt;sup>69</sup> Id.

 $<sup>^{70}</sup>$  Williams v. Rhodes, 393 U.S. 23 (1968).

than that of having a voice in the election of those who make the laws under which, as good citizens, we must live. Other rights, even the most basic, are illusory if the right to vote is undermined."

4 The Court then said:

5

6

7

"The State has here failed to show any 'compelling interest' which justifies imposing such heavy burdens on the right to vote and to associate."

- 8 There is nothing in the ruling that precludes the same high standards on
- 9 Congress as the Court placed on the State of Ohio and the other states.
- Therefore, for Congress to regulate plaintiff's right to associate,
- 11 clearly it must demonstrate a "compelling interest"  $^{73}$  to do so, i.e., that its
- 12 need to regulate, or in this case entirely prevent, outweighs the
- 13 constitutional protections of the First Amendment. Does Congress have such a
- 14 compelling interest? As the government has held the language and meaning of
- 15 Article V is clear and unambiguous, 74 and as this language has not altered
- 16 since Sprague, it places grave doubt on the need for government regulation in
- 17 order to "clarify" it, as the government insisted in Sprague that no such
- 18 compelling interest existed, and the Court agreed.
- 19 Clearly, a compelling interest by definition is "one which the state is
- 20 forced or obliged to protect." The word "forced" is thus employed in two
- 21 manners, one by legal definition and one by Congress. In the former, it
- 22 implies an obligation on the state in order to protect it, presumably from

 $<sup>^{71}</sup>$  Id.

&lt;sup>72</sup> Id.

&lt;sup>73</sup> "Compelling state interest." One which the state is forced or obliged to protect. Coleman v. Coleman, 32 Ohio St.2d 155 291 N.E.2d 530, 534. Term used to uphold state action in the fact of attack grounded on Equal Protection or First Amendment rights because of serious need for such state action. Also employed to justify state action under police power of state. Printing Industries of Gulf Coast v. Hill, 382 F.Supp. 801 (D.C. Tex.)." BLACK'S LAW DICTIONARY 6th ed. (1990).

&lt;sup>74</sup> See infra text accompanying notes 26,527,550,670,728,1034,1095,1283-1284.

- 1 extinction or destruction. With the latter, the meaning of the word is clearly
- 2 compelling Congress to perform an act it does not wish to perform and has no
- 3 interest in protecting. Thus, by its own actions attempting legislation to
- 4 completely regulate and even veto the actions of the convention, Congress has
- 5 demonstrated it has no compelling interest in a convention to propose
- 6 amendments, because Congress' intent is clear: not to protect, but to destroy.
- 7 Any "interest" Congress has in a convention to propose amendments is in
- 8 preventing the political erosion of its power by strangling the convention,
- 9 and this standard of protection simply is neither sufficient nor serious
- 10 enough to overcome the high walls that protect the civil liberties of the
- 11 First Amendment.
- 12 The Supreme Court is unequivocal: all citizens have a basic, core civil
- 13 right to politically associate using whatever methods they deem appropriate.
- 14 The Court is equally unequivocal regarding powers of the state (or Congress)
- 15 to regulate this basic core right: unless the state can demonstrate a
- 16 compelling interest to regulate such association, its interest must fall. The
- 17 Court has established extraordinarily high walls to protect this basic core
- 18 right.
- 19 Simply stated: Congress has no compelling interest in preventing any
- 20 political association by using laches to refuse to call a convention. This
- 21 laches thwarts all political association and thus defeats plaintiff's specific
- 22 efforts at gathering public support for a convention to propose amendments.
- 23 Such action on the part of Congress must be declared unconstitutional as it
- 24 destroys, rather than protects, the civil right in question. This laches thus

1	provides standing to plaintiff to recover his full and basic right to
2	politically associate.
3	Injury: Congress' laches in refusing a call a convention to propose
4	amendments has created a chilling effect on the efforts of the plaintiff to
5	politically associate for the advancement of a convention to propose
6	amendments as mandated by the Constitution. This unwarranted fear caused by
7	congressional laches has had a chilling effect on the ability of the plaintiff
8	to gather signatures for his initiative movement, calling on his state
9	legislature to apply for a convention
10	Causal Relationship: Congress, in its refusal to call a convention, has
11	created an unwarranted fear of a convention to propose amendments in the mind
12	of the public.
13	Remedy: By compelling Congress to call a convention as mandated by the
14	Constitution, plaintiff's ability to politically associate, minus the
15	oppressive congressional laches, is automatically resolved.
16
17
18 19	ISSUE OF STANDING (3): DENIAL OF RIGHT OF REDRESS
20 21 22 23	Congress has denied a clearly defined method of redress specified in the United States Constitution and thus prevented plaintiff from exercising his First Amendment right in this manner.
24
25	In its most basic form, the purpose of the convention to propose
26	amendments is to provide an orderly constitutional method whereby actions of
27	the federal government may be redressed at the constitutional level by the 28	people acting through the states. The evidence of this assertion is plain. The

- 1 states, acting under the authority of Article V, have applied, thus expressing
- 2 their intent to hold a convention. Their constitutional duty is complete. It
- 3 now is up to the people to act, either by electing delegates or participating
- 4 as elected delegates, and effecting redresses to the actions of the federal
- 5 government: altering, abolishing or adding provisions to the Constitution the
- 6 people see appropriate so as to effect those redresses sought. However, this
- 7 constitutional redress cannot be accomplished if Congress is permitted by
- 8 laches or other means to veto the Constitution. Thus, through its laches
- 9 Congress is vetoing the constitutional right of citizens to utilize a
- 10 constitutionally guaranteed right of redress.
- In discussing standing, Caplan said in part:
- 12 "Article V's reference to the state legislatures as the applying agents
- 13 would be construed to endow them with standing---that is, eligibility to bring
- 14 suit because of injury traceable to the defendant's unlawful conduct, a
- 15 requirement inferred by the courts from article III---and to exclude other
- 16 possible litigants such as the governors, the President, members of the
- 17 general public, or a fraction of Congress. No pro-convention member of Congress willing to bring suit against the majority could surmount the
- 19 barriers erected by the courts, and individual members of the public would be
- 20 ineligible as well."<sup>75</sup>
- 21 In maintaining "members of the public [are] ineligible" because of lack
- 22 of standing to bring suit to compel Congress to call a convention, Caplan
- 23 relies primarily on two Court suits: Valley Forge and Fairchild. Caplan
- 24 states:
- 25 "On the ineligibility of the general public, see Valley Forge, 454 U.S.
- 26 at 482-83; Fairchild v. Hughes, 258 U.S. 126 (1922) (private citizen lacked
- 27 standing to have 19th amendment declared void)."<sup>76</sup>
- 28 Referring to the pages cited by Caplan, it is clear the Court does not
- 29 state that private citizens lack standing in this matter simply because they

<sup>76</sup> Id.

BRIEF IN SUPPORT OF CONVENTION GENERAL BRIEF ARGUMENTS PAGE 76

 $<sup>^{75}</sup>$  See supra text accompanying note 21. (footnotes omitted, emphasis added).

- 1 are private citizens. While the standards of standing established by the Court
- 2 are higher than to allow any citizen to bring suit, nevertheless the standards
- 3 established by the Court are not insurmountable. Thus, Caplan's assertion that
- 4 private citizens are ineligible to sue is in fact false. Simply put, if a
- 5 private citizen satisfies the standards of standing, he has standing to sue.
- 6 This was all Valley Forge stated.
- 7 To be specific, the Court rejected generalized complaints by citizens
- 8 who attempt to use the courts to air complaints about the way the government
- 9 is run. The Court stated:

21

- 10 "The Court of Appeals was surely correct in recognizing that the Art. 11 III requirements of standing are not satisfied by 'the abstract injury in nonobservance of the Constitution asserted by...citizens.' Schlesinger v. Reservists Committee to Stop the War, 418 U.S. at 223, n. 13. This Court 12 13 14 repeatedly has rejected claims of standing predicated on 'the right, possessed 15 by every citizen, to require that the Government be administered according to law....'" Fairchild v. Hughes, 258 U.S. 126, 129 (1922). Baker v. Carr, 369 16 U.S. 186, 208 (1962). See Schlesinger v. Reservists Committee to Stop the 17 War,, supra, at 216-222; Laird v. Tatum, 408 U.S. 1 (1972); Ex parte Levitt, 18 302 U.S. 633 (1937). Such claims amount to little more than attempts 'to 19 20 employ a federal court as a forum in which to air...generalized grievances
- 22 Nowhere in this language can there be any support for Caplan's
- 23 supposition that citizens have no standing to sue in regard to Article V
- 24 questions. Rather, the Court merely restated its long held position that if about the conduct of government.' Flast v. Cohen, 392 U.S., at 106."77

- 25 any party demonstrates standing it may bring suit regarding any constitutional
- 26 question. Caplan's use of Fairchild is of little help in his assertion.
- In Fairchild, the Court said:
- "Plaintiff's alleged interest in the question submitted is not such as to afford a basis for this proceeding. It is frankly a proceeding to have the Nineteenth Amendment declared void. In form it is a bill in equity; but it is not a case, within the meaning of section 2 of article 3 of the Constitution, which confers judicial power on the federal courts, for no claim of plaintiff is 'brought before the court[s] for determination by such regular proceedings as are established by law or custom for the protection or enforcement of rights, or the prevention, redress, or punishment of wrongs.' Plaintiff has only the right, possessed by every citizen, to require that the government be administered according to law and that the public moneys be not wasted." $^{78}$

BRIEF IN SUPPORT OF CONVENTION GENERAL BRIEF ARGUMENTS PAGE 77

 $<sup>^{77}</sup>$  Valley Forge College v. Americans United for Separation of Church and State, Inc., et al., 454 U.S. 464 (1982).

6 The Court clearly stated a citizen does not have a right to use the

- 7 courts to void an amendment or other legal action of the legislature.
- 8 Specifically, it stated that citizens have "the right to require the
- 9 government be administered according to law." It did not stipulate or limit
- 10 this right to only statutory matters. Indeed, as constitutional law violations
- 11 are more fundamental, such violations require more protection by the Court
- 12 than statutory violations. Thus, it is valid for a citizen to exercise his
- 13 right to demand the government be administered according to constitutional as
- 14 well as statutory law. The only stipulation the Court made is the citizen
- 15 demonstrate the governmental action in question either violates rights, or
- 16 court action is required to punish wrongs. 79 This is a far cry from Caplan's

&lt;sup>78</sup> Fairchild v. Hughes, 258 U.S. 126 (1922).

&lt;sup>79</sup> "Wrong. A violation of legal rights of another; an invasion of right to the damage of the parties who suffer it, especially a tort. State ex rel. And to use of Donelon v. Deuser, 348 Mo. 628, 134 S.W.2d 132, 133. It usually signifies injury to person, property or relative noncontractual rights of another than wrongdoer, with or without force, but, in more extended sense, includes violation of contract. Daurizio v. Merchants' Despatch Transp. Co. 152 Misc. 716, 274 N.Y.S. 174.

&quot;The idea of rights naturally suggest the correlative of wrongs; for every right is capable of being violated. A right to receive payment for goods sold (for example) implies a wrong on the part of him who owes, but withholds the price; a right to live in personal security, a wrong on the part of him who commits personal violence. And therefore, while, in a general point of view, the law is intended for the establishment and maintenance of rights, we find it, on closer examination, to be dealing both with rights and wrongs. It first fixes the character and definition of rights, and then, with a view to their effectual security, proceeds to define wrongs, and to devise the means by which the latter shall be prevented and redressed." BLACK'S LAW DICTIONARY 6th ed. (1990).

1 carte blanche exclusion of all private citizens seeking redress from abuses by

2 Congress of Article V.

3 There is a major difference between this legal action and the action

4 sought in Fairchild. In Fairchild, the plaintiffs attempted, as the Court

5 noted, to prevent the adoption of a constitutional amendment that had gone

6 through all the proper constitutional steps of Article V to become an

7 amendment to the Constitution. The Court properly said the plaintiffs in that

8 suit had no right to attempt to use the courts to subvert the adoption of an

9 amendment in this manner. Here, the plaintiff seeks to have the Court cause

10 Congress to obey proper Article V procedures where the necessary evidence,

11 i.e., the proper number of state applications for a convention, 80 clearly

12 demonstrate Congress has failed to do so. Thus, unlike Fairchild, Congress has

13 not followed a prescribed method of constitutional amendment; it has violated

14 constitutional law by not issuing a call for a convention when mandated by the 15 Constitution. Under these circumstances, plaintiff maintains he has "the 16 right, possessed by every citizen, to require that [Congress] be administered according to law," and that this circumstance alone provides him standing to 18 sue.

17

20

22

23 24

19 Beside the applications, what proof is there that Congress has never had even the slightest intention of obeying the Constitution? As Caplan stated:

21 "Congress has never kept regular track of incoming convention applications, and there exists no official catalogue of the applications adopted by the states since 1789. No federal official has even be designated to receive and keep track of applications separately, although the rules

25 adopted by the Senate and House of Representatives specify that memorials to

TABLE 1-STATE APPLICATIONS FOR A CONVENTION, p.661.

&lt;sup>80</sup> See infra text

Congress (which state a grievance but do not ask for any remedy) and petitions (which request specific action ) are to be delivered to the Secretary of the Senate and the Clerk of the House. Convention applications are usually deemed

 $4\,$  to fall under one or the other category of submission." $^{81}$

5 By not even tracking state applications, Congress practices a form of

6 peine fort et dure 82 on the convention clause of Article V. Pretending the 7 clause doesn't exist, it relegates it to solitary confinement. By not tracking the applications, it mutes the voice of the people. By piling on countless unconstitutional conditions and stipulations, it tries to crush the clause to 10 death.

8

9

14

16

11 The Founding Founders never intended the convention method of amendment

12 to "plead" its suit before Congress before being allowed to exist. Article V

13 is a self-executing constitutional provision and, thus, so is the convention method of amendment. Save for writing the amendment or amendments going

15 through the provision's process, no ancillary legislation by Congress in proposing its own amendment(s), or the convention for that matter, is required

17 to execute its provisions. In neglecting Article V Congress defiles the 18 Constitution in its the most fundamental principle: the government possesses

19 only those powers licensed to it by the people and is powerless to expand or 20 ignore them.

.

 $<sup>^{81}</sup>$  Caplan, Constitutional Brinksmanship: Amending the Constitution by National Convention, (1988), Preface p. xix.

 $<sup>^{82}</sup>$  "In old English law, a special form of punishment for those who being arraigned for felony, obstinately 'stood mute' that is, refused to plead or put themselves upon trial. It is described as a combination of solitary confinement, slow starvation, and crushing the naked body with a great load of iron. This atrocious punishment was vulgarly called 'pressing to death'" BLACK'S LAW DICTIONARY  $6^{\rm th}$  ed. (1990).

1 This issue of congressional ignorance is significant in the standing of

2 the plaintiff to bring suit in order to redress this matter. As the Court

3 said:

5

8

9

10

11

12

13

14

15

16

17

18 19 20

21

22

"[A]part from the 'case' or 'controversy' test, [standing concerns] the question whether the interest sought to be protected by the complaint is arguably within the zone of interests to be protected or regulated by the states or constitutional guarantee in question." 83

As the clear intent of the convention clause of Article V is to redress abuses of the national government, 84 clearly preserving that method of redress from abuse by the national government falls "within the zone of interest and legal protection prescribed by the powers of the article." Logically, there is nothing more essential to the "zone of interest...of the constitutional guarantee in question" than preserving the existence of the right in the first place. Obviously, if this primary objective of self-preservation of the right does not exist, the rest of the redress prescribed in the article becomes meaningless. Clearly, the laches of Congress makes any further inquiry as to whether plaintiff has standing in regard to the zone of interest of the constitutional guarantee in question needless. Congress has chosen to threaten the most basic, fundamental and obvious zone of interest that can exist for any prescribed right in the Constitution: the elimination of that right by the national government without properly amending the Constitution, which is the only way such action can be constitutionally undertaken.

In an analogous decision discussing the right of taxpayers to see
"public monies [are] not wasted," the second basis on which citizens,

_

<sup>83</sup> Data Processing Service v. CAMP, 397 U.S. 150 (1970).

<sup>84</sup> See infra text accompanying notes 514,529,1041,1682.

1 according to Fairchild, can sue, the Court made it clear citizens must

2 establish certain proofs in order to use the courts to redress these rights.

The Court said:

3

4 5

6 7

8

9

10

11

12 13

14

15

16

17

18 19 20 21

22

23

24

25

26

27

28 29

30

31

32

33

34

35

36

37

38

"The nexus demanded of federal taxpayers has two aspects to it. First, the taxpayer must establish a logical link between that status and the type of legislative enactment attacked. Thus, a taxpayer will be a proper part to allege the unconstitutionality only of exercises of congressional power under the taxing and spending clause of Art. I, 8, of the Constitution. It will not be sufficient to allege an incidental expenditure of tax funds in the administration of an essentially regulatory statue. This requirement is consistent with the limitation imposed upon state-taxpayer standing in federal courts in Doremus v. Board of Education, 342 U.S. 429 (1952). Second, the taxpayer must establish a nexus between that status and the precise nature of the constitutional infringement alleged. Under this requirement, the taxpayer must show that the challenged enactment exceeds specific constitutional limitations imposed upon the exercise of the congressional taxing an spending power and not simply that the enactment is generally beyond the powers delegated to Congress by Art. I, 8. When both nexuses are established, the litigant will have shown a taxpayer's stake in the outcome of the controversy and will be a proper and appropriate party to invoke a federal court's jurisdiction."

The Court then concluded by saying:

"[W]henever such specific limitations are found, we believe a taxpayer will have a clear stake as a taxpayer in assuring that they are not breached by Congress. Consequently, we hold that a taxpayer will have standing consistent with Article III to invoke federal judicial power when he alleges that congressional action under the taxing and spending clause is in derogation of those constitutional provisions which operate to restrict the exercise of the taxing and spending power. The taxpayer's allegation in such cases would be that his tax money is being extracted and spent in violation of specific constitutional protections against such abuses of legislative power."

While the Court did not directly address the issue of citizens having the government obey the law, though it is certainly implied in its "derogation of those constitutional provisions which operate to restrict..." phrase, nevertheless certain common principles between Flast and Fairchild are apparent. The Court made it clear a logical link between the citizen and the abuse must be established. The Court said the taxpayer must demonstrate the

BRIEF IN SUPPORT OF CONVENTION GENERAL BRIEF ARGUMENTS PAGE 82

 $<sup>^{85}</sup>$  Flast v. Cohen, 392 U.S. 83 (1968). (emphasis added).  $^{86}$   $\tau d$

1 actions of the government serve to derogate those constitutional provisions

2 that operate to restrict the exercise of that power, or prevent such abuses of 3 legislative power.

4 This second stipulation is well proven by Caplan's statement alone.

5 Congressional laches in direct disregard of constitutional mandates derogates

6 the entire Constitution by attacking its most fundamental principle: secured specified rights immune from the interference of arbitrary and capricious

8 legislative action.

7

9

10

11

12

13

14

15

16

17

18 19 20

21

22

The establishment of the second stipulation creates the necessary link required to prove the first stipulation. Like all citizens, this citizen is subject to the laws of this nation. He also receives such benefits as those laws may prescribe. These rights and benefits are set forth in the United States Constitution. The most fundamental right of citizenship in this nation is the right to alter or abolish regarding the form and powers of the national government embodied in Article V. This right is exercised using prescribed procedures set forth in that article. The Founders intended Congress, insofar as calling a convention, have no discretion in the matter whatsoever. BY Congress, in refusing to call a convention to propose amendments when mandated by the Constitution for whatever excuse, exceeds the specific constitutional limitations established by the Founding Fathers. Any denial by Congress in any manner, including not tracking the applications, violates the clear intent and meaning of the Constitution. Under these circumstances, the actions of 87 See infra text accompanying notes 505-514.

_

1	Congress serve to derogate those constitutional provisions that operate to
2	restrict the exercise of that power, or prevent such abuses of legislative
3	power. This in turn provides the stipulation necessary for the plaintiff to
4	invoke the right "possessed by every citizen, to require that the government
5	be administered according to law." Congress has violated the Constitution at a
6	fundamental level, and it is the right of plaintiff to seek redress, thus
7	giving him standing.
8	Injury: Congress in its laches of refusing to call a convention has
9	violated the Constitution at a fundamental level.
10	Causal Relationship: Congress having violated constitutional provisions
11	meant to restrict or otherwise deny Congress this unconstitutional exercise of
12	power has violated the right of the plaintiff to require the government be
13	administered according to constitutional law.
14	Remedy: By compelling Congress to call a convention as mandated by the
15	Constitution, plaintiff's right to require the government be administered
16	according to constitutional law is restored.
17
18 19 20 21
22
23
24
25
26
27
28

5

6 7

8

Congress has violated the separation of powers doctrine in that it has usurped, by its laches, the clear separation of powers between the federal government and the states, as well the separation of powers between Congress and the people, by attempting to assume their sovereignty granted them by treaty.

9

It is well established the people are the source of all sovereignty in this nation. 88 As the people are sovereign, they have full discretion regarding the disbursement of their sovereign powers through offices 89 of government in order to effect them. The delegation of these powers is most

- 14 properly described as a license $^{90}$  of sovereign power as the people have
- 15 retained their option to withdraw that sovereign power any time they wish
- 16 through the amendatory process, and either retain it for themselves or
- 17 reassign it to another office. 91 Thus, they may license as much or as little

 $<sup>^{88}</sup>$  See infra text accompanying notes 921-1133. See also Kennett v. Chamber, 55 U.S. 38 (1852): "Under the constitution, sovereignty in the United States resides in the people."

&lt;sup>89</sup> "Office. A right, and correspondent duty, to exercise a public trust. A public charge or employment. An employment on behalf of behalf of the government in any station, or public trust, not merely transient, occasional, or incidental." BLACK'S LAW DICTIONARY 6th ed. (1990).

 $<sup>^{90}</sup>$  "License. The permission by competent authority to do an act which, without such permission, would be illegal; a trespass, a tort, or otherwise not allowable. People v. Henderson, 391 Mich. 612, 218 N.W.2d 2, 4." BLACK'S LAW DICTIONARY 6th ed. (1990).

<sup>91</sup> See Hollingsworth v. Virginia, 3 U.S. 378, (1798):

&quot;The people limit and restrain the power of the legislature, acting under a delegated authority, but they impose no restraint on themselves. The could have said by an amendment to the constitution, that no judicial authority should be exercised, in any case, under the United States; and, if they had said so, could a court be held, or a judge proceed, on any judicial business, past or future, from the moment of adopting, the amendment. On general ground, then, it was in the power of the people to annihilate the whole..."

See also United States v. Chambers, 291 U.S. 217 (1934):

- 1 sovereign power to any office of government as they choose and may withdraw it
- 2 at any time.
- 3 Regardless of how much power was assigned by the people, the Founders
- 4 assumed Congress might attempt to abuse, in one form of another, the powers
- 5 licensed them. 92 Thus, the Founding Fathers installed a system of checks and
- 6 balances and separation of powers in the Constitution designed to counter the
- 7 assigned power of one office with the assigned power of another. They also
- 8 reserved powers entirely from the national government, retaining these powers
- 9 either to the states or the people; thus these powers are separate from those
- 10 of the national government. One such check and balance of the latter
- 11 description, a power of the people, is the convention to propose amendments.
- 12 The people, acting through the states, can directly use their power to alter
- 13 or abolish as they desire, bypassing any objections of the national
- 14 government. The convention thus serves as a check and balance against abuses
- 15 of power by the national government.
- 16 Further, under the doctrine of separation of powers, 93 any office of
- 17 government the people license to execute a portion of their sovereign power is

&quot;The Congress, however, is powerless to expand or extend its constitutional authority.... The National Prohibition Act was not repealed by act of Congress, but was rendered inoperative, so far as authority to enact its provisions was derived from the Eighteenth Amendment, by the repeal, not by the Congress but by the people, of that amendment."

&lt;sup>92</sup> See infra text accompanying notes 494,505-521.
<sup>93</sup> "Separation of powers. The governments of state and the United States are divided into three departments or branches: the legislative, which is empowered to make laws, the executive which is required to carry out the laws, and the judicial which is charged with interpreting the laws and adjudicating disputes under the laws. Under this constitutional doctrine of 'separation of powers,' one branch is not permitted to encroach on the domain or exercise the powers of another branch. See U.S. Constitution, Article I-III. See also Power (Constitutional powers)."

- limited solely to the use of those specific powers. This separation of powers
- 2 is two-fold: the office of government may not assume powers entrusted to other
- 3 offices of government, thus maintaining its independence from other offices, 94
- 4 nor may it assume powers retained from government by the people. 95 This
- 5 includes, but is not limited to, such sovereign powers as the people's right
- 6 to alter or abolish.
- 7 Combined, the power of license, checks and balance, and separation of
- 8 powers dictate entirely the description of power created by the people for
- 9 each office of government.96 Once assigned these powers, each office of

"That the people have an original right to establish, for their future government, such principles as, in their opinion, shall most conduce to their &quot;Power. Constitutional Powers. The right to take action in respect to a particular subject matter or class of matters, involving more or less discretion, granted by the constitution to the several departments or branches of the government, or reserved to the people. Powers in this sense are generally classified as legislative, executive, and judicial (q.v.); and further classified as enumerated (or express), implied, inherent, resulting, or sovereign powers." BLACK'S LAW DICTIONARY 6th ed. (1990).

94 The exception of course is whether by reasonable implication or expressed language in the Constitution, a zone of dual use of a specific power is established. Such an example would be the passage of a law where Congress writes the law, it is reviewed by the President and then may suffer review by the courts which may ultimately find its provisions conflict with the Constitution. Thus, whether a law has full effect is dependent on several offices of government using some portion of the sovereign power licensed to them by the people. Each power is essential for the passage of the law; each office retains discretion to use or withhold its licensed power.

The principle of separation of powers holds that while branches of government may intermingle so as to form a workable government, this means in simple form that the President's veto power cannot be assumed by a member of Congress, that a federal judge may not write legislation destined for the signature of the President or that under ordinary circumstances, Congress may act as a judiciary body and review ordinary civil or criminal cases.

95 "Under a constitution conferring specific powers, this power contended for must be granted or it cannot be exercised." United States v. Fisher, 6 U.S. 358 (1805); "The government of the United States can claim no powers which are not granted to it by the Constitution." Martin v. Hunter's Lessee, 14 U.S. 304 (1816).

&lt;sup>96</sup> "The Constitution is the fundamental law of the United States, and no department of government has any other powers than those thus delegated to it by the people." Hepburn v. Griswold, 75 U.S. 603 (1869). "The government of the United States is one of limited powers, and no department possess any authority not granted by Constitution." Id.

- 1 government has discretion to use that sovereign power but only within the
- 2 limits prescribed by the people. One license the people entrusted to Congress,
- 3 an office of government, was participation in the amendatory process of the
- 4 Constitution. However, the people did not give exclusive amendatory power to
- 5 Congress. Therefore, Congress can neither be assigned, nor assume, all
- 6 amendatory power of the Constitution. 97
- 7 As the various licenses of sovereignty by the people describe entirely
- 8 the limits of power, restrictions and prohibitions of offices of government,
- 9 it follows these licenses become limits of the office of government that may
- 10 neither be exceeded nor ignored. As part of the limits of various offices, the
- 11 people prescribed certain specific textual qualifications they required any
- 12 occupant of the office must satisfy before being allowed to occupy the office.
- 13 The Court has ruled that no additional standards except those textual
- 14 standards established in the Constitution can be used to judge the
- 15 qualifications of the office. 98 On numerous occasions the Court has declared
- 16 through its power of judicial review that actions by offices of government are own happiness, is the basis on which the whole American fabric has been erected. ... The principles, therefore, so established, are deemed fundamental. And as the authority from which they proceed is supreme, and can seldom act, they are designed to be permanent.

"The original and supreme will organizes the government, and assigns to different departments their respective powers. It may either stop here, or establish certain limits not to be transcended by those departments.

"The government of the United States is of the latter description. The powers of the legislature are defined and limited, and that those limits may not be mistaken, or forgotten, the constitution is written." Marbury v. Madison, 5 U.S. 137 (1803).

<sup>97</sup> However, the Court has ruled to the contrary in this instance, and it will be up to the wisdom of the Court to determine whether they or the Founders are correct in this. See infra text accompanying notes 1053-1108.

98 "[W]e have concluded that art. I, 5, is at most a 'textually demonstrable commitment' to Congress to judge only the qualifications expressly set forth in the Constitution." Powell v. McCormack, 395 U.S. 486 (1969).

- 1 unconstitutional or not in compliance with the license originally prescribed
- 2 by the people to that office.
- 3 As such, any citizen of the United States elected or appointed to any
- 4 office of government established by the Constitution, i.e., licensed by the
- 5 people, must satisfy those textual qualification for office prescribed in the
- 6 Constitution in order to occupy the office, but also must comply with the
- 7 limits, powers, and restrictions of the office prescribed by the people in
- 8 their license of sovereign power to that office.
- 9 All members of Congress are bound by oath to support the Constitution. 99
- 10 Accordingly, this means Congress agrees to support the Constitution which
- 11 includes all of its clauses, provisions and limits of office. Consequently,
- 12 while the Powell ruling only referred to membership qualifications for
- 13 admission to Congress, i.e., age, residence and citizenship, the principle
- 14 stated by the Court certainly applies to the general as well as the specific,
- 15 i.e., the source of any power of Congress must be found in and is limited to
- 16 the text of the Constitution. 100

<sup>99 &</sup>quot;The Senators and representatives before mentioned, and the Members of the several State Legislatures, and all executive and judicial Officers, both of the United States and of the several States, shall be bound by Oath or Affirmation, to support this Constitution..." U.S. Const. Art. VI, § 3.  $^{100}$  See also United States v. Fisher, 6 U.S. 358 (1805), "Under a constitution conferring specific powers, the power contended for must be granted or it cannot be exercised."; "The government of the United States can claim no powers which are not granted to it by the Constitution." Martin v. Hunter's Lessee, 14 U.S. 304 (1816); "In construing Federal Constitution, Congress must be held to have only those powers which are granted expressly or by necessary implication." Prigg v. Commonwealth of Pennsylvania, 41 U.S. 539 (1842); "The government of the United States is one of limited powers, and no department possess any authority not granted by Constitution." Hepburn v. Griswold, 73 U.S. 603 (1869); "Every act of Congress must find in the Constitution some warrant for its passage." "Federal government is one of enumerated powers, and, while such powers are to be reasonably and fairly construed with a view to effectuating their purposes, an attempted exercise of a power clearly

1 The Court's power to determine an action by an office of government 2 unconstitutional, a power not necessarily licensed by the people, instead is the licensed power to decide "cases [and] controversies...arising under the 3 4 Constitution." Such controversies arise, mistakenly or deliberately, by 5 actions of offices of government violating separation of powers, checks and 6 balances or the license of power granted them by the people embodied in the 7 actual textual language of the Constitution. Sometimes, as in the case of 8 Congress' failure to call a convention, they violate all three. As the writings of the Founding Fathers indicate, 101 the convention call 9 10 is a pure minuscule, mechanical constitutional duty obligatory on Congress. 11 While members of Congress obviously would prefer otherwise, they do 12 occasionally have constitutional duties apart from their political pleasures, 13 fund raisers, junkets and other abuses of office. Equally clear by its laches is the fact Congress would rather veto the Constitution than obey its clear 14 15 mandate. By its proposed legislation, it is apparent Congress desires to place 16 the convention to propose amendments under its political umbrella, allowing 17 Congress to amend the Constitution by legislative fiat rather than be bothered with the stringent limits placed on its political power by the Constitution. 18 19 This is what this suit actually is all about: political power. If 20 Congress wins, its political powers will be totalitarian. Through total 21 control of the convention to propose amendments, Congress gains total control beyond true purpose of grant cannot be sustained." United States v. Harris, 106 U.S. 629 (1882).

 $<sup>^{101}</sup>$  See infra text accompanying notes 490-521.

- 1 the amendatory process of the Constitution absent any check by any other
- 2 constitutional body. It acquires dictatorial control of the Constitution with
- 3 no more than a majority vote, assuming the current rules governing Congress
- 4 are obeyed. There is no guarantee of even that happening.
- 5 The principle in Powell that congressional powers are limited to the
- 6 textual language in the Constitution is significant, but the second part of
- 7 the ruling is even more so: that Congress is powerless to add or subtract from
- 8 these textual powers. 102 Any doubt that this principle expressed by the Court

&quot;Our examination of the relevant historical materials leads us to the conclusion that petitioners are correct and that the Constitution leaves the House without authority to exclude any person, duly elected by his constituents, who meets all the requirements for membership expressly prescribed in the Constitution." Powell v McCormack, 395 U.S. 486 (1969). (Majority opinion).

&quot;Contests may arise over whether an elected official meets the 'qualifications' of the Constitution, in which even the House is the sole judge. But the House is not the sole judge when 'qualifications' are added which are not specified in the Constitution.

&quot;A man is not seated because he is a Socialist or a Communist.

&quot;Another is not seated because in his district members of a minority are systematically excluded from voting.

&quot;Another is not seated because he has spoken out in opposition to the war in Vietnam.

&quot;The possible list is long. Some cases will have racist overtones of the present one.

&quot;Others may reflect religious or ideological clashes.

&quot;At the root of all these cases, however, is the basic integrity of the electoral process. Today we proclaim the constitutional principle of 'one man, one vote.' When that principle is followed and the electors choose a person who is repulsive to the Establishment in Congress, by what constitutional authority can that group of electors be disenfranchised?" Powell v. McCormack, 395 U.S. 486 (1969). (Justice Douglas, concurring opinion.)

Justice Douglas then quoted Senator Murdock from Utah in Senate debates at seating Senator-elect William Langer of North Dakota in the early 1940's. Douglas quoted Murdock's testimony and Senate debates in which Murdock said:

&quot;'I construe the term "judge" to mean what is held to mean in its common, ordinary usage. My understanding of the definition of the word "judge" as a verb is this: When we judge of a thing it is supposed that the rules are laid out; the law is there for us to look at and to apply the facts.

Douglas then stated:

&quot;I believe that Senator Murdock stated the correct constitutional principle governing the present case.

- 1 has no general application to other provisions of the Constitution limiting
- 2 Congress is dispensed with by a simple example. If a member of Congress
- 3 already in office attempts to violate the term of his office by remaining in
- 4 office without re-election, the Powell principle applies, making the act
- 5 unconstitutional. Nor is the Powell principle limited strictly to Congress. It
- 6 would equally apply if the president, for example, attempted to remain past
- 7 his term of office.
- 8 Thus, age, citizenship and residency are textual constitutional limits
- 9 of office requiring satisfaction prior to a citizen being seated in Congress
- 10 and may neither be added to nor subtracted from by Congress. The same is true
- 11 for the remainder of the Constitution; that textual language creates
- 12 obligatory on-going limits of power on all members of Congress after they are
- 13 seated, and these too may neither be added to, nor subtracted from, except by
- 14 amendment.

17

18

20

- 15 By what method did the Founders fix these limits in the Constitution? A
- 16 simple reading of a few examples from the text makes this obvious:
  - "All legislative Powers herein granted shall be vested in a Congress of the United States which shall consist of a senate and House of
- 19 Representatives."<sup>103</sup>
  - "No Person shall be a Representative..." 104

&quot;Constitutional scholars of two centuries have reaffirmed the principle that congressional power to 'judge' the qualifications of its members is limited to those enumerated in the Constitution. 1 J. Story, Commentaries on the Constitution 462 (5th ed. 1891); C. Warren, The Making of the Constitution 420-426 (1928). See also remarks by Emmanuel Celler, Chairman of the House Select Committee which inquired into the qualifications of Adam Clayton Powell, Jr., and which recommended seating him:

&quot;'The Constitution lays down three qualifications for one to enter Congress - age, inhabitancy, citizenship. Mr. Powell satisfies all three. The House cannot add to these qualifications. 113 Cong. Rec. 4998.'"  $^{103}$  Art. I, § 1, U.S. CONST.

<sup>104</sup> Art. I, § 2, §§ 2, U.S. CONST.

1 "The Senate of the United States shall be composed of two Senators from 2 each State..."  $^{105}$

In these examples, only a few of the many limits prescribed by the 4 Founding Fathers to fix a limit on government, they employed a single word to 5 so express. The Founders used the imperative "shall" which in all cases as

6 used in the Constitution is both obligatory as well as non-discretionary on

7 the part of Congress (or any other affected party) as to the effect, intent

8 and meaning of its directive. 106

9

10

11

12

13

14

15

16

17

18 19 20 21

22

Constitution.

"shall" were absolute, i.e., Congress has no discretion to either add or subtract from the terms set forth in the Constitution. There being nothing in the Constitution to indicate the "shall" used to define qualifications of office for Congress is any different from the "shall" used to mandate a convention call from Congress, it must be assumed that the imperative is equally compelling and non-discretionary in both cases. Thus, the calling of the convention to propose amendments as expressed by the word "shall" in

The word "shall" not only compels the mandatory action on Congress to call a convention, it also dictates under what circumstance Congress is obligated to call. There is no difference between this dual use in Article V

Article V is a limit of office as absolute as the membership admission clause, and Congress may neither add to nor subtract these absolutes set forth in the

<sup>105</sup> Art. I, § 3, U.S. CONST.

BRIEF IN SUPPORT OF CONVENTION GENERAL BRIEF ARGUMENTS PAGE 93

<sup>106</sup> See infra text accompanying notes 853,860.

1 and its dual use in the membership clause discussed in Powell. The membership

2 clause states:

3

4

5 6 "No person shall be a Representative who shall not have attained to the Age of twenty five Years, and been seven Years a Citizen of the United States, and who shall not, when elected, be an Inhabitant of that State in which he shall be chosen." 107

7 As discussed in Powell, if a citizen elected to the House of

- 8 Representatives fulfills the three constitutional stipulations, he shall be a
- 9 member of the House of Representatives. 108 He need not satisfy any other
- 10 stipulations as the word "shall" precludes such discretion. Using the same
- 11 logic of Powell, but applying it to the convention to propose amendments, it
- 12 follows if the two-thirds of the states apply for a convention, Congress shall
- 13 call a convention with no discretion in the matter. The states, as with a
- 14 prospective member of Congress, need not satisfy any other stipulation as the
- 15 word "shall" precludes such discretion. The states only need apply in
- 16 sufficient numeric quantity as to compel Congress to call.
- How do the findings in Powell provide standing for the plaintiff? The
- 18 Constitution grants immunity to all citizens from having rights not enumerated
- 19 in the Constitution being either denied or disparaged. This guarantee is
- 20 contained in the Ninth Amendment which states:
- 21 "The enumeration in the Constitution, of certain rights, shall not be 22 construed to deny or disparage others retained by the people."

and was not ineligible to serve under any provision of the Constitution, the House was without power to exclude him from its membership." Powell v.

McCormack, 395 U.S. 486 (1969).

 $^{\rm 107}$  Art. I, § 2, §§ 2, U.S. CONST.

&quot;Further analysis of the 'textual commitment' under Art. I, 5 (see Part Vi, B (1)) has demonstrated that in judging the qualifications of its members Congress is limited to the standing qualifications prescribed in the Constitution. Respondents concede that Powell met these. Thus, there is no need to remand this case to determine whether he was entitled to be seated in the  $90^{\rm th}$  Congress. Therefore, we hold that, since Adam Clayton Powell, Jr., was duly elected by the voters of the  $18^{\rm th}$  Congressional District of New York

1 The Ninth Amendment was written by James Madison. 109 The obvious question

2 concerning this constitutional guarantee is, what unenumerated rights was

- 3 Madison referring to? It is fairly certain Madison meant the right of the
- 4 people to alter or abolish. 110 The Supreme Court has established the Ninth
- 5 Amendment as its main argument in pro-choice actions, citing the right of
- 6 privacy as the basis on which a woman may have an abortion. 111 Further, the
- 7 Court has ruled the Ninth Amendment reinforces rights prescribed in the  $5^{\rm th}$
- 8 and 14th Amendments. 112
- 9 However, there are problems with some of these interpretations. For
- 10 example, when Madison wrote the 9th Amendment, the 14th Amendment didn't exist.
- 11 Therefore, it is impossible that his intent in writing the 9th Amendment was
- 12 to reinforce the  $14^{\rm th}$  Amendment. Thus, on the basis of original intent, this
- 13 presumption of reinforcement of the  $14^{th}$  Amendment is invalid. However, the
- 14 language of the 14th Amendment certainly allows the Court to extend it to
- 15 include the  $9^{th}$  Amendment which, as noted, it has.

1 (

<sup>109</sup> See infra text accompanying note 1137.

See infra text accompanying notes 1137-1147,1682.

&quot;Although the Constitution does not speak in so many words of the right of privacy in marriage, I cannot believe that it offers these fundamental rights no protection. The fact that no particular provision of the Constitution explicitly forbids the State from disrupting the traditional relation of the family - a relation as old and as fundamental as our entire civilization - surely does not show that the Government was meant to have the power to do so. Rather, as the ninth Amendment expressly recognizes, there are fundamental personal rights such as this one, which are protected from abridgment by the Government though not specifically mentioned in the Constitution." Griswold v. Connecticut, 381 U.S. 479 (1965).

&quot;This right of privacy, whether it be founded in the Fourteenth Amendment's concept of personal liberty and restrictions upon state actions, as we feel it is, or, as the District Court determined, in the Ninth amendment's reservation of rights to the people, is broad enough to encompass a woman's decision whether or not to terminate her pregnancy." Roe v. Wade, 410 U.S. 113 (1973).

<sup>112</sup> See infra text accompanying note 1141.

The point is, Madison gave no indication in his writing  $^{113}$  that the  $9^{th}$ 1 Amendment was limited to or otherwise related only to 5th Amendment rights. As 2 Madison wrote all of the Bill of Rights, it stands to reason if he intended 3 4 such a connection, he would have made it obvious. Neither the language of the 5 amendment, nor Madison's comments, support such a proposition. As the obvious 6 purpose of the amendment is related to unenumerated rights, it is highly 7 unlikely Madison intended it to relate to enumerated rights. 8 Further, the Federalist Papers make it clear that a proposed amendment "would be a single proposition, and might be brought forward singly." 114 i.e., 9 10 each amendment proposal would stand on its own merits. This logic is defeated if it held the Founders wrote the 5th Amendment with the intent it had to be 11 reinforced by the 9th Amendment in order for the 5th Amendment to be in effect. 12 Assuming the logic of the Court, that the  $9^{th}$  Amendment reinforces the  $5^{th}$ 13 14 Amendment (and presumably this was the intent of the author), an obvious question arises: what would be the status of the 5th Amendment had the 9th 15

17 the only answer possible was the  $5^{\rm th}$  Amendment was therefore incomplete and

Amendment not been ratified? If one accepts the Court's logic in this matter, 18 thus without effect. The "logic" falls on its face in light of literally thousands, if not hundreds of thousands of uses of the 5th Amendment in criminal cases of all descriptions in which the  $9^{\text{th}}$  Amendment isn't even

21 mentioned or cited. The only interpretation that makes sense is the  $9^{\rm th}$

22 Amendment's provision can be used to reinforce the 5th Amendment, but neither

16

19

20

<sup>113</sup> See infra text accompanying note 1137.

&lt;sup>114</sup> See infra text accompanying note 497.

1 is dependent on the other for constitutional validity or effect, nor is the

2 9th Amendment's effect exclusive to either the 5th or the 14th Amendments.

3 The matter goes further than this in the convention call. Those

5

6

7

9

10

11

13

15

18 19 20

21

4 advocating "same subject" as the basis of the call run into a problem. If the meaning of the phrase "would be a single proposition, and might be brought forward singly" is an amendment passage dependent upon the passage of another amendment, then it is impossible for a convention to remain a "same subject"

8 convention. Obviously, the convention must pass at least two amendments on different subjects that are somehow linked together. Both must pass in order for the "same subject" amendment to be effective. However such a stipulation is so illogical, it is impossible to support. Thus, there can be no support

12 for the notion that any specific amendment is used to "prop up" another amendment. Each is independent and autonomous in its constitutional effect.

14 Therefore, while the 9th Amendment may be used as augmentation to other clauses of the Constitution, its main purpose lies in its obvious language:

16 the protection of unenumerated rights of the people from government

17 interference or disparagement. Madison made it clear he wrote the 9th

Amendment to protect the rights of citizens that exist completely outside the expressed provisions of the Constitution, and that his concern was that by enumerating some of those rights in a Bill of Rights, it would be implied or presumed that these other rights were no longer protected or were somehow the $^{22}$  right of the government. $^{^{115}}$  The  $9^{\rm th}$  Amendment was clearly intended to prevent

<sup>115</sup> See infra text accompanying note 1137.

- 1 this from happening. Thus the  $9^{th}$  Amendment has a specific constitutional
- 2 purpose separate and distinct from other constitutional provisions.
- 3 As with other constitutional clauses, therefore, particularly those
- 4 involving individual rights, if those rights are impaired by government
- 5 action, a citizen is guaranteed the right to seek redress from that
- 6 government, and the courts are empowered, should they determine such
- 7 impairment has occurred, to redress the injury. The Constitution does not
- 8 discriminate so as exclude a 9th Amendment injury. Thus, an action of
- 9 Congress, such as not calling a convention to propose amendments, where it can
- 10 be demonstrated it violates unenumerated 9th Amendment rights, is as valid a
- 11 point of standing as what might be termed the more "typical" constitutional
- 12 clauses used to prove standing.
- 13 It is therefore a reasonable inquiry to determine what unenumerated
- 14 rights the Founders meant to protect with the 9th Amendment. From this
- 15 determination, it can be discovered whether or not the actions of Congress in
- 16 denying a term of office prescribed by the Constitution, i.e., a failure to
- 17 call a convention to propose amendments, violates the plaintiff's Ninth
- 18 Amendment rights. This inquiry must extend beyond the already proved right to
- 19 alter and abolish and the right of privacy, as the former is dealt with
- 20 elsewhere in this suit with respect to standing, and the latter has no bearing
- 21 as to standing in this instance.
- 22 Clearly, a plaintiff cannot prove standing by simply fabricating a
- 23 right, then alleging violation by the government. He is obligated to prove
- 24 standing on the basis of a textual demonstration of this right, and then prove
- 25 in a specific, concrete manner that this right has been violated by some

- 1 government action. Proving standing based on a violation of the 9th Amendment
- 2 means first a textual demonstration of a right not enumerated in the
- 3 Constitution. Second, it requires a demonstration of a textual expression on
- 4 the part of the Founders that such an action taken by government against this
- 5 right was a violation.
- 6 For the purposes of this suit, the best textual example would be one
- 7 making it clear the Founders said it was a violation of their rights for a
- 8 government to ignore, change or otherwise alter their form of government
- 9 without the consent of the people so affected by the change, yet this
- 10 violation is not enumerated in the Bill of Rights. If such a protest and
- 11 violation is demonstrated, then such an action by Congress, for example, must
- 12 be unconstitutional, as it was the intent of the 9th Amendment to quard
- 13 against this type of violation, among others. Further, as it is under 9th
- 14 Amendment protection, it must be a violation of the right of the people, i.e.,
- 15 the plaintiff, as the amendment specifically addresses violations of their
- 16 rights (and thus his) and no others.
- 17 Nowhere is it stated in the Constitution that a government altering its
- 18 form is unconstitutional, or that doing this violates the rights of the
- 19 people. Nevertheless, the Founders made it clear they believed such actions by
- 20 a government were a violation of their fundamental rights. In at least five
- 21 clauses in the Declaration of Independence, this specific act was textually used as a basis by the Founders to declare independence because the King of England had violated the rights of the colonists. 116 The Declaration stated:

"He has dissolved Representative Houses repeatedly, for opposing with manly firmness his invasions on the rights of the people."

"He has refused for a long time, after such dissolutions, to cause others to be elected; whereby the Legislative powers, incapable of Annihilation, have returned to the People at large for their exercise...."

"He has combined with other to subject us to a jurisdiction foreign to our constitution, and unacknowledged by our laws; giving his Assent to their Acts of pretended Legislation."

"For taking away our Charters, abolishing our most valuable laws, and altering fundamentally the forms of our Governments."

"For suspending our own Legislatures, and declaring themselves invested with power to legislate for us in all cases whatsoever."  $^{117}$

These passages are plain and unambiguous on the identity of the violation: altering a form of government that in turn removes the rights of people, rights that the colonists realized others subject to the rule of the King of England still enjoyed. Thus, the word "our" is significant in this case. "Our Governments", "our own Legislatures" or "our laws" do not refer to Congress or even colonial legislatures. Instead, the word "our" refers directly to the people. 118 In the largest sense, a form of government that transgressed the rights of the American people by changing its form so as to deprive rights that formerly existed was the overriding driving force behind the independence movement. The various repressive actions taken by the British Crown, which the colonists labeled as "tyrannous" and "destructive,"

It is entirely reasonable to use specific examples of protest by the colonists in the Declaration of Independence as these objections demonstrate what the Founders believed were powers of the government not consented to by the people, i.e., that sovereign power licensed by the people do not include these powers. As the King of England agreed by his signing of the Treaty of Paris, through the treaty clause of the Constitution, these denials, as much as any powers granted, became law of the land. See infra text accompanying notes 921-1009.

 $<sup>^{117}</sup>$  Declaration of Independence (1776). (emphasis added).

&lt;sup>118</sup> See infra text accompanying notes 994-1001,1421.

1 eventually overcame the reluctance of the colonists to declare their

2 independence. 119

17

By declaring the acts of the King that altered the form of government an 3 act of tyranny against the people, there is no question the Founders believed 4 these acts were violations of the rights of the people. They protested these 5 acts in the Declaration of Independence and their belief the consequent 6 7 violations justified their separation. Thus, by textual demonstration, it can be shown if the government attempts to alter its form by ignoring the terms of 8 office prescribed, it is a violation of rights recognized by the Founders but 10 not enumerated in the Constitution. Nowhere does the Constitution express that 11 it is a violation of the right of the people if the government fails to conform to the limits of office established in the Constitution. Nevertheless, 12 13 without this fundamental right, the entire structure of the Constitution would collapse. Therefore, it is a fundamental, unenumerated right of the people. As 14 such, this right falls under the protection of the Ninth Amendment. 120 15 16 Thus, if Congress alters the form of government prescribed in the Constitution, it is a violation of one of the plaintiff's unenumerated rights

BRIEF IN SUPPORT OF CONVENTION GENERAL BRIEF ARGUMENTS PAGE 101

&quot;Prudence, indeed, will dictate that Governments long established should not be changed for light and transient causes; and accordingly all experience hath shewn that mankind are more disposed to suffer, while evils are sufferable, than to right themselves by abolishing the forms to which they are accustomed. But when a long train of abuses and usurpations, pursing invariably the same Object evinces a design to reduce them under absolute Despotism, it is their right, it is their duty, to throw off such Government and to provide new Guards for their future security.

&quot;Such has been the patient sufferance of these Colonies; and such is now the necessity which constrains them to alter their former Systems of Government. The history of the present King of Great Britain is a history of repeated injuries and usurpations, all having in direct object the establishment of an absolute Tyranny over these states."

120 See infra text accompanying note 1077.

1	as prescribed by the 9 th Amendment. In failing to call a convention to propose
2	amendments when mandated by the Constitution, Congress has altered the form of
3	government without due process of law, which in this case requires a
4	constitutional amendment to do so. Congress has never even bothered to write
5	such a proposed amendment, let alone send it to the states for almost certain
6	defeat in ratification. Instead, it has simply ignored the Constitution and
7	violated plaintiff's $9^{\text{th}}$ Amendment right of government conformity to the
8	limits of office prescribed in the Constitution.
9	Injury: Congress has unconstitutionally ignored a limit of office and
10	thus altered the form of government prescribed by the Constitution.
11	Causal Relationship: Congress, having violated an expressed
12	constitutional provision intended to restrict or otherwise deny Congress this
13	unconstitutional exercise of power, has also violated plaintiff's unenumerated
14	9 th Amendment right of preservation of governmental form.
15	Remedy: In compelling Congress to call a convention, the Court restores
16	the limit of office as prescribed by the Constitution to its proper role and
17	thus redresses the violation of plaintiff's unenumerated $9^{\mathrm{th}}$ Amendment right
18	of preservation of governmental form.
19 20 21
22
23
24
25
26
27 28	ISSUE OF STANDING (5): DENIAL OF RIGHT TO SEEK PUBLIC OFFICE

1 2 3

Congress by its laches has denied plaintiff the right to seek and hold public office.

4

5 Many of the fundamental rights of United States citizens are not

- 6 expressed in the Constitution. One of these fundamental unexpressed rights is
- 7 the right of citizens to seek public office. The Court has made it clear the
- 8 right to vote for candidates seeking office is a fundamental core right of all
- 9 citizens. 121 This fact established, an obvious question presents itself: how
- 10 can the fundamental core right to vote be protected if the government can
- 11 arbitrarily 122 regulate the object of the vote, whether issue or candidate, so

&lt;sup>121</sup> See supra text accompanying notes 40-56.

The Court has discussed arbitrary decisions by the government. While the Court was discussing the right of a person to conduct a business, in this case a laundry, the words of the Court are clearly applicable to the case at hand regarding Congress' arbitrary refusal to call a convention (and thus prevent the plaintiff from seeking office to such a convention) when mandated by the Constitution. The Court stated:

&quot;We are consequently constrained, at the outset, to differ from the supreme court of California upon the real meaning of the ordinances in question. That court considered these ordinances as vesting in the board of supervisors a not unusual discretion in granting or withholding their assent to the use of wooden buildings as laundries, to be exercised in reference to the circumstances of each case, with a view to the protection of the public against the dangers of fire. We are not able to concur in that interpretation conferred upon the supervisors. There is nothing in the ordinances which points to such a regulation of the business of keeping and conducting laundries. They seem intended to confer, and actually to confer, not a discretion to be exercised upon a consideration of the circumstances of each case, but a naked and arbitrary power to give or to withhold consent, not only as to places, but as to persons, so that, if an applicant for such consent, being in every way a competent and qualified person, and having complied with every reasonable condition demanded by any public interest, should failing to obtain the requisite consent of the supervisors to the prosecution of his business, apply for redress by the judicial process of mandamus to require the supervisors to consider and act upon his case, it would be a sufficient answer for them to say that the law had conferred upon them authority to withhold their assent, without reason and without responsibility. The powers given to them is not confided to their discretion in the legal sense of that term, but is granted to their mere will. It is purely arbitrary, and acknowledges neither guidance nor restraint. ...

"'Class legislation, discriminating against some and favoring others, is prohibited, but legislation, which, in carrying out a public purpose, is limited in its application, if, within the sphere of its operation, it affects alike all person similarly situated, is not with the [Fourteenth] amendment.'

"The ordinance drawn in question in the present case is of a very different character. It does not prescribe a rule and conditions, and for the regulation of the use of property for laundry purposes to which all similarly situated may conform. It allows, without restriction, the use for such purposes of buildings of brick or stone, but, as to wooden buildings, constituting nearly all those in previous use, it divides the owners or occupiers into two classes, not having respect to their personal character and qualifications for the business, nor the situation and nature and adaptation of the buildings themselves, but merely by an arbitrary line, on one side of which are those who are permitted to pursue their industry by the mere will and consent of the supervisors, and on the other those from whom that consent is withheld, at their mere will and pleasure. And both classes are alike only in this: that they are tenants at will, under the supervisors, of their means of living. The ordinance, therefore, also differs from the not unusual case where discretion is lodged by law in public officers or bodies to grant or withhold licenses to keep taverns, or places for the sale of spirituous liquors, and the like, when one of the conditions is that the applicant shall be a fit person for the exercise of the privilege, because in such cases the fact of fitness is submitted to the judgment of the officer, and calls for the exercise of a discretion of a judicial nature.

"When we consider the nature and theory of our institutions of government, the principles upon which they are supposed to rest, and review the history of their development, we are constrained to conclude that they do not mean to leave room for the play and action of purely personal and arbitrary power. Sovereignty itself is, or course, not subject to law, for it is the author and source of law, but in our system, which sovereign powers are delegated to the agencies of government, sovereignty itself remains with the people, by whom and for whom all government exists and acts. And the law is the definition and limitation of power. It is, indeed, quite true that there must be always be lodged somewhere, and in some person or body, the authority of final decision; and in may cases of mere administration, the responsibility is purely political, no appeal lying except to the ultimate tribunal of public judgment, exercised either in the pressure of opinion, or by means of the suffrage. But the fundamental rights to life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness, considered as individual possessions, are secured by those maxims of constitutional law which are the monuments showing the victorious progress of the race in securing to men the blessings of civilization under the reign of just and equal laws, so that, in the famous language of the Massachusetts bill of rights, the government of the commonwealth 'may be a government of laws and not of men.' For the very idea that one man may be compelled to hold his life, or the means of living, or any material right essential to the enjoyment of life, at the mere will of another, seems to be intolerable in any country where freedom prevails as being the essence of slavery itself.

"There are many illustrations that might be given of this truth, which would make manifest that it was self-evident in the light of our system of jurisprudence. The case of the political franchise of voting is one. Though not regarded strictly as a natural right, but as a privilege merely conceded by society, according to its will, under certain conditions, nevertheless it is regarded as a fundamental political right, because preservative of all

- 1 as to obstruct the vote or prevent the entire process from taking place at
- 2 all? Obviously, the answer is self-evident and consequently demonstrates the
- 3 need for equal protection of the right to seek public office. Without rights. In reference to that right, it was declared by the supreme judicial court of Massachusetts, in Capen v. Foster, 12 Pick. 485, 488, in the words of Chief Justice Shaw, 'that in all cases where the constitution has conferred a political right or privilege, and where the constitution has not particularly designated the manner in which that right is to be exercised, it is clearly with the just and constitutional limits of the legislative power to adopt any reasonable and uniform regulations, in regard to the time and mode of exercising that right, which are designed to secure and facilitate the exercise of such right in prompt, orderly, and convenient manner,' nevertheless, 'such a construction would afford no warrant for such an exercise of legislative power as, under the pretense and color of regulating, should subvert or injuriously restrain, the right itself.' It has accordingly been held generally in the states that whether the particular provisions of an act of legislation establishing means for ascertaining the qualifications of those entitled to vote, and making previous registration in lists of such, a condition precedent to the exercise of the right, were or were not reasonable regulations, and accordingly valid or void, was always open to inquiry, as a judicial question." Yick Wo v. Hopkins, 118 U.S. 356 (1886)(emphasis added).

Thus, the Court has made it clear that under the terms of the Fourteenth Amendment the government may not use the licenses assigned it by the people in an arbitrary manner based solely on personal or political reasons. Further, the Court made it clear that the government may only regulate a right "where the constitution has not particularly designated a manner" in which that right is to be exercised. Additionally, the Court made it clear such regulation, if it is required, "are designed to secure and facilitate the exercise of such right in prompt, orderly, and convenient manner," and may not be used to "should subvert or injuriously restrain, the right itself."

In the case of the convention to propose amendments, the Constitution has particularly designated a manner in which the right is to be exercised. It has specified an obligatory action on Congress with no discretion on the part of that body to call a convention when two-thirds of the states apply for a convention. Thus, regulation by Congress is neither required nor permitted. But if such regulation in some minor fashion were needed, such regulation must facilitate the right, in this case the calling of a convention, i.e., ensuring that a convention occurs, and may not be used to "subvert or injuriously restrain the right itself", i.e., ensure that a convention does not take place or is so regulated by Congress as to subvert or restrain the right so effectively as to render its exercise meaningless. See infra text accompanying notes 596-608.

Thus, an action or inaction by Congress that subverts the right of plaintiff to seek the office of delegate to a convention to propose amendments, when by edict of the Constitution such an election must take place because a convention is mandated, clearly is a violation of the Constitution, and as the Court noted, "[is]always open to inquiry, as a judicial question." There can be no question, therefore, that such denial by Congress confers standing on the plaintiff to bring suit to redress such denial by Congress.

1 protection, the entire voting process becomes meaningless. 123 As the Court has

2 stated:

<sup>123</sup> In a case presented to the Court by that great amices curiae writer John C. Armor, the Court directly dealt with precluding candidates from seeking office, in this case, President of the United States. The Court summed the issue saying:

"The question presented by this case is whether Ohio's early filing deadline placed an unconstitutional burden on the voting and associational rights of Anderson's supporters."

The Court then continued:

"'[T]he rights of voters and the rights of candidates do not lend themselves to neat separation; laws that affect candidates always have at least some theoretical, correlative effect on voters.' Our primary concern is with the tendency of ballot access restrictions 'to limit the field of candidates from which voters might choose.' Therefore, [i]n approaching candidate restrictions, it is essential to examine in a realistic light the extent and nature of their impact on voters.' Ibid.

"The impact of candidate eligibility requirements on voters implicates basic constitutional rights.(1) Writing for a unanimous Court in NAACP v. Alabama ex rel Patterson, 357 U.S. 449, 460 (1958), Justice Harlan stated that it 'is beyond debate that freedom to engage in association for the advancement of beliefs and idea is an inseparable aspect of the 'liberty' assured by the Due Process Clause of the Fourteenth Amendment, which embraces freedom of speech.' In our first reviews of Ohio's electoral scheme, Williams v. Rhodes, 393 U.S. 23, 30-31 (1968), this Court explained the interwoven strands of 'liberty' affected by ballot access restrictions:

"'In the present situation the state laws place burdens on two different, although overlapping, kinds of rights-the right of individuals to associate for the advancement of political beliefs, and the right of qualified voters, regardless of their political persuasion, to cast their votes effectively. Both of these rights, of course, rank among our most precious freedoms.'

"As we have repeatedly recognized, voters can assert their preferences only through candidates or parties or both. 'It is to be expected that a voter hopes to find on the ballot a candidate who comes near to reflecting his policy preferences on contemporary issues.' Lubin v. Panish, 415 U.S. 709, 716 (1974). The right to vote is 'heavily burdened' if that vote may be cast only for major-party candidates at a time when other parties or other candidates are 'clamoring for a place on the ballot.' Ibid. Williams v. Rhodes, supra. At 31. The exclusion of candidates also burdens voters' freedom of association, because an election campaign is an effective platform for the expression of views on the issues of the day, and a candidate serves as a rallying point for like-minded citizens.

"In this case, we base our conclusions directly on the First and Fourteenth Amendments and do not engage in a separate Equal Protection Clause analysis. We rely, however, on the analysis in a number of our prior election cases resting on the Equal Protection Clause of the Fourteenth Amendment. These cases, applying the 'fundamental rights' strand of equal protection analysis, have identified the First and Fourteenth Amendment rights implicated by restrictions on the eligibility of voters and candidates, and have considered the degree to which the State's restrictions further legitimate state interest. See, e.g., Williams v. Rhodes, 393 U.S. 23 (1968); Bullock v. Carter, 405 US. 134 (1972); Lubin v. Panish, 415 U.S. 709 (1974); Illinois

"A fundamental principle of our representative democracy is, in Hamilton's words, 'that the people should choose whom they please to govern them.' 2 Elliot's Debates 257. As Madison pointed out at the Convention, this principle is undermined as much by limiting whom the people can select as by limiting the franchise itself." 124

6 Congress has recognized this fundamental core right to seek public

7 office and has passed several criminal laws designed to prevent any

8 interference with it. 125 Congress has not exempted itself from any of these Elections Bd. v. Socialists Workers Party, supra." Anderson v. Celebrezze, 460 U.S. 780 (1983).

There is commonality in all of these cited cases in Anderson. In all them the Court found that while the state has a vested interest in regulating the election process, it must ensure all candidates have reasonable access to the ballot process. Considering the Court has ruled that where the states (and presumably Congress) have violated this access in such areas as excessive filing fees and unusual or restrictive filing times and procedures, it is not too far a reach to presume the Court would find where Congress has acted (or in this case failed to act) so as to exclude all candidates from any access whatsoever to the ballot box, that such actions would be ruled unconstitutional.

Powell v. McCormack, 395 U.S. 486 (1969). (emphasis added).

125 U.S.C. Title 42, Chapter 21, Subchapter 1, Sec. 1983 states (in part):

"Every person who, under color of any statute, ordinance, regulation, custom, or usage, of any State or Territory or the District of Columbia, subjects, or causes to be subjected, any citizen of the United States or other person within the jurisdiction thereof to the deprivation of any rights, privileges, or immunities secured by the Constitution and laws, shall be liable to the party injured in an action at law, suit in equity, or other proper proceeding for redress..."

3

5

U.S.C. Title 18, Part I, Chapter 13, Sec. 241 states (in part):
"If two or more persons conspire to injure, oppress, threaten, or intimidate any person in any State, Territory, Commonwealth, Possession, or District in the free exercise or enjoyment of any right or privilege secured to him by the Constitution or the laws of the United States, or because of his having so exercised the same;...They shall be fined under this title or imprisoned not more than ten years, or both...."

U.S.C. Title 18, Part I, Chapter 13, Sec. 245 (b) states (in part):
 "Whoever, whether or not acting under color of law, by force of threat of force willfully injures, intimidates or interferes with, or attempts to injure, intimidate or interfere with...(A) voting or qualifying to vote, qualifying or campaigning as a candidate for elective office, or qualifying or acting as a poll watcher, or any legally authorized election official, in any primary, special or general election: (B) participating in or enjoying any benefit, service, privilege, program, facility, or activity provided or administered by the United States;...or (4) any person because he is or has been, or in order to intimidate such person or any other person or any class of person from—(A) participating, without discrimination on account of race, color, religion or national origin, in any of the benefits or activities described,...or (B) affording another person or class or person opportunity or protection to so participate; or (5) any citizen because he is or has been, or

- 1 laws and thus is as subject to the criminal penalties prescribed as anyone
- 2 else. The plaintiff is not seeking criminal action at this time against any
- 3 member of Congress or its incorporated body that may result in members of
- 4 Congress serving up to ten years in a federal penitentiary. However, if the
- 5 government chooses to advocate and were the Court to agree that the plaintiff
- 6 lacks civil standing to sue where he has been barred from seeking elected
- 7 office by an action of Congress, then the plaintiff may feel obligated to
- 8 employ this legal alternative. The criminal law in question only deals with
- 9 the act of person or persons conspiring or otherwise preventing a citizen from
- 10 seeking elective office. It is not concerned with how that conspiracy is
- 11 accomplished.
- 12 The evidence of Congress' laches preventing the plaintiff's access to
- 13 seek elective office is shown by the series of letters in this suit. 126 The
- 14 plaintiff attempted to file for the elected public office of delegate to a in order to intimidate such citizen or any other citizen from lawfully aiding or encouraging other person to participate, without discrimination on account of race, color, religion or national origin, in any of the benefits or activities described...of participating lawfully in speech or peaceful assembly opposing any denial of the opportunity to so participate shall be fined under this title, or imprisoned not more than one year, of both..."

U.S.C. Title 18, Part I, Chapter 13, Sec. 242 states (in part):

"Whoever, under color of any law, statute, ordinance, regulation, or custom, willfully subjects any person in any State, Territory, commonwealth, Possession, Or district to the deprivation of any rights, privileges, or immunities secured or protected by the Constitution or laws of the United States,... shall be fined under this title or imprisoned not more than one year, or both." (emphasis added).

"Custom. Term generally implies habitual practice or course of action that characteristically is repeated in like circumstances. Jones v. City of Chicago, C.A.7 Ill., 787 F.2d 200, 204." BLACK'S LAW DICTIONARY  $6^{\rm th}$  ed. (1990).

<sup>126</sup> See infra text APPENDIX A---EVIDENCE OF PERSONAL INJURY IN SUPPORT OF STANDING, p.697.

1 United States Constitutional Convention from the State of Washington. 127 As the

2 exhibits clearly show, the State of Washington is unable to fulfill this

3 request as the Washington State legislature has never enacted a law allowing

4 for filing of this specific office. Thus, as there is no procedure to allow

5 for filing for office, the plaintiff is prevented from seeking public office.

6 Under U.S.C., 128 this lack of procedural legislation can be described as

7 a custom. The record shows the states have repeatedly applied for a convention

8 to propose amendments. 129 These applications have included applications by the 9 Washington State legislature. It is a reasonable supposition that the 10 legislature was aware that its actions, combined with similar actions by other

11 states, could result in a convention to propose amendments. As the state has 12 helped to set in motion a chain of events that could result in a convention,

13 it follows it would need to pass laws necessary for its participation in a convention. As these applications by the states have occurred over several

15 years, and with each application the State of Washington has failed to act

16 despite this knowledge, this repeated lack of action on the part of the state

17 has obviously become a "habitual practice or course of action that 18 characteristically is repeated in like circumstances" or a custom. An action

14

TABLE 1-STATE APPLICATIONS FOR A CONVENTION, p.661.

BRIEF IN SUPPORT OF CONVENTION GENERAL BRIEF ARGUMENTS PAGE 109

<sup>127</sup> It should be noted the correct constitutional term is "convention to propose amendments." Thus the plaintiff actually would be a delegate to the United States Convention to Propose Amendments. However, for reason explained later in this suit, in dealing with Washington State officials, the plaintiff elected to use the more popular, if entirely incorrect term of constitutional convention. See infra text accompanying notes 295,301-303.

 $<sup>^{128}</sup>$  See supra text accompanying note 125.

&lt;sup>129</sup> See infra text

- 1 against the State of Washington certainly could be brought. And without
- 2 question the federal government would support such an action.
- 3 The question is why the federal government would support such an action
- 4 by the plaintiff. A simple thought problem supplies the answer. Let us suppose
- 5 for this thought problem that the plaintiff does file an action against the
- 6 State of Washington in federal court. The Court, finding for the plaintiff,
- 7 orders the State of Washington to draft legislation so as to hold elections so
- 8 as to permit the plaintiff to seek office. Now, for the purposes of this
- 9 thought problem, let us suppose these elections are held in the state and no
- 10 other state resident seeks the office in question. Let us further assume that
- 11 the plaintiff receives every single vote possible from the state, i.e., he is
- 12 elected by 100 percent of all eligible voters in the state with every voter
- 13 possible voting in favor of the plaintiff representing them at a convention to
- 14 propose amendments.
- 15 Thus the state, through the action of its electors, has expressed to the
- 16 fullest extent possible its support for the plaintiff to hold elective office.
- 17 What would be the effect of this election? The answer: nothing. Even if the
- 18 plaintiff were voted to be a delegate to a convention to propose amendments by
- 19 every voting citizen, nothing would happen. The effect of the vote cast by the
- 20 voters of the State of Washington would be for all intents and purposes
- 21 totally ineffective. Why? Because without a call for a convention to propose
- 22 amendments from Congress as required by the Constitution, there is no reason
- 23 to believe there would be a convention for the delegate by the State of
- 24 Washington to attend.

1 Consequently, any Section 1983 action brought by the plaintiff against 2 the State of Washington would not resolve the issue. It is a reasonable assumption that any state law written by the State of Washington (or any other 3 state for that matter) would be written so as to comply with the provisions 4 found in the United States Constitution. This means the legislature would be 5 forced to write the law so as to not allow for election of delegates until the 6 7 state received notice of a convention call from Congress. Further, it is 8 logical the state would say in any court action that it was not required to 9 draft a law because Congress had not called a convention, and therefore it was 10 under no obligation to conduct an election. In this, the state would be 11 correct and would be immune, but such protection cannot extend to Congress 12 because Congress is mandated under the Constitution to call a convention and 13 has no discretion in the matter. It has not done so. Therefore it has no defense and in fact is the casual factor of why the plaintiff cannot seek 14 office. 15 16 The Constitution is clear in the matter. Individual states may not call 17 a convention. However, as Congress has no discretion in the matter, their 18 applications compelling Congress to call a convention have the same effect. It 19 cannot be overemphasized that the options in the convention call sit with the 20 states and not Congress. There is, then, a prescribed constitutional order in 21 this: the states decide to apply for a convention; Congress calls; delegates 22 are elected; a convention is held; amendments are proposed; possible 23 ratification takes place. Thus, any state holding elections for delegates 24 before Congress fulfills its mandated constitutional duty puts the cart before 25 the horse. While Congress has no discretion in calling a convention,

- 1 nevertheless it is a mandated constitutional step that must take place before
- 2 elections can be held, a convention convened, or amendments proposed. 130
- 3 Consequently, to first sue a state or states with the object of causing an
- 4 election for convention delegate to occur is merely a ploy to permit Congress
- 5 to defeat the clear intent of the Constitution.

Without a convention call by Congress as specified in the Constitution, any attempt to convene a convention is unconstitutional. The Founders, having placed the convention call as an expressed procedure in the Constitution, ensured its legitimacy by eliminating any other method for such a convention to come into being. By refusing Congress discretion in calling a convention, by permitting Congress to call a convention only upon application of the states, and by denying Congress authority to prevent that convention, the Founders ensured that the power of the convention call would reside with the states and the people, not Congress. Thus if Congress does not call, a convention may not occur, but Congress has no choice in calling a convention.

This unique constitutional circumstance explains why a group of states, governors or opportunistic politicians cannot simply "declare" themselves a "constitutional convention". Any amendatory proposal passed by such a convention would be patently unconstitutional because this convention would not be based on a numeric count of applications submitted by the legislatures of the states to Congress that would compel a convention call under the rubrics of Article V. Because this is the only method specified in the Constitution, any other method used to "convene" a convention to propose amendments must be construed as unconstitutional. Critics of a convention, both in and outside of Congress, who have insisted on using this bogus argument, are simply wrong.

This is not the only example of this principle in the Constitution. For example, the Constitution declares that any person elected as President must take an oath before assuming office. "Before he enter on the Execution of his Office, he shall take the following Oath or Affirmation: 'I do solemnly swear (or affirm) that I will faithfully execute the Office of President of the United States, and will to the best of my Ability, preserve, protect and defend the Constitution of the United States.'" U.S. CONST., art. II, § 1 §§ 2. Clearly, if any person, even if legally elected to the position, should fail to take this oath and attempt to exercise the powers of president, it is clear the language of the Constitution means these actions would be unconstitutional.

Does this then imply Congress is entitled to discretion in its call as it must ensure the convention is "legal"? Does it then further imply Congress is entitled to prescribe which conditions ensure the convention is "legal"? Is it then implied that if Congress determines what is a "legal" convention, it can then regulate the convention in order to ensure it complies with its definition of what is a "legal" convention? The answer is no.

As Congress has no discretion in a convention call while the state legislatures have discretion as to whether or not to apply, it follows Congress is deprived of its customary superior position in the Constitution. Instead, Congress is inferior to the states and the people, unable to add, detract or obstruct their desire for a convention.

Any action, therefore, against an individual state by any plaintiff is 1 2 entirely meaningless because it fails to resolve the root cause of the problem: Congress' refusal to call a convention to propose amendments when 3 mandated by the Constitution. Accordingly, a suit to seek redress in a state 4 5 that either does not have a law, such as Washington State, or has a law in place to elect delegates to a convention but has not exercised that law, is 6 7 impossible. The issue is one of standing. The Court cannot judicially resolve 8 the issue. A court order compelling a state election does not resolve the 9 issue of an elected officer with no elected office to occupy. Thus, the laches 10 of Congress, ignored by an action first against a state or states, negates not 11 only the effect of the election, but simultaneously the court order as well 12 while leaving the laches completely untouched. 13 Consequently, this suit, aimed to redress the laches of Congress in ignoring the Constitution, is proper as it addresses the correct issue in the 14 correct constitutional order. Once the Court determines it is unconstitutional 15 16 for Congress not to call a convention and in doing so has violated plaintiff's 17 right to seek office and redresses both issues, then should any state be 18 recalcitrant regarding election of delegates, proper remedy may be sought. 19 Having eliminated the states from redress, however, does not excuse Congress. 20 The Court has ruled repeatedly on ballot access. No ruling gives support

22 Instead the Court has held any interest the government has in regulating an 23 election must be based on a compelling need and must not overburden either the 24 to a congressional laches that effectively eliminates an entire election.

election or a candidate seeking public office. The Court said:

25 "Restrictions on access to the ballot burden two distinct and fundamental rights, 'the right of individuals to associate for the advancement 26

21

of political beliefs, and the right of qualified voters regardless of their political persuasion, to cast their votes effectively.' Williams v. Rhodes, supra, at 30. The freedom to associate as a political party, a right we have recognized as fundamental, see 393 U.S., at 30-31, has diminished practical value if the party can be kept off the ballot. Access restrictions also implicate the right to vote because, absent recourse to referendums, 'voters can assert their preferences only through candidates or parties or both.' Lubin v. Panish, 415 U.S. 709, 716 (1974). By limiting the choices available to voters, the State impairs the voter's ability to express their political preferences. And for reason to self-evident to warrant amplification here, we have often reiterated that voting is of the most fundamental significance under our constitutional structure. Wesberry v. Sanders, 376 U.S. 1, 17 (1964); Reynolds v. Sims, 377 U.S. 533, 555 (1964); Dunn v. Blumstein, supra; at 336.

"When such vital individual rights are at stake, a State must establish that its classification is necessary to serve a compelling interest. American Party of Texas v. White, 415 U.S. 767, 780-781 (1974), Storer v. Brown, 415 U.S. 724, 736 (1974); Williams v. Rhodes, supra, at 31. To be sure, the Court has previously acknowledged that states have a legitimate interest in regulating the number of candidates on the ballot. In Lubin v. Panish, supra, at 715, we observed:

"'A procedure inviting or permitting every citizen to present himself to the voters on the ballot without some means of measuring the seriousness of the candidate's desire and motivation would make rational voter choices more difficult because of the size of the ballot and hence would tend to impede the electoral process... The means of testing the seriousness of a given candidacy may be open to debate; the fundamental importance of ballots of reasonable size limited to serious candidates with some prospects of public support is not.'

"Similarly, in Bullock v. Carter, 405 U.S. 134, 145 (1972) (footnote omitted), the Court expressed concern for the States' need to assure that the winner of an election 'is the choice of a majority, or at least a strong plurality, of those voting, without the expense and burden of runoff elections.' Consequently, we have upheld properly drawn statutes that require a preliminary showing of a 'significant modicum of support' before a candidate or party may appear on the ballot. Jenness v. Fortson, 403 U.S. 431, 442 (1971); see, e.g., American Party of Texas v. White, supra.

"However, our previous opinions have also emphasized that 'even when pursuing a legitimate interest, a State may not choose means that unnecessarily restrict constitutionally protected liberty,' Kusper v. Pontikes, 414 U.S. 51, 58-59 (1973), and we have required that States adopt the least drastic means to achieve their ends. Lubin v. Panish, supra, at 716; Williams v. Rhodes, supra, at 31-33. This requirement is particularly important where restrictions on access to the ballot are involved. The States' interest in screen out frivolous candidates must be considered in light of the significant role that third parties have played in the political development of the Nation. Abolitionists, Progressives, and Populists have undeniably had influences, if not always electoral success. As the records of such parties demonstrate, an election campaign is a means of disseminating ideas as well as attaining political office." 131

BRIEF IN SUPPORT OF CONVENTION GENERAL BRIEF ARGUMENTS PAGE 114

б

&lt;sup>131</sup> Illinois Elections Board v. Socialist Workers Party, 440 U.S. 173 (1979). (emphasis added).

The Court has made it clear that individual judgment is required when

2 examining actions by the government regarding restricting access to the ballot

- 3 by political candidates. Basically, the Court made it clear it would weigh the
- 4 rights of the plaintiff against the need of regulation expressed by the
- 5 government. The Court said:

said:

"Constitutional challenges to specific provisions of a State's election laws therefore cannot be resolved by an 'litmus-paper test' that will separate valid from invalid restrictions. Storer, supra, at 730. Instead, a court must resolve such a challenge by an analytical process that parallels its work in ordinary litigation. It must first consider the character and magnitude of the asserted injury to the rights protected by the First and Fourteenth Amendments that the plaintiff seeks to vindicate. It then must identify and evaluate the precise interests put forward by the State as justifications for the burden imposed by its rule In passing judgment, the Court must not only determine the legitimacy and strength of each of those interests, it also must consider the extent to which those interests make it necessary to burden the plaintiff's rights. Only after weighing all these factors in the reviewing court in a position to decide whether the challenged provision is unconstitutional." 132

Having described how it determines whether a government action is unnecessarily burdensome on ballot access, the Court has set specific limits on the burdens the government may impose. In  $Storer\ v.\ Brown$ , 133 the Court

"In Williams v. Rhodes, the opportunity for political activity within either of two major political parties was seemingly available to all. But this Court held that to comply with the First and Fourteenth Amendments the State must provide a feasible opportunity for new political organizations and their candidates to appear on the ballot. No discernible state interest justified the burdensome and complicated regulations that in effect made impractical any alternative to the major parties. Similarly, here, we perceive no sufficient state interest in conditioning ballot position for an independent candidate on his forming a new political party as long as the State is free to assure itself that the candidate is a serious contender, truly independent, and with a satisfactory level of community support."

Thus the Court established that the government must provide a feasible opportunity for candidates to appear on the ballot. While the Court did discuss in this suit minority parties having access to the ballot as opposed

_

 $<sup>^{132}</sup>$  Anderson v. Celebrezze, 460 U.S. 780 (1983). (emphasis added).  $^{133}$  415 U.S. 724 (1974). (emphasis added).

- 1 to mainstream parties, the principle is not without application in this suit.
- 2 Clearly an action by the government that denies access to all candidates
- 3 seeking office regardless of political or party affiliation because the
- 4 government refuses to hold an election mandated by the Constitution falls
- 5 under the terms of Storer and therefore is unconstitutional.
- In Bullock v. Carter, 134 the Court said:
- 7 "Since the State has failed to establish the requisite justification for 8 this filing-fee system, we hold that it results in a denial of equal
- 9 protection of the laws. It must be emphasized that nothing herein is intended
- to cast doubt on the validity of reasonable candidate filing fees or licensing
- 11 fees in other context. By requiring candidates to shoulder the costs of
- 12 conducting primary elections through filing fees and by providing no
- 13 reasonable alternative means of access to the ballot, the State of Texas has
- 14 erected a system that utilizes the criterion of ability to pay as a condition
- 15 to being on the ballot, thus excluding some candidates otherwise qualified and
- 16 denying an undetermined number of voters the opportunity to vote on the
- 17 candidates of their choice. These salient features of the Texas system are
- 18 critical to our determination of constitutional invalidity."
- 19 Again in this suit the Court emphasized an alternative means of access
- 20 to the ballot for candidates as the minimum standard for a system of election
- 21 to be set by the state in order to be constitutional and made it clear that
- 22 using "the criterion of [the] ability to pay as a condition to being on the
- 23 ballot" is unconstitutional. In this same ruling the Court discriminated
- 24 between reasonable filing fees and a filing fee system that is "patently
- 25 exclusionary [in] character", 135 holding the former is permissible while the
- 26 latter is not.
- 27 In a suit where the Court found in favor of a state electoral system,
- 28 the Court said:
- 29 "In a word, Georgia in no way freezes the status quo, but implicitly
- 30 recognizes the potential fluidity of American political life. ...

 $<sup>^{134}</sup>$  405 U.S. 134 (1972). (emphasis added).

&lt;sup>135</sup> Id.

to elective public office in Georgia, alternative routes are available to 3 getting his name printed on the ballot. He may enter the primary of a political party, or he may circulate nominating petitions either as an 5 independent candidate or under the sponsorship of a political organization. We 6 cannot see how Georgia has violated the Equal Protection Clause of the 7 Fourteenth Amendment by making available these two alternative paths, neither of which can be assumed to be inherently more burdensome than the other."136 8 9 As the Court summarized in yet another suit where it found for a state 10 electoral system, the Court said: 11 "In sum, Texas 'in no way freezes the status quo, but implicitly 12 recognizes the potential fluidity of American political life.' Jenness v. Fortson, 403 U.S., at 439. It affords minority political parties a real and 13 14 essentially equal opportunity for ballot qualification. Neither the First and 15 Fourteenth Amendments nor the Equal Protection Clause of the Fourteenth Amendment requires any more." 137 16 17 If there is a basic theme behind all these court rulings, it is the 18 clear propensity to provide access to the ballot as broad as possible for 19 candidates of all political stripes. The Court has recognized the states do 20 have an interest in preserving an orderly election, but not at the expense of 21 obstructing electors from voting for candidates representing their political

"The fact is, of course, that from the point of view of one who aspires

Based on the above suits, Congress clearly fails any reasonable court test regarding ballot access by candidates such as the plaintiff for 25 convention delegate. Congressional laches not only prevents independent candidates, but small party candidates, startup party candidates, major party 27 candidates, conservative candidates, liberal candidates, reactionary candidates and even radical candidates from seeking the elected office of convention delegate. In short, Congress prevents every candidate of any 30 possible description from seeking the office of convention delegate. This

22

23

24

26

28

29

point of view.

1

 $<sup>^{136}</sup>$  Jenness v. Fortson, 403 U.S. 431 (1971). (emphasis added).

 $<sup>^{137}</sup>$  American Party of Texas v. White, 415 U.S. 767 (1974).

1	laches not only serves to "freeze the status quo" but sets it in concrete.
2	Such a "preservation" is a clear violation of plaintiff's right to seek public
3	office.
4	Injury: Congress' laches in failing to call a convention when
5	constitutionally mandated has denied the right of plaintiff to seek elective
6	office.
7	Causal Relationship: In failing to call a convention to propose
8	amendments as mandated by the Constitution, Congress has caused a series of
9	events responsible for denying the plaintiff his constitutional right to seek
10	elective office in this situation.
11	Remedy: In compelling Congress to call a convention, the Court creates a
12	series of events which allows the plaintiff to seek elective office.
13
14
15
16
17
18 19 20
21 22 23	ISSUE OF STANDING (6): VIOLATION OF CONSTITUTION PER SE
24 25	The laches of Congress in not calling a convention to propose amendments when mandated by the Constitution is a violation of the Constitution per se.
26
27	The Transgression of Fairchild
28

```
Can the federal government ignore an expressed clause of the United States Constitution that compels an action to which the government objects?

```

- 4 whose sovereign power created the Constitution, bound to the Constitution and May it veto the clause with impunity? Or is the government, like the citizens

- 5 the law it created without exception? If the constitutional clause is all the
- 6 law that exists to compel governmental action, is this sufficient per se, or
- 7 must the Constitution suffer consent on the part of government before the
- 8 clause is effective? If the government ignores an expressed clause, do
- 9 citizens have the right to require the government to obey their Constitution
- 10 simply because they expect the government, like themselves, to be administered
- 11 according to the law, regardless if that law is the Constitution or a
- 12 statutory law?

3

14 15

16

17

18 19

20 21

22

232425

26

27

28

29

30

31

32

13 At one time the Court held that citizens do possess the right to require the government to be administered according to law. The Court stated:

 "Plaintiff's alleged interest in the question submitted is not such as to afford a basis for this proceeding. It is frankly a proceeding to have the Nineteenth Amendment declared void. In form it is a bill in equity; but it is not a case, within the meaning of section 2 of article 3 of the Constitution, which confers judicial power of the federal courts, for no claim of plaintiff is "'brought before the court[s] for determination by such regular proceedings as are established by law or custom for the protection or enforcement of rights, or the prevention, redress, or punishment of wrongs,'" See In re Pacific Railway Commission (C.V.) 32 Fed. 241, 255, quoted in Muskrat v.
United States, 219 U.S. 346, 357, 31 S. Sup. Ct. 250. ...

"Plaintiff has only the right, possessed by every citizen, to require that the government be administered according to law and that the public monies be not wasted. Obviously this general right does not entitle a private citizen to institute in the federal courts a suit to secure by indirection a determination whether a statute, if passed, or a constitutional amendment, about to be adopted, will be valid." 138

Thus, the Court acknowledged the general right of citizens to require the government "be administered according to law" but said this general right

 $<sup>^{138}</sup>$  Fairchild v. Hughes, 258 U.S. 126 (1922). (emphasis added).

- 1 does not allow a private citizen to institute a suit by indirection to secure
- 2 a determination on whether a statute or amendment is valid. The Court did not
- 3 remove the right. Instead it said any attempt to mislead the Court as to the
- 4 object sought by the citizen would not be allowed. Significantly, the Court
- 5 did not discriminate between statutory and constitutional law, just as the
- 6 Constitution does not differentiate between ordinary statutory law and supreme
- 7 law of the land, i.e., law exclusively within the Constitution itself. 139
- 8 Thus, it is a reasonable assumption the Court intended citizens to have the
- 9 right of redress for either simply because the government violated one or the
- 10 other form of law.
- 11 At first the Court supported the Fairchild decision but in recent
- 12 decisions began adding stipulations 141 that reinterpreted the right of citizens

&lt;sup>139</sup> See infra text accompanying notes 1533-1535.

&quot;The Court held that the plaintiffs' alleged interest in the question submitted was not such as to afford a basis for the proceeding; that the plaintiffs had only the right possessed by every citizen 'to require that the government be administered according to law and that public moneys be not wasted' and that this general right did not entitle a private citizen to bring such a suit as the one in question in the federal courts. It would be difficult to imagine a situation in which the adequacy of the petitioners' interest to invoke our appellate jurisdiction in Leser v. Garnett, supra, could have been more sharply presented.

&quot;The effort to distinguish that case on the ground that the plaintiffs were qualified voters in Maryland, and hence could complain of the admission to the registry of those alleged not to be qualified, is futile. The interest of the plaintiffs in Leser v. Garnett, supra, as merely qualified voters at general elections is certainly much less impressive than the interest of the twenty senators in the instant case." Coleman v. Miller 307 U.S. 433 (1939).

141 "The [district] court first rejected the contention that the appellees were without standing to sue because they allegedly had no more than 'a general interest in seeing that the law is enforced.'...

&quot;The appellants challenge the appellees' standing to sue, arguing that the allegations in the pleadings as to standing were vague, unsubstantiated, and insufficient under our recent decision in Sierra Club v. Morton, supra. The appellees respond that unlike the petitioner in Sierra Club, their pleadings sufficiently alleged that they were 'adversely affected' or 'aggrieved' with the meaning of 10 of the Administrative procedure Act... We agree. ...

- 1 to require the government to be administered according to law. Ultimately
- 2 these interpretations led the Court to entirely discard the right of a citizen
- 3 to seek redress simply because he desired the government to be administered
- 4 according to law, most especially if the law was a constitutional clause. 142
- 5 In place of the right of citizens to require the government to be
- 6 administered according to law and seek redress simply because the government
- 7 violated the law, the Court created the doctrine of standing. 143 Standing

"Relying upon our prior decisions in Data Processing Service v. Camp, 397 U.S. 150 and Barlow v. Collins, 397 U.S. 159, we held that 10 of the APA conferred standing to obtain judicial review of agency action only upon those who could show 'that the challenged action caused them "injury in fact," and where the alleged injury was to an interest "arguably within the zone of interest to be protected or regulated" by the statutes that the agencies were claimed to have violated.'...

"In Sierra Club, though, we went on to stress the importance of demonstrating that the party seeking review be himself among the injured, for it is this requirement that gives a litigant a direct stake in the controversy and prevents the judicial process from becoming no more than a vehicle for the vindication of the value interest of concerned bystanders. ..

"To deny standing to persons who are in fact injured simply because many others are also injured, would mean that the most injurious and widespread Government actions could no questioned by nobody: We cannot accept that conclusion." United States v. SCRAP, 412 U.S. 669 (1973). (emphasis added).

Thus the Court, while still accepting the premise of Fairchild, added the severe provision that only those who were "injured in fact" were entitled to bring suit, referring to citizens who wanted the government to obey the law but not necessarily directly affected by the government ignoring the law, as "no more than a vehicle for the vindication of the value interest of concerned bystanders."

The only conclusion that can be drawn from the Court's statement is that it considered citizens expecting their government to be administered according to the law to be of no constitutional value and thus deserving no constitutional protection. The only conclusion that can be drawn from this is the Court sanctioned the government not being bound to the law, including the Constitution itself.

"The complaint in this case shares a common deficiency with those in Schlesinger and Richardson. Although respondents claim that the Constitution has been violated, they claim nothing else. They fail to identify any personal injury suffered by them as a consequence of the alleged constitutional error, other than the psychological consequence presumably produced by observation of conduct with which one disagrees." Valley Forge College v. Americans United For Separation of Church and State, Inc., et al., 454 U.S. 464 (1982). (emphasis added).

 $^{143}$  See supra text accompanying note 17.

- 1 establishes conditions, subject entirely to Court discretion, that a citizen
- 2 must satisfy before being allowed by the Court to seek redress. None of these
- 3 conditions are expressed in the Constitution. 144 These conditions therefore are
- 4 based entirely on the Court's interpretation of the Constitution, which in
- 5 turn is based not a constitutional clause, but an early Court ruling. 145 This
- 6 Court doctrine was arrived at despite the Court's admission that standing is
- 7 confusing and subject to "considerations" outside the Constitution that may
- 8 have been created by the Court in order to satisfy its own needs rather than
- 9 that of the Constitution. 146 By employing standing to determine whether a

&quot;The judicial Power shall extend to all Cases, in Law and Equity, arising under this Constitution, the Laws of the United States and Treaties made, or which shall be made, under their Authority;—to all cases affecting Ambassadors, other public Ministers and Consuls;—to all Cases of admiralty and maritime Jurisdiction;—to Controversies to which the United States shall be a Party;—to Controversies between two or more States;—between a State and Citizens of another State;—between Citizens of different States;—between Citizens of the same State claiming Lands under the Grants of different States, and between a state, or the Citizens thereof, and foreign states, citizens or Subjects." U.S. CONST., art. III, § 2 §§ 1.

145 "It is emphatically the province and duty of the judicial department to say what the law is. Those who apply the rule to particular cases, must of

&quot;It is emphatically the province and duty of the judicial department to say what the law is. Those who apply the rule to particular cases, must of necessity expound and interpret that rule." Marbury v. Madison, 5 U.S. 137 (1803).

&quot;The term 'standing' subsumes a blend of constitutional requirements and prudential considerations, and it has not always been clear in the opinions of this Court whether particular features of the 'standing' requirement have been required by Art. III ex proprio vigore, or whether they are requirements that the Court itself has erected and which were not compelled by the language of the Constitution. ...

&quot;We need not mince words when we say that the concept of Art. III standing has not been defined with complete consistency in all of the various cases decided by this Court which have discussed it nor when we say that this very fact is probably proof that the concept cannot be reduced to a one-sentence or one-paragraph definition. But of one thing we may be sure: Those who do not possess Art. III standing may not litigate as suitors in the courts of the United States." Valley Forge College v. Americans United For Separation of Church and State, Inc., et al., 454 U.S. 464 (1982).

&quot;Ex proprio vigore. By their own force" BLACK'S LAW DICTIONARY  $6^{\rm th}$  ed. (1990). (emphasis added).

- 1 citizen is "entitled" 147 to redress, the Court assumes the discriminatory role
- 2 of gatekeeper with respect to a citizen's right of redress. Therefore, while
- 3 the Court rejected a citizen's right to require the government be administered
- 4 according to law, its reasons for doing so have not been compelled by
- 5 constitutional edict but Court convenience. If this is so, as its own words
- 6 appear to indicate, then it was simply for its own convenience that the Court
- 7 chose to reject the right of a citizen to require the government to obey the
- 8 law, be it statutory or law wholly in the Constitution in favor of its own
- 9 discriminatory power.

"In essence the question of standing is whether the litigant is entitled to have the court decide the merits of the dispute or of particular issues. The inquiry involves both constitutional limitations on federal-court jurisdiction and prudential limitations on its exercise. E.g., Barrows v. Jackson, 346 U.S. 249, 255-256 (1953). In both dimensions it is founded in concern about the proper—and properly limited - role of the courts in a democratic society.

"In its constitutional dimension, standing imports justiciability, whether the plaintiff has made out a 'case or controversy' between himself and the defendant within the meaning of Art. III. This is the threshold question in every federal case, determining the power of the court to entertain the suit. ... The Art. III judicial power exists only to redress or otherwise to protect against injury to the complaining party, even though the court's judgment may benefit others collaterally.

"Apart from this minimum constitutional mandate, this Court has recognized other limits on the class of persons who may invoke the courts' decisional and remedial powers. First, the Court has held that when the asserted harm is a 'generalized grievance' shared in substantially equal measure by all or a large class of citizens, that harm alone normally does not warrant exercise of jurisdiction. E.g., Schlesinger v. Reservists to Stop the War, supra; United States v. Richardson supra; Ex parte Levitt, 302 U.S. 633, 634(1937). Second, even when the plaintiff has alleged injury sufficient to meet the 'case or controversy' requirement, this Court has held that the plaintiff generally must assert his own legal rights and interests, and cannot rest his claim to relief on the legal rights or interests of third parties. E.g., Tileston v. Ullman, 318 US. 44 (1943). See United States v. Raines, 362 US. 17 (1960); Barrows v. Jackson, supra. Without such limitations—closely related to Art. III concerns but essentially matters of judicial selfgovernance-the courts would be called upon to decide abstract questions of wide public significance even though other governmental institutions may be more competent to address the questions and even though judicial intervention may be unnecessary to protect individual rights. See e.g. Schlesinger v. Reservists to Stop the War, 418 U.S. at 222." Warth v. Seldin, 422 U.S. 490 (1975). (emphasis added).

2

The Overlooked Imperatives

3

4 What the Court has conveniently ignored is whether the Constitution,

- 5 most especially the doctrine of equal protection as already interpreted by the
- 6 Court, permits the Court the option to invent standing at all or, if standing
- 7 may exist, permits the Court any discretion in its administration. 148 For all
- 8 intents and purposes standing is nothing more than a form of license issued by
- 9 the Court, the terms, conditions and administration of which are entirely
- 10 under Court control. The effect of this license is to grant whether or not a
- 11 citizen is "entitled" to redress according to Court interpretation of law, an
- 12 interpretation that by Court admission has shifted virtually on a suit-by-suit
- 13 basis. This license exists despite the expressed, unconditional First
- 14 Amendment guarantee of the right of the people to seek redress. 149 The
- 15 Constitution clearly prevents Congress from interfering with this right. 150 Yet

_

&lt;sup>148</sup> The Court has made it clear from the very beginning of its presumption of judicial review that constitutional intent must hold sway over ordinary legislation. The ruling is equally applicable to the Court itself, that the intent and meaning of the Constitution overrides a judicial ruling both as pertaining to intent and to the administration of that ruling. Where there is conflict between a ruling and the Constitution, the ruling must fall.

&quot;If then, the courts are to regard the constitution, and the constitution is superior to any ordinary act of the legislature, the constitution, and not such ordinary act, must govern the case to which they both apply." Marbury v. Madison, 5 U.S. 137 (1803).

&quot;Congress shall make no law respecting an establishment of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof; or abridging the freedom of speech, or of the press; or the right of the people peaceably to assemble, and to petition the Government for a redress of grievances." U.S. CONST., First Amendment. (emphasis added).

&lt;sup>150</sup> See supra text accompanying note 61.

- 1 the Court, apparently through the doctrine of standing, holds itself above
- 2 this expressed language and its own conclusions on the subject.
- 3 Beyond the First Amendment language, Article III states (in part):
- 4 "[t]he judicial Power shall extend to all Cases, in Law and Equity,
- arising under this Constitution, the Laws of the United States and Treaties made, or which shall be made, under their Authority..." $^{151}$
- 7 This clause contains two non-discretionary imperative commands,
- 8 "shall" 152 and "all," 153 which are as conclusive and mandatory on the judiciary
- 9 as they are anywhere else the Founders employed them in the Constitution. In
- 10 conjunction with the word "extend" 154 (which implies expanding the power rather
- 11 than reducing in any manner) the words present the Court no discretion  $^{155}$  as to

BRIEF IN SUPPORT OF CONVENTION GENERAL BRIEF ARGUMENTS PAGE 125

 $<sup>^{151}</sup>$  For full text, see supra text accompanying note 144.

&lt;sup>152</sup> See infra text accompanying notes 853,860.

&quot;All. Means the whole of---used with a singular noun or pronoun, and referring to amount, quantity, extent, duration, quality, or degree. The whole number or sum of ---used collectively, with a plural noun or pronoun expressing an aggregate. Every number of individual component of; each one of--used with a plural noun. In this sense, all is used generically and distributively. 'All' refers rather to the aggregate under which the individuals are subsumed than to the individuals themselves. State v. Hallenberg-Wagner Motor Co., 341 Mo. 771, 108 S.W.2d 398, 401." BLACK'S LAW DICTIONARY 6th ed. (1990).

&quot;Extend. Term lends itself to great variety of meanings, which must in each case be gathered from context. It may mean to expand, enlarge, prolong, lengthen, widen, carry or draw out further than the original limit; e.g., to extend the time for filing an answer, to extend a lease, term of office, charger, railroad tract, etc. Keetch v. Cordner, 90 Utah 423, 62 P.2d 273, 277. To stretch out or to draw out. Loeffler v.. Federal Supply Co., 187 Okl. 373, 102 P.2d 862, 864." Id.

For the Court to have discretion would have involved the Founding Fathers using the word "may" which they did on several occasions in the Constitution, i.e.: "Each House may determine the Rules of its proceedings, punish its Members for disorderly Behavior, and, with the Concurrence of two thirds, expel a Member." (U.S. CONST., art I, § 5, §§ 2); The Congress may determine the Time of choosing the Electors, and the Day on which they shall give their votes; which Day shall be the same throughout the United States." (U.S. CONST., art. II, § 1, §§ 4). The term "may" clearly implies the power not to do something at all along with the usual power of choosing what to do within the given parameters of the specific power. Hence, there is a clear distinction by the Founders in the use of the word "shall" and the word "may."

- 1 applying judicial<sup>156</sup> power.<sup>157</sup> Yet by creating standing, the Court has
- 2 retracted. This contradiction demands resolution.
- 3 At the outset it is obvious the words do not allow the Court a choice as
- 4 to whether or not judicial power shall apply to a case or controversy or
- 5 any other form of redress specified in the Constitution. For the Court to
- 6 presume it can hold the states, citizens, as well as other branches of

While the term "case" and "case or controversy" appear to be a redundancy, the fact is there is a distinct difference in that the federal courts reserve to themselves the role of gatekeeper by the use of standing to determine whether a citizen is "entitled" to redress under the protection of the Constitution. The general term "case" does not include this discrimination and thus cannot be applied as a definition in this issue.

&quot;Judicial. Belonging to the office of a judge; as judicial authority. Relating to or connected with the administration of justice; as a judicial officer. Having the character of judgment or formal legal procedure; as a judicial act. Proceeding from a court of justice; as a judicial writ, a judicial determination. Involving the exercise of judgment or discretion; as distinguished from ministerial." BLACK'S LAW DICTIONARY 6th ed. (1990).

157 "Power. The right, ability, authority, or faculty of doing something. Authority to do any act which the grantor might himself lawfully perform. Porter v. Household Finance Corp. of Columbus, D.C. Ohio, 385 F.Supp. 336, 341." Id.

<sup>158 &</sup>quot;Case. A general term for an action, cause, suit, or controversy, at law or in equity; a question contested before a court of justice; an aggregate of facts which furnishes occasion for the exercise of the jurisdiction of a court of justice. A judicial proceeding for the determination of a controversy between parties wherein rights are enforced or protected, or wrongs are prevented or redressed; any proceeding judicial in its nature."  ${\it Id.}$  "Cases and controversies. This term, as used in the Constitution of the United States, embraces claims or contentions of litigants bought before the court for adjudication by regular proceedings established for the redress, or punishment of wrongs; and whenever the claim or contention of a party takes such a form tat the judicial power is capable of acting upon it, it has become a case or controversy. Interstate Commerce Com'n. v. Brimson, 154 U.S. 447, 14 S.Ct. 1125, 38 L.Ed. 1047. The federal courts will only consider questions which arise in a 'case or controversy', i.e., only justiciable cases. Art. III, Sec. 2, U.S. Const. The case or controversy must be definite and concrete, touching the legal relations of parties having adverse interests. The questions involved must not be moot or academic, nor will the courts consider collusive actions. Aetna Life Ins. Co. v. Haworth, 300 U.S. 229, 240, 241, 57 S.Ct. 461, 464, 81 L.Ed. 617. The facts in controversy, under all circumstances, must show a substantial issue between the parties having adverse legal interests of sufficient immediacy and reality to warrant issuance of a judgment. Adams v. Morton, C.A. Mont., 581 F.2d. 1314, 1319." Id.

1 government accountable to the Constitution where the word "shall" is used, yet

2 hold itself exempt to that same accounting, is clearly unconstitutional. 160

3 Therefore, as the imperative "shall" is used regarding judicial power in

4 conjunction with the totally inclusive word "all," it is clear the judicial

5 power granted by the Constitution is to be extended to "all" cases "arising

6 under this Constitution" with no discretion on the part of the Court to 7 disallow any case. Certainly the Court is empowered to use its judicial power

8 to resolve an issue on the basis of the meaning and intent of the 9 Constitution. There is, however, no language in the Constitution supporting

10 the notion the Court can decide an issue based on its own "convenience" or 11 "self-governance." Such a method of determination would be discriminatory per $se^{161}$  as it provides discretion by the Court when none was intended nor 13 permitted.

14

15

12

The Court Justification of Standing

16

18

17 The Court justifies the doctrine of standing by holding the doctrine prevents the Court from exceeding its constitutional limit of power. According

19 to the Court this limit of power confines the Court only to deciding on issues

A Court position supporting this would be a clear violation of separation of powers and federalism. It is a well understood principle that the branches of the federal government are co-equal. Thus, if the Court holds the other branches, states and citizens must be bound by the Constitution, then so must the Court.

<sup>161 &</sup>quot;Per se Lat. By itself; in itself; take alone; by means of itself; through itself; inherently; in isolation; unconnected with other matters; simply as such; in its own nature without reference to its relation." BLACK'S LAW DICTIONARY 6th ed. (1990).

- 1 that in some manner affect the rights of individuals. The Court's power does
- 2 not extend to ensuring the legality of government acts, according to the
- 3 Court. If the Court were to attempt to ensure that the government acted in
- 4 compliance with the Constitution, the Court has said, it would become no more
- 5 than a forum for public discourse on the actions of the federal government. 162
- 6 There is, however, a significant difference between "a party request[ing] a
- 7 court of the United States to declare its legal rights," 163 and a citizen
- 8 asking the court to enforce the law, or more specifically, "to require that
- 9 the government be administered according to law. $^{\prime\prime}$  The former involves the
- 10 Court declaring or clarifying rights guaranteed a citizen in the Constitution.
- 11 The latter deals with the most basic, fundamental principle in this nation:

BRIEF IN SUPPORT OF CONVENTION GENERAL BRIEF ARGUMENTS PAGE 128

 $<sup>^{162}</sup>$  "We lack that confidence in cases such as Frothingham where a taxpayer seeks to employ a federal court as a forum in which to air his generalized grievances about the conduct of government or the allocation of power in the Federal System." Flast v. Cohen, 392 U.S. 83 (1968).

<sup>163 &</sup>quot;Article III of the Constitution limits the 'judicial power' of the United States to the resolution of 'cases' and 'controversies.' The constitutional power of federal courts cannot be defined, and indeed has no substances, without reference to the necessity 'to adjudge the legal rights of litigants in actual controversies.' Liverpool S.S. Co. v. Commissioners of Emigration, 113 U.S. 33, 39 (1885). The requirements of Art. III are not satisfied merely because a party requests a court of the United States to declare its legal rights, and has couched that request for forms of relief historically associated with courts of law in terms that have a familiar ring to those trained in the legal process. The judicial power of the United States defined by Art. III is not an unconditioned authority to determine the constitutionality of legislative or executive acts. The power to declare the rights of individuals and to measure the authority of governments, this Court said 90 years ago, 'is legitimate only in the last resort, and as a necessity in the determination of real, earnest and vital controversy.' Chicago & Grand Trunk R. Co. v. Wellman, 143 U.S. 339, 345 (1892). Otherwise, the power 'is not judicial in the sense in which judicial power is granted by the Constitution to the courts of the United States.' United States v. Ferreira, 13 How. 40 48 (1852)." Valley Forge College v. Americans United For Separation of Church and State, Inc., et al., 454 U.S. 464 (1982). (emphasis added). 164 See supra text accompanying note 138.

- 1 that government is bound, limited and regulated by force of law emanating from
- 2 the sovereign power of the people which the government is powerless to ignore.
- 3 The doctrine expressed in Fairchild that citizens have the right to
- 4 require government be administered according to the law did not deal with
- 5 individual rights. It dealt with the right of every sovereign citizen to
- 6 assert this most basic fundamental right. It addressed the collective right
- 7 and reasonable expectation of all sovereign American citizens that they have
- 8 the right to require and demand their government to be administered according
- 9 to law whether that law is contained within a statute or the Constitution. In
- 10 short, they, the sovereign citizens, expect no more of their government than
- 11 they demand of themselves.
- 12 An specific act of government may indeed violate a right of an
- 13 individual citizen just as a specific act of an individual may violate another
- 14 individual's rights. These unlawful acts certainly are entitled to redress in
- 15 the courts. However, an act of government that violates law, most especially a
- 16 law exclusively expressed in the Constitution, does not necessarily translate
- 17 into a violation of individual rights guaranteed by that document.
- 18 Nevertheless, rights have been transgressed. The reason is many rights
- 19 guaranteed by the Constitution do not fit neatly under the heading of
- 20 "individual rights."
- 21 Instead these rights, usually viewed as structural or procedural
- 22 clauses, fall under the category of collective or per se rights. However
- 23 labeled, they are as fundamental and equally valid law as the more popular

- 1 "individual" rights in the Constitution. The Constitution is "supreme law of
- 2 the land" 65 with no qualifiers. Thus, there is no part of the Constitution
- 3 that is not "supreme law of the land." In refusing to call a convention when
- 4 the two-thirds requirement of Article V is satisfied, Congress violates a
- 5 collective or per se right of citizens guaranteed by the Constitution, that it
- 6 shall call a convention. The supreme law of the land is therefore violated,
- 7 and thus the act of Congress is unconstitutional. 166
- 8 However, in decisions regarding its own judicial power, 167 the Court has
- 9 stated it is "limited" by the doctrine of standing 168 to only deciding "cases"
- or "controversies" 169 that the Court states only allow it to act if the rights

&quot;This Constitution, and the Laws of the United States which shall be made in Pursuance thereof; and all Treaties made, or which shall be made, under the Authority of the United States, shall be the supreme Law of the Land..." U.S. CONST., art. VI, § 2. (emphasis added).

&quot;Unconstitutional. That which is contrary to or in conflict with a constitution. The opposite of 'constitutional.' Norton v. Shelby County, 118 U.S. 425, 6 S.Ct. 1121, 30 L.Ed. 178.

&quot;This word is used in two different senses. One, which may be called the English sense, is that the legislation conflicts with some recognized general principle. This is no more than to say that it is unwise, or based upon a wrong or unsound principle, or conflicts with a generally accepted policy. The other, which may be called the American sense, is that the legislation conflicts with some provision of our written Constitution, which it is beyond the power of a legislative body to change. U.S. v. American Brewing Co., D.C.Pa., 1 F.2d 1001, 1002." BLACK'S LAW DICTIONARY 6th ed. (1990). (emphasis added).

 $^{\rm 167}$  See supra text accompanying note 144.

See supra text accompanying notes 77,185.

&quot;The jurisdiction of federal courts is defined and limited by Article III of the Constitution. In terms relevant to the questions for decision in this case, the judicial power of federal courts is constitutionally restricted to 'cases' and 'controversies.' As is so often the situation in constitutional adjudication those two words have an iceberg quality, containing beneath their surface simplicity submerged complexities which go to the very heart of our constitutional form of government. Embodied in the words 'cases' and 'controversies' are two complementary but somewhat different limitations. In art those words limit the business of federal courts to questions presented in an adversary context and in a form historically viewed as capable of resolution through the judicial process. And in part those words define the role assigned to the judiciary in a tripartite allocation of power to assure that the federal courts will not intrude into areas committed to the other

- 1 of individual citizens are somehow transgressed. Therefore, according to the
- 2 Court's rulings that created standing, Congress' refusal to call a convention
- 3 despite a clear constitutional mandate to do so, violating the supreme law of branches of government. Justiciability is the term of art employed to give expression to this dual limitation placed upon federal courts by the case-and-controversy doctrine.

"Justiciability is itself a concept of uncertain meaning and cope. Its reach is illustrated by the various grounds upon which questions sought to be adjudicated in federal courts have been held not to be justiciable. Thus, no justiciable controversy is presented when the parties seek adjudication of only a political question, when the parties are asking for an advisory opinion, when the question sought to be adjudicated has been mooted by subsequent developments, and when there is no standing to maintain the action. Yet it remains true that '[j]usticiability is... not a legal concept with a fixed content or susceptible of scientific verification. Its utilization is the resultant of many pressures...'" Poe v. Ullman, 367 U.S. 497, 508 (1961).

"Part of the difficulty in giving precise meaning and form to the concept of justiciability stems from the uncertain historical antecedents of the case-and-controversy doctrine. ... Thus, the implicit policies embodied in Article III... impose the rule against advisory opinions on federal courts. When the federal judicial power is invoked to pass upon the validity of actions by the Legislative and Executive Branches of the Government, the rule against advisory opinions implements the separation of powers prescribed by the Constitution and confines federal courts to the role assigned them by Article III. ... Consequently, the Article III prohibition against advisory opinions reflects the complementary constitutional considerations expressed by the justiciability doctrine. Federal judicial power is limited to those disputes which confine federal courts to a role consistent with a system of separated powers and which are traditionally though to be capable of resolution through the judicial process." Flast v. Cohen, 392 U.S. 83 (1968). (emphasis added).

"Article III of the Constitution limits the 'judicial power' of the United States to the resolution of 'cases' and 'controversies.'" Valley Forge College v. Americans United for Separation of Church and State, Inc., et al., 454 U.S. 464 (1982).

Interestingly, the Court assumes the power "to pass upon the validity of actions by the Legislative and Executive Branches of the Government," i.e., declare such actions unconstitutional, or veto these actions based on the language of Article III. However, just as there is no language creating standing, there is no such language in Article III granting the Court such power. Indeed, it could be argued that whenever the Court does declare an action of the other two branches unconstitutional (or overturns a previous decision by itself which it prescribed was constitutional), that it is merely offering an advisory opinion to that branch that thus far it has accepted but is under no constitutional obligation to do so. The question then is, does the Court use standing because it is demanded by the Constitution, or does it employ standing merely because of its fear of being overwhelmed by the other two branches should it stray too far from enforcing the standards of that document upon them when they would politically prefer it otherwise?

- 1 the land, must be ignored because it does not violate a specific individual
- 2 right expressed somewhere in the Constitution. By administering standing in
- 3 this manner, the Court is able to discriminate against citizens seeking
- 4 redress on issues the Court, for whatever non-constitutional reasons, prefers
- 5 not to decide. In effect the Court has established a double standard: those
- 6 clauses in the Constitution that the Court will enforce and those it chooses
- 7 not to. The Court therefore holds in its doctrine of standing that it has the
- 8 power to exclude certain parts of the Constitution from being "supreme law of
- 9 the land," a direct contradiction of an expressed provision of the
- 10 Constitution. The Court has repeatedly ruled it may neither subtract or add to
- 11 the language of the Constitution, i.e., amend the Constitution by judicial
- decree. 170 By its own rulings, therefore, the Court must include all words used
- 13 in the Constitution defining its power, none of which may be subjugated or
- 14 ignored. 171
- 15 The right of redress expressed in Fairchild is a fundamental right of
- 16 all citizens to expect their government to be confined, regulated and limited
- 17 by the expressed provisions of the Constitution. It is not some general public
- 18 interest analogous to citizens watching a parade pass and is of such

BRIEF IN SUPPORT OF CONVENTION GENERAL BRIEF ARGUMENTS PAGE 132

&lt;sup>170</sup> See infra text accompanying notes 95,100,203,278,284,548,551,572,642,784,833,1120,1276,1293,1533.

As the Court has assumed judicial review or veto of a legislative, executive, state or individual citizen action without expressed constitutional support, creating such a power, it can be argued such a power is entirely for Court "self-governance" or done for the "convenience" of the Court. The only expressed veto in the Constitution is presidential veto of congressional legislation but with the provision that ultimately the people, through their representatives, have the final say in the issue. The Court has not seen fit to provide an equivalent method of redress where the sovereign power of this nation, i.e., the people, can review a Court decision and pass final judgment on it as to whether or not they consent to this veto.

- 1 inconsequence that it may be summarily dismissed by the Court. The presumption
- 2 by any branch of the government that it may expand beyond these expressed
- 3 limits, unfettered by any effort from citizens seeking to compel a limited
- 4 government because that government finds the citizens do not possess
- 5 "standing" to do so, defeats the entire purpose of the Constitution. As such,
- 6 the presumption is inherently and blatantly unconstitutional, per se. However
- 7 contrived, even a ruling or rulings by the Supreme Court does not make this
- 8 fact any less salient especially when such rulings are based on Court
- 9 "convenience" or "self-governance."
- 10 The Founders did not conceive standing; it is a totally modern Court
- 11 creation. Had they desired such a doctrine for the Court, they would have put
- 12 such discretion in the Constitution. Instead, they established absolutes in
- the Constitution using words such as "shall" 172 and "all" designed and intended
- 14 to provide no options to those so affected. The Founders placed such
- 15 limitations in the Constitution as protections against tyrannical abuse by the
- 16 government. 173 Every time government creates an option in the Constitution
- 17 where none exists, it breaks a limitation created by the Founders.

&quot;When a term which has been used plainly in a limited sense in the constitution respecting the legislative and executive department is also employed in that which respects the judicial department, it must be understood as retaining the sense originally given to it." Hepburn v. Ellzey, 6 U.S. 445 (1805).

The entire issue of freedom versus tyranny is a question of options and who shall possess them. If a nation is free, then most of the options of actions lie with the people, i.e., the government has no power to restrict these options. In a tyranny, the options lie entirely with the government, and the people have little or none. In a manner of speaking therefore, a tyranny is an absolute democracy for those in power because it has every option at its disposal. Realizing a government, like people, will naturally attempt to assume more power, i.e., more freedom, the Founders employed imperatives

Standing, as administered by the Court, allowing for a separate but 1 equal standard of judgment as well as providing discretion to ignore the 2 collective and per se rights of the Constitution, is no less an injury to the 3 intentions of the Founders. These collective or per se rights have nothing to 4 do with individual rights because they do not, and never were intended to, 5 deal with individual rights. 174 But they have everything to do with preventing 6 7 tyranny by the government. In this, they are essential to the liberty of this 8 nation. Yet, under the doctrine of standing, these rights are excluded by the 9 Court from judicial review and hence, full constitutional protection. 10 Thus, in its administration of standing, the Court edits the 11 Constitution as to extent and meaning, something the Court has maintained it does not have the power do. 175 Instead of formulating a unified definition of 12 13 this Court-created power permitting all citizens to redress all the law expressed in the Constitution, the Court, presumably for its "convenience" and 14 "self-governance," has seen fit to define "case" or "controversy" in 15 16 ambiguous, fluctuating terms. Having seen fit to define these words, it is 17 free to alter the definition through various interpretations of standing, 18 adding and subtracting meanings as discretion dictates, so as to selectively throughout the Constitution designed to limit these freedoms on the part of the government, i.e., reduce the possibility of tyranny occurring.  $^{174}$  Such clauses include, but are certainly not limited to, members of Congress being elected (art. I, § 2, §§ 1); the right of Congress to assemble once a year (art. I, § 4, §§ 2); public records of proceedings (art. I, § 5, §§ 3); a public procedure for passing public laws (art. 1, § 7, §§ 2); specified powers of Congress (art. I, § 8); public record of public expenditures (art. I, § 9, §§ 7); election of an executive (art. II, § 1, §§ 2-4); full faith and credit to state acts, records and proceedings (art. IV, § 1); amendatory control of the Constitution by at least one method outside the influence and control of the government (art. V).

<sup>175</sup> See supra text accompanying note 170.

- 1 determine whether a citizen is "entitled" to the right of redress. In focusing
- 2 entirely on the meaning of "cases" and "controversies" rather than the entire
- 3 phrase in the Constitution that defines its power and by ruling the Court
- 4 interpretation of those phrases limits the Court to decide on issues exclusive
- 5 to individual rights, rather than deciding on violations of all expressed
- 6 clauses of the Constitution, the Court has avoided the clear intent and effect
- 7 of the imperative commands of the Constitution. This separation has left the
- 8 Court unable to rule on some of the most fundamental clauses of the
- 9 Constitution because they do not relate to individual rights. Consequently,
- 10 the Court's self-imposed segregation effectively means the Court can only rule
- 11 on parts of the Constitution, rather than the entire instrument. However,
- 12 nowhere in the Constitution is such a limitation on the Court stated or
- 13 implied. $^{176}$

14

15

<sup>176</sup> There is no clause in the Constitution stating: "Judicial power shall extend to all cases, in law and equity, arising under this Constitution except where the Court by its determination for its convenience and self-governance shall find a citizen desiring redress for a violation of law by the government does not deserve the right to sue for such redress." Yet this is precisely the provision the Court has inserted into the Constitution by its edicts creating standing, yet holding such cannot be done by other branches of the government. See infra text accompanying notes 189,261,527,670,728,1034.

Of course, there is nothing to prevent the Court from seeking such a limitation by requesting of Congress or the states that an amendment be passed so applying such a limitation. To date, however, no such request has been made by the judiciary.

Those who would argue this would be an impossible situation in which to govern, requiring an amendment to the Constitution each time the government wished to extend its powers, and there were no expressed provision nor reasonable implication to do so, fail to grasp the core concept of the intent of the Founders: this is the way it's supposed to be. This is how the government is supposed to be limited—with specified powers that cannot be exceeded except by amendment.

2

- 3 Among other words in the Constitution the Court has avoided in its
- 4 discussion of standing are "suit" 177 and "equity". 178 As the word "suit" in the
- 5 Eleventh Amendment 179 speaks directly to judicial power, the word is
- 6 significant. Under the terms of Article V, the word "suit" has the full force
- 7 and effect as the rest of the Constitution and is equal in weight and effect
- 8 to the words "case" and "controversy". 180 It cannot be ignored by the Court.
- 9 Nor may the Court assume the word is merely shorthand for "case" or

BRIEF IN SUPPORT OF CONVENTION GENERAL BRIEF ARGUMENTS PAGE 136

&quot;Suit. A generic term, of comprehensive signification, referring to any proceeding by one person or persons against another or others in a court of law in which the plaintiff pursues, in such court, the remedy which the law affords him for the redress of any injury or the enforcement of a right, whether at law or in equity. Kohl v. U.S., 91 U.S. 367, 375, 23 L.Ed. 449; Weston v. Charleston, 27 U.S. (2 Pet.) 449, 464, 7 L.Ed. 481; Syracuse Plaster Co. v. Agostini Bros. Bldg. Corporation, 169 Misc. 564, 7 N.Y.S.2d 897. It is, however, seldom applied to a criminal prosecution. And it was formerly sometimes restricted to the designation of a proceeding inequity, to distinguish such a proceeding from an action at law. Term 'suit' has generally been replaced by term 'action'; which includes both actions at law and in equity. Fed. R. Civil P.2." BLACK'S LAW DICTIONARY 6th ed. (1990). See also infra text accompanying note 182.

&quot;Equity. Justice administered according to fairness as contrasted with the strictly formulated rules of common law. It is based on a system of rules and principles which originated in England as an alternative to the harsh rules of common law and which were based on what was fair to a particular situation. One sought relief under this system in courts of equity rather than in courts of law. The term 'equity' denotes the spirit and habit of fairness, justness, and right dealing which would regulate the intercourse of men with men. Gilles v. Department of Human Resources Development, 11 Cal.3d 313, 113 Cal. Rptr. 374, 380, 521 P.2d 110. Equity is a body of jurisprudence, or field of jurisdiction, differing in its origin, theory, and methods from the common law; though procedurally, in the federal courts and most state courts, equitable and legal rights and remedies are administered in the same court." BLACK'S LAW DICTIONARY 6th ed. (1990).

&quot;The Judicial power of the United States shall not be construed to extend to any suit in law or equity, commenced or prosecuted against one of the United States by Citizens of another State, or by Citizens of Subjects of any Foreign State." U.S. CONST., Eleventh Amendment. (emphasis added).

180 See supra text accompanying note 2.

- 1 "controversy" as the Constitution does not so state this. 181 Further, the
- 2 definition of the word "suit" and the Court's own language precludes such a
- 3 conclusion $^{182}$  even though the modern definition of the word "suit" has been
- 4 replaced by the word "action." 183

<sup>181</sup> This fact alone defeats the Court's position on its judicial power being limited to case and controversy. See supra text accompanying note 179. 182 "In Weston v. Charleston, 2 Pet. 464, Chief Justice Marshall, speaking for this court, said, 'The term [suit] is certainly a very comprehensive one, and is understood to apply to any proceeding in a court of justice by which an individual pursues that remedy which the law affords. The modes of proceeding may be various; but, if a right is litigated in a court of justice, the proceeding by which the decision of the court is sought is a suit.' A writ of prohibition has, therefore, been held to be a suit; so has a writ of right, of which the Circuit Court has jurisdiction; (Green v. Liter, 8 Cranch, 229); so has habeas corpus. Holmes v. Jamison, 14 Pet. 564. When, in the eleventh section of the Judiciary Act of 1789, jurisdiction of suits of a civil nature at common law or in equity was given to the circuit courts, it was intended to embrace not merely suits which the common law recognized as among its old and settled proceedings, but suits in which legal rights were to be ascertained and determined as distinguished from rights in equity, as well as suits in admiralty." Kohl v. United States, 91 U.S. 367 (1875).

It is a well established practice of the Court to judge the Constitution not on the basis of the original intent of the Framers, but as a "living document," i.e., deciding an issue not on the original intent of the Framers or writers of an amendment, but instead in the light of the full flower of current, modern day life. (E.g.: "In approaching this problem, we cannot turn the clock back to 1868 when the Amendment was adopted, or even to 1896 when Plessy v. Ferguson was written. We must consider public education in the light of its full development and its present place in American life throughout the Nation. Only in this way can it be determined if segregation in public schools deprives these plaintiffs of the equal protection of the laws." Brown v. Board of Education, 347 U.S. 483 (1954). (emphasis added).

If that legal philosophy is applied in this instance, then by modern interpretation, rather than the original intent, (see supra text accompanying note 177) the word "suit" means no more than an "action". Thus, the Constitution allows "actions" under law or equity meaning the Constitution clearly allows for Court redress if a law is violated (under law) or if there is some unfair action of a party (equity). The equity part of the Constitution, most especially as interpreted by the Court in modern times, has become an expressed term so broad and vague in current meaning as to be virtually limitless.

Equity deals with fairness and feelings. Any issue a party brings to court today can meet this minimum standard: that the party has been treated unfairly. The expressed term "suit" as interpreted under modern standards defeats current interpretation of standing because (1) the language the Court uses for its justification no longer exists in the Constitution or has been modified by amendment, and (2) it is based on implied meaning rather than expressed text, which seeks to discriminate against certain actions. Thus standing is not constitutional.

- The Eleventh Amendment precluded one specific type of suit, i.e., a suit
- 2 by citizens of one state against another state, but the language clearly did
- 3 not eliminate all suits. Instead, it added new language to the Constitution,
- 4 language effecting judicial power that did not exist prior to the ratification
- 5 of the amendment, creating an entirely new description of redress involving
- 6 the judiciary. Thus, judicial power extends to cases, controversies and suits,
- 7 or it is entirely possible the amendment has removed the cases and
- 8 controversies clause entirely from the Constitution. 184 In any event, as the

&lt;sup>184</sup> "Amendment. To change or modify for the better. To alter by modification, deletion, or addition." BLACK'S LAW DICTIONARY 6th ed. (1990).

There are two possible interpretations of the effect of the Eleventh Amendment on the cases and controversies clause, neither of which allows the Court to retain its present limited interpretation of the case and controversy clause. The Eleventh Amendment either added to the clause or replaced it entirely.

If the most basic premise of an amendment to the Constitution is accepted, that an amendment modifies the Constitution (including the Court's powers), and once this amendment is ratified, the Court is bound to interpret the Constitution based on that amendment's effect rather than the original effect and language of the Constitution, then as the Eleventh Amendment introduced the word "suit" into the Constitution and linked it to judicial power, the question is what is the intent of the word "suit" as opposed to the original meaning and intent of the phrase "cases and controversies" that the word "suit" has replaced or modified? It is clear the clause "case and controversy" cannot be considered interchangeable or have the same meaning as the word "suit". If this were true, the amendment would be meaningless, and thus the notion the Constitution can be amended would be defeated. As the Constitution itself prescribes two methods of amendment, this interpretation is impossible.

Therefore, the Eleventh Amendment's term "suits" either replaces or adds to the case and controversy clause. If it replaces the case and controversy clause, the effect would be to entirely nullify the Court's interpretation regarding the doctrine of standing: the Court is limited to deciding only issues that are cases or controversies. But as the term no longer exists in the Constitution, this interpretation is not possible. As these were the only terms addressed by the Court in all of its rulings regarding standing, and the term no longer exists in the Constitution as it has been removed by amendment, the effect would be to nullify all the Court's rulings concerning standing.

If on the other hand, the case and controversy clause has been added to by the Eleventh Amendment, the current Court rulings exempt all suits from the doctrine of standing. In either case, the Court's interpretation simply does not agree with actual constitutional language.

- 1 Court has never included the word "suit" in its discussion of standing,
- 2 confining that discussion in numerous rulings to only a discussion of "cases"
- 3 and "controversies", and as the word is contained in the Constitution and
- 4 specifically relates to the extent of judicial power, the only logical

Further, the fact the Eleventh Amendment affects judicial power in any manner leads to the inescapable conclusion that for judicial power to be in any manner affected cannot be done by judicial interpretation. Rather, as with the rest of the Constitution, it requires a constitutional amendment for that power to be reduced or altered. Thus, for the Court to limit itself based on its own interpretation of the Constitution for its own "convenience" or "self-governance" is unconstitutional.

In this same context, the Court has also avoided the expressed language of the First Amendment allowing for the people to "peaceably...assemble, and to petition the Government for a redress of grievances" as it relates to standing. As this amendment clearly affected all the Constitution, it is arguable it also affected the powers of the Court as it relates to standing. Specifically, the people granted themselves the right of unconditional redress not previously granted in the Constitution, when the case and controversy clause was written, that specified when they sought redress from the government the government was expressly forbidden from interfering with this redress in any manner. Thus, if an action by the people falls under the general term of "redress" rather than "resolution" it may not be interfered with by the government which of course includes the Court.

The issue then is whether the doctrine of standing deals with the action of redress by the citizen or with the resolution of the issue by the government. Logically, if the government is petitioned by citizens, the point at which the government begins to act to resolve the issue marks the outermost extent of the right of redress which cannot be interfered with by the government and, conversely, marks the outermost extent of government power to resolve the issue in which the government does have discretionary power.

Based on this premise the question is, where does the doctrine of standing fall, on the side of redress or on the side of resolution? Logically, the answer found must be based on the purpose of the doctrine. Does the doctrine of standing purport to resolve the issue, or does it purport to address the action of redress? The answer is clear. The Court uses standing to determine whether a citizen "deserves" redress. Thus it purports to address and regulate the right of the people to seek redress from the government, and this attempt by the Court to judge whether or not a citizen "deserves" redress is clearly in direct violation of the expressed language of the Constitution in an amendment which can only be interpreted as modifying or otherwise altering the original intent and meaning of the Constitution. As there is no conditional exclusion contained within the First Amendment excluding or otherwise exempting Article III or any of its language from First Amendment provisions, it is clear the First Amendment affects this provision as well as all of the rest of the Constitution. Thus, the doctrine of standing is unconstitutional because it conflicts with at least two amendments to the Constitution.

1	conclusion that can be drawn is suits are not included in the doctrine of
2	standing.
3	Current Court procedures have also ignored the word "equity". This
4	exclusion is not constitutional as the Constitution has never been amended in
5	this manner. Thus, the original language and meaning of the word "equity" must
6	be respected and, just as with the word "suit," are supreme to any
7	interpretation that attempts to negate or otherwise void "equity". Therefore,
8	despite current practice, "law" and "equity" are not interchangeable terms.
9	The Constitution uses these words individually and does not permit a melding
10	of these two distinct terms. Thus, a suit seeking redress solely for equity is
11	as viable as one seeking redress for law.
12
13
14	The Equal Protection Effect
15
16
17	The doctrine of standing permits the Court to be a gatekeeper
18	determining whether a citizen is "entitled" to redress. Even as "basic" as the
19	Court prescribes the doctrine of standing in Valley Forge, 185 the doctrine

&quot;First, the plaintiff must have suffered an 'injury in fact'—an invasion of a legally protected interest which is (a) concrete and particularized, and (b) actual or imminent, not conjectural or hypothetical. Second, there must be a causal connection between the injury and the conduct complained of.... Third, it must be likely, as opposed to merely speculative, that the injury will be redressed by a favorable decision..." Valley Forge College v. Americans United For Separation of Church and State, Inc., et al., 454 U.S. 464 (1982). (emphasis added).

still permits discrimination on the part of the Court in its administration of 2 the doctrine, segregating each individual citizen's redress into two groups:

3 those who are permitted redress and those who are denied it. The right of redress as specified in the First Amendment, however, contains no such 4 segregation. The Court has not provided a monistic, universal criterion of 5 standing, i.e., a single, specified, precise textual description setting out 6

7 the procedure of standing that a plaintiff may ascribe, and if he does so, can

8 be said to have satisfied standing. Instead, standing is administered on a basis that the Court admits relates as much to Court "convenience" as 10 constitutional clause. The terms used in standing to facilitate this

11 segregation are generalized, vague and open to interpretation. What precisely

12 is a concrete injury in fact? Where precisely is the line drawn dividing

"likely" and "speculative" as to the effect of a ruling, and what specific criteria defines both terms? 14

13

17

18

15 The doctrine of equal protection demands that the application of these 16 terms in the doctrine of standing be equitable, universal and applicable in all circumstances to all citizens and not be contrived by the Court using vague or generalized terms to administer standing. 186 The application of the doctrine of standing by the courts does not meet this constitutional standard. 19

 $<sup>^{186}</sup>$  Clearly, under the equal protection clause, the Court has held that the law must be applied equally to any group that shares common attributes, in this case the common attribute of citizens seeking redress through the courts. (See infra text accompanying notes 1208-1309). This edict prescribes that the Court is obligated to prescribe a single criterion of standing, a standing applicable to all citizens of this group, i.e., a group seeking redress from the courts, without any variation or interpretation for each citizen seeking to bring an issue to the Court.

- 1 The doctrine of standing lacks specific rules needed to define its
- 2 individual application so as to prevent any form of discrimination or
- 3 segregation whether based on characteristics of the citizen involved or the
- 4 type of constitutional issue sought. There is, for example, no section in the
- 5 Federal Civil Rules Handbook outlining the procedures required of a plaintiff
- 6 to satisfy standing and therefore standing does not attain the same level of
- 7 competence demonstrated by other federal court proceedings. The kind of
- 8 specific rules needed to desegregate standing are found in abundance in the
- 9 rest of federal judicial proceedings. 187 With these specific, well laid out

If the Court is compelled to "explain" or "redefine" standing for a specific issue brought to it, then it is clear this violates the doctrine of equal protection. Thus standing is unconstitutional because it is discriminatory as it creates a separate but equal standing on citizens, a legal standard long since rejected by the courts. The cases upon which equal protection is based well precede Valley Forge, and as Valley Forge did not exclude or otherwise overturn them, their rulings must remain in effect. This effect is that the Court is obligated to treat all litigants equally, which in the case of standing can only mean a specific, single standard with no interpretation or discrimination on the part of the Court. It is not sufficient nor equitable to have words which may mean different standards; one lawyer's "concrete" is another lawyer's "jelly," particularly if they happen to be in adversarial position.

The question pares down to equal protection. It is an interpretation that a party cannot ask the courts to resolve a question. The Constitution does not say one shall receive equal protection "subject to the interpretation and permission of the judicial system." Further, there is nothing to say that a judicial ruling is any more constitutional or any less unconstitutional than any other government edict, and that somehow it is excluded from the equal protection standard. The Fourteenth Amendment says equal protection, and thus the term "general interest in seeing the law is obeyed by the government" is all that is required as the interpretation of the term "judicial power" can only mean that the judiciary, acting in the stead of the people, shall see the laws are faithfully enforced.

"The Senators and Representatives before mentioned, and the Members of the several State Legislatures, and all executive and judicial Officers, both of the United States and of the several States, shall be bound by Oath or Affirmation, to support this Constitution...." U.S. CONST., art. VI § 3.

187 E.g., rules of procedure found in the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure; rules of evidence in Federal Rules of Evidence.

As noted in a recent case the Court said:

"The Federal Rules of Civil Procedure are designed to further the due process of law that the Constitution guarantees. Cf. Fed. Rule Civ. Proc. 1

- 1 rules, the Court has established a standard of jurisprudence, a set of clearly
- 2 defined, expressed, universal, detailed standards specifying the minutiae of
- 3 the subject and how they relate to citizens seeking redress. Yet, if standing
- 4 is not satisfied, the citizen is denied redress by a procedure the Court
- 5 cannot even define in specific terms so as to permit the citizen the ability
- 6 to satisfy it.
- 7 Thus, in the administration of the doctrine of standing. the high
- 8 standard of consistent jurisprudence, otherwise maintained by the courts, is
- 9 lacking. Nevertheless, the doctrine is applied to all citizens seeking redress
- 10 from the courts. Each citizen is judged individually on whether he is
- 11 "entitled" to redress. As each issue is judged individually, the merits of one
- 12 successful standing may not necessarily be applied to another question of
- 13 standing, or it may be applied depending solely on the discretion of the
- 14 member of the judiciary making the determination. The doctrine of standing
- does not even contain the most basic standard of equity and fairness, that two
- 16 identical issues will either both receive, or both be denied, standing. Thus,
- 17 the doctrine of standing is an inconsistent application of a ubiquitous (Rules 'shall be construed and administered to secure the just, speedy, and inexpensive determination of every action.')." Nelson v. Adams USA, Inc., 99-502 (2000).

There are two issues raised by the Court. First, if the Court asserts that Federal Rules of Civil Procedure "are designed to further the due process of law the Constitution guarantees," it can be logically asserted that if there are no rules of procedure, then any procedure adopted by the Court cannot be said "to further the due process of law the Constitution guarantees."

The second issue deals with the word "action." Under its doctrine of standing, the Court maintains only "cases and controversies" can be adjudicated by the Court. Here the Court clearly recognizes that "actions" also fall under the constitutional guarantee of equal protection. See supra text accompanying notes 177,183,184.

- 1 practice of the judiciary designed to discriminate against the right of
- 2 redress of some citizens while permitting the right of redress of other
- 3 citizens: in short a doctrine of separate but equal. As such, this is a per
- 4 se violation of the equal protection clause. 188

5

6

7 The Stipulations of Standing

8

9

- 10 Yet despite the discriminatory nature of standing as created by the
- 11 Court, a reasonable form of standing can exist that addresses all parts of the

&lt;sup>188</sup> In Brown v. Board of Education, 347 U.S. 483 (1954), the Court established yet another standing criterion that compelled resolution. In Brown, the Court quite properly decided the segregation of children based on race, whether or not the physical facilities of the schools were identical, was unconstitutional.

The Court clearly ignored any "injury in fact", whether or not a judicial ruling would have effect, and even whether it was speculative or concrete. Instead, the Court based its power to decide the issue solely on its importance saying:

&quot;Because of the obvious importance of the question presented, the Court took jurisdiction."

Thus the Court established that it may overrule the constitutional limits of standing whenever the "obvious importance of the question presented" so dictates. While the question of Brown was certainly important to this nation, its significance pales in comparison to this suit. Brown, for all its importance, dealt with a segment of the population; the issue before the Court today affects every single American. Brown created the concept of the "living document" theorem of constitutional law. ("In approaching this problem, we cannot turn the clock back to 1868 when the [Fourteenth] Amendment was adopted, or even to 1896 when Plessy v. Ferguson was written. We must consider public education in the light of its full development and its present place in American life throughout the Nation. Only in this way can it be determined if segregation in public schools deprives these plaintiffs of the equal protection of the laws." Id.) This issue deals with the most basic, fundamental and unchanging part of the Constitution and through that, renders complete control to whomever controls it. Brown basically decided whether a portion of the Constitution was to be extended to a specific segment of America; this issue decides whether the Constitution will exist at all.

1 Constitution, most especially those clauses that are expressed law contained

2 within the Constitution. The Court can correct its error simply by ruling on

3 all clauses of the Constitution whether or not they deal with individual

4 rights and whether or not they transgress a particular individual right, i.e.,

5 return to Fairchild and enforce the right of citizens to require the 6 government be administered according to law.

9

11

12

15

16

17

18

19

7 The Court is composed of reasonable members capable of employing common

8 reason to arrive at reasonable conclusions. It is self evident these members therefore are reasonable. It is also a self evident premise of reason that 10 when two or more reasonable persons are unable to arrive at a reasonable conclusion, it follows the conclusion cannot be defined as reasonable. Over time these reasonable members have reached different conclusions defining 13 standing. As standing is not expressly granted to the Court in the 14 Constitution, it follows it is an interpretive, implied power of the Court. A reasonable implied power ceases to be reasonable when there is disagreement over what that reasonable implied power is. 189 As the members cannot conclude what is standing without disagreement among the reasonable members, it follows the standards set by the Court exceed the reasonable implied powers of the Constitution and must be agreeable to all reasonable members of the judiciary.

20 Thus, there can be only two stipulations of the doctrine of standing

21 possible that the Court can use to create a universal doctrine of standing

&quot;The exception from a power granted by the constitution mark its extent." Gibbons v. Ogden, 22 U.S. 1 (1824); "Where intention of words and phrases used in Constitution is clear, there is no room for construction and no excuse of interpolation." U.S. v. Sprague, 282 U.S. 716 (1931).

1	equitable	to	all	citizens.	They	are:	(1)	plaintiff	can	textually	demonstrate
---	-----------	----	-----	-----------	------	------	-----	-----------	-----	-----------	-------------

- 2 the proof of law in question, i.e., an expressed provision of the Constitution
- 3 that compels an action on the part of the government, and (2) textual evidence
- 4 of violation of this law by the government. There is no need for a citizen to
- 5 prove injury to one's self because there is no such stipulation in the
- 6 Constitution, and standing as conceived today was never intended by the
- 7 Founders. What was intended was that the government be limited and bound by
- 8 the Constitution and thus its law extended to all "cases" involving it. 190

9

10

11 The Recalcitrant Gatekeeper

12

- 14 In failing to provide a universal and expressed definition of the
- 15 doctrine of standing equally applied to all citizens in all circumstances, the
- 16 Court, in its administration of standing, becomes a gatekeeper regulating the
- 17 right of people to seek redress. This gatekeeper function is entirely Court-
- 18 created with no legislative support for it. Congress has never passed a law
- 19 designed to clarify or limit the Court's discrimination in administrating

&quot;The constitution vests the whole judicial power of the United States in one Supreme Court, and such inferior courts as congress shall, from time to time, ordain and establish. This power is expressly extended to all cases arising under the laws of the United States; and, consequently, in some form, may be exercised over the present case; because the right claimed is given by a law of the United States." Marbury v. Madison, 5 U.S. 137 (1803).

&quot;The judicial power of the United States is extended to all cases arising under the constitution." Id.

1	standing. Significantly, despite the Court's determination its power may be
2	limited by congressional action, 191 the Court has never called on Congress to
3	eliminate, clarify or otherwise define this Court-created discrimination by
4	requesting appropriate legislation or constitutional amendment.
5	In sum, the expressed words of the Constitution, particularly the word
6	"shall" in the phrase "shall extend to all," provides no discretion to the
7	Court, i.e., an option on whether or not judicial power "shall extend to all
8	cases" This expressed constitutional language defeats any implied
9	interpretation of the Court defining "case" or "controversy" so as allow
10	discrimination, i.e., standing, by the Court unless, under the doctrine of
11	equal protection, the Court provides a universal definition of standing
12	equally applied to all citizens in all circumstances. 192
13
14
15	Standing: The Final Bastion of Plessy?
16

17

18 While Court has rejected the doctrine of separate but equal, 193 it

19 nevertheless remains strong and viable renamed as the doctrine of standing.

(Footnote Continued Next Page)

 $<sup>^{191}</sup>$  "Judicial power of the United States, although originating in the constitution, is, in general, dependent for its distribution and organization and for most of its exercise entirely upon congressional action." Cary v. Curtis, 44 U.S. 236 (1845).

The singularity of the word "all" allows no other conclusion on this point. See supra text accompanying note 153.

193 "We conclude that in the field of public education the doctrine of

&quot;We conclude that in the field of public education the doctrine of 'separate but equal' has no place. Separate educational facilities are inherently unequal. Therefore, we hold that the plaintiffs and others

1 What is the true difference between a Jim Crow law designed to discriminate

2 and segregate a person from his rights and a court procedure designed to

3 discriminate and segregate a person from his rights? What significant

4 variation is there between a state law holding that one individual with a

5 grievance is equal to another but deprived of any redress by arbitrary state

6 decision, and a Court ruling saying that one individual with a grievance is

7 equal to another but deprived of any redress by arbitrary Court decision? Is

8 there any real difference between a decision of a state not to resolve an

9 issue an individual seeks to redress by simply saying he is not "entitled" to

10 redress or because it is not "convenient" or does not fit with the state's

11 arbitrary plan of "self-governance," and the Court choosing not to resolve an issue an individual seeks to redress by simply saying he is not "entitled" to 13 redress or because it is not "convenient" or does not fit with the Court's

14 arbitrary plan of "self-governance?" So long as the doctrine of standing

15 exists beyond the expressed language of the Constitution that means no more

16 than the government shall obey the Constitution and that citizens have a right

17 to enforce their Constitution, Plessy 194 is alive and well.

similarly situated for whom the actions have been brought are, by reason of the segregation complained of, deprived of the equal protection of the laws guaranteed by the Fourteenth Amendment." Brown v. Board of Education, 347 U.S. 483 (1954).

"The distinction between laws interfering with the political equality of the negro and those requiring the separation of the two races in schools, theaters, and railway carriages has been frequently drawn by this court. This, in Strauder v. West Virginia, 100 U.S. 303, it was held that a law of West Virginia limiting to white male person 21 years of age, and citizens of the state, the right to sit upon juries, was a discrimination which implied a legal inferiority in civil society, which lessened the security of the right of the colored race; and was a step towards reducing them to a condition of servility. Indeed, the right of a colored man that, in the selection of jurors to pass upon his life, liberty, and property, there shall be no exclusion of his race, and no discrimination against them because of color, has been asserted in an number of cases." Plessy v. Ferguson, 163 U.S. 537 (1896).

(Footnote Continued Next Page)

Thus, even in Plessy, the Court held that in matters of political equality, all persons were equal. This of course was before the creation of standing which segregated rights into "entitled" and non-entitlement. The Court has maintained it created standing in order to enforce the limitations imposed on it by the Founders or for its "convenience" or "self-governance." Does the doctrine of standing reduce the equality of some constitutional issues to a subservient level relative to other constitutional issues? Plessy said if such inferiority were inferred, it was the fault of the plaintiff:

"So far, then, as a conflict with the fourteenth amendment is concerned, the case reduces itself to the question whether the statute of Louisiana is a reasonable regulation, and with respect to this there must necessarily be a large discretion on the part of the legislature. In determing the question of reasonableness, it is at liberty to act with reference to the established usages, customs, and traditions of the people, and with a view to the promotion of their comfort, and the preservation of the public peace and good order. Gauged by this standard, we cannot say that a law which authorized or even requires the separation of the two races in public conveyances is unreasonable, or more obnoxious to the fourteenth amendment than the acts of congress requiring separate schools for colored children in the district of Columbia, the constitutionality of which does not seem to have been questioned, or the corresponding acts of state legislatures.

"We consider the underlying fallacy of the plaintiff's argument to consist in the assumption that the enforced separation of the two races stamps the colored race with a badge of inferiority. If this be so, it is not by reason of anything found in the act, but solely because the colored race chooses to put that construction upon it." Id.

In the treatment of citizens seeking redress, there is no difference between Plessy and the doctrine of standing. Both prescribe that it is an acceptable practice to deny the rights of redress to citizens and base their conclusion on some form of preserving internal order rather than on constitutional right, thus creating two classes of civil rights for citizens: those the Court will enforce and those the Court will not enforce. Standing, therefore, as created by the Court, is a "partition" segregating citizen from right of redress.

In Plessy, the answer to this concept was expressed by Justice Harlan, the sole dissenter who said:

"The white race deems itself to be the dominant race in this country. And so it is, in prestige, in achievements, in education, in wealth, and in power. So, I doubt not, it will continue to be for all time if it remains true to its great heritage, and holds fast to the principles of constitutional liberty. But in the view of the constitution, in the eye of the law, there is in this country no superior, dominant, ruling class of citizens. There is no caste here. Our constitution is color-blind, and neither knows nor tolerates classes among citizens. In respect of civil rights, all citizens are equal before the law. The humblest is the peer of the most powerful. The law regards man as man, and takes no account of his surroundings or of his color when his civil rights as guarantied by the supreme law of the land are involved. It is therefore to be regretted that this high tribunal, the final expositor of the fundamental law of the land, has reached the conclusion that it is competent for a state to regulate the enjoyment by citizens of their civil rights solely upon the basis of race.

(Footnote Continued Next Page)

2

The Per Se Assertion—Shuttlesworth and Brown

- 4 The purpose of this suit is not to argue the merits of the doctrine of
- 5 standing except as that doctrine relates to achieving a specific end: to
- 6 compel Congress to obey the Constitution and call a convention to propose
- 7 amendments. As the single requirement in the Constitution, a proper numeric
- 8 ratio of applying states, has been satisfied, the refusal of Congress to call
- 9 a convention is clearly a per se violation of the Constitution.
- 10 How has the Court addressed per se violations of the Constitution by the
- 11 government with respect to the power of citizens to respond to those per se
- 12 violations? The answer is unequivocal:

&quot;In my opinion, the judgment this day rendered will, in time, prove to be quite as pernicious as the decision made by this tribunal in the Dred Scott Case.  $\dots$

&quot;The result of the whole matter is that while this court has frequently adjudged, and at the present term has recognized the doctrine, that a state cannot, consistently with the constitution of the United States, prevent white and black citizens, having the required qualifications for jury service, from sitting in the same jury box, it is now solemnly held that a state may prohibit white and black citizens from sitting in the same passenger coach on a public highway, or may require that they be separated by a 'partition' when in the same passenger coach. May it not now be reasonably expected that astute men of the dominant race, who affect to be disturbed at the possibility that the integrity of the white race may be corrupted, or that its supremacy will be imperiled, by contact on public highways with black people, will endeavor to procure statutes requiring white and black jurors to be separated in the jury box by a 'partition' and that, upon retiring form the court room to consult as to their verdict, such partition, if it be a movable one, shall be taken to their consultation room, and set up in such way as to prevent black jurors from coming too close to their brother jurors of the white race. If the 'partition' used in the court room happens to be stationary, provision could be made for screens with openings through which jurors of the two races could confer as to their verdict without coming into personal contact with each other. I cannot see but that, according to the principles this announced such state legislation, although conceived in hostility to, and enacted for the purpose of humiliating citizens of the Untied States of particular race, would be held to be consistent with the constitution." Id.

"In this case, by failing to tailor the no-trespass condition narrowly to allow for lawful demonstrations, the Park Service also failed to leave open sufficient alternative means for the protestors to communicate their views.
... Such distancing of the demonstrators from the intended audience does not provide a reasonable alternative means for communication of RWHP's views. In Bay Area Peace Navy,... [w]e stated '[a]n alternative is not ample if the speaker is not permitted to reach the "intended audience."' ... 'The First Amendment protects the right of every citizen to "reach the minds of willing listeners and to do so there must be opportunity to win their attention."'

"The government does not question the defendants' standing to make a facial challenge because one need not apply for a benefit conditioned by a facially unconstitutional law. See Shuttlesworth v. City of Birmingham, 394

In light of the Court's rulings regarding the doctrine of standing, its position in Shuttlesworth is, to say the least, ironic. The Court stated: "There can be no doubt that the Birmingham ordinance, as it was written, conferred upon the City Commission virtually unbridled and absolute power to prohibit any 'parade,' 'procession,' or 'demonstration' on the city's streets or public ways. For in deciding whether or not to withhold a permit, the members of the Commission were to be guided only by their own ideas of 'public welfare, peace, safety, health, decency, good order, morals or convenience.' This ordinance as it was written, therefore, fell squarely within the ambit of the many decisions of this Court over the last 30 years, holding that a law subjecting the exercise of First Amendment freedoms to the prior restraint of a license, without narrow, objective, and definite standards to guide the licensing authority, is unconstitutional. 'It is settled by a long line of recent decisions of this Court that an ordinance which, like this one, makes the peaceful enjoyment of freedoms which the Constitution guarantees contingent upon the uncontrolled will of an official-as by requiring a permit or license which may be granted or withheld in the discretion of such official- is an unconstitutional censorship or prior restraint upon the enjoyment of those freedoms.' Staub v. Baxley, 355 U.S. 313, 322. And our decisions have made clear that a person faced with such an unconstitutional licensing law may ignore it and engage with impunity in the exercise of the right of free expression for which the law purports to require a license. 'The Constitution can hardly be thought to deny to one subjected to the restraints of such an ordinance the right to attack its constitutionality, because he has not yielded to is demands.' Jones v. Opelika, 316 U.'S. 584, 602 (Stone, C.J., dissenting) adopted per curiam on rehearing, 319 U.S. 103, 104." 196

There is a contradiction between the Court's Shuttlesworth position and the Court's position on standing. On one hand, the Court holds the government violating the Constitution is insufficient grounds to warrant standing where a <sup>196</sup> Shuttlesworth v. City of Birmingham, 394 U.S. 147(1969).

BRIEF IN SUPPORT OF CONVENTION GENERAL BRIEF ARGUMENTS PAGE 151

5

6 7

8

10

11 12

13

14

15

16

17

18 19 20

21

22

23

24

25 26

27

28

29

30

31

32

33

34

35 36

37

38

39

40

41

42

U.S. 147, 151 (1969)." 195

<sup>195</sup> United States v. Baugh, 9th Circuit Court of Appeals, #9810224, (1999).

1 citizen seeks redress for a violation of the Constitution. 197 Yet

2 simultaneously it holds a citizen has a right to ignore an unconstitutional

3 law which violates the Constitution and that standing has no bearing because 4 "the Constitution can hardly be thought to deny to one subjected to the

5 restraints of such an ordinance the right to attack its constitutionality,

6 because he has not yielded to is demands."

9

11

12

13

14

17

18 19 20

21

7 Logically, both of these assertions cannot stand. One possibility is

8 that the Constitution and the rights guaranteed therein trump the government with the citizens possessing the right to protect themselves by ignoring 10 unconstitutional actions and laws of the government; this would translate as the citizens having the power to ignore Court-imposed rules of standing. The other possibility is that the government trumps the Constitution with the government possessing the right to decide whether citizens are "entitled" to the rights quaranteed by the Constitution; this would translate as the Court

15 imposing standing for its own "convenience."

16 Like Congress, the Court's doctrine of standing establishes a branch of national government as gatekeeper, assigning to itself whether or not a citizen, citizens, or even the entire nation can be "entitled" to the guarantees of the Constitution. Unlike Congress, however, the Court has at least attempted to justify its segregation of citizen rights based on its interpretation of the Constitution instead of simply ignoring the document as 22 Congress has done, thereby de facto vetoing the Constitution. Nevertheless, no

BRIEF IN SUPPORT OF CONVENTION GENERAL BRIEF ARGUMENTS

PAGE 152

 $<sup>^{197}</sup>$  See supra text accompanying note 142.

1 matter how fancy or deftly written the prose used to justify segregation, it

2 still remains segregation, and a de facto veto of the Constitution is still a

3 de facto veto of the Constitution. There is in fact no real difference between

4 the arguments used by the courts to justify or deny standing and those

5 arguments the Court has condemned in such rulings as Shuttlesworth where

6 commissioners acted, according to the Court, in the same arbitrary and 7 capricious manner.

11

13

14

15

16

19

20

8 The commissioners, Congress and the Court suffer an identical trait: the 9 presumption of those licensed by the people to carry out their sovereign

10 powers that this license somehow grants them the power to decide whether or not the people are "entitled" to unconditional rights granted them in the 12 Constitution. It is blatant prior restraint. Yet, because these powers of the people so greatly affect those in political power, these licensees have seen fit to establish conditions and terms regarding unconditional rights where no such conditions exist for purposes of "convenience" or "self-governance." The Founders declared citizens possess "unalienable" rights, meaning no government

17 has the right to segregate them from a citizen. 198 Any act of government,

18 therefore, which attempts this form of segregation is in direct conflict with the most central premise of the Founders, a premise clearly embedded in the Constitution. In a word, any such attempt is unconstitutional per se. The 21 Court has ruled that in any conflict between government act and Constitution,

&lt;sup>198</sup> "We hold these truths to be self-evident, that all men are created equal, that they are endowed by their Creator with certain unalienable rights..." Declaration of Independence (1776). See infra text accompanying notes 923-1009.

- 1 the government act must fall. It need hardly be pointed out the Court, while
- 2 ruling on an act of the legislature, could hold itself exempt from its
- 3 conclusions. 199

"The question, whether an act, repugnant to the constitution, can become the law of the land, is a question deeply interesting to the United States; but, happily, not of an intricacy proportioned to its interest. It seems only necessary to recognize certain principles, supposed to have been long and well established, to decide it.

"That the people have an original right to establish, for their future government, such principles as, in their opinion, shall most conduce to their own happiness, is the basis on which the whole American fabric has been erected. The exercise of this original right is a very great exertion; nor can it, nor ought it, to be frequently repeated. The principles, therefore, so established, are deemed fundamental. And as the authority from which they proceed is supreme, and can seldom act, they are designed to be permanent.

"This original and supreme will organizes the government, and assigns to different departments their respective powers. It may either stop here, or establish certain limits not to be transcended by those departments.

"The government of the United States is of the latter description. The powers of the legislature are defined and limited; and that those limits may not be mistaken, or forgotten, the constitution is written. To what purpose are powers limited, and to what purpose is that limitation committed to writing, if these limits may, at any time, be passed by those intended to be restrained? The distinction between a government with limited and unlimited powers is abolished, if those limits do not confine the persons on whom they are imposed, and if acts prohibited and acts allowed, are of equal obligation. It is a proposition to plain to be contested, that the constitution controls any legislative act repugnant to it; or, that the legislature may alter the constitution by an ordinary act.

"Between these alternative there is no middle ground. The constitution is either a superior, paramount law, unchangeable by ordinary means, or it is on a level with ordinary legislative acts, and, like other acts, is alterable when the legislature shall please to alter it.

"If the former part of the alternative be true, then a legislative act contrary to the constitution is not law: if the latter part be true, then written constitutions are absurd attempts, on the part of the people, to limit a power in its own nature illimitable.

"Certainly all those who have framed written constitution contemplate them as forming the fundamental and paramount law of the nation, and consequently, the theory of every such government must be, that an action of the legislature, repugnant to the constitution, is void. ...

"It is also not entirely unworthy of observation that in declaring what shall be the supreme law of the land, the constitution itself is first mentioned; and not the laws of the United States generally, but those only which shall be made in pursuance of the constitution, have that rank.

"Thus, the particular phraseology of the constitution of the United States confirms and strengthens the principle, supposed to be essential to all written constitutions, that a law repugnant to the constitution is void; and that courts, as well as other departments, are bound by that instrument." Marbury v. Madison, 5 U.S. 137 (1803) (emphasis added).

(Footnote Continued Next Page)

By the Court's admission, the doctrine of standing is generalized, 1 vague, arbitrary and exists as much for Court "convenience" as any perceived 2 constitutional need. This latter point has been defined by the Court without 3

4 consideration of the effect of at least two constitutional amendments on the

5 doctrine of standing. 200 The intent of the doctrine of standing is to allow the

6 Court to arbitrarily decide whether or not a citizen is "entitled" to 7 protection of expressed rights in the Constitution. In this suit, the fact the 8 plaintiff has shown denial of at least five of his unalienable rights, all of which have been previously recognized by the Court as satisfying standing, does not guarantee any of them will pass Court muster.

10

12

13

14

18

19

11 Frankly, the Court may not find it "convenient" to decide the issue of Congress refusing to obey the Constitution in this manner. Using its doctrine of standing, the Court may choose never to decide any issue of redress presented to it by any citizen or state in this matter regardless of whatever violation of the Constitution is involved. Standing, as much as the 15 16 unconstitutional actions of Congress, blocks constitutionally guaranteed 17 redress by citizens as well as other specified constitutional procedures, and it is irrelevant to the Court whether the Constitution is violated, only whether or not the Court decides a citizen is "entitled" to redress.

Even though Marbury discussed an act of the legislature being void if contrary to the Constitution, there is no difference between that and a Court doctrine that is contrary to the Constitution. As Marbury states, the courts are as bound to the Constitution as other government departments. Thus a Court doctrine, such as standing, that conflicts with clear unequivocal and unconditional constitutional language, in this case the right of redress, must be void as currently interpreted.

2000 See supra text accompanying note 184.

1 In Shuttlesworth, the Court ruled a definite alternative allowing 2 citizens to reach their intended audience must exist, and any uncontrolled licensing by government official[s] that permit that official[s] to act as a 3 gatekeeper not permitting such alternative is unconstitutional. The Court 4 5 cannot hold itself unaffected by its own conclusions and rulings. Thus, in the 6 issue of a convention call, the Court cannot shuffle citizens to Congress for 7 redress (as the commissioners in Shuttlesworth attempted to do by saying 8 blacks could protest, but not parade) because as the evidence presented in this suit makes clear, Congress is in no way disposed to obey the Constitution. $^{201}$  Therefore, unless the Court intends to grant to the President 10 11 of the United States dictatorial powers to effect a convention call, there is 12 no other alternative of redress left open for a citizen "to reach [his] 13 intended audience" which is to have the plain language of the Constitution obeyed except through the Court. By this same reasoning, Congress may not 14 15 ignore Article V and attempt to shuffle off citizens seeking to exercise the 16 right of a convention to propose amendments guaranteed in the Constitution for 17 its "convenience" or "self-governance." Simply put, the Constitution must be 18 satisfied as specified in Article V in the manner prescribed, and any other practice of Congress is plainly unconstitutional. 19 20 Unlike other per se violations of the Constitution summarily dismissed by the Court on the basis that such violations are insufficient reasons for

&lt;sup>201</sup> See infra text
TABLE 1-STATE APPLICATIONS FOR A CONVENTION, p.661 to
TABLE 9-SAME SUBJECT APPLICATIONS INCLUDING CAPLAN, PART II, p.690.

1 redress, $^{202}$  this per se violation by Congress also violates the  $14^{\rm th}$

2 Amendment's guarantee of due process in all of plaintiff's standing issues and

3 as a stand alone action. In short, rights quaranteed in the Constitution are

4 deprived without due process of law because no amendatory action allowing such

5 action on the part of the government has occurred, and only in this manner, by

6 amendment, and in no other method, may constitutional language, and thus

7 intent, be altered.  $^{203}$  The Congress has attempted to alter the plain language

8 of Article V without amendment which is a clear violation of due process.

9 Therefore, as Congress is engaged in a per se violation of the expressed

10 language of the Constitution, according to Court ruling, standing is to be

11 ignored, 204 as the plaintiff is not required to prove standing in order to have

12 redress from the Court. In fact, if this ruling of the Court is carried to its

13 logical conclusion, as the administration of the doctrine of standing

14 conflicts with the First and Eleventh Amendments, 205 is an arbitrary, vaque procedure established for "convenience" of the Court, intended to segregate

16 citizens from their constitutionally guaranteed rights without any clear

17 alternative for the citizen to obtain redress and as such is a per se

18 violation of the Constitution, it may, as the Court has ruled, be ignored by

19 the plaintiff. 206

15

(Footnote Continued Next Page)

&lt;sup>202</sup> See supra text accompanying note 142.

&quot;Nothing new can be put into the constitution except through the amendatory process, and nothing old can be taken out without the same process." Ullmann v. U.S., 350 U.S. 422 (1956).

&lt;sup>204</sup> See supra text accompanying note 196.

See supra text accompanying note 184.

The segregation aspect of the doctrine of standing becomes glaringly apparent when examining the consistency of Court rulings. On one hand, the Court holds in a case dealing with one section of specific, expressed language

- 1 The Court has enunciated this form of citizen redress as the "obvious
- 2 importance of the question presented" doctrine 207 which has been used by the
- 3 Court where it admits the language and intent of the Constitution is
- 4 "inconclusive" to the issue presented, 208 but the Court wishes to consider the
- 5 issue "in light of its full development and its present place in American life
- 6 throughout the Nation." Plaintiff does not maintain the language of the
- 7 Constitution, nor the intent of the Framers, is "inconclusive" as to the
- 8 present issue presented to the Court, but does maintain the question of this
- 9 suit is of such "obvious importance" as to preclude any disqualification by
- 10 the Court on the basis of standing.
- 11 In Brown, the Court found that segregation was a per se violation of the
- 12 Constitution based on the 14th Amendment, even though the Court admitted the of the Constitution that a violation of the Constitution is not enough to warrant redress. See supra text accompanying note 142. Yet, in another case involving specific, expressed language of the Constitution, the Court not only holds there is standing but maintains the law involved in the matter may be ignored by the citizen so affected by the law. The incongruity is blatant. The plaintiffs contend that segregated public schools are not 'equal' and cannot be made 'equal' and that hence they are deprive of the equal protection of the laws. Because of the obvious importance of the question presented, the Court took jurisdiction." Brown v. Board of Education, 347 U.S. 483 (1954) (emphasis added).

"Reargument was largely devoted to the circumstances surrounding the adoption of the fourteenth Amendment in 1868. It covered exhaustively consideration of the amendment in Congress, ratification by the states, then existing practices in racial segregation, and the views of proponents and opponents of the Amendment. This discussion and our own investigation convince us that, although these sources case some light, it is not enough to resolve the problem with which we are faced. At best they are inconclusive. The most avid proponents of the post-War Amendments undoubtedly intended them to remove all legal distinctions among 'all persons born or naturalized in the United States.' Their opponents, just as certainly, were antagonistic to both the letter and the spirit of the Amendments and wished them to have the most limited effect. What others in Congress and the state legislatures had in mind cannot be determined with any degree of certainty." Id. (emphasis added).

209 "We must consider public education in light of its full development and its present place in American life throughout the Nation." Id. (emphasis added).

- 1 14th Amendment had little connection with the issue. Nevertheless, the Court
- 2 maintained it had the power to declare an action of government
- 3 unconstitutional simply because it violated the Constitution per se. In this
- 4 instance, there is a direct textual violation of the Constitution both as to
- 5 language itself and intent of the framers. It is an obvious per se violation
- 6 of the Constitution, and based on the Brown decision the Court has the power
- 7 to declare the government action unconstitutional.
- 8 While the use of the "obvious importance of the question presented"
- 9 doctrine in Brown was certainly properly and correctly employed by the Court
- 10 to arrive at a needed and correct decision regarding a portion of the American
- 11 population and denial of its rights, the fact remains Brown only affected and
- 12 dealt with a portion of the American population. This issue, the mandated
- 13 calling of a convention to propose amendments by Congress, affects every
- 14 American citizen, and the outcome of this decision will have a direct
- 15 repercussion on the rights of all American citizens and in this sense is even
- 16 more significant than Brown.
- 17 What was the essence of Brown? Flatly, to defy a form of tyranny, in
- 18 this instance, the acts by some Americans to segregate other Americans from
- 19 their inalienable rights, rights that belong to all Americans. The Supreme
- 20 Court of the United States courageously opposed that tyranny, holding
- 21 segregation and discrimination were and are unconstitutional. Americans have
- 22 always fought against tyranny, whatever form it takes. They have died on
- 23 beaches in Europe and the Pacific fighting it. They have marched in streets
- 24 opposing it. In distant past, they fought it in Congress. Americans understand
- 25 that fighting for rights has nothing to do with being conservative, liberal or

- 1 any other label. It is about freedom and the liberty that rights provide.
- 2 People who attach such labels to those seeking to preserve rights take it for
- 3 granted that such rights exist gratis. They are wrong. Rights must be
- 4 preserved. They must be protected. They must be defended. Otherwise they will
- 5 die and with their death, freedom and liberty. It is an ongoing struggle that
- 6 began with our Founding Fathers who wrote a Declaration of Independence
- 7 declaring the rights they valued and explaining for all the world why they
- 8 fought the strongest nation on earth to free this nation from tyranny. The
- 9 Founders then created the Constitution to preserve those rights and created a
- 10 system of government accountable and subservient to the people. In the
- 11 Constitution, the Founders demanded that all members of that government swear
- 12 to "preserve, protect and defend" the Constitution: in other words, preserve,
- 13 protect and defend the American people from tyranny. It is reasonable,
- 14 therefore, to conclude that part of the constitutional duty of the Court is to
- 15 oppose tyranny in any form.
- 16 As such, the Court faces a dilemma regarding the allegation of tyranny
- 17 by Congress. Because of its edict on standing, the Court cannot refute tyranny
- 18 without first granting standing. For without standing, the Court can go no
- 19 further than to create a de facto approval of the tyranny charged in this
- 20 suit. By the Court's own rulings, its effect must cease at that point. The
- 21 Court will have failed in its most fundamental duty, that of guarding the
- 22 rights of the people from the effect of tyranny.
- 23 A requirement of standing is establishing an injury in fact or harm to a
- 24 plaintiff. Ultimately, the Court makes this judgment. Therefore, the Court
- 25 must determine whether there is any harm in Congress' not calling a

- 1 convention. As the Founders created the Constitution with the intent of
- 2 forever preventing that establishment of a tyranny, it becomes clear that the
- 3 language of Article V was intended along with the rest of the Constitution, to
- 4 effect this. If it is assumed the Founders created the Constitution in order
- 5 to protect the nation and thus its citizens from the effects of tyranny, it
- 6 follows any violation of the Constitution must cause harm in this manner, if
- 7 in no other. In order for the Court to exempt Congress via standing,
- 8 therefore, it follows it must discuss at some point how the refusal of
- 9 Congress to call a convention causes no harm. This in turn requires the Court
- 10 to address the essence of this suit: that under the plain language of the
- 11 Constitution, Congress must call a convention and has no discretion regarding
- 12 this. 210 In order to exempt Congress from complying with the Constitution, the
- 13 Court is thus compelled to bend this clear language to the needs of standing.
- 14 The Court is now faced the reality of the Founders' original intent. To
- 15 provide an exemption to standing, the Court must prove what is not required to
- 16 call a convention. By eliminating what is not required to compel a
- 17 congressional call, and by justifying this for purposes of standing, that
- 18 which remains, however construed, must be what is required for Congress to
- 19 call. Under any circumstances, therefore, the question of this suit will be
- 20 answered by the Court. Thus, the issue and standing meld into one alloy,
- 21 separation of which by any means is impossible: the expression by force of law
- 22 of the terms and circumstance of a convention call.

BRIEF IN SUPPORT OF CONVENTION GENERAL BRIEF ARGUMENTS PAGE 161

Which the Court itself has said is clear unambiguous language. See infratext accompanying notes 261,527,551,670,728,1034,1046,1074.

1	The alternative is for the Court to sanction Congress' violation of
2	constitutional law while permitting the citizens of this nation no redress in
3	the matter, another constitutional violation by refusing to rule on the issue
4	at all. While viable for Court "convenience" in the past, such action will
5	simply not work in this instance. Refusing to rule is a de facto recognition
6	of the right of Congress to violate the expressed language of the 7	Constitution. The Court thus grants Congress a veto power over the
8	Constitution much more dangerous than any convention amendment could ever
9	contrive. Thus, in this instance where an expressed provision of the
10	Constitution is involved, and where on its face there appears to be a
11	violation, standing and law become inseparable. Consequently, justice is best
12	served if the matter were resolved not on the technicalities of standing but
13	on the merits of the argument that Congress is violating the most fundamental
14	principle of this nation.
15 16 17 18 19 20 21 22 23 24 25 26 27	As the Court has said:  "[I]t must not be forgotten that in a free representative government nothing is more fundamental than the right of the people, through their appointed servants, to govern themselves in accordance with their own will, except so far as they have restrained themselves by constitutional limits specifically established, and that, in our peculiar dual form of government, nothing is more fundamental than the full power of the state to order its own affairs and govern its own people, except as so far as the Federal Constitution expressly or by fair implication, has withdrawn that power. The power of the people of the states to make and alter their law at pleasure is the greatest security for liberty and justice"
20

THE POLITICAL QUESTION ISSUE

<sup>211</sup> Twining v. New Jersey, 211 U.S. 78 (1908).

2.

The Obvious Ploy

3

4

5 By refusing to call a convention to propose amendments despite a clear 6 constitutional mandate, Congress' obvious ploy to defend its laches will be to 7 maintain that the entire matter is a political question beyond the Court's jurisdiction. Certainly, if the purpose of this suit was to defeat a specific 8 9 constitutional amendment proposal, the Court would be correct in holding, as it has repeatedly held in the past, that such a question is political in 10 nature and thus not a judicial matter; the Court has made it clear it has no 11 12 business deciding whether or not an amendatory proposal becomes part of the 13 Constitution. 212 By the same token, however, where constitutional procedure was 14 involved in the question before the Court and required interpretation by the Court, it has held consistently the issue was not a political question and 15 therefore subject to judicial review. 213 As the Court has never ruled in its 16

_

17

entire history on any aspect of the convention to propose amendments save that

See Dodge v. Woolsey, 59 U.S. 331 (1855); Hawke v. Smith, 253 U.S. 221 (1920); Leser v. Garnett, 258 U.S. 130 (1922); United States v. Sprague, 282 U.S. 716 (1931); Coleman v. Miller, 307 U.S. 433 (1939).

However in its last ruling regarding the amendatory process, Coleman v. Miller, 307 U.S. 433 (1939), the Court ruled Congress had "exclusive" control over the entire amendatory process and excluded itself, and by implication, the people and the states completely from any participation in the process except as regulated under congressional monopoly. See infra text accompanying notes 1053-1112.

1 Congress must call a convention if a sufficient number of states apply, 214 the

2 question of this suit clearly falls in the latter category.

3 The political question doctrine was most extensively examined in Baker

v. Carr<sup>215</sup> where the Court defined it:

"It is apparent that several formulations which vary slightly according to the settings in which the questions arise may describe a political question, although each has one or more elements which identify it as essentially a function of the separation of powers. Prominent on the surface of any case held to involve a political question is found a textually demonstrable constitutional commitment of the issue to a coordinate political department; or a lack of judicially discoverable and manageable standards for resolving it; or the impossibility of deciding without an initial policy determination of a kind clearly for nonjudicial discretion; or the impossibility of a court's undertaking independent resolution without expressing lack of the respect due coordinate branches of government; or an unusual need for unquestioning adherence to a political decision already made; or the potentiality of embarrassment from multifarious pronouncements by various departments on one question."

18 19

20 21

22

24

27

28

29 30

31

4

5

6

7

8

9

10

11 12

13

14

15

16

17

This is crux of the matter: whether or not the refusal of Congress to obey a clear constitutional mandate constitutes a "manifestly unauthorized exercise of power" or is simply a political question under congressional 23 control. If Congress opts for the political question doctrine as the basis of its obstruction of the expressed language of the Constitution, the Court has 25 made it clear the political question doctrine is a very narrow ledge on which

26 to stand. The Court said:

"Unless one of these formulations is inextricable from the case at bar, there should be no dismissal for nonjusticiability on the ground of a political question's presence. The doctrine of which we treat is one of 'political questions,' not one of 'political cases.' The courts cannot reject as 'no law suit' a bona fide controversy as to whether some action denominated 'political' exceeds constitutional authority." 217

&lt;sup>214</sup> See supra text accompanying note 212.

&lt;sup>215</sup> 369 U.S. 186 (1962).

&lt;sup>216</sup> Id.

&lt;sup>217</sup> Id.

- 1 Any discussion of the political question doctrine in relation to the
- 2 convention call must in some manner be a definition of the relationship of the
- 3 states and the people to Congress, <sup>218</sup> a definition the Court has never even
- 4 established. While the Court has addressed the political question doctrine
- 5 between the states, the people and Congress in two contexts, the Guaranty
- 6 Clause 219 and Article V, these court suits shared a common trait: an attempt to $^{218}$  As the convention to propose amendments is an exercise of the people's right to alter or abolish their government, it might be more properly stated that any relationship where the people are directly involved is a question of sovereignty and whether or not they have licensed the specific sovereign power in question to the government. As the specific sovereign power in question in this case is in fact the sovereign power itself, and whether or not by use of the political question doctrine this basic power shall be transferred from the people to Congress, thus making Congress sovereign and consequently removing sovereignty in its entirety from the people by no longer allowing them the right to alter or abolish their form of government, and as this is clearly contrary to previous Court rulings in this area, (see infra text accompanying note 221) it is clear the Court is obligated to clarify this relationship and to establish clearly whether or not under the doctrine of political question Congress can assume sovereignty in its entirety from the people.  $^{219}$  See, for example, Baker v. Carr, 369 U.S. 186 (1962) where the Court discussed the states and the Guaranty Clause. In this instance the Court found the Constitution's guarantee of a republican form of government to be a political question and therefore "nonjusticiable." The Court relied on its case was "an unusual case."

As the Court explained:

"Chief Justice Taney's opinion reasoned as follows: (1) If a court were to hold the defendants' acts unjustified because the charter government had no legal existence during the period in question, it would follow that all of that government's actions-laws enacted, taxes collected, salaries paid, accounts settled, sentences passed-were of no effect, and that 'the officers who carried their decisions into operation [were] answerable as trespassers, if not in some cases as criminals.'" The Court then continued:

earlier decision reached in Luther v. Borden, 48 U.S. 1, (1849). However, the Court, quoting Daniel Webster who argued for the defense in Luther, noted the

"There was, of course, no room for application of any doctrine of de facto status to uphold prior acts of an officer not authorized de jure, for such would have defeated the plaintiff's very action. A decision for the plaintiff would inevitably have produced some significant measure of chaos, a consequence to be avoided if it could be done without abnegation of the judicial duty to uphold the Constitution."

In short, for the Court have ruled in any other manner would have compelled the Court find the laws the plaintiffs were basing their action on were in fact void which would then mean the plaintiff's successful action would be based on laws no longer in effect.

BRIEF IN SUPPORT OF CONVENTION GENERAL BRIEF ARGUMENTS PAGE 165

- 1 use the courts to overthrow a government action, not preserve it. 220 Thus, they
- 2 present a problem. As the Court correctly observed in these suits, the
- 3 plaintiffs were attempting to use the courts to achieve an end they had not
- 4 achieved politically. Therefore, in almost every suit, they correctly ruled
- 5 the matter specifically brought before the Court was a "political question."
- 6 The fact is, both the convention call and the Guaranty Clause were
- 7 intended to preserve peaceful government. In the case of the convention call,
- 8 it allows for a peaceful method of change in government where otherwise a
- 9 recalcitrant government might cause violent action on the part of the people.
- 10 In the case of the Guaranty Clause, a means is provided whereby the national
- 11 government, under certain specified circumstances, can preserve a state
- 12 government elected by the people that in some fashion faces overthrow either
- 13 by rebellion or invasion.
- 14 As this suit urges the enforcement of a constitutional clause and thus
- 15 preserves that provision, this suit is in alignment with the original intent
- 16 of that clause. Hence, it is quite opposite from other suits and cases the
- 17 Court has addressed. Further, it is the government that is attempting to

For such examples see Luther v. Borden, 48 U.S. 1 (1849) where the action was brought to declare state laws in Rhode Island to be void during the time of the Dorr Rebellion; Pacific States Telephone and Telegraph Co. v. Oregon, 223 U.S. 118 (1912) where an attempt was made by PSTT to overthrow an initiative passed in the state of Oregon.

There are even more examples in the cases brought to the Court regarding amendatory procedure. At the heart of each was an attempt to overthrow a specific amendment that had been recently ratified. Such cases include Hollingsworth v. Virginia, 3 U.S. 378 (1798), Eleventh Amendment; Hawke v. Smith, 253 U.S. 221 (1920), Eighteenth Amendment; Fairchild v. Hughes, 258 U.S. 126 (1922), Nineteenth Amendment; Leser v. Garnett, 258 U.S. 130 (1922), Nineteenth Amendment; United States v. Sprague, 282 U.S. 716 (1931), Eighteenth Amendment; Coleman v. Miller, 307 U.S. 433 (1939), amendment proposal not ratified by states.

1 overthrow the Constitution by ignoring its clear mandate. Thus, the threat to

2 the Constitution in this instance is not the people attempting to overthrow

3 the government, but the government attempting to overthrow the sovereignty of 4 the people. Such blatant tyranny hardly fits the description "political

5 question." Consequently, congressional reliance on precedent based on the

6 political doctrine question in relation to a convention to propose amendments

7 is weak at best and non-existent at worst.

8 Further, the Court has stated repeatedly the people are the source of all sovereign power in the United States<sup>221</sup> which they used to create a limited 9 10 form of government embodied in the Constitution licensing that government with 11 certain aspects of their sovereign power in order for it to carry out its assigned functions. Based on these Court rulings, it is a logical inference 12 13 that regardless of how much of their sovereignty the people license to the government, they retain the ultimate sovereign right to ensure the licenses 14 15 they have granted are executed by the government according to the terms and 16 conditions they have established and the right to revoke or otherwise alter 17 the licenses granted if they so decide. If this were not so, the entire 18 process of the people creating a Constitution intended to limit government becomes meaningless. In its most basic conception, the Constitution is a &quot;The constitution of the United States is to be considered as emanating from the people and not as the act of sovereign and independent states."

McCulloch v. State of Maryland, 17 U.S. 316 (1819); "The constitution of the United States was established not by the states in their sovereign capacities, but by the people of the United States." Martin v. Hunter's Lessee, 14 U.S. 304 (1816); "The Constitution is the fundamental law of the United States, and no department of government has any other powers than those thus delegated to it by the people." Hepburn v. Griswold, 75 U.S. 605 (1869).

1	contract between the people and the government the people have created. If the
2	people are the source of all sovereignty and they license some of that
3	sovereign power under specific terms and conditions to a government that in
4	turn can ignore that license, it is clear that it cannot be stated that
5	sovereignty emanates from the people. Simply put, the government has assumed a
6	power greater than that which was originally granted; i.e., it has become
7	sovereign, and therefore the people are not sovereign. Yet, the Court has
8	stated the people are the source of all sovereignty, which means the
9	government cannot be sovereign except as licensed by the people. The only
10	escape from this paradox is the acceptance that the people retain the ultimate
11	sovereign power to ensure that which they have licensed is executed according
12	to the license they established. Thus any political question doctrine must not
13	only be decided on the basis of the parameters discussed below, but in the
14	case of a convention to propose amendments, be determined as to whether or not
15	such a decision permanently transfers sovereignty from the people to Congress
16	in the name of "political question."
17
18
19
20	A Textually Demonstrable Constitutional Commitment
21
22	The textual commitment clause of the political question doctrine appears
23	at first glance to be all Congress requires to claim complete control of the convention to propose amendments. As Congress is named in Article V, the apparent logical conclusion is that the Constitution has "textually committed"

24

- 1 convention control to Congress. 222 However, a deeper examination of Baker
- 2 demonstrates the political question doctrine is not as black and white as
- 3 Congress would obviously prefer. The Founding Fathers<sup>223</sup> made it clear that
- 4 Congress has no discretion (hence, no political options) in the calling of a
- 5 convention. 224 As there is no constitutional support for Congress refusing to
- 6 call, it is clear the laches of Congress in failing to call a convention is an
- 7 obstruction of the intent of Constitution. The Court has made its position
- 8 clear regarding the use of the doctrine of political question by any branch of
- 9 government to obstruct the intent of the Constitution. The Court said:
- 10 "The political question doctrine, a tool for maintenance of governmental 11 order, will not be so applied as to promote only disorder. ... They [the 12 courts] will not stand impotent before an obvious instance of a manifestly 13 unauthorized exercise of power." 225
- 14 The Court has also rejected the contention that constitutional language
- 15 gives Congress exclusive grants of power to act in a judicial capacity or in
- this case the power to "judge" the state applications. The Court stated:
  - "Respondents first contend that this is not a case 'arising under' the Constitution within the meaning of Art. III. They emphasize that Art. I, 5, assigns to each house of Congress the power to judge the elections and qualifications of its own members and to punish its members for disorderly behavior. Respondents also note that under Art. I, 3, the Senate has the 'sole power' to try all impeachments. Respondents argue that these delegations (to

_

17

18 19

20

See supra text accompanying note 2. However, this cursory assumption is usually made by those who read the Constitution for what they want it to say rather than what it does say. True, the issuance of the actual convention call is clearly a congressional responsibility. Nonetheless, this responsibility is based entirely on the application of the state legislatures and cannot occur without these applications. Further, it is also dependent on the sovereign power of the people exercising their right to alter or abolish after the call has been issued. Finally, the matter is compulsory on Congress with no discretion on its part provided or intended. Hence such a cursory reading of Article V is a complete misassumption of the clear language and intent of the article.

And, as equally important, in any discussion involving the convention call, the Court has also indicated Congress has no discretion. See supra text accompanying notes 212,527,670,728,834,1034.

See infra text accompanying notes 497-521.

&lt;sup>225</sup> Baker v. Carr, 369 U.S. 186 (1962).

'judge,' and to 'try') to the Legislative Branch are explicit grants of 'judicial power' to the Congress and constitute specific exceptions to the general mandate of Art. III that the 'judicial power' shall be vested in the federal courts. Thus, respondents maintain, the 'power conferred on the courts by article III does not authorize this Court to do anything more than declare its lack of jurisdiction to proceed.'

"We reject this contention. Article III, 1, provides that the 'judicial Power... shall be vested in one supreme Court, and in such inferior courts as the Congress may...establish.' Further, 2 mandates that the 'judicial Power shall extend to all Cases... arising under this Constitution...' It has long been held that a suit 'arises under' the Constitution if a petitioner's claim 'will be sustained if the Constitution...[is] given one construction and will be defeated if [it is] given another.' Bell v. Hood, 327 U.S. 678, 685 (1946). See King County v. Seattle School District No. 1, 263 U.S. 361, 363-364 (1923). Cf. Osborn v. Bank of the United States, 9 Wheat. 738 (1824). See generally C. Wright, federal Courts 48-52 (1963). Thus, this case clearly is one 'arising under' the Constitution as the Court has interpreted that phrase. Any bar to federal courts reviewing the judgments made by the House or Senate in excluding a member arises from the allocation of powers between the two branches of the Federal Government (a question of justiciability), and not from the petitioners' failure to state a claim based on federal law." 226

The same cursory reading of the Constitution that assumes the fate of a convention to propose amendments is entirely in the hands of Congress and, under the political question doctrine, that any judicial review is thus invalid while overall incorrect, does have a valid, if severely restricted, point. The narrowness of this point, however, is consequential and may not be disregarded.

The Court has ruled it has the constitutional power to "define what the law is." In short, the Court claims the power of judicial review. This power means the Court has the constitutional power to interpret the intent and meaning of the Founding Fathers expressed in the Constitution and, based on that intent and meaning, declare whether an action (or inaction) by the government is in compliance with the Constitution. Judicial review in the case of a convention to propose amendments allows the Court to define the 226 Powell v. McCormack, 395 U.S. 486 (1969).

_

&lt;sup>227</sup> See infra text accompanying notes 287-288.

- 1 circumstances of a convention call, i.e., define under what terms Congress
- 2 shall call a convention. It may issue an order that Congress call the
- 3 convention based on this determination. However, judicial review does not
- 4 grant the Court the right to call a convention.
- 5 This fact established, the Court can do no more, therefore, than
- 6 determine, based on the intent of the Founders, 228 under what circumstances, if
- 7 any, that Congress may "judge" applications by the states for calling a
- 8 convention to propose amendments. If, for example, the Court finds that "same
- 9 subject", 229 "contemporaneousness", 230 or any other standard that provides
- 10 Congress discretion to "judge" state applications, is the proper
- 11 interpretation of the Constitution, then it follows that once such discretion
- 12 is established by the Court, it is up to Congress, not the Court, to employ
- 13 that discretion.
- 14 Further, as such standards have been used to justify Congress vetoing
- 15 applications and thus not calling a convention despite the imperative
- 16 "shall"<sup>231</sup> as used in Article V, such Court-created congressional discretion
- 17 can only intend that Congress has the power to decide whether or not the
- 18 applications are "accepted" by Congress and thus to enable Congress to veto
- 19 the states in their desire to have a convention to propose amendments as
- 20 expressed in those applications. Thus, the Court must also interpret the
- 21 imperative "shall" as it applies to Congress and the convention call and

-

 $<sup>^{228}</sup>$  For the intent and meaning of the Founders, see infra text accompanying notes 491-521,1439.

&lt;sup>229</sup> See infra text accompanying notes 669-728.

&lt;sup>230</sup> See infra text accompanying notes 736-789.

&lt;sup>231</sup> See infra text accompanying notes 853,860.

- 1 resolve any discrepancies between that interpretation of the word "shall" that
- 2 grants Congress discretion and the use of the word "shall" in the rest of the
- 3 Constitution that grants no discretion. 232 The specific question the Court must
- 4 decide is: whether the Founding Fathers intended Congress to have any
- 5 discretion in the convention call and, if so, what discretion. Once the Court
- 6 has so determined this question, its constitutional duty, and thus its
- 7 authority, is accomplished. By the Court's own doctrine of political question,
- 8 once it has defined the terms of the Article V convention call, the assignment
- 9 of those terms to Congress is clear, and thus any further examination by the
- 10 Court is precluded. Consequently, in this definable sense, the political

BRIEF IN SUPPORT OF CONVENTION GENERAL BRIEF ARGUMENTS PAGE 172

One of many examples in the Constitution employing the word "shall" in the absolute imperative sense is the establishment of terms of elected office for members of Congress and the President. The terms of office are one of the most fundamental principles of limited government, ensuring the officials of the national government cannot retain power indefinitely. See U.S. CONST., art. I, § 2, § 3, art. II, § 1,  $17^{\text{th}}$  Amendment, § 1. Should the Court choose to alter the obvious meaning of the word "shall" as used in terms of office, it will have to explain why, in the same document written by the same authors, "shall" means an absolute imperative in which Congress has no discretionary power (being bound to a term of office), yet simultaneously means an absolute imperative in which Congress has discretionary power and in fact may ignore the entire imperative altogether.

By the same token, the Court will need to explain the difference between two-thirds of Congress, meaning a numeric portion of Congress with no other conditions necessary, while two-thirds of the state legislatures applying does not mean a numeric count and implies a variety of conditions.

This issue the Court faces is one of pure logic. It cannot be successfully argued that once such an absolute is imposed in the Constitution, it can then be liquidated by terms, conditions, stipulations or other actions, for then it ceases to be an absolute. Any description of discretion that permits Congress to make up its collective mind prior to the mandated action of the Constitution can in no logical way be described as an absolute. It simply makes no sense that Congress is mandated without exception to call a convention, but then gets to decide whether or not it is going to. The proposition that Congress possesses absolute discretion of issuance of a convention call is akin to the proposition that a federal officeholder has a choice as to whether to leave or remain in office when his term expires without suffering electoral review.

- 1 question doctrine does apply. The Court defines the Constitution, and Congress
- 2 employs that definition in executing the matter defined.<sup>233</sup>
- 3 In this sense, therefore, this issue before the Court is identical to
- 4 one it resolved in Powell. 234 In Powell, the Court had to determine whether or
- 5 not Congress could exclude, as opposed to the expressed constitutional
- 6 language allowing it only to expel by the two-thirds vote, a member-elect of
- 7 Congress based on reasons other than those qualifications of office specified
- 8 in the Constitution. As is common in the Constitution, those qualifications
- 9 are specified using the absolute imperative "shall." In this instance, it is
- 10 used by the Founders no fewer than four times. 235 As discussed in Powell, the
- 11 Constitution does use the word "shall" in regard to Congress being able to
- 12 judge elections, returns and qualifications of its members, 236 and it does
- 13 permit under a specified procedure that a House of Congress may expel a
- 14 member. 237
- 15 In Powell, it was argued that these provisions provided exclusive
- 16 discretion to Congress to determine under what terms and conditions an elected

At present Congress is operating under its own interpretation of the Constitution, i.e., the convention call is an absolute power of Congress, and it may safely ignore the attempts of the states and the people to call one. Congress holds it has the power to veto the Constitution outright.  $^{234}$  Powell v. McCormack, 395 U.S. 486 (1969).

&quot;No Person shall be a Representative who shall not have attained to the Age of twenty five Years, and been seven Years a citizen of the Untied States, and who shall not, when elected, be an Inhabitant of that State in which he shall be chosen." U.S. CONST. art. I, §3.

&quot;Each House shall be the Judge of the Elections, Returns and Qualifications of its own Members,..." U.S. CONST., art. I, § 5, §§ 1.

237 "Each House may... with the Concurrence of two thirds, expel a Member."

&quot;Each House may... with the Concurrence of two thirds, expel a Member." U.S. CONST., art. I,  $\S$  5,  $\S\S$  2.

1 member of Congress could be seated, and that Congress could create any terms

2 it wished in order to deny a citizen elected to Congress his seat in Congress.

The Court disagreed saying:

"Had the intent of the framers emerged from these materials with less clarity, we would nevertheless have been compelled to resolve any ambiguity in favor of a narrow construction of the scope of Congress' power to exclude members-elect. A fundamental principle of our representative democracy is, in Hamilton's words, 'that the people should choose whom they please to govern them.' 2 Elliot's Debates 257. As Madison pointed out at the Convention, this principle is undermined as much by limiting whom the people can select as by limiting the franchise itself. In apparent agreement with this basic philosophy, the Convention adopted his suggestion limiting the power to expel. To allow essentially that same power to be exercised under the guise of judging qualifications, would be to ignore Madison's warning, borne out in the Wilkes case and some of Congress' own post-Civil War exclusion cases, against 'vesting an improper & dangerous power in the Legislature.' 2 Farrand 249. Moreover, it would effectively nullify the Convention's decision to require a two-thirds vote for expulsion. Unquestionably, Congress has an interest in preserving its institutional integrity, but in most cases that interest can be sufficiently safeguarded by the exercise of its power to punish its members for disorderly behavior and, in extreme cases, to expel a members with the concurrence of two-thirds. In short, both the intention of the Framers, to the extent it can be determined, and an examination of the basic principles of our democratic system persuade us that the Constitution does not vest in the Congress a discretionary power to deny membership by a majority vote.

"For these reasons we have concluded that Art. I, 5 is at most a 'textually demonstrable commitment' to Congress to judge only the qualifications expressly set forth in the Constitution. Therefore, the 'textual commitment' formulation of the political question doctrine does not bar federal courts from adjudicating petitioner's claims....

"[A]s our interpretation of Art. I, 5, discloses a determination of petitioner Powell's right to sit would require no more than an interpretation of the Constitution. Such a determination falls within the traditional role accorded courts to interpret the law and does not involve a 'lack of respect due [a] co-ordinate [branch] of government' nor does it involve a 'initial policy determination of a kind clearly for non-judicial discretion.' Baker v. Carr, 369 U.S. 186 at 217. Our system of government requires that federal courts on occasion interpret the Constitution in a manner at variance with the construction given the document by another branch. The alleged conflict that such an adjudication may cause cannot justify the courts' avoiding their constitutional responsibility."

The Court's examination in Powell of "standing qualifications prescribed in the Constitution"239 is analogous to the calling of the 44 convention to propose amendments, because the Constitution prescribes specific

2.2

3

4

5

6

7

8

9

10

11

12

13

14

15

16

17

18 19 20 21

22 23

24

25

26

27

28

29

30

31

32

33

34

35

36

37

38

39

40 41

42

&lt;sup>238</sup> Powell v. McCormack, 395 U.S. 486 (1969).

&lt;sup>239</sup> See supra text accompanying note 108.

- 1 qualifications for the event to occur. In the case of election to Congress,
- 2 residency, age and citizenship requirements are enumerated. In the case of the
- 3 convention call, a specific number of applying states (based on a ratio to the
- 4 total number of states in the Union) is enumerated. The Court's discussion
- 5 "that the people should choose whom they please to govern them" relates
- 6 directly the right of the people to alter or abolish. There is little doubt
- 7 the people choosing their representatives in their national legislature
- 8 clearly falls under their right to alter the government by choosing
- 9 representatives who effect changes in the law. Precisely the same is the
- 10 people choosing representatives at a convention who effect changes in the
- 11 Constitution. The power of the people is identical in either case, and as the
- 12 Court noted, "this principle is undermined as much by limiting whom the people
- 13 can select as by limiting the franchise itself." In the case of Powell,
- 14 Congress attempted to limit the selection; in the case of the convention call,
- 15 Congress has attempted to eliminate the franchise entirely. There is no other
- 16 difference. Thus the Court's conclusion "...that Art. I, 5 is at most a
- 17 'textually demonstrable commitment' to Congress to judge only the
- 18 qualifications expressly set forth in the Constitution" is equally applicable
- 19 and conclusive to the convention call: that the Article V convention call is
- 20 at most a "textually demonstrable commitment" to Congress to judge only the
- 21 qualifications expressly set forth in the Constitution, which means Congress
- 22 merely conducts a numeric count of the applications to determine that two-

1	thirds	$\circ$ f	the	states	have	applied	for	a	convention.	Thus	ag	Congress	COLLIC	٦

- 2 not exclude a member by a simple majority vote, 240 neither can Congress refuse
- 3 to call a convention. In sum, the Court held that which is written in the
- 4 Constitution is that which is meant. Therefore, if the states satisfy the
- 5 single standard of the Constitution, a numeric count, Congress can use no
- 6 other criterion on which to judge whether a call of a convention should occur
- 7 and thus must issue a call. Thus, it can hardly be said, based on the intent
- 8 of the Founders, that a call is a "commitment" to a coordinate political
- 9 department. Indeed, if there is a textual commitment, it lies with the state
- 10 legislatures and the people equally. As the rights of both have been violated
- 11 by the actions of Congress, this cannot be said to be protected by the
- 12 political question doctrine.

13

14

15 A Lack of Judicially Discoverable Standards

16

- 17 As the government has already agreed, 241 Article V is a clear,
- 18 unambiguous statement requiring no interpretation by the Court. In short, its

(Footnote Continued Next Page)

 $<sup>^{240}</sup>$  "In short, both the intention of the Framers, to the extent it can be determined, and an examination of the basic principles of our democratic system persuade us that the Constitution does not vest in the Congress a discretionary power to deny membership by a majority vote." Powell v. McCormack, 395 U.S. 486 (1969).

&quot;The United States asserts that article 5 is clear in statement and in meaning, contains no ambiguity, and calls for no resort of construction. A mere reading demonstrates that this is true. It provides two methods for proposing amendments. Congress may propose them by a vote of two-thirds of both houses, or, on the application of the legislatures of two-thirds of the states, must call a convention to propose them. Amendments proposed in either

1	meaning	can	be	arrived	at	simply	by	readings	its	words.	The	standard	by	whicl
---	---------	-----	----	---------	----	--------	----	----------	-----	--------	-----	----------	----	-------

- 2 Congress must call a convention to propose amendments is singular-a numeric
- 3 count of applying states. Thus, a judicially discoverable standard is evident
- 4 in the words themselves and has been so conceded by the government. Thus there
- 5 is no lack of discoverable standards that prevent the Court from arriving at
- 6 its conclusions.

7

8

An Initial Policy Of Clearly Nonjudicial Discretion

10

11

12

13

14

15

16

17

18 19 20

21

As the doctrine clearly deals with the political, it is obvious the Court's reference in this instance refers to the Court having to reach a political decision of clearly nonjudicial nature. For example, the Court certainly is not empowered to decide whether or not military forces should be employed in a foreign land or whether those forces once deployed should be withdrawn. Thus, were such a question to be brought to the Court, it clearly justifies the Court not reaching a conclusion because the Court is required to arrive at a political policy decision clearly outside its constitutional

It is on this basis the Court has consistently and correctly refused to resolve cases asking specific constitutional amendment proposals be declared way become a part of the Constitution, 'when ratified by the legislatures of three-fourths of the several States or by Convention in three-fourths thereof, as the one or the other Mode of Ratification may be proposed by the Congress...'" United States v. Sprague, 282 U.S. 716 (1931).

powers and thus its discretion.

- 1 unconstitutional because in reality as the Court observed, they were nothing
- 2 more than attempts to use the Court to achieve a political end unsuccessfully
- 3 achieved in the political arena. 242 There is a distinct difference, however,
- 4 between a specific amendment proposal and the amendatory process as a whole,
- 5 of which the convention to propose amendments is part. Like elections of
- 6 officeholders called for in the Constitution, the process must be protected by
- 7 the Court from political assault. Otherwise it will be destroyed. It is hardly
- 8 worth more than passing comment to observe the Court would hardly sit still,
- 9 for example, at any attempt of disenfranchisement by withholding the entire
- 10 election for a member of Congress.
- 11 The same holds true for the convention to propose amendments. In both
- 12 congressional elections and the convention, the Founding Fathers established
- 13 no options on the part of the government to void the mechanisms protecting the
- 14 rights of the people called for in the Constitution. Consequently, any initial
- 15 policy determinations were made by the Founders, thus relieving the Court of
- 16 any such burden.
- 17 Further, Congress has never established a single regulation or statute
- 18 concerning the convention call. Thus, whether discussing the Founders or

See Fairchild v. Hughes, 258 U.S. 126 (1922): "Plaintiff's alleged interest in the question submitted is not such as to afford a basis for this proceeding. It is frankly a proceeding to have the Nineteenth Amendment declared void."; Leser v. Garnett, 258 U.S. 130 (1922): "Ratification of the proposed amendment to the federal Constitution, now known as the Nineteenth, 41 Stat. 362, has be proclaimed on August 26, 1920... The petitioners contended, on several grounds, that the amendment had not become part of the federal Constitution."; United States v. Sprague, 282 U.s. 716 (1931): "The appellees contended in the court below, and here, that notwithstanding the plain language of article 5, conferring upon the Congress the choice of method of ratification, as between action by legislatures and by conventions, this Amendment could only be ratified by the latter."

1 Congress, it is clear there is no "initial policy" for the Court to resolve or

2 create. Hence, the "initial policy" question is inapplicable in regard to the 3 issue of this suit.

4

5

6 A Lack Of Respect Due Coordinate Branches Of Government

7

8

9

12

15

19

10 nothing more than the Court's deference to the separation of powers between

As the Court has stated, the political question doctrine is basically

11 the various branches of government established in the Constitution. $^{243}$  Part of the doctrine states the Court cannot decide a question if it contains "the 13 impossibility of a court's undertaking independent resolution without

14 expressing lack of the respect due coordinate branches of government..." This generalized statement can be interpreted in variety of meanings by the Court, 16 providing it great latitude should it require it.

For example, one meaning could certainly refer to not expecting the Court to perform a constitutional task mandated to another branch of government, i.e., commission officers, an executive function. Certainly, in 20 most circumstances, 244 within this function is the option on the part of the

 $<sup>^{243}</sup>$  "It is apparent that several formulations which vary slightly according to the settings in which the questions arise may describe a political question, although each has one or more elements which identify it as essentially a function of the separation of powers." Baker v. Carr, 369 U.S. 186 (1962).  $^{244}$  The circumstance that permits such option on the part of the executive is of course that the Constitution permits such an option.

1 executive not to perform a constitutional task. Thus, the executive may choose

2 not to commission a specific officer candidate, and the Court, employing the

3 "due respect" clause, would in all likelihood not interfere.

4 But what if the refusal on the part of the executive were based on the 5 religious beliefs of the candidate in question? Where would this fall in the area of "due respect of" a coordinate branch of government? Most likely, this 7 could not be defended as a political question outside Court review because the executive, like all coordinate branches of government, is given certain powers and denied others. One power denied under the First Amendment and Article VI

10 is religious discrimination or a religious test for office. Thus, were the 11 executive to so discriminate, he would show a lack of respect for his own

12 constitutional powers and limits.

6

8

14

15

16

18 19 20

22

13 It is a reasonable inference the Court expects the other coordinate branches of government to "respect" their own powers granted them by the Constitution, in short, to carry out their prescribed constitutional duties without the Court being required to serve as taskmaster.

17 But where the coordinate branch has shown a lack of respect for its own powers and limitations, then the Court has no choice but to step in as taskmaster. Thus, for the executive not to commission an officer, for example, because of his religious beliefs, calls for the legitimate interference of the 21 Court because the executive has violated provisions of the Constitution. For the Court to redress the executive in this specific circumstance is not an 23 action showing lack of respect due a coordinate branch of government. The 24 Court is merely mandating that a branch of government obey the Constitution,

25 something it is supposed to do without being told.

1	Thus, it is a reasonable inference the Court will not allow a coordinate
2	branch of government to use the political question doctrine as a shield from
3	Court redress if it is clear the intent of the coordinate branch of government
4	is to shun or otherwise avoid its constitutional obligations or, as is usually
5	the case, restrictions. Such is the case with congressional refusal to call a
6	convention to propose amendments when the states have applied. The Court can
7	hardly be said to show a lack of respect to Congress when all the Court is
8	doing is attempting to force Congress to obey the Constitution.
9	However, the question does require a direct answer. Can the Court reach
10	an independent resolution of a convention call without destroying the powers
11	of Congress? Yes. Article V makes it clear the power of Congress is limited in
12	the case of a convention to propose amendments to calling the convention. The
13	Court, using its usual and routine powers of constitutional interpretation,
14	merely defines what a call is and under what circumstance—-a numeric count of
15	applying statesCongress is obligated to call. After that, it is up to
16	Congress to do so absent Court interference unless Congress strays
17	constitutionally too far from that which the Court has defined. The power of
18	the call is left untouched except for the Court to observe it has been used
19	unconstitutionally by Congress and to compel that body to use it in a
20	constitutional manner.
21
22
23	Unquestioning Adherence To A Political Decision Already Made
24
25

1	The specific language used by the Court in its political question
2	doctrine is "or an unusual need for unquestioning adherence to a political
3	decision already made". In other words, Congress' political decision to
4	refuse to call a convention despite a clear constitutional mandate places the
5	Court in a bind: unquestioning adherence to a political decision already made
6	would grant Congress veto power over the Constitution at its whim. This is
7	blind obedience beyond the pale for the Court. As such, no further comment is
8	required.
9
10 11 12
13
14	The Question of Potential Embarrassment
15
16	As the Court provided no qualifying definition of the term
17	"embarrassment," it follows the word must be used in its common and usual
18	manner, $^{245}$ and that this common definition is what the Court intended to
19	determine whether a Court ruling could be made if it caused "embarrassment."
20 21 22	The only applicable definition of the word "embarrassment" is: "to hinder, impede, cause difficulties" or "to complicate, make more difficult." 246

 $<sup>^{245}</sup>$  See infra text accompanying note 551.  $^{246}$  WEBSTER'S NEW TWENTIETH CENTURY DICTIONARY, UNABRIDGED,  $2^{\rm nd}$  ed. (1983).

Thus, if a ruling made by the Court would "hinder, impede, cause

2 difficulties, complicate or make more difficult" a political goal of Congress,

3 then the Court cannot rule because such an impediment constitutes a political

4 question. Clearly, if one accepts this definition, every action of Congress is

5 immune from judicial review because the very act of the review impedes or make

6 more difficult achieving a political goal. Obviously, if the Court rules an

7 action of Congress is unconstitutional and thus prevents Congress from so

8 acting, this can certainly be defined as an impediment. But by the Court's own

9 ruling, it cannot so rule because doing so creates the impediment.

10

11

12

13

14

15

16

17

18 19 20 21

22

23

24

25

Ts there a resolution to this issue, or has the Court created a monstrous paradox? Has it given Congress, under the doctrine of political question, a perfect immunity because any Court ruling acts as an impediment and thus is an embarrassment to Congress? Such an interpretation creates a runaway Congress, and it was clearly not the intent of the Founders to permit this occurrence. Certainly the argument that the embarrassment clause of the political question doctrine is Court-created and thus its discretion lies entirely with the Court, is ineffective. There is nothing that says Congress could not adopt a similar stance either by declared legislative fiat, law or simple resolution granting it total discretion in such matters. Certainly if Congress can argue that it has ultimate power of control over the states and the people in their constitutional power and right to have a convention, Congress can equally argue the same premise exists over controlling Court doctrine.

What then is the answer? Logically there can only be one: that this particular clause of the political question doctrine is without merit. Its

- 1 instigation creates an obvious conflict with the intent of the Constitution
- 2 and entirely scraps the separation of powers allowing Congress unlimited
- 3 control of every aspect of all branches of government. Simply stated, the
- 4 clause is unconstitutional and void.
- 5 The only other definition of embarrassment is "to cause to feel self-
- 6 conscious; confused and ill at ease; disconcert; fluster."247 If this is the
- 7 Court's definition, any embarrassment resides with Congress in vetoing the
- 8 Constitution and thus embarrassing the Nation as well as itself. To compel
- 9 Congress to call a convention to propose amendments when it is
- 10 constitutionally mandated to do so is merely compelling Congress to do its
- 11 duty, nothing more.
- 12 This fact alone frees the Court from any conflict regarding the rest of
- 13 the "embarrassment" clause: "multifarious pronouncements by various
- 14 departments on one question." The members of Congress have all taken an oath
- 15 to support the Constitution—all of the Constitution. 248 The oath does not say
- 16 "to support the Constitution except where it is politically inexpedient or I
- 17 disagree with it." Simply said, Congress has "pronounced" by its laches in not
- 18 calling a convention to propose amendments that it has the power to ignore the
- 19 Constitution. It is not a "multifarious" pronouncement by the Court to make
- 20 the only legal pronouncement: that Congress is bound to obey all the
- 21 Constitution and cannot veto it at its discretion.

-

&lt;sup>247</sup> Id.

 $<sup>^{248}</sup>$  "The Senators and Representatives before mentioned,… shall be bound by Oath or Affirmation, to support this constitution…" U.S. CONST., art. VI, § 3.

2

3 The Speech and Debate Clause-A Protection, not an Immunity

4

5

6 While not specifically mentioned by the Court in the political question

- 7 doctrine, Congress has nevertheless, on occasion, attempted to use the Speech
- 8 and Debate Clause 249 as the basis to exclude judicial review of congressional
- 9 action. 250 While legitimate in many circumstances, the provisions of Article V

&quot;The Senators and Representatives shall receive a Compensation for their services, to be ascertained by Law, and paid out of the Treasury of the United States. They shall in all Cases, except Treason, felony and Breach of the Peace, be privileged from Arrest during their Attendance at the Session of their respective Houses, and in going to and returning from the same; and for any Speech or Debate in either House, they shall not be questioned in any other Place." U.S. CONST., art. I, §6, §§ 1.

other Place." U.S. CONST., art. I, §6, §§ 1.

250 "Respondents assert that the Speech or Debate Clause of the Constitution, Art. I, 6, is an absolute bar to petitioners' action. This Court has on four prior occasions- Dombrowski v. Eastland, 387 U.S. 82 (1967); United States v.
Johnson, 383 U.S. 169 (1966); Tenney v. Brandhove, 341 U.S. 367 (1951); and Kilbourn v. Thompson, 103 U.S. 168 (1881)- been called upon to determine if allegedly unconstitutional action taken by legislators or legislative employees is insulated from judicial review by the Speech or Debate Clause."
Powell v. McCormack, 395 U.S. 486 (1969).

Other cases involving the Speech and Debate Clause have included Williamson v. United States, 207 U.S. 425 (1908) where the Court interpreted the phrase "treason, felony or breach of the peace" to exclude all criminal offenses from the privilege's coverage; Gravel v. United States, 408 U.S. 606 (1972) which held that the constitutional immunity of members of Congress from grand jury questioning extended to their aides if the conduct in question would be a protected legislative act, if performed by the member; Doe v. McMillen, 412 U.S. 306 (1973) where the Court held members of Congress were immune from invasion of privacy actions if conducting legitimate legislative activities; Eastland v. United States Servicemen's Fund, 421 U.S. 491 (1975) where the Court found Congress immune from claimed violations of the First Amendment; Hutchinson v. Proxmire, 443 U.S. 111 (1979) where the Court held that the speech or debate clause did not immunize a member of Congress from libel suits for allegedly defamatory states he made about a person in press releases and newsletters, even though the statements had originally been made on the Senate floor; and United States v. Brewster, 408 U.S. 501 (1972) where the Court found that illegal criminal acts such as bribery were not protected by the speech and debate clause.

1 make such exemption for Congress in this instance impossible. The convention

2 call is an obligatory, non-discretionary imperative on Congress on which the

3 Founders intended that "the national rulers shall have no option." 251 This

4 unequivocal language clearly demonstrates the Founding Fathers were neither

5 interested nor concerned with analysis of legislative motivation either of 6 Congress or its individual members regarding a convention call. Because the 7 convention call demanded by the Constitution is obligatory, neither debate nor

8 vote is permitted under the terms of the Constitution. Congress must call.

9 Congress is no more permitted "[t]he freedom of deliberation, speech and 10 debate,"252 under the terms of Article V, thus allowing it to question the 11 motivation of the states in applying for a convention in response to the 12 people requesting them to do so, than it is permitted to veto any other

13 provision of the Constitution. Consequently, the speech and debate clause is not applicable as an immunity for Congress because constitutionally Congress is prohibited from debating the issue. The immunity in this instance is nullified by the intent of the Framers which is to have Congress call a convention on the specific action by the state legislatures, not stop it.

18 As such, if Congress, either by laches or deliberate act, refuses to 19 call a convention to propose amendments, such action cannot be said to be 14

15

16

17

&lt;sup>251</sup> See infra text accompanying notes 506.

The New Hampshire Constitution of 1784 provided: 'The freedom of deliberation, speech, and debate, in either house of the legislature, is so essential to the rights of the people, that it cannot be the foundation of any action, complaint, or prosecution, in any court or place whatsoever,' Part I, Art. XXX." Tenney v. Brandhove, 341 U.S. 367 (1951).

- 1 "acting in the sphere of legitimate legislative activity" 253 "in pursuance" 254
- 2 of the Constitution. 255 The Court has made it clear the intent of the speech
- 3 and debate clause is to allow members of Congress to accomplish such
- 4 legitimate legislative activities free from outside pressure and
- 5 distraction.<sup>256</sup> It is not intended to extend illegitimate legislative power.<sup>257</sup>

"Both parties insist that their respective positions find support in these cases [Dombrowski, Johnson, Tenney and Kilbourn] and tender for decision... whether respondents in participating in the exclusion of petitioner Powell were 'acting in the sphere of legitimate legislative activity,' Tenney v. Brandhove, supra, at 376." Powell v. McCormack, 395 U.S. 486 (1969).

254 "This Constitution, and the Laws of the United States which shall be made in Pursuance thereof;... shall be the supreme Law of the Land..." U.S. CONST., art. VI, § 2.

art. VI, § 2.

255 While a multitude of grandiose words have been layered by many as to the purpose and intent of the Constitution, the fundamental fact is it was created by the Founders as an attempt to prevent governmental abuses of power entrusted to it by those whom it ruled. Hence, any action made "in pursuance" of the Constitution must be in conformance with the implied intent and expressed language of the Founders. To hold otherwise renders the entire document meaningless. Simply put, if the Founders intended that Congress (the national rulers) shall call a convention on the application of two-thirds of the state legislatures and that "[they] shall no option," any action contrary to this is not in pursuant of the Constitution and thus is unconstitutional.

256 "The immunities of the Speech or Debate Clause were not written into the Constitution simply for the personal or private benefit of Members of Congress, but to protect the integrity of the legislative process by insuring the independence of individual legislators." United States v. Brewster, 408 U.S. 501 (1972).

In an earlier decision, the Court elaborated on the clause saying:
 "The reason for the privilege is clear. It was well summarized by James Wilson, an influential member of the Committee of Detail which was responsible for the provision in the Federal Constitution. 'In order to enable and encourage a representative of the public to discharge his public trust with firmness and success, it is indispensably necessary, that he should enjoy the fullest liberty of speech, and that he should be protected for the resentment of every one, however powerful, to whom the exercise of that liberty may occasion offence.' II Works of James Wilson (Andrews ed. 1896) ...

"The provision in the United States Constitution was a reflection of political principles already firmly established in the States. Three State Constitutions adopted before the Federal Constitution specifically protected the privilege. The Maryland Declaration of Rights, Nov. 3, 1776, provided 'That freedom of Speech, and debates or proceedings, in the legislature, ought not to be impeached in any other court or judicature.' Art. VIII. The Massachusetts Constitution of 1780 provided: 'The freedom of deliberation, speech and debate, in either house of the legislature, is so essential to the rights of the people, that it cannot be the foundation of any accusation or prosecution, action, or complaint, in any other court or place whatsoever.'

(Footnote Continued Next Page)

- 1 How does the Court determine whether Congress is "acting outside its
- 2 legislative role?" The answer is plain. Legitimate legislative powers that can
- 3 be made in pursuance with the Constitution are itemized in that document. In
- 4 other words, the Founding Fathers spelled out in expressed written language
- 5 what was and was not a legitimate legislative power of Congress. Thus, if
- 6 Congress acts in manner contrary to the expressed power, it is not acting in
- 7 pursuance of the Constitution, and hence there is no Speech and Debate Clause
- 8 immunity. As the laches of Congress in refusing to call the convention is not
- 9 expressly prescribed in the Constitution, is in obvious conflict with the
- 10 clear intent of the Founders, and is an action contrary to the expressed

Part The First, Art. XXI. Chief Justice Parsons gave the following glass to this provision in Coffin v. Coffin, 4 Mass. 1, 27 (1808):

"'These privileges are thus secured, not with the intention of protecting the members against prosecutions for their own benefit, but to support the rights of the people, by enabling their representatives to execute the functions of their office without fear of prosecutions, civil or criminal. I therefor think that the article ought not to be construed strictly, but liberally, that the full design of it may be answered. I will not confine it to delivering an opinion, uttering a speech, or haranguing in debate, but will extend it to the giving of a vote, to the making of a written report, and to every other act resulting from the nature, and in the execution of the office; and I would define the article as securing to every member exemption from prosecution, for every thing said or done by him, as a representative, in the exercise of the functions of that office, with out inquiring whether the exercise was regular according to the rules of the house, or irregular and against their rules.'" Tenney v. Brandhove, 341 U.S. 367 (1951).

"We come then to the question whether from the pleadings its appears that the defendants were acting in the sphere of legitimate legislative activity. Legislatures may not of course acquire power by an unwarranted extension of privilege. The House of Commons' claim of power to establish the limits of its privilege has been little more than a pretense since Ashby v. White, 2 Ld. Raym. 938, 3 id. 320. This Court has not hesitated to sustain the rights of the private individuals when it found Congress was acting outside its legislative role. Kilbourn v. Thompson, 103 U.S. 168; Marshall v. Gordon, 243 US. 521; compare McGrain v. Daugherty, 273 U.S. 135, 176." Tenney v. Brandhove, 341 U.S. 367 (1951).

1	language, it follows Congress cannot claim Speech and Debate immunity because
2	it is not acting in pursuance of the Constitution. 258
3	This fact also precludes Congress from claiming immunity from the single
4	action sought by this suit. The suit is unique compared to previous suits
5	involving the Speech and Debate Clause. It does seek to question the
6	motivations of Congress as to why it has not followed the Constitution, beyond
7	establishing its desire to function as a tyranny. Neither criminal action nor
8	any form of civil redress is sought against any member of Congress as a
9	consequence of his desire to function as a tyrant. The single action sought by
10	this suit is to compel Congress to obey an obligatory constitutional mandate,
11	thus no longer allowing it to be a tyranny. The Court has never indicated in
12	any of the rulings dealing with Speech and Debate that it may be used to
13	thwart the clear intent and language of the Constitution. But if it does now,
14	it is Congress that will blaze this new constitutional territory, not the
15	plaintiff. Thus, there is no violation of the Speech and Debate Clause
16	immunity by the plaintiff in this action.
17
18
19	Summation Of Judiciable Arguments

20

&lt;sup>258</sup> If the Speech and Debate Clause immunity extended to acts of Congress not in pursuance of the Constitution, as well as those made in pursuance, the combination would present an absolute immunity to any review of congressional action under any circumstances. As such, the Court would have to abdicate its power of judicial review as this power is based on the premise of the Court voiding those acts of Congress not made in pursuance of the Constitution as unconstitutional.

- 2 In most Supreme Court suits concerning Article V, the issue before the
- 3 Court involved a specific proposed amendment originating in Congress using its
- 4 proposal authority under Article V. The constitutional issue raised before the
- 5 Court involved questions of procedure addressing either how the amendment was
- 6 proposed in Congress, or how that amendment was ratified and whether those
- 7 procedures were constitutional. 259 In many cases, the Court determined the
- 8 issue was a political question that properly belonged in the hands of the
- 9 national legislature or the political arena, citing the lack of criteria for
- 10 judicial determination because, as Chief Justice Hughes said:
- 11 "[N]one are to be found in Constitution or statute." 260
- 12 However, this lack of judicial criteria is not true regarding the
- 13 convention to propose amendments. Here the language of the Constitution is
- 14 clear and compelling. 261 Equally compelling is the history of the intent of the

<sup>259</sup> Hollingsworth v. Virginia 3 U.S. 378 (1798); National Prohibition Cases, 253 U.S. 350 (1920); Leser v. Garnett, 258 U.S. 130 (1922); Dillon v. Gloss, 256 U.S. 368 (1921); Coleman v. Miller, 307 U.S. 433 (1939).
260 Coleman v. Miller, 307 U.S. 433 at 453 (1939).

&quot;The United States asserts that article 5 is clear in statement and in meaning, contains no ambiguity, and calls for no resort to rules of construction. A mere reading demonstrates that this true. It provides two methods for proposing amendments. Congress may propose them by a vote of two-thirds of both houses; or, on the application of the legislatures of two-thirds of the States, must call a convention to propose them. Amendments proposed in either way become a part of the Constitution, 'when ratified by the Legislatures of three-fourths of the several States or by Conventions in three-fourths thereof, as the one or the other Mode of Ratification may be proposed by the Congress...'" United States v. Sprague, 282 U.S. 716 (1931). (emphasis added).

The matter does not rest here. Even when Congress' unconstitutional conditions have been met, Congress has refused to call a convention. See infratext

TABLE 6-SAME SUBJECT APPLICATIONS, PART I, p.681;

TABLE 6-SAME SUBJECT APPLICATIONS, PART II, p.682;

TABLE 9-SAME SUBJECT APPLICATIONS INCLUDING CAPLAN, PART I, p.689;

TABLE 9-SAME SUBJECT APPLICATIONS INCLUDING CAPLAN, PART II, p.690.

- 1 Founding Fathers regarding the calling of a convention to propose amendments.
- 2 Those opposed to calling a convention mandated by Article V of the United
- 3 States Constitution 262 base their position on gross misinterpretations of that
- 4 article. 263 Were such faulty interpretations adopted by the Court, they would
- 5 result in such constitutional chaos as to destroy the entire instrument. Only
- 6 with a strict interpretation of the clear meaning of the words laid down by
- 7 the Founding Fathers as those Founders specifically intended them to mean, can
- 8 these dangers be avoided. The fact that most opposition to a convention is
- 9 based, not on constitutional principles, but on thinly veiled opposition to a
- 10 particular political amendment is no grounds on which to thwart the
- 11 Constitution. 264 As the Supreme Court observed:
- 12 "Constitutional principles cannot be allowed to yield simply because of 13 disagreement with them"  $^{265}$
- 14 A scrutiny of the history of the Constitutional Convention of 1787
- 15 leaves no doubt as to the unequivocal intention of the Founding Fathers to

 $<sup>^{262}</sup>$  U.S. CONST., art. V; see supra text accompanying note 2.

&lt;sup>263</sup> See infra text accompanying notes 418,419,547.

The proof of this statement lies in an objective reading of almost all texts written on the convention within the last several years. Contained in each one was the admission that a balanced budget amendment might trigger a convention, and this was the purpose for writing the book. It is interesting to note none of the authors bothered to discuss the convention absent a specific political agenda that a particular amendment proposal generates.

See generally, UNFOUNDED FEARS: MYTHS AND REALITIES OF A CONSTITUIONAL CONVENTION (1989), (P. Weber & B. Perry); Bond & Engdahl, THE CONSTITUTIONAL CONVENTION, The Duties and Powers of Congress Regarding Conventions For Proposing Amendments, Nat'l. Legal Center for the Public Interest, (1987) Caplan, Constitutional Brinksmanship: Amending the Constitution by National Convention, (1988); Kern, A Constitutional Convention Would Threaten the Rights We Have Cherished for 200 Years, 4 Det. C.L. Rev. 1087, 1089-90 (1986); Rackoff, "The Monster Approaching the Capital": The effort to Write Economic Policy into the United States Constitution, 15 AKRON L. REV. 733, 745 (1982); Tribe, Issues Raised by Requesting Congress to call a Constitutional Convention to Propose a Balanced Budget Amendment, 10 Pac LJ 638-50 (1979).

- 1 compel a convention to be held in spite of congressional opposition when the
- 2 states apply for one. The record of the states' application for a convention
- 3 to propose amendments<sup>266</sup> make it undeniable of the intent of the states and the
- 4 people hold a convention. The post-1787 Convention record lays bare the stark
- 5 lack of national legislative options and the unconstitutionality of Congress'
- 6 laches to call a convention. 267
- 7 The constitutionally mandated congressional call for a convention to
- 8 propose amendments cannot be considered a political question left to the
- 9 discretion of Congress as this would defeat the very intent of the convention
- 10 alternative for amending the Constitution established by the Founding
- 11 Fathers, 268 that of removing any congressional obstacles toward amending the
- 12 Constitution by this alternative means. As noted in 1788 by Alexander
- 13 Hamilton:
- 14 "Nothing in this particular [is left]...to the discretion of that
- 15 body." 269

&lt;sup>266</sup> See infra,

TABLE 1-STATE APPLICATIONS FOR A CONVENTION, p.661;

TABLE 2-STATES APPLYING FOR A CONVENTION, p.673.

Indeed, as Congress has never passed any legislation regarding the convention to propose amendments, then the sole standard that can be considered is whether the states have satisfied the single requirement specified by the Constitution, that two-thirds of their number have applied for a convention. The prima-facie evidence is clear. Over two-thirds of the states have applied for a convention. See infra,

TABLE 2-STATES APPLYING FOR A CONVENTION, p.673.

&lt;sup>268</sup> See infra text accompanying notes 436-437.
<sup>269</sup> THE FEDERALIST No. 85 (A. Hamilton) (May 28, 1788). See infra text accompanying notes 506,507,513. The Supreme Court has made it clear it is entirely proper to rely on the Federalist Papers as a source to define the intent and meaning of the Constitution. The Court said:

&quot;The members of the Federalists are entitled to weight in any discussion as to the true intent and meaning of the provisions of the fundamental law of the United States." Wheeling, P.& C. Transport Co. v. City of Wheeling, 99 U.S. 273 (1878). (emphasis added).

1 This constitutional mandate on Congress serves as a major check of

2 excessive federal power in our Constitution. Indeed, as observed by a member

3 of the 1787 Convention, without a convention provision in place:

5

6

"By this Article Congress [would] only have the Power of proposing Amendments at any future time to this constitution, & shou'd it prove ever so oppressive, the whole people of America can't make, or even propose Alterations to it; [it would be] a Doctrine utterly subversive of the 8 fundamental Principles of the Rights & Liberties of the people[.]"270

9 Thus, the issue of calling a convention to propose amendments is raised

10 above the level of mere politics concerning a specific amendment proposal.

11 Instead it focuses on the right of the people, through the states, to exercise

12 the right to alter or abolish their government by proposing amendments to the 13 Constitution via convention as specified in Article V. It focuses also on 14 Congress' veto by laches of a specific provision of the Constitution. In doing

15 so, Congress has exceeded the authority granted it by the Constitution and has denied a specific, recognized right of the people. 271 The intent of the 17 Founding Fathers is clear. Under no circumstances can Congress stand in the 18 way of the states amending the Constitution, either in proposal or

19 ratification, as Article V mandates Congress must act so as to allow the 20 states to proceed on the matter. On the other hand, the states possess the 21 power, either through amendment proposal or refusal to ratify a

 $<sup>^{270}</sup>$  Colonel Mason, 1787 Constitutional Convention delegate. See infra text accompanying note 435.  $^{271}$  "The people limit and restrain the power of the legislature, acting under a

The people limit and restrain the power of the legislature, acting under a delegated authority, but they impose no restraint on themselves. They could have said by an amendment to the constitution, that no judicial authority should be exercised, in any case, under the United States, and, if they had said so, could a court be held, or a judge proceed, or any judicial business, past or future, from the moment of adopting the amendment? On general ground, then, it was in the power of the people to annihilate the whole..."
Hollingsworth v. Virginia, 3 U.S. 378 (1798).

- 1 congressionally proposed amendment, to stop any congressional attempt to alter
- 2 the Constitution.
- 3 The Supreme Court has ruled only a few times on Article V issues, and in
- 4 these rulings it has stated under what circumstances Congress must call a
- 5 convention. 272 It has never directly ruled on any question surrounding a

The Supreme Court has never directly ruled on convention issues. Thus, any comments by the Court have been in the context of describing the amendatory process rather than actually ruling on the convention to propose amendments as a specific matter of the case. However the consistency of these descriptions, together with their detail, cannot be ignored, especially when one considers that the usual political bent of judges attributed to specific authors in the Court are entirely absent in this case. In short, it makes no difference whether the judge is liberal, conservative, of this century or the last, the answers are always the same. While the Court has described the matter succinctly, there have been some rulings that at first glance appear not to favor this suit. However, a closer examination reveals this not to be true. See infra text accompanying note 1034.

The Court said:

"The framers of the Constitution realized that it might in the progress of time and the development of new conditions, require changes, and they intended to provide an orderly manner in which these could be accomplished; to that end they adopted the fifth article.

"This article makes provision for the proposal of amendments either by two-thirds of both houses of Congress, or on application of the Legislatures of two-thirds of the states; thus securing deliberation and consideration before any change can be proposed. The proposed change can only become effective by the ratification of the Legislatures of three-fourths of the states or by convention in like number of states. The method of ratification is left to the choice of Congress. Both methods of ratification, by Legislatures or convention, call for action by deliberative assemblages representative of the people, which it was assumed would voice the will of the people." Hawke v. Smith, 253 U.S. 716 (1920)(emphasis added).

In Dillon v. Gloss, 256 U.S. 368 (1921) the Court was very explicit in its description of the convention and the obligation of Congress to call it. The Court said:

"A further mode of proposal—as yet never invoked—is provided, which is, that on the application of two-thirds of the states Congress shall call convention for the purpose." (emphasis added).

The Court was even more explicit regarding the convention to propose amendments in a later case. See supra text accompanying note 261, infra text accompanying note 1034.

While Hawke did not properly describe the obligation of Congress to call a convention on the application of the state legislatures, it nevertheless did establish an important principle. Hawke recognized the Founding Fathers had established an amendatory procedure that required "deliberative assemblages," i.e., ... "voice [of] the will of the people..." in order for the Constitution to be amended. As the Court made no distinction between a proposing convention and a ratifying one, it is clear a convention to propose amendments must also

(Footnote Continued Next Page)

- 1 convention to propose amendments: e.g., its limits and powers as defined by
- 2 the Constitution, Congress' power over the convention (if any), and its
- 3 relationship to the states. These questions can only be answered by a clear
- 4 understanding of the meaning and intent of Article V and a specific ruling
- 5 defining them.
- 6 Some of this definition has already been done by the Court. 273 The Court
- 7 has ruled that the two-thirds requirement for adoption of a proposed
- 8 constitutional amendment in Congress applies to two-thirds of those members
- 9 present and voting and not to two-thirds of the entire membership of
- 10 Congress. 274 Thus the Court defined the meaning of the word "two-thirds" as it
- 11 applies to Article V. It is significant the Court did not define the word
- 12 "two-thirds" as meaning anything else than a numeric total of members of
- 13 Congress involved in the process. Nor did the Court attach any significance
- 14 whatsoever to the subject of the specific amendment being discussed by members
- 15 of Congress. Instead it established a general, all-encompassing rule
- 16 applicable to all circumstances regarding a vote by members of Congress to
- 17 propose an amendment to the Constitution.
- 18 In so defining these words (two-thirds) the Court established a
- 19 precedent: that it possesses definition jurisdiction of the words used in
- 20 Article V and the intent of their meaning. Thus, it is able to define other be composed of "deliberative assemblages of representative[s] of the people" in order to "voice the will of the people..."

 $<sup>^{273}</sup>$  State of Rhode Island v. Palmer, 253 U.S. 350 (1920). See also Missouri Pacific Railway v. Kansas, 248 U.S. 276 (1919).  $^{274}\ \text{Td}$

- words contained in Article V of the Constitution where confusion, politically 1
- motivated or otherwise, exists as to their intent and meaning. 2
- Further, the Supreme Court held in two suits<sup>275</sup> that when states act to 3
- ratify a proposed amendment, their actions are "a federal function, derived 4
- from the Federal Constitution..."  $^{276}$  Thus, the courts recognized the states' 5
- 6 participation in the amendatory process as federal in nature.
- 7 The Court observed:
- 8 "While the power of a state Legislature to legislate in the enactment of
- 9 laws for the state is derived from the people of the state, the power to
- 10 ratify a proposed amendment to the federal Constitution has its source in such
- Constitution."<sup>277</sup> 11
- 12 Thus, under this doctrine, to whatever extent constitutional authority
- 13 is granted to the states in this court-defined relationship of federal power,
- 14 it follows the states and thus the people they represent, to that extent,
- 15 become part of the federal government. Thus, the Court in this suit is simply
- 16 asked to address yet another constitutional conflict of delegation of federal
- 17 power between two branches of the federal government, Congress in its mandated
- role of calling a convention, and the states in their Court-defined federal 18
- 19 role as applicants for a convention to propose amendments to the Constitution.
- 20 The convention to propose amendments exists exclusively within the
- 21 Constitution, i.e., it is an exclusive creation in and of the federal
- 22 Constitution. As nothing in the Constitution provides otherwise, the
- 23 convention must be considered equal to the other governmental authorities
- 24 created in that document. That is to say, within its scope of delegated and

&lt;sup>275</sup> Hawke v. Smith, 253 U.S. 716 (1920); Leser v. Garnett, 258 U.S. 130 (1922).

&lt;sup>277</sup> Hawke v. Smith, 253 U.S. 221 (1920).

- designated powers, the convention is as valid and legitimate a branch of
- government as are the other three ordinary branches of government prescribed 2
- in the Constitution. Thus, it fulfills the first principle of limited 3
- 4 constitutional government: no branch of the government may ignore or exceed
- 5 the Constitution. 278
- 6 The laches of Congress in the face of the overwhelming number of
- applications by the states 279 clearly demonstrates Congress' de facto claim to 7
- 8 the authority to veto the Constitution and ignore its provisions. Under these
- 9 circumstances, it would be constitutional suicide for the Court to refer the
- 10 issue of calling a convention to propose amendments to Congress by terming it
- 11 a political issue, analogous to giving a key to the liquor cabinet to an
- alcoholic. The Framers were explicit in their constitutional language and 12
- 13 their interpretation of the meaning of those words:
- "Let us attend to the manner in which amendments are made. The 14
- proposition for amendments may arise from Congress itself, when two-thirds of 15
- 16 both house shall deem it necessary. If they should not, and yet amendments be
- 17 generally wished for by the people, two-thirds of the legislatures of the
- 18 different states may require a general convention for the purpose, in which case Congress are under the necessity of convening one." 280
- 19

 $<sup>^{278}</sup>$  "The government of the United States can claim no powers which are not granted to it by the Constitution." Martin v. Hunter's Lessee, 14 U.S. 304; "[The] court may not construe Constitution so as to defeat its obvious ends when another construction equally accordant with the words and sense thereof, will enforce and protect them." Prigg v. Commonwealth of Pennsylvania, 41 (16 Pet.) U.S. 539 (1842); "In construing Federal Constitution, Congress must be held to have only those powers which are granted expressly or by necessary implication." Chicago B&Q Railroad Co. v. Otoe County, 83 U.S. 667 (1872); "The government of the United States is one of limited powers and no department possesses any authority not granted by Constitution." Hepburn v. Griswold, 75 U.S. 603 (1869). See infra text accompanying note 548. <sup>279</sup> See infra text,

TABLE 1-STATE APPLICATIONS FOR A CONVENTION, p.661; TABLE 2-STATES APPLYING FOR A CONVENTION, p.673.

&lt;sup>280</sup> James Iredell, 4 ELLIOT'S DEBATES 177 (1937). See infra text accompanying note 518.

- 1 As the Founding Fathers provided no option to the calling of a
- 2 convention once the states had applied for one, and Congress has not acted on
- 3 these application as it is required to do, the question of congressional
- 4 laches in the face of constitutionally mandated action clearly falls to the
- 5 courts to adjudicate under the Constitution's Article III power allowing the
- 6 Court to decide "all cases...arising under this Constitution." 281 This is a
- 7 question of the Court applying a basic constitutional standard, i.e., the
- 8 expressed language of the document on an action by Congress, a practice, when $<sup>^{281}</sup>$  U.S. CONST., art. III, § 2 (1). See also Bell v. Hood, 327 U.S. 678 (1946); "Before deciding that there is no jurisdiction, the district court must look to the way the complaint is drawn to see if it is drawn so as to claim a right to recover under the Constitution and laws of the United States. For to that extent 'the party who brings a suit is master to decide what law he will rely upon and...does determine whether he will bring a "suit arising under" the (Constitution or laws) of the United States by his declaration or bill'" The Fair v. Kohler Die & Specialty Co., 228 U.S. 22, 25, 411" (Hood); "The reasons for this is that the court must assume jurisdiction to decide whether the allegations state a cause of action on which the court can grant relief as well as to determine issues of fact arising in the controversy." (Hood); "...it is well settled that the failure to state a proper cause of action calls for a judgment on the merits and not for a dismissal for want of jurisdiction."(Hood);"...the right of the petitioners to recover under their complaint will be sustained if the Constitution and laws of the United States are given one construction and will be defeated if they are given another. For this reason the district court has jurisdiction. Gully v. First National Bank, 299 U.S. 109, 112, 113, 97; Smith v. Kansas City Title & Trust Co., 255 U.S. 180, 199, 200, 244, 245." (Hood). Further, as neither Congress (see infra text accompanying notes 561-578), the President (Id.), nor the states(See Ware v. Hylton, 3 U.S. 199 (1796), McCulloch v. Maryland, 17 U.S. 316 (1819), Gibbons v. Ogden, 22 U.S. 1 (1824)) have the authority to define the federal constitutional issues surrounding a convention to propose amendments, the process, by simple elimination, must be left to the federal courts under their Article III power to "decide all cases...arising under this constitution..." (U.S. CONST., art. III, § 2).

While this suit has raised questions of standing that must be addressed, (see supra text accompanying notes 15-211) the issue is one of jurisdiction, not standing to sue. The constitutional language is clear. It is the job of the courts to define the document and no standing issue alters that fact.

- 1 such a standard clearly existed in the Constitution, the courts have not
- 2 hesitated to apply in the past. 282
- 3 While it is conceded the actual calling of the convention to propose
- 4 amendments (that is the issuing the call notifying the states of a convention)
- 5 is clearly a responsibility of Congress, 283 this fact by itself does not
- 6 exclude the judiciary from determining under what constitutional conditions
- 7 Congress must act, or from considering the constitutionality of congressional
- 8 laches when clear evidence exists that Congress has ignored the mandate of the
- 9 Constitution.
- 10 Certainly, the Court has no more authority than Congress to affect the
- 11 content of a convention to propose amendments. 284 But as equally certain, the
- 12 Court has the duty and obligation to interpret Article V and other parts of
- 13 the Constitution in regard to the context of a convention: 285 under what
- 14 circumstance Congress must fulfill its obligation, what a "call" consists of,
- 15 how limited congressional involvement shall be in the operation of a
- 16 convention, what powers and authorities the convention has, and to what extent
- 17 the rest of the provisions of the Constitution affect a convention to propose
- 18 amendments.

<sup>282</sup> Hawke v. Smith, 253 U.S. 221 (1920); Coleman v. Miller, 307 U.S. 433
(1939); Powell v. McCormack, 395 U.S. 486 (1969); U.S. Term Limits, Inc. v.
Thornton, 514 U.S. 779 (1994).

 $^{\rm 283}$  U.S. CONST., art V.

&lt;sup>284</sup> In re State Tonnage Tax Cases, 79 U.S. 204 (1870). See also Ullmann v. U.S.,350 U.S. 422 (1956). "Courts cannot add any new provisions to the constitution by construction." (Tonnage); "Nothing new can be put into the constitution except through the amendatory process, and nothing old can be taken out without the same process." (Ullmann).

<sup>285</sup> U.S. CONST., art III.

- It is duty of the Court to ensure that the full meaning and intent of
- 2 the Founding Fathers as expressed in the Constitution are faithfully observed
- 3 by both citizen and government. 286 If either shall transgress that
- 4 Constitution, either by laches or by deed, then the Court, where necessary,
- 5 must apply the full force of its office to force compliance with the
- 6 Constitution.

11

12 13

14

15

16

17

18 19 20

21

22

23

24 25

26 27

28

29 30

31

32 33

34 35

36

- 7 For above all, the Court is obligated to address and repair the excesses
- 8 of the national government as they may, from time to time, conflict with the
- 9 meaning and purpose of the Constitution, and it is obligated to find for the
- 10 Constitution in such conflict. As Chief Justice Marshall stated:
  - "It cannot be presumed that any clause in the constitution is intended to be without effect; and, therefore, such a construction is inadmissible, unless the words require it...
  - "It is emphatically the province and duty of the judicial department to say what the law is...
  - "[I]f a law be opposition to the constitution; if both the law and the constitution apply to a particular case, so that the court must either decide that case conformably to the law, disregarding the constitution; or conformably to the constitution, disregarding the law; the court must determine which of these conflicting rules governs the case. This is of the very essence of judicial duty...
  - "The distinction between a government with limited and unlimited powers is abolished, and if those limited do not confine the persons on whom they are imposed, and if acts prohibited and acts allowed, are of equal obligation. It is a proposition too plain to be contested, that the constitution controls any legislative act repugnant to it; or, that the legislature may alter the constitution by an ordinary act.
  - "Between these alternatives there is no middle ground. The constitution is either a superior, paramount law, unchangeable by ordinary means, or it is on a level with ordinary legislative acts, and, like other acts, is alterable when the legislature shall please to alter it...
  - "If then, the courts are to regard the constitution, and the constitution is superior to any ordinary act of the legislature, the constitution, and not such ordinary act, must govern the case to which they both apply."  $^{287}$
    - To rule the contrary, Chief Justice Marshall said:

 $<sup>^{286}</sup>$  Farmer's & Mechanics' Bank of Pa. v. Smith, 19 U.S. 131 (1821); "The constitution of the United States was made for the whole people of the union and is equally binding upon all the courts and all citizens."  $^{287}$  Marbury v. Madison, 5 U.S. 137 (1803).

"...would subvert the very foundation of all written constitutions. It would declare that an act which, according to the principles and theory of our government, is entirely void, is yet, in practice, completely obligatory. It would declare that if the legislature shall do what is expressly forbidden, such act, notwithstanding...is in reality effectual. It would be giving to the legislature a practical and real omnipotence with the same breath which professes to restrict their powers within narrow limits. It is prescribing limits, and declaring that those limits may be passed with pleasure." "...it thus reduces to nothing what we have deemed the greatest improvement on political institutions, a written constitution."288

9 10 If the issue before the Court were that Congress had called a convention 11 to propose amendments, the judiciary could not intercede to prevent it, 289 but 12 13 as the issue is congressional failure to call a convention when constitutionally mandated to do so, 290 the Court can and must intercede to take 14 15 such action as required to compel Congress to obey the Constitution. 16 Otherwise, Congress will be permitted a de facto veto of the Constitution 17 based on that body's arbitrary and capricious political discretion. It will establish a precedent allowing Congress, or any branch of the government, the 18 19 "privilege" to reject the Constitution any time and under any circumstances 20 where the obedience of such constitutional restrictions proves politically

21

1

5

6

7

8

unfavorable or desirable. Once this power of veto is handed to Congress, it $<sup>^{289}</sup>$  If "the national rulers...will have no option upon the subject..." this concept must include the Court as well as Congress. See infra text accompanying note 507.

The only requirement of the Constitution is that at least two-thirds of the several states apply for a convention. (See supra note 2). At least two-thirds of the states have done so. (See TABLE 2-STATES APPLYING FOR A CONVENTION, p.673). All applications have been filed with Congress which elected to place them in the Congressional Record. (See infra text accompanying note 1655). This filing constitutes the only action the Constitution requires the states to take, and Congress cannot add additional provisions to that standard. (See Powell v. McCormick, 395 U.S. 486 (1969)). As with ratification, the states having applied, it is conclusive upon Congress to call and conclusive upon the courts to enforce. (See Leser v. Garnett, 258 U.S. 130 (1922)).

TABLE 1-STATE APPLICATIONS FOR A CONVENTION, p.661;

- 1 remains only to political whim and expediency to speculate where next the
- 2 Congress will ignore the Constitution. The ultimate end of this trail of
- 3 judicial timidity would be the destruction of the entire constitutional
- 4 concept of limited, controlled government.
- 5 The Supreme Court spoke directly on the responsibility of government and
- 6 its officials to obey the Constitution when it said:

"No man in this country is so high that he is above the law. No officer of the law may set that law at defiance, with impunity. All the officers of the Government, from the highest to the lowest, are creatures of the law and are bound to obey it.

"It is the only supreme power in our system of government, and every man who, by accepting office, participates in its functions, is only the more strongly bound to submit to that supremacy, and to observe the limitations which it imposes upon the exercise of the authority which it gives." <sup>291</sup>

14 15

7 8

9

10

11

12

13

- 16 The court cannot permit the disassembly of a provision of the
- 17 Constitution by a branch of the government simply because that branch chooses
- 18 not obey it or relies on weak pre-conditions which essentially maintain a
- 19 convention to propose amendments would be clumsy, inefficient or unworkable.
- 20 But as the Supreme Court said, however cumbersome, inconvenient or
- 21 inefficient a provision might be:
- "[C]onvenience and efficiency are not the primary objectives--or the hallmarks--of democratic government..."
  - As Justice Burger concluded:

24252627

28

29

30

31

32

33

34

"The choices...made in the Constitutional Convention impose burden on governmental processes that often seem clumsy, inefficient, even unworkable, but those hard choice were consciously made by men who had lived under a form of government that permitted arbitrary governmental acts to go unchecked. There is no support in the Constitution or decisions of this Court for the proposition that the cumbersomeness and delays often encountered in complying with explicit Constitutional standards may be avoided, either by the Congress or by the President. With all the obvious flaws of delay, untidiness, and potential for abuse, we have not yet found a better way to preserve freedom

&lt;sup>291</sup> United States v. Lee, 106 U.S. 196 at 220 (1882).

 $<sup>^{292}</sup>$  Immigration and Naturalization Service v. Chadha, 462 U.S. 919 at 944 (1983).

- than by making the exercise of power subject to the carefully crafted restraints spelled out in the Constitution."<sup>293</sup>
- 3 The Court's obligation to the Constitution is unequivocal. It must
- 4 review Congress' laches of obeying a clear constitutional standard and
- 5 determine whether or not such laches is unconstitutional, and no issue of
- 6 political question may stand in the way of this overriding duty.
- 7 As the convention call is contained within the Constitution, the supreme
- 8 law of the land, it follows the Court is authorized to define the convention.
- 9 Consequently, the Court may define the powers and limits of Congress in this
- 10 regard. It does have the power to declare whether the current actions of
- 11 Congress regarding a convention call are constitutional. It does not have the
- 12 power, as such, to enforce such an decision. Ultimately Congress must decide
- 13 if it will obey the Court's order. 294

(Footnote Continued Next Page)

 $<sup>^{293}</sup>$  Id. at 959. (emphasis added).

The Founding Fathers realized the importance of a judiciary in maintaining the Constitution. Any politically motivated thought by Congress to overrule a Court so disposed to support the assertions of this suit that Congress is mandated to call a convention and has no discretion either in the call or in regulating the convention should, before acting on such thoughts, carefully consider the following words of the Founders:

&quot;Whoever attentively considers the different departments of power must perceive, that in a government in which they are separated from each other, the judiciary, from the nature of its functions, will always be the least dangerous to the political rights of the constitution; because it will be least in a capacity to annoy or injure them. The executive not only dispenses the honors, but holds the sword of the community. The legislature not only commands the purse, but prescribes the rules by which the duties and rights of every citizen are to be regulated. The judiciary on the contrary has not influence over either sword or the purse, no direction ether of the strength or of the wealth of the society, and can take no active resolution whatever. It may truly be said to have neither Force nor Will, but merely judgment; and must ultimately depend upon the aid of the executive arm even for the efficacy of its judgments.

&quot;This simple view of the matter suggests several important consequences. It proves incontestably that the judiciary is beyond comparison the weakest of the three departments of power; that it can never attack with success either of the other two; and that all possible care is requisite to enable it to defend itself against their attacks...

"The complete independence of the courts of justice is peculiarly essential in a limited constitution. By a limited constitution I understand one which contains certain specified exceptions to the legislative authority; such for instance as that it shall pass no bills of attainder, no ex post facto laws, and the like. Limitations of this kind can be can be preserved in practice no other way than through the medium of the courts of justice; whose duty it must be to declare all acts contrary to the manifest tenor of the constitution void. Without this, all the reservations of particular rights or privileges would amount to nothing.

"Some perplexity respecting the right of the courts to pronounce legislative acts void, because contrary to the constitution, has arisen from an imagination that the doctrine would imply a superiority of the judiciary to the legislative power. It is urged that the authority which can declare the actions of another void, must necessarily be superior to the one whose acts may be declared void. As this doctrine is of great importance in all the American constitutions, a brief discussion of the grounds on which it rests cannot be unacceptable.

"There is no position which depends on clearer principles, than that every act of a delegated authority, contrary to the tenor of the commission under which it is exercised, is void. No legislative act therefore contrary to the constitution can be valid. To deny this would be to affirm that the deputy is greater than his principal; that the servant is above his master; that the representatives of the people are superior to the people themselves; that men acting by virtue of powers may do not only what their powers do not authorize, but what they forbid.

"If it be said that the legislative body are themselves the constitutional judges of their own powers, and that the construction they put upon them is conclusive upon the other departments, it may be answered, that this cannot be the natural presumption, where it is not to be collected from any particular provisions in the constitution. It is not otherwise to be supposed that the constitution could intend to enable the representatives of the people to substitute their will to that of their constituents. It is far more rational to suppose that the courts were designed to be an intermediate body between the people and legislature, in order, among other things, to keep the latter within the limits assigned to their authority. The interpretation of the laws is the proper and peculiar province of the courts. A constitution is in fact, and must be, regarded by the judges as a fundamental law. It therefore belongs to them to ascertain its meaning as well as the meaning of any particular act proceeding from the legislative body. If there should happen to be an irreconcilable variance between the two, that which has the superior obligation and validity ought of course to be preferred; or in other words, the constitution ought to be preferred to the statute, the intention of the people to the intent of their agents.

"Nor does this conclusion by any means suppose a superiority of the judicial to the legislative powers. It only supposes that the power of the people is superior to both; and that where the will of the legislature declared in its statutes, stands in opposition to that of the people declared in the constitution, the judges ought to be governed by the latter, rather than the former. They ought to regulate their decisions by the fundamental laws, rather than by those which are not fundamental...

"[The] independence of the judges is equally requisite to guard the constitution and the rights of individuals from the effects of those ill humours which the arts of designing men, or the influence of particular conjunctures, sometimes disseminate among the people themselves, and which, though they speedily give place to better information and more deliberate reflection, have a tendency in the meantime to occasion dangerous innovations in the government, and serious oppressions of the minor party in the community..." THE FEDERALIST No. 78 (A. Hamilton) (May 28, 1788). (emphasis added).

(Footnote Continued Next Page)

1 2 3 4 5 CONSTITUTIONAL CONVENTION OR CONVENTION TO PROPOSE AMENDMENTS: WHAT'S THE 6 DIFFERENCE? 7

8 There is a difference between the phrase "constitutional convention," probably the most misused and misconstrued phrase in constitutional lexicon, 295 9

10 and "convention to propose amendments." In its strictest sense, a

11 constitutional convention is a convention that writes a constitution. But it

12 could also be a gathering intended to conduct any kind of business concerning a constitution. The term "constitutional convention" is overly general in 13

14 nature, meaning, and power, and thus its use runs counter to the limited

15 powers prescribed by the Founding Fathers in the Constitution.

 $<sup>^{295}</sup>$  In the first place, nowhere in the entire Constitution is the term "constitutional convention" found. Thus, the term "constitutional convention" is imprecise at best and at worst an outright lie. The reason for this is because, almost without exception, all those who use the term attach the automatic assumption that a "constitutional convention" has the power to write a new Constitution and without question will do so if convened.

This assumption ignores several points: a) the lack of political desire by anyone to write such a document; b) the political obstacles involved in writing such a document; c) the almost impossible task of overcoming ratification requirements; d) the fact the Constitution prohibits such a convention from occurring. See infra text accompanying notes 808-811.

- 1 Consequently, nowhere in the entire Constitution are the words
- 2 "constitutional convention" to be found. Instead, the Constitution refers to
- 3 "a convention to propose amendments." 296
- 4 A convention for proposing amendments, according to the language of
- 5 Article V, specifically refers to a convention gathered to propose amendments
- 6 to the United States Constitution. No other meaning, power or intent is
- 7 attached to this phrase. Thus, the term "convention to propose amendments" is
- 8 a strict interpretation of the Constitution and, as such, is of limited scope
- 9 and power. In this sense, therefore, it is a "same subject" convention: it
- 10 cannot consider, compose, pass out or even discuss a new constitution as it is
- 11 limited strictly to proposing amendments to the current Constitution. Whatever
- 12 amendments are proposed, the original document must remain intact. If the
- 13 convention were to do otherwise, such action clearly would be
- 14 unconstitutional.<sup>297</sup> Unlike the 1787 Constitutional Convention where Congress

(Footnote Continued Next Page)

&lt;sup>296</sup> See supra text accompanying note 2.

As such, either the Court or Congress could simply ignore the new Constitution proposal by either declaring it unconstitutional or refusing to send it on for ratification. It must be remembered that both bodies are commanded by the Constitution to act only "in pursuance of the Constitution" and thus have an obligation to "support the Constitution." Ignoring or otherwise failing to comply with all the words of Article V would not be supporting the Constitution.

&quot;Nothing new can be put into the constitution except through the amendatory process, and nothing old can be taken out without the same process." Ullmann v. U.S., 350 U.S. 422 (1956).

Thus a proposal to write a new constitution would itself be constitutional only if the existing Constitution were previously amended to permit such an act. Even here, however, the wisdom of the Founders would prevail. It would be a new convention most certainly composed of new members elected in the new political climate created by the amendment so described (that of the fact a new Constitution would become a reality) who would actually write the new document. Thus, whatever political fervor that launched the new constitution movement would stand a chance of political dilution if not outright destruction from those already in political power or who otherwise opposed a new constitution. Ultimately, such a new convention might see the wisdom of simply creating specific amendments to deal with the problem

- 1 gave the convention a carte blanche set of instructions to address the issues
- 2 facing the Confederation, 298 the Founding Fathers wisely did not include such a
- 3 sweeping power in the Constitution.
- 4 Therefore, like the rest of the powers of the Constitution, the
- 5 convention to propose amendments is a limited power of the states and the
- 6 people and is limited to specific, narrow purpose, just as Congress is limited
- 7 by Section 8 of Article I of the United States Constitution. The intent of the
- 8 Constitution is one of limited powers. 299 Unless it is authorized, a branch of
- 9 government cannot act, and this concept extends throughout all the provisions
- 10 of the Constitution, including the convention to propose amendments.
- 11 To those who insist the convention can ignore this fact and expand
- 12 beyond its prescribed constitutional limits, the case is simple: the
- 13 convention to propose amendments is no more dangerous to the Nation than what
- 14 the courts and Congress and President have already done, specifically ignoring
- 15 the strict limits imposed on them by constitutional language. If the people
- 16 fear a expanding runaway convention, how can they justify an runaway
- 17 government? If they accept a runaway government, then they must accept a
- 18 runaway convention as both government and convention are simply running away or problems and de facto or outright propose the repeal of the authorizing

&lt;sup>298</sup> See infra text accompanying note 1682.

&quot;The government of the United States can claim no powers which are not granted to it by the Constitution." Martin v. Hunter's Lessee, 14 U.S. 304 (1824); "In construing Federal Constitution, Congress must be held to have only those powers which are granted expressly or by necessary implication." Prigg v. Commonwealth of Pennsylvania, 41 U.S. 539 (1842).

- 1 from the same constitutional limits. If one runaway is considered politically
- 2 correct, then the other runaway is certainly so.
- 3 The issue is not the speed at which something runs, but that it runs at
- 4 all. The hypocrisy of those who condemn a convention for exceeding its powers,
- 5 yet stand by or in some cases labor to increase the power of the government
- 6 beyond that which was clearly intended by the Founders, requires no more
- 7 comment than to observe the obvious: that the convention, if so inclined to
- 8 expand its powers, is doing no more than the national government is doing
- 9 already. Hence, it is not "running away". It is merely catching up.
- 10 If the correct term is "convention to propose amendments," can it
- 11 successfully be argued that applications by states that apply for a
- 12 "constitutional convention" are either ineffective or cannot be counted toward
- 13 a convention to propose amendments? As most, if not all, applications from the
- 14 state legislature request a "constitutional convention" and none for a
- 15 "convention to propose amendments," it would appear, at first glance, not a
- 16 single application is proper.
- 17 There is a problem with this conclusion. In the first place, the intent
- 18 of the Founders was that the "national rulers... shall have no option" in the
- 19 calling of a convention. 300 Thus, no national body, i.e., Congress, was to have
- 20 any choice as to the calling of a convention if the states applied. Thus,
- 21 there is no national body empowered to refuse the states. In the second place,

_

<sup>300</sup> See infra text accompanying note 506.

- 1 the issue revolves around substance, not form. Thus, it is the intent of the
- 2 states and the people that matters here. 301
- 3 In this same regard, any reference by the plaintiff in his evidence
- 4 proving standing is not diluted by his use of the words "constitutional
- 5 convention." The reason the plaintiff chose to use the term "constitutional
- 6 convention" in his letters to the State of Washington 302 was simply because he
- 7 realized the misnomer is so pervasive that the plaintiff realized Washington
- 8 State officials might not comprehend what he referring to if he used the
- 9 correct term in his letters. After all this state doesn't even have law on its
- 10 books allowing the election of convention delegates regardless of whatever
- 11 term is used. 303
- 12 Also, the intent of the states negates any "same subject" argument that
- 13 might attach itself in an effort to use precise constitutional language. It is however, the way the state legislature chose to word the application is irrelevant. It is the intent of the states, however expressed, to hold a convention under the authority of Article V of the United States Convention that is paramount. Thus, whether the states refer to the convention as a "constitutional convention", "a convention to propose amendments", or just plain "convention," it is clear the applications wish to exercise the power and authority granted the states and people under Article V of the United States Constitution. For examples of application language demonstrating this intent, see generally, APPENDIX B---EXAMPLES OF VARIOUS APPLICATIONS FILED BY THE STATES FOR A CONVENTION, p.715.

There are other examples in the Constitution such as "right to bear arms" which everyone equates to meaning guns. The fact is, the term "arms" is broad based and encompasses knives, spears, nuclear bombs, in short, anything that is an "arm." Indeed, the ultimate demonstration of the intent of the states being paramount lies in the "implied powers" doctrine, a doctrine long recognized by the Court. All implied powers are based on the concept of the intent of the Founders rather than expressed words, as no implied power is "named" in the Constitution.

 $<sup>^{302}</sup>$  See generally APPENDIX A---EVIDENCE OF PERSONAL INJURY IN SUPPORT OF STANDING, p.697.  $^{303}\ \ \text{Td}$

- 1 true the precise language of Article V says "on the application" of the state
- 2 legislatures, Congress shall call a convention to propose amendments. Based on
- 3 the Founders' actual words, 304 however, there is no support for a "same
- 4 subject" convention as the motion creating this language 305 (and thus
- 5 expressing the intent of the Founders) was clearly a numerically based action,
- 6 and this action is absolutely independent of any particular amendment
- 7 proposal. In fact, it is a reasonable assumption that based on the fact the
- 8 trigger for a convention to propose amendments is numeric, that the Founders
- 9 by using the word "application" meant that a state only had to apply once for
- 10 a convention and thus, when two-thirds of the state legislatures had applied
- 11 once, 306 Congress was required to call a convention.
- 12 Article V does not say that a convention to propose amendments can only
- 13 address the topic for which it is called, and it does not require that a
- 14 convention be called on a particular topic at all. The convention, like
- 15 Congress, can propose whatever amendments it feels appropriate, regardless of
- 16 any state legislator's hopes, whether or not these hopes are expressed in the
- 17 language of the application. If it were "same subject", that intent would have
- 18 to be expressed where Article V reads "shall call a convention for proposing
- 19 amendments." The correct language would have to state "amendment" or, "shall

 $<sup>^{304}</sup>$  See infra text accompanying notes 506,507,513,514.

<sup>305</sup> See infra text accompanying notes 435-437.

 $<sup>^{306}</sup>$  This assumption is based on the fact that the Gerry amendment creating the convention requires a numeric total of states to effect a convention with no indication that any state was required to apply more than once for a convention. Id.

1 call a convention to propose an amendment expressing the consensus of the 2 applying states."<sup>307</sup>

3 If the word "application," being singular in lexicon, made any legal

4 difference, it would then have to mean a single application written by one

5 state, with all other states constitutionally mandated to ratify the amendment

6 proposal. 308 Ignoring the obvious problems of sovereignty that this would

7 create, the most difficult issue for "same subject" advocates would be to

8 decide which state of the Union would be empowered to write all amendment

9 proposals with the other 49 states unable to change a single comma once that state had written its proposal. Only when it is realized that "application"

11 simply is an intent expressed by the state legislature to hold a convention,

12 and thus all states and the people they represent are equal in their

13 expression and merely are adding their sovereign voices in a single chorus, does the solution present itself. Any attempt to dilute or change the mixture by a notion of "living document" merely serves to make the entire process

16 unworkable.

10

14

15

19

Any doubt that the Founders did not intend this as the meaning of the 18 word "application" is dispensed by the fact that from the very beginning 309

each state has properly claimed its right to submit as many applications as it

20 wished for a convention, and none contain any language seeking permission or

TABLE 1-STATE APPLICATIONS FOR A CONVENTION, p.661; APPENDIX B---EXAMPLES OF VARIOUS APPLICATIONS FILED BY THE STATES FOR A CONVENTION, p. 715.

<sup>307</sup> See infra text accompanying notes 669-692.

 $<sup>^{308}</sup>$  For a further discussion on the word "application" see infra text accompanying notes 1530-1537.

<sup>309</sup> See infra text

- 1 prior approval from any other state as to subject, language, intent or any
- 2 other aspect of the application.

1 CONSTITUTIONAL CONVENTION HISTORY 2 INTRODUCTION 3 4 Any interpretation of the meaning and intent of Article V must be based 5 6 on careful scrutiny of the Constitutional Convention of 1787. Indeed, as far as this constitutional provision, it is the only source of construction. There 7 has been no direct judicial or legislative action in this matter since that 8 time. The record of 1787 is therefore pristine and uncontaminated by 9 10 succeeding generations. The Framers' intent thus comes through loud and clear. The very essence of the Constitutional Convention of 1787 is embedded in 11 Article V. As the history of the Convention demonstrates, the main reason for 12 the Convention was the fact that the Articles of Confederation did not allow 13 14 for change (except by unanimous consent of the states, which proved to be almost impossible to achieve), 310 and thus the national government could not 15 16 cope with the nation's problems as they arose. The Framers saw to it the 17 Constitution did allow for change, and as a result it has remained a credible 18 blueprint describing a form of government that has remained viable for over 19 two hundred years.

for in Article V, to be altered in a peaceful, thoughtful and deliberate 21 22 fashion, is its heartbeat. This flexibility satisfies the most basic need of

If the Constitution is a living document, then its ability, as provided

310 See infra text accompanying note 335.

20

1 democratic government: the ability of that government to alter itself to meet

2 the changing needs of those governed.

3 Thus, any assault on Article V, by failing to follow its clear and plain

4 provisions, serves to strike at the very heart of the Constitution by removing

5 that most precious ability for peaceful change. This is a most dangerous

6 trail--for the country or its government--to follow. For if a government

7 cannot respond to the evolution of its people, then it most certainly will

8 fall to their revolution.

9

10 11

EVENTS LEADING UP TO THE CONVENTION OF 1787

12

13

20

21

14 In November, 1777, the Articles of Confederation and Perpetual Union,

15 drafted by John Dickinson with alterations by the Continental Congress, were 16 adopted.<sup>311</sup> Under the provisions of the articles, each state had one vote in

17 the national legislature, and nine of the thirteen states had to agree on such

18 matters as a declaration of war, treaties and the borrowing of money. 312 A

19 Committee of the States was provided in the Articles to act between sessions of Congress, exercising all powers except those requiring agreement by nine of the thirteen states. 313 While there was a federal system in the Articles of

 $<sup>^{311}</sup>$  S. Morison, H. Commager & Leuchtenburg, A CONCISE HISTORY OF THE AMERICAN REPUBLIC 107 (2d ed. 1983).  $^{312}\ Id.$

&lt;sup>313</sup> Id. at 107-08

Confederation, the system lacked actual federal power. 314 By 1786, it was clear to such national leaders as George Washington and John Adams that the union of 2 the states could not endure unless the Articles were extensively revised. 315 3 4 The thirteen states were suffering an economic depression that no single state 5 could handle alone, Great Britain had refused to negotiate with the Confederation because of the United States' impotence internationally, 316 and 6 Shay's Rebellion had demonstrated its impotence domestically. 317 7 8 The states had begun to quarrel over matters of commerce. The 9 Commonwealth of Virginia invited the states to send delegates to a convention 10 at Annapolis to "take into consideration the trade of the United States." $^{318}$ 11 The convention met in September 1786, but only five states sent delegates. 319 This number was too few to reach meaningful decisions, but under the 12 13 leadership of Alexander Hamilton, it adopted a report proposing that all thirteen states send delegates to a convention "to devise such further 14 provisions as shall appear to them necessary to render the constitution of the 15 federal government adequate to the exigencies of the Union."320 16 17 18 19 20 21

 $^{314}$  See Id. at 108.

<sup>317</sup> Id.

 $<sup>^{315}</sup>$  Id. at 114.

&lt;sup>316</sup> Id.

&lt;sup>318</sup> Id.

&lt;sup>319</sup> Id.

&lt;sup>320</sup> Id.

3

4 The Constitutional Convention was scheduled to begin May 14, 1787 in

- 5 Philadelphia, but a majority of states did not arrive until May 25. 321 In all,
- 6 twelve states sent a total fifty-five delegates to the Convention with Rhode
- 7 Island the single exception. 322 After the Convention elected George Washington
- 8 as presiding officer and appointed a rules committee, 323 its real work began.
- 9 On May 29, as a starting point for discussion, Governor Edmund Randolph of the
- 10 Commonwealth of Virginia submitted a set of resolutions generally outlining
- 11 the principles on which the Virginia delegation believed the new government
- 12 should be based. 324 This set of fifteen resolutions is known as the Virginia
- 13 Plan. 325
- 14 The Virginia Plan, which was generally supported by the large states,
- 15 contained the basic framework of the Constitution as finally adopted, 326
- 16 including provisions for a national legislature of two branches with members
- 17 of both houses apportioned according to population, a national executive, and
- 18 a national judiciary. 327 Resistance by the smaller states to the Virginia Plan

&lt;sup>321</sup> 1 FARRAND, supra note 2 at 1. (Reference to the date of the entry and author is supplied parenthetically. As the convention was held entirely in 1787, the listed date does not include a year. Where the date is not given in a listing of several sources, reference is implicitly made to the immediately preceding date.

 $<sup>^{322}</sup>$  Id.

 $<sup>^{323}</sup>$  1 FARRAND, supra note 2, at 2 (Journal---May 25).

&lt;sup>324</sup> Id. at 16 (Journal-May 29), 20 (Madison), 23 (Yates), 27 (McHenry), 27 (Patterson).

 $<sup>^{325}</sup>$  Id. at 20-22 (Madison-May 29); 3 Id. at 593.

&lt;sup>326</sup> See generally S Morison, H. Commager & W. Leuchtenburg, A CONCISE HISTORY OF THE AMERICAN REPUBLIC 115 (2d ed. 1983).

327</sup> See generally Id.

1		7 ~ ~	1	7.T	T					7	11-	- 1		- 1	existing
1	was	160	r)v/	$M \hookrightarrow W$	Jersev	וזיאווועע	OTTERED	118	()(\/\/\	nian	lardell	nasen	()rı	1 [10	existing

- Articles of Confederation. 328 The two groups deadlocked on the issue of the 2
- representation of the states in the national legislature. 329 In July, the 3
- deadlock was broken by a suggestion from Connecticut that one house of the 4
- national legislature be apportioned according to population, and the other 5
- house, the Senate, provide an equal vote for each state. 330 This has come to be 6
- 7 known as the "Great Compromise" so often referred to in histories of the
- 8 Constitution. The importance of this compromise is demonstrated by the last
- clause in Article V, which provides "that no State, without its Consent, shall
- 10 be deprived of its equal Suffrage in the Senate."331 This clause of Article V
- 11 seeks to ensure that the results of the "Great Compromise" remain intact and
- 12 undisturbed.

13

14

INTRODUCTION TO THE AMENDATORY PROVISION 15

16

20

17 One subject of discussion and concern at the Constitutional Convention was the matter of future amendments to the Constitution. One commentator has 18 19 noted that "[t]he idea of amending the organic instrument of a state is peculiarly American."332 But it was not a new concept for the delegates to the

<sup>328</sup> See generally Id. at 115-16.

&lt;sup>329</sup> See generally Id. at 116.

<sup>330</sup> See generally Id.

&lt;sup>331</sup> U.S. CONST., art. V.

 $<sup>^{332}</sup>$  Voegler, Amending the Constitution by the Article V Convention Method, 55 N.D.L. Rev. 355, 359 (1979) [Hereinafter Voegler] (quoting L. Orfield, THE AMENDING OF THE FEDERAL CONST.ITUTION 1 (1942)).

- 1 Constitutional Convention. Several of the state constitutions included
- 2 amendment procedures.<sup>333</sup> Even the Articles of Confederation had its amendment
- 3 provision in paragraph XIII, which required proposals to be agreed to in
- 4 Congress and ratified by all the states:

"And the Articles of this confederation shall be inviolably observed by every state, and the union shall be perpetual; nor shall any alteration at any time hereafter be made in any of them; unless such alterations be agreed to in a Congress of the united states, and be afterwards confirmed by the legislatures of every state."  $^{334}$

9 10

5

6

7

8

- 11 According to convention delegate Charles Pinckney of South Carolina,
- 12 "[I]t is to this unanimous consent, the depressed situation of the Union is
- 13 undoubtedly owing."<sup>335</sup> The best demonstration of the futility of amending the
- 14 Articles of Confederation under the existing provision was the fact that Rhode
- 15 Island did not even send a delegate to the Philadelphia convention. 336
- 16 The delegates took a realistic, rather than an idealistic, approach in
- 17 constructing their new Constitution, and this realistic approach extended to
- 18 the development of its amendatory article. Dickinson struck the keynote of the
- 19 entire Convention with his statement that:

"[e]xperience must be our only guide. Reason may mislead us. It was not Reason that discovered the singular & admirable mechanism of the English Constitution. It was not Reason that discovered or ever could have discovered the odd & in the eye of those who are governed by reason, the absurd mode of trial by Jury. Accidents probably produced these discoveries, and experience has give [sic] a sanction to them. This then is our guide." 337

_

20 21 22

2.3

24 25

 $<sup>^{333}</sup>$  See generally Id. at 359-60.

Martig, Amending the Constitution, Article V; The Keystone of the Arch, 35 Mich. L. Rev. 1253, 1255 (1937) (citing DOCUMENTS ILLUSTRATIVE OF THE FORMATION OF THE UNION OF THE AMERICAN STATES, H.R. Doc. No. 398,  $69^{\rm th}$  Cong.,  $1^{\rm st}$  Sess. 35 (1927)).

 $<sup>^{335}</sup>$  3 FARRAND, supra note 2, at 120.

&lt;sup>336</sup> See 4 Id. at 18-20.

&lt;sup>337</sup> 2 Id. at 278.

1 There are two basic differences between the final version of Article V

- 2 of the new Constitution and the old Article XIII of the Articles of
- 3 Confederation. 338 First, a power is reserved to the states to call a convention
- 4 for proposing amendments, in addition to Congress' power to propose
- 5 amendments. The reason for this change was the desire by the delegates to
- 6 retain in the several states the power to circumvent a recalcitrant or abusive
- 7 Congress by initiating a convention to propose amendments, 339 reflecting the
- 8 opinion that "the assent of the National Legislature ought not to be required"
- 9 to an amendment to the Constitution. 340 The second major difference between
- 10 Article V and Article XIII is that proposed amendments do not require
- 11 unanimous consent by the several states. As was noted with the Pinckney
- 12 comment, 341 the poor economic conditions existing in the United States at that
- 13 time, which were directly attributable to the unanimous ratification provision
- 14 of the Articles of Confederation, made the adoption of an amending process not
- 15 requiring unanimous consent almost inevitable.
- 16 In reaching the final result as reflected in Article V, the delegates at
- 17 the Convention spent considerable discussion as to whether the assent of the
- 18 national legislature to amendments should be required. The final version of
- 19 Article V does allow Congress to propose amendments, but any such proposal

_

&lt;sup>338</sup> Compare U.S. CONST., art. V, supra text accompanying note 2 with Articles of Confederation art. XIII, supra text accompanying note 334.

&lt;sup>339</sup> 1 FARRAND, supra note 2, at 203 (Madison—June 11)(Madison's comments); 2 Id. at 629 (Madison—Sept. 15)(Mason's comments); See also 3 Id. at 127 (Randolph's comments to the Virginia House of Delegates), 367-68 (Mason's account as told to Thomas Jefferson) 575 n.6 (Letter from George Read to John Dickinson of Jan. 17, 1787); 4 Id. at 61 (Mason's notes).

 $<sup>^{340}</sup>$  1 Id. at 22 (quoting Resolution 13 of the Virginia Plan).

&lt;sup>341</sup> See supra text accompanying notes 334-335.

```
must still be ratified by the states, and only by the states. Thus, under both 2.
     the Articles of Confederation and the United States Constitution, Congress has never been granted the power to propose and ratify amendments. 342
 3
 4
 5
 6
                          THE AMENDATORY PROVISION: THE RECORD
 7
                          May 29----June 11: The Virginia Plan
 8
 9
10
           As noted previously, the Virginia Plan served as the starting point for 11 12 discussion at the Convention. 343 This plan prescribed in general terms the 13 principles on which the Virginia delegation believed the new government should be based. 344 Resolution 13 of the Virginia plan addressed the issue of future 14 amendments to the new Constitution:
15
16
           "13. Resd. that provision ought to be made for the amendment of the Articles of Union whensoever it shall seem necessary, and that the assent of 17 the National Legislature ought not be required thereto."345 18
19
           The significance of this early statement was the demonstration that a 20 major purpose of the amendatory article was to provide a means for amending 21 the Constitution despite congressional inaction or opposition. This fact is
```

<sup>344</sup> Id.

&lt;sup>342</sup> See supra text accompanying notes 2,334.

&lt;sup>343</sup> 1 FARRAND, supra note 2, at 16 (Journal-May 29), 20 (Madison), 23 (Yates), 27 (McHenry), 27 (Patterson).

&lt;sup>345</sup> Id. at 22 (Madison-May 29).

- especially significant because much of the final text of the Constitution was
- derived from the principles enunciated in the Virginia Plan. 346 2
- However, the Virginia Plan was not the only plan submitted for 3
- 4 discussion by the delegates. Charles Pinckney of South Carolina submitted a
- 5 proposed constitution, 347 a copy of which no longer exists. 348 Insofar as can be
- 6 determined, the Pinckney Plan provided little in the direction of the
- 7 amendment process:
- 8 "[XVI] The assent of the Legislature of States shall be sufficient to 9 invest future additional Powers in U.S. in C. Ass. and shall bind the whole confederacy."349 10
- 11 Pinckney later maintained that his plan envisioned Congress as the
- proponent of amendments, 350 but there is nothing in the text of his amendatory 12
- 13 provision to indicate how amendments were to be proposed.
- 14 Another proposal, distributed to several members of the Convention but
- never formally put before it, 351 was written by Alexander Hamilton. Unlike the 15
- 16 Virginia Plan which made it clear that Congress was not to have any power to
- interfere with the process, Hamilton's draft delegated the ability to propose 17
- 18 amendments to the national legislature:
- 19 "This Constitution may receive such alterations and amendments as may be 20 proposed by the Legislature of the United States, with the concurrence of two-
- thirds of the members of both Houses, and ratified by the Legislatures of, or 21

<sup>347</sup> 1 Id. at 16 (Journal-May 29), 23(Madison), 24 (Yates).

<sup>351</sup> Id. at 617.

&lt;sup>346</sup> 3 Id. at 593.

 $<sup>^{348}</sup>$  3 Id. at 595. There is great confusion by the lack of a correct copy of the so-called Pinckney Plan. See generally Id. at 595, 601-04. The information quoted is from the combination of all the sources of information available in 1911 when Professor Farrand combined to reconstruct what he believed to be the Pinckney Plan in its original form. See Id. at 604.

&lt;sup>349</sup> Id. at 609. The words "in C. ass." apparently stand for "in Congress assembled."

 $<sup>^{350}</sup>$  Id. at 120.

- by Conventions of deputies chosen by the people in, two-thirds of the States 1 composing the Union. "352 2
- 3 While there was disagreement between those delegates favoring the
- 4 exclusion of Congress from the amendment process (as demonstrated by the
- Virginia Plan), and those delegates who wanted Congress to originate all 5
- 6 amendments (as called for in Hamilton's plan), it is clear even at this early
- 7 state in the creation of Article V, that the subject matter of the amendment
- was immaterial. What concerned the Framers was the process of amendment which, 8
- from the earliest concept to completion, remained a numeric count causing the 9
- amendment process to occur, rather than the subject matter of the amendment 10
- being the basis upon which an amendment was processed. 353 11
- 12 On May 30, the delegates began their discussions focusing on the
- resolutions presented in the Virginia Plan. 354 On June 5, the discussion 13
- reached Resolution 13, Virginia's proposal regarding the amendment process. 355 14
- 15 As stated above, the Virginia Plan provided that:
- 16 "[a] provision ought to be made for amendment of the Article of Union
- 17 whensoever it shall seem necessary, and the assent of the National Legislature ought not to be required thereto."  $^{356}$
- 18
- 19 The first delegate to address the issue was Charles Pinckney who stated
- quite simply he "doubted the propriety or necessity of it." However, 20
- 21 Elbridge Gerry spoke in favor of the resolution, stating:

 $<sup>^{352}</sup>$  Id. at 630.

<sup>353</sup> See infra text accompanying note 513.

 $<sup>^{354}</sup>$  1 Id at 30 (Journal-May 30), 33 (Madison), 38 (Yates), 40 (McHenry).

&lt;sup>355</sup> Id. at 117 (Journal-June 5), 121 (Madison), 126 (Yates).

 $<sup>^{356}</sup>$  Id. at 22 (Madison-May 29). Although Madison's notes of June 5 show a slightly different wording of Resolution 13, it is apparent-by the return to the original language of the Resolution when quoted later in the Journal and by Madison-that Madison was paraphrasing the content of the resolution in his June 5 notes. See Id. at 22 (Madison-May 29), [2] (Madison-June5), and 194 (Journal-June 11), 227 (Journal-June 13), 231 (Journal-June 13), 237 (Madison-June 13); 2 Id. at 84 (Journal-July 23), 133(Comm. Detail, Doc. I).

stability to the Govt. Nothing has yet happened in the States where this provision existed to proves [sic] its impropriety."<sup>358</sup>

Following these comments, the delegates postponed the matter for further discussion.<sup>359</sup>

On June 11, the delegates again discussed Resolution 13.<sup>360</sup> According to Madison's notes, "several members did not see the necessity of the [Resolution] at all, nor the propriety of making the consent of the Natl.

Legisl. unnecessary."<sup>361</sup> However, Colonel Mason, "urged the necessity of such a

"The novelty & difficulty of the experiment requires periodical revision. The prospect of such a revision would also give intermediate 11 provision"<sup>362</sup> stating:

"The plan now to be formed will certainly be defective, as the confederation has been found on trial to be. Amendments therefore will be necessary, at it will be better to provide for them, in an easy, regular and constitutional way than to trust to chance and violence. It would be improper to require the consent of the Natl. Legislature, because they may abuse their power, and refuse their consent on that very account. The opportunity for such an abuse, may be the fault of the Constitution calling for amendmt." 363

18 19

22

23

12

13

14

15

16

17

20 Governor Randolph "enforced" Colonel Mason's arguments. 364 At this point

21 the delegates unanimously agreed to the portion of Resolution 13 stating that

"provision ought to be made for the amendment of the Articles of the Union whensoever it shall seem necessary,"365 but they postponed a decision on

```
<sup>358</sup> Id. at 122 (Madison—June 5).
<sup>359</sup> Id. at 117 (Journal—June 5), 122 (Madison), 126 (Yates).
<sup>360</sup> Id. at 194 (Journal—June 11), 202-03 (Madison), 206 (Yates).
<sup>361</sup> Id. at 202 (Madison—June 11). Madison did not state which convention members spoke against the resolution. But based on comments made regarding this provision at other points in the convention, the most like opponent was Charles Pinckney. See Id. at 121 (Madison—June 5).
```

 $^{357}$  1 Id. at 121 (Madison-June 5).

&lt;sup>362</sup> Id. at 202 (Madison-June 11).

&lt;sup>363</sup> Id. at 202-03.

 $<sup>^{364}</sup>$  Id. at 203.

 $<sup>^{365}</sup>$  Id. at 194 (Journal-June 11), 203 (Madison), 206(Yates); Id. at 22 (Madison-text of resolution).

- 1 whether the assent of the national legislature would be required. $^{366}$  Thus, when
- 2 Governor Randolph reported on the state of the resolutions several days later,
- 3 the text of the resolution concerning the amendment process (now numbered as
- 4 Resolution 17) was as follows:

"Resolved that provision ought to be made for the amendment of the articles of union whensoever it shall seem necessary." 367

6 7

5

8

9 June 29----July 23: Miscellaneous Concerns

10

11

- 12 On June 29, the issue of the appropriate amendment process was discussed
- 13 during the debate on whether each state should have an equal vote in the
- 14 second house (i.e., the Senate). 368 During the discussion of this issue, Judge
- 15 Oliver Ellsworth of Connecticut stated he would not be surprised if the new
- 16 Constitution should require amendment in the future, even though "we made the
- 17 general government the most perfect in our opinion..." 369 "Let a strong
- 18 Executive, a Judiciary & Legislative power be created," Judge Ellsworth said,
- 19 "but Let not too much be attempted; by which all may be lost." 370 Ellsworth
- 20 described himself as "not in general a half-way man, yet [I] prefer[] doing

 $<sup>^{366}</sup>$  Id. at 194 (Journal-June 11), 203 (Madison), 206 (Yates).

&lt;sup>367</sup> Id. at 227 (Journal-June 13), 231 (Journal-slight changes in punctuation and capitalization), 237 (same). It is at this point in the convention that the committee that had been working on the resolutions rose, with the resolution now being considered by the entire convention sitting as a committee of the whole House. Id. at 224 (Journal-June 13), 241 (Journal-June 15).

 $<sup>^{368}</sup>$  Id. at 469 (Madison-June 29), 474-75 (Yates), 478 (King).

 $<sup>^{369}</sup>$  Id. at 475 (Yates—June 29).

 $<sup>^{370}</sup>$  Id. at 469 (Madison-June 29).

- half the good we could, rather than do nothing at all. The other half may be
- added, when the necessity shall be more fully experienced." 371 2
- James Madison spoke in response to Judge Ellsworth regarding the need to 3
- continually strive for the best plan of government and the difficulty other 4
- 5 governments had experienced in changing their form of government once it was
- 6 in place:
- 7 "I would always exclude inconsistent principles in framing a system of 8 government. The difficulty of getting its defects amended are great and
- 9 sometimes insurmountable. The Virginia state government was the first which
- 10 made, and through its defects are evident to every person, we cannot get it
- 11 amended. The Dutch have made four several attempts to amend their system
- 12 without success. The few alterations made in it were by tumult and faction,
- and for the worse." $^{372}$ 13
- Another delegate who recorded Madison's comments used them to 14
- 15 demonstrate a concern about the potential danger of relying on future
- 16 amendments, arguing the delegates should continue to struggle to create the
- 17 best possible structure of government:
- 18 "The Gentleman from Connecticut has proposed doing as much at this Time
- as is prudent, and leavg. Future amendments to posterity-this a dangerous 19
- 20 Doctrine-the Defects of the Amphictionick League were acknowledged, but they
- never cd. Be reformed. The U Netherlands have attempted four several Times to 21
- amend their Confederation, but have failed in each Attempt-The fear of 22
- Innovation, and the Hue & Cry in favor of the Liberty of the people will 23
- prevent the necessary Reforms--[.]" 373 24
- 25 Despite these expressed concerns, Resolution 17-"That provision ought to
- be made for the amending of the articles of union, whensoever it shall seem 26
- necessary" $^{-374}$  was considered by the entire Convention for the first time on 2.7

&lt;sup>371</sup> Id.

 $<sup>^{372}</sup>$  Id. at 475-76 (Yates-June 29).

&lt;sup>373</sup> Id. at 478 (King-June 29). Madison did not record his own version of his comments, apparently due to the adjournment of the convention for the day immediately after Madison spoke. Id. at 476 (Yates-June 29).

&lt;sup>374</sup> 2 Id. at 84 (Journal-July 23), 87 (Madison).

- 1 July 23.375 The Resolution was passed unanimously, apparently without
- 2 discussion. 376
- The resolution was discussed, however, in relation to another resolution 3
- 4 that "the legislative, Executive, and Judiciary Powers within the several
- 5 States, and of the national Government, ought to be bound by oath to support
- the articles of union."377 During the discussion, James Wilson of Pennsylvania 6
- 7 said, "he was never fond of oaths" and that "[h]e was afraid they might too
- 8 much trammel the...Members of the Existing Govt in case future alterations
- should be necessary; and prove an obstacle to Resol: 17, just agd. to."378
- 10 Nathaniel Gorham of Massachusetts said he could not see how taking an oath
- 11 would hinder future changes to the Constitution:
- "Mr. Ghorum [sic] did not know that oaths would be of much use; but 12
- could see no inconsistency between them and the 17. Resol: or any regular 13
- 14 amendt. Of the Constitution. The oath could only require fidelity to the
- 15 existing Constitution. A constitutional alteration of the Constitution, could
- never be regarded as a breach of the Constitution, or of any oath to support 16
- it."<sup>379</sup> 17
- 18 Elbridge Gerry of Massachusetts agreed with Gorham and added that he
- 19 considered oaths as having value by impressing upon the officers of the new
- government the fact that the state and federal governments were not distinct 20
- governments but were instead components of a general system, thereby 21

&lt;sup>375</sup> Id.

 $<sup>^{376}</sup>$  2 Id. at 84 (Journal-July 23), 87 (Madison).

&lt;sup>377</sup> 2 Id. at 84 (Journal-July 23); 1 Id. at 227 (Journal-13)(original text of resolution),231 (Journal) (changes in capitalization), 237 (Journal)(changes in capitalization and abbreviations); 2 Id. at 87 (Madison-July 23)(changes in capitalization and abbreviations).

 $<sup>^{378}</sup>$  2 Id. at 87 (Madison-July 23).

 $<sup>^{379}</sup>$  2 Id. at 87-88 (Madison-July 23).

```
preventing the preference that existed in favor of the state governments. 380
     The resolution relating to oaths was then passed without objection. 381
 2
 3
 4
 5
                         July 26---- August 6: Committee of Detail
 6
 7
 8
           On July 26, the resolutions voted on by the convention were submitted to 9
     the Committee of Detail<sup>382</sup> whose job it was to transform the principles set out 10 in the resolutions into a detailed and workable constitution. The committee, 11 consisting of John Rutledge of South Carolina, Edmund Randolph of Virginia, 12
     Nathaniel Gorham of Massachusetts, Oliver Ellsworth of Connecticut, and James Wilson of Pennsylvania, 383 took approximately one week to complete their 13
14 work.<sup>384</sup> During this week, the committee had before it numerous proposals relating to the amendment process, 385 including the proposals contained in the 15
     Virginia Plan<sup>386</sup> and the Pinckney Plan.<sup>387</sup> 16
```

 $<sup>^{380}</sup>$  2 Id. at 88 (Madison-July 23).

 $<sup>^{381}</sup>$  Id.; See also Id. at 84 (Journal-July 23).

 $<sup>^{382}</sup>$  Id. at 117 (Journal-July 26).

 $<sup>^{383}</sup>$  Id. at 97 (Journal-July 24), 106 (Madison).

&lt;sup>384</sup> See generally Id. at 117 (Journal-July 26), 175 (McHenry-Aug. 4), 176 (Journal-Aug. 6).

&lt;sup>385</sup> See generally Id. at 133, 136, 148, 152, 159, 174; 3 Id. at 609.

 $<sup>^{386}</sup>$  2 Id. at 133 (Comm. Of Detail, Doc. I).

&lt;sup>387</sup> Id. at 136 (Comm. Of Detail, Doc. III); See also Id. at 98 (Journal-July 24) 3 Id. at 609 (Pinckney Plan). The New Jersey Plan, also known as the Patterson Proposals, 2 Id. at 98 (Journal-July 24), was also before the committee. Id. at 98, 134 n. 3 (Comm. Of Detail, Doc. III) However, the New Jersey Plan did not contain a provision for future amendments to the proposed constitution. See 1 Id. at 242-45 (Madison-June 15), 247 (King); See also 3 Id. at 611-13, 615-16.

- 1 The language of the Virginia proposal remained the same as its May 20
- 2 introductory version, which was as follows: "Resolved That Provision ought to
- 3 be made for the Amendment of the Articles of Union, whensoever it shall seem
- 4 necessary."<sup>388</sup> The original Virginia proposal ended this quote with the proviso
- 5 "that the assent of the National Legislature ought not to be required
- 6 thereto."389 The convention had voted to adopt the first part of the Virginia
- 7 Resolution, 390 but discussion on the second part of the Resolution was
- 8 postponed. 391
- 9 Due to missing documentation, Professor Farrand was forced to attempt a
- 10 reconstruction of the original text of the Pinckney amendatory provision. He
- 11 determined the text most likely read:
- 12 "The assent of the Legislature of States shall be sufficient to invest
- 13 future additional Powers in the U.S. in C. ass. and shall bind the whole
- 14 confederacy."<sup>392</sup>
- 15 The only surviving document of the portion of the Pinckney Plan before
- 16 the Committee of Detail is an outline of that Plan, 393 containing only the
- 17 following reference to amendment:
- 18 "24. The Articles of Confederation shall be inviolably observed, and the
- 19 Union shall be perpetual; unless altered as before directed." 394

<sup>388 2</sup> Id. at 133 (Comm. Of Detail, Doc. I); See also 1 Id. at 22 (Madison-May 29), 194 (Journal-June 11), 203 (Madison-June 11), 227, 231 (Journal-June 13); 237 (Madison-June 13); 2 Id. at 84 (Journal-July 23), 87 (Madison-July 23).
389 1 Id. at 22 (Madison-May 29), 121 (Madison-June 5), 194 (Journal-June 11), 202-03 (Madison-June 11).

&lt;sup>390</sup> Id. at 194 (Journal-June 11), 203 (Madison), 206 (Yates); 2 Id. at 84 (Journal-July 23), 87 (Madison).

 $<sup>^{391}</sup>$  1 Id. at 194 (Journal-June 11), 203 (Madison).

&lt;sup>392</sup> 3 Id. at 609.

 $<sup>^{393}</sup>$  2 Id. at 129, 134 (Comm. Of Detail. Doc. III); See generally 3 Id. at 595, 601-09.

 $<sup>^{394}</sup>$  2 Id. at 136 (Comm. Of Detail, Doc. III).

1 It is unclear what was meant by the term "unless altered as before

2 directed," but it reasonable to assume this language referred to some other

- 3 reference in the Plan now lost to history.
- 4 The next relevant document that does exist in the records of the
- 5 Committee of Detail is a draft copy of portions of the Constitution before the
- 6 Committee. This draft reveals substantial information on the thought processes
- 7 of the Committee through the editing process contained in the document itself,
- 8 especially editing related to the introduction of the idea of a convention to
- 9 propose amendments for proposing amendments to the Constitution. These
- 10 references also demonstrate the thought processes surrounding whether changes
- 11 to the Constitution by amendment would be made only one at a time.
- 12 The document, initially in the handwriting of Edmund Randolph, read:
- 13 "An alteration may be effected in the articles of union, on the
- 14 application of two-thirds of the state legislatures." 395
- 15 Randolph subsequently struck out the words "two-thirds" and replaced
- 16 them with the word "nine", 396 then apparently allowed John Rutledge to make
- 17 suggestions and changes on the document. Rutledge changed the language back to
- 18 two-thirds of the state legislatures and then, significantly, added the first
- 19 reference to the use of a convention as part of the amendment process.<sup>397</sup>
- 20 Rutledge's version now read as follows:
- 21 "An alteration may be effected in the articles of union, on the
- 22 application of 2/3d of the state legislatures by a Covn." 398

 $<sup>^{395}</sup>$  Id. at 137 n.6, 148 (Comm. Of Detail, Doc. IV)(emphasis added).

&lt;sup>396</sup> Id.

&lt;sup>397</sup> Id.

&lt;sup>398</sup> Id. (emphasis added).

1 Rutledge then crossed out the entire language quoted above and replaced 2 it with the following: 3 "on appln. of 2/3ds of the State Legislatures to the Natl. Leg. They call a Convn. To revise or alter ye. Articles of union."399 Rutledge's revisions were included in the subsequent drafts (now in 5 Wilson's handwriting) created by the Committee of Detail, but now with an 6 7 important addition: 8 "This Constitution ought to be amended whenever such Amendment shall be 9 necessary; and on Application of the Legislatures of two-thirds of the Sates of the Union, the Legislature of the United States shall call a Convention for 10 that Purpose."400 11 On August 6, the first draft of the Constitution was submitted to the 12 13 Convention by the Committee of Detail. 401 The amendatory process contained in 14 Article XIX of the draft provided: "On the application of the Legislatures of two-thirds of the States of 15 16 the Union, for an amendment of this Constitution, the Legislature of the United States shall call a Convention for that purpose." 402 17 Once again reference was made to "an amendment" and a convention "for 18 that purpose." 19 20 2.1 2.2 23 24 25

<sup>399</sup> Id.

 $<sup>^{400}</sup>$  Id. at 152 n. 14, 159 & n.16 (Comm. Of Detail, Doc. VIII) (emphasis added), 174 (a similarly worded draft proposed by the Committee of Detail).

<sup>401</sup> Id. at 176 (Journal-August 6), 177 (Madison), 190 (McHenry).

 $<sup>^{402}</sup>$  Id. at 188 (Madison-Aug. 6)(emphasis added).

1

3

8

13

4 On August 30, the convention took up the matter of Article XIX. $^{403}$  On

5 this date, there was little discussion on the proposal. Gouverneur Morris of 6 Pennsylvania suggested "that the Legislature should be left at liberty to call

7 a Convention, whenever they please." $^{404}$  The proposal was passed as submitted without objection with this suggestion by Morris being turned down by the

9 delegates. 405

10 As passed, the amendatory article allowed only the states to initiate 11 the amendment process, and the representatives of the states to draft the 12 amendment on that issue at a convention. The terms of the August 30 version

14 given the ministerial duty to call a convention on the application or request left Congress without the ability to propose amendments; instead, Congress was of two-thirds of the state legislatures. Also, Article XIX did not explicitly 16 require ratification of the proposed amendment.

On September 10, Elbridge Gerry of Massachusetts moved to reconsider

18 Article XIX. 406 Gerry expressed concern that a majority of States could,

19 through the convention process, "bind the Union to innovations that may 20 subvert the State-Constitutions altogether." Alexander Hamilton of New York

<sup>403</sup> Id. at 461 (Journal-Aug. 30), 467-68 (Madison).

 $<sup>^{404}</sup>$  Id. at 468 (Madison-Aug. 30).

 $<sup>^{405}</sup>$  Id. at 461 (Journal-Aug 30), 468 (Madison-Aug 30).

&lt;sup>406</sup> Id. at 555 (Journal—Sept. 10), 557 (Madison—Sept. 10).

<sup>407</sup> Id. at 557-58 (Madison---Sept 10.)

seconded the motion to reconsider, rejecting Gerry's concerns, but asserting 2 Congress should also have the power to call a convention: 3 "[Hamilton] did not object to the consequences stated by Mr. Gerry-There 4 was no greater evil in subjecting the people of the U.S. to the major voice than the people of a particular State-It had been wished by many and was much 5 6 to have been desired that an easier mode for introducing amendments had been 7 provided by the articles of Confederation. It was equally desirable now that 8 an easy mode should be established for supplying defects which will probably 9 appear in the new System. The mode proposed was not adequate. The State 10 Legislatures will not apply for alterations but with a view to increase their 11 own powers-The National Legislature will be the first to perceive and will be 12 most sensible to the necessity of amendments, and ought also to be empowered, 13 whenever two-thirds of each branch should concur to call a Convention --- There 14 could be no danger in giving this power, as the people would finally decide in the case." $^{408}$ 15 James Madison next spoke on the subject stating his concerns on the lack 16 17 of specificity in the terms employed in Article XIX: "Mr. Madison remarked on 18 the vagueness of the terms 'call a Convention for the purpose' as sufficient 19 reason for reconsidering the article. How was a Convention to be formed? By what rule decide? What the force of its acts?" 409 20 The Convention then voted to reconsider the amendatory provision. 410 Many 21 22 delegates were persuaded by Alexander Hamilton's argument that the national 23 legislature should be able to propose amendments directly, without the need for calling a convention to propose amendments. 411 Roger Sherman of Connecticut 24 25 then moved to add the following italicized words to Article XIX: "On the application of the Legislatures of two-thirds of the States of 26 the Union, for an amendment of this Constitution, the Legislature of the 27 28 United States shall call a Convention for that purpose or the Legislature may propose amendments to the several States for their approbation, but no 29 amendments shall be binding until consented to by the several States." $^{412}$ 30  $^{408}$  Id. at 558 (Madison---Sept. 10).  $^{410}$  Id. at 555 (Journal), 558 (Madison-Sept 10). 411 Id. at 558-59 (Madison-Sept. 10). 412 Id. at 555 ( Journal---Sept. 10), 558 (Madison---Sept. 10),188 (Madison---Aug. 6)(previous text of art. XIX)(emphasis added).

- 1 By this change, the states continued to have the right to apply for a
- 2 convention for proposing "an amendment" to the Constitution, but now Congress
- 3 would be given the power to directly propose "amendments" to the states for
- 4 ratification. Sherman's motion was seconded by Elbridge Gerry of
- 5 Massachusetts. 413
- 6 However, the delegates quickly realized the language of this addition
- 7 would result in a return to the requirement contained in the Articles of
- 8 Confederation requiring unanimous approval of the states in order to
- 9 effectuate a change in the new Constitution. James Wilson therefore
- 10 immoderately moved for the insertion of the words "two-thirds," so that
- 11 amendments would be binding upon the consent of two-thirds of the several
- 12 states. 414 Wilson's motion was narrowly defeated (by a vote of five states in
- 13 favor and six opposed). 415 Wilson then moved to alter the Resolution by
- 14 inserting the words "three-fourths" of the several states, which was passed
- 15 without objection. 416
- Now, Article XIX read as follows:
- 17 "On the application of the Legislatures of two-thirds of the States in
- 18 the Union, for an amendment of this Constitution, the Legislature of the
- 19 United States shall call a Convention for that purpose or the Legislature may
- 20 propose amendments to the several States for their approbation, but no
- 21 amendments shall be binding until consented to by three-fourths of the several
- 22 States." 417
- 23 Under this version, either the national legislature or a convention
- 24 could propose an amendment to the Constitution (though it could be technically

 $<sup>^{413}</sup>$  Id. at 558 (Madison---Sept. 10).

&lt;sup>414</sup> Id.

 $<sup>^{415}</sup>$  Id. at 558-59.

<sup>416</sup> Id. at 555 (Journal---Sept. 10), 559(Madison---Sept 10).

<sup>417</sup> Id. at 188 (Madison---Aug. 6)(previous text of art. 19), 555 (Journal-Sept.

<sup>10)(</sup>added language), 558-59 (Madison---Sept 10)(same)(emphasis added).

- 1 argued at this point the States only had the power to propose an amendment
- 2 while the Congress had the power to propose amendments), with all such
- 3 amendments having to be approved by three-fourths of the states.
- 4 James Madison next proposed a change in the content of the amendatory
- 5 provision, moving to postpone consideration of the Article presently before
- 6 the convention as amended and to instead take up the following proposal:
- 7 "The Legislature of the U--- S---- whenever two-thirds of both Houses
- 8 shall deem necessary, or on the application of two-thirds of the Legislatures
- 9 of the several States, shall propose amendments to this Constitution which
- 10 shall be valid to all intents and purposes as part thereof, when the same
- 11 shall have been ratified by three-fourths at least of the Legislatures of the
- 12 several States, or by Conventions in three-fourths thereof, as one or the
- other mode of ratification may be proposed by the Legislature of the U.S[.]" 418
- 14 This version of the amendatory process marks the first appearance of the
- 15 provision charging Congress with the duty to choose between the two methods of
- 16 ratification, either by three-fourths of the state legislatures or by three-
- 17 fourths of conventions held in each state for that purpose.
- 18 More significantly, Madison's new version deleted all reference to a
- 19 convention for proposing "an amendment," thus making it necessary for all
- 20 proposals for "amendments" to come from the national legislature.
- 21 There was, apparently, no discussion on this significant change in the
- 22 amendatory process. This may be somewhat surprising, especially in the light
- 23 of the second clause of the Virginia Plan: "the assent of the National
- 24 Legislature ought not to be required." 419 The discussion of this assent had
- 25 been repeatedly postponed by the delegates, 420 despite Colonel Mason's previous

<sup>418</sup> Id. at 555 (Journal---Sept. 10), 559 (Madison---Sept. 10)(emphasis added).

<sup>419 1</sup> Id. at 22 (Madison-May 29).

<sup>420</sup> Id. at 117 (Journal---June 5), 122 (Madison---June 5), 126 (Yates---June 5), 194 (Journal---June 11), 194 (Madison---June 11).

statements opposing the requirement for the consent of the national 1 2 legislature. 421 Instead, the discussion turned to a completely different matter. After 3 receiving a second from Alexander Hamilton, John Rutledge of South Carolina 4 5 objected to giving a majority of states the ability to amend the Constitution on the topic of slavery. 422 Madison acceded to Rutledge's suggestion to add a 6 7 proviso which provided that "no amendments which may be made prior to the year 1808, shall in any manner affect the 4 & 5 sections of the VII article[.]"423 8 9 The fourth and fifth sections of Article VII contained the requirement 10 that no prohibition would be allowed "on the migration and importation of such 11 persons as the several States shall think proper to admit," that such migration and importation shall not be prohibited, and that no per capita tax 12 13 would be levied except in proportion to the Census, which counted blacks as three-fifths their number. 424 With this proviso ensuring the continuation of 14 slave trade in the United States until at least the year 1808, the revised 15 amendatory article was passed. 425 16

17

18

19

September 12----September 17: Article V

 $<sup>^{421}</sup>$  Id. at 202-03 (Madison---June 11). See supra text accompanying note 363.  $^{422}$  "Mr. Rutledge said he never could agree to give a power by which the articles relating to slaves might be altered by the States not interested in that property and prejudiced against it." 2 Id. at 559 (Madison---Sept. 10). <sup>423</sup> Id. at 555 (Journal---Sept. 10), 559 (Madison---Sept. 10).

<sup>424</sup> Id. at 182-83 (Madison---Aug. 6).

&lt;sup>425</sup> Id. at 555-56 (Journal---Sept. 10), 559 (Madison---Sept. 10).

2

22

23

24

As the delegates were in the process of finishing consideration of the 3 few remaining proposals submitted to them by the Committee of Detail, the job 4 5 of putting together the completed work of the Convention into a cohesive draft 6 Constitution was given to the Committee of Style (also known as the Committee of Revision), 426 consisting of William Johnson of Connecticut, Alexander 7 Hamilton of New York, Gouverneur Morris of Pennsylvania, James Madison of 8 Virginia, and Rufus King of Massachusetts. 427 On September 12, the Committee of Style delivered its report of the Constitution as revised and arranged. 428 It 10 was here that the amendatory provision was renumbered Article V. 429 The revised 11 12 article read as follows: 13 " V. The Congress, whenever two-thirds of both houses shall deem 14 necessary, or on the application of two-thirds of the legislatures of the several states, shall propose amendments to this constitution, which 15 16 shall be valid to all intents and purposes, as part thereof, when the same shall have been ratified by three-fourths at least of the 17 legislatures of the several states, or by conventions in three-fourths 18 thereof, as the one or the other mode of ratification may be proposed by 19 the Congress; Provided, that no amendment which may be made prior to the 20 year 1808 shall in any manner affect the and sections of article..." 430 21 The Committee had made minor stylistic changes, but otherwise had 426 Id. at 582 (Journal---Sept. 12).

```
```

version required all amendments to be proposed by Congress.

followed the last version (Madison's) approved by the delegates. 431 This new

<sup>427</sup> Id. at 547 (Journal---Sept. 8), 553 (Madison---Sept. 8).

<sup>428</sup> Id. at 582 (Journal---Sept. 12), 585 (Madison---Sept. 12).

 $<sup>^{429}</sup>$  Id. at 602 (Comm. On Style).

 $<sup>^{430}</sup>$  Id.(footnotes omitted)(emphasis added). See infra text accompanying note

<sup>431</sup> Compare Id. at 555 (Journal---Sept. 10), 559 (Madison---Sept. 10) with Id. at 602 (Comm. on Style).

- On September 15, the convention reached discussion of Article V after 1
- discussing the first four articles. 432 Roger Sherman began the discussion by 2
- reiterating Elbridge Gerry's 433 fear that a majority of states might use 3
- 4 Article V to the detriment of other states objecting to the amendment:
- "Mr. Sherman expressed his fears that three-fourths of the States might 5 be brought to do things fatal to particular States, as abolishing them 6
- altogether or depriving them of their equality in the Senate. He thought it 7
- reasonable that the proviso in favor of the State importing slaves should be 8
- 9 extended so as to provide that no States should be affected in its internal
- police, or deprived of its equality in the Senate." 434 10
- 11 Colonel Mason also spoke against the amendatory article. He focused on
- 12 his concern that Congress could prevent the proposing of amendments. On the - back of his copy of the draft Constitution, Mason wrote the following: 13
- 14 "Article 5th. By this Article Congress only have the Power of proposing
- 15 Amendments at any future time to this constitution, & shou'd it prove ever so
- 16 oppressive, the whole people of America can't make, or even propose
- Alterations to it; a Doctrine utterly subversive of the fundamental Principles 17
- of the Rights & Liberties of the people[.]" 435 18
- 19 Mason's notes served as the basis for the comments he gave on the
- 20 convention floor, which were recorded by Madison:
- "Col. Mason thought the plan of amending the Constitution exceptionable 21
- 22 & dangerous. As the proposing of amendments is in both the modes to depend,
- the first immediately, and in the second, ultimately, on Congress, no 23
- amendments of the proper kind would ever be obtained by the people, if the 24
- 25 Government should become oppressive, as he verily believed would be the
- case."436 26
- 27 As a result of these concerns, Gouverneur Morris of Pennsylvania and
- Elbridge Gerry of Massachusetts "moved to amend the article so as to require a 28
- Convention on application of 2/3 of the Sts..." 437 29

&lt;sup>432</sup> Id. at 629 (Madison---Sept. 15).

<sup>433</sup> Id. at 557-58 (Madison---Sept. 10), 629 (Madison---Sept. 15).

<sup>434</sup> Id. at 629 (Madison---Sept. 15).

 $<sup>^{435}</sup>$  4 Id. at 59 n.1, 61; 2 Id. at 637 n. 21 (stating that the quoted language "was written by Mason on the blank pages of his copy of the draft of September 12").

<sup>436 2</sup> Id. at 629 (Madison---Sept. 15). See infra text accompanying notes 363,418,430,435.

&lt;sup>437</sup> Id. (emphasis added).

James Madison then addressed the motion:

"Mr. Madison did not see why Congress would not be as much bound to propose amendments applied for by two-thirds of the States as to call a Convention on the like application. He saw no objection however against providing for a Convention for the purpose of amendments, except only that difficulties might arise as to the form, the quorum &c. which in Constitutional regulations ought to be as much as possible avoided." 438

8 The Convention unanimously agreed to the motion by Morris and Gerry, 439

9 thus acceding to Mason's request to re-insert the convention method of 10 amending the constitution into Article V.

11 There is further evidence supporting the desire of the delegates to have 12 a convention provision within the Constitution. This involves the attempt by a minority of delegates to remove the provision from the proposed draft

14 constitution. The account was provided by Thomas Jefferson as told to him

15 years later by George Mason:

16

13

2.

3

4 5

6

7

the meaning of Article V as a result of the Gerry-Morris amendment. Previous to the amendment by Gerry-Morris, Madison interpreted Article V to mean that Congress was bound to propose amendments when applied for by two-thirds of the states. ("Congress would be as much bound to propose amendments applied for by two-thirds of the States") After the Gerry-Morris amendment, Congress was bound to call a convention on two-thirds applications by the states. ("as to call a Convention on the like application") It is clear Madison realized the intent and purpose of the applications by the states had changed from the states having the power to propose amendments to applying for a convention which then proposed amendments. Thus, the convention acquired the power to propose amendments, and the states acquired the power to apply for a convention. Further, Madison also realized that "Congress [was] bound..." to call a convention upon two-thirds applications of the states. See infra text accompanying note 514.

As to any change in language made to Gerry's language, the Supreme Court has addressed this issue. The Court said:

&quot;[R]espondents' argument misrepresents the function of the committee of Style. It was appointed only 'to revise the stile of and arrange the articles which had been agreed to.... 2 Farrand 553.' '[T]he Committee...had no authority from the Convention to make alterations of substance in the Constitution as voted by the Convention, nor did it purport to do so, and certainly the Convention had no belief...that any important change was, in fact, made....'" Powell v. McCormack, 395 U.S. 486 (1969).

439 2 Farrand at 630.

1 "Anecdote. The constn. As agreed at first was that amendments might be proposed either by Congr. or the legislatures a commee was appointed to digest & redraw. Gov. Morris & King were of the commee. One morng. Gov. M. Moved an instrn for certain alterns (not ½ the members yet come in) in a hurry & 5 without understanding it was agreed to. The Commee reported so that Congr. shd have the exclusive power of proposq. Amendmts. G. Mason observd it on the 6 7 report & opposed it. King denied the constrn. Mason demonstrated it, & asked the Commee by what authority they had varied what had been agreed. G. Morris 9 then impudently got up & said by authority of the convention & produced the 10 blind instruction beforementd, which was unknown by ½ of the house & not till then understood by the other. They then restored  $i\bar{t}$  as it stood originally."  $^{440}$ 11 12 According to Jefferson's retelling of Mason's recollection, a minority of delegates almost succeeded in deleting the convention from the 13 Constitution, but their attempt was foiled by the vigilance of several other 14 15 delegates. 16 The point of the anecdote is obvious. The Constitutional Convention 17 desired a method whereby the states could amend the Constitution absent 18 Congress' participation or permission. And, as they "restored it as it stood originally," clearly this includes the Morris-Gerry amendment "requiring a 19 Convention on application of 2/3 of the Sts..." 441 Thus, the convention to 20 21 propose amendments was essentially approved twice by the delegates prior to final approval of the document. The language of the motion is unequivocal: 442 a 22 these applications must be considered as an expression of intent to hold a convention, not to offer an amendment to Congress for its potential veto. The convention is required on the application of two-thirds of the states, and portion of Article V that contained the convention was reinserted into the 27 draft constitution on September 15.

-

23

25

26

 $<sup>^{440}</sup>$  3 Id. at 367-68 (footnote omitted).

 $<sup>^{441}</sup>$  See supra text accompanying note 437.

<sup>442</sup> See supra text accompanying notes 435-437.

Roger Sherman, as he had attempted five days earlier, 443 again tried to 1 require the unanimous consent of all the states to any amendments, and once 2

- more his proposal was turned down by the Convention. 444 Elbridge Gerry then 3
- moved to strike the language that allowed ratification to occur by the 4
- 5 convention method, which also failed. 445
- 6 Roger Sherman then moved to prohibit any amendment that would affect the
- 7 internal police of a state or would deprive a state "its equal suffrage in the
- Senate."446 James Madison, speaking against the motion, cautioned the 8
- following: "Begin with these special provisos, and every State will insist on
- 10 them, for their boundaries, exports & c."447 The membership agreed with Madison
- and voted down Sherman's motion, three states to eight. 448 Sherman then moved 11
- to strike Article V altogether, but this motion also failed. 449 However, 12
- 13 Sherman's point on the need to keep the suffrage of the Senate equal gathered
- support from delegates representing the small states. Gouverneur Morris of 14
- Pennsylvania (a state which had previously voted against Sherman's two 15
- motions) 450 then moved "to annex a further proviso---'that no State, without 16
- its consent shall be deprived of its equal suffrage in the Senate'  $^{\prime\prime}$   $^{451}$ 17
- 18 According to Madison, the motion had been "dictated by the circulating murmurs

&lt;sup>443</sup> 2 Id. at 555 (Journal---Sept. 10), (Madison---Sept. 10).

<sup>444 2</sup> Id. at 630 (Madison---Sept. 15).

&lt;sup>445</sup> Id.

&lt;sup>446</sup> Id.

&lt;sup>447</sup> Id.

&lt;sup>448</sup> Id.

&lt;sup>449</sup> Id. at 630-31.

 $<sup>^{450}</sup>$  Id. at 630.

 $<sup>^{451}</sup>$  Id. at 631

of the small States" $^{452}$ As a result, the motion "was agreed to without debate, no one opposing it, or in the question, saying no." $^{453}$
The debate on the Constitution ended September 15, at which time the Constitution as amended was agreed to unanimously. 454 The Convention ordered that the Constitution be engrossed, $^{455}$ and two days later, on September 17, the engrossed Constitution was read $^{456}$ and signed. $^{457}$ The final version of Article V read as follows:
ARTICLE V.  The Congress, whenever two-thirds of both Houses shall deem it necessary, shall propose Amendments to this Constitution, or, on the Application of the Legislatures of two-thirds of the several States, shall call a Convention for proposing Amendments, which, in either Case, shall be valid to all Intents and Purposes, as Part of this Constitution, when ratified by the Legislatures of three-fourths of the several States, or by Convention in three-fourths thereof, as the one or the other Mode of Ratification may be proposed by the Congress; Provided that no Amendment which may be made prior to the Year One thousand eight hundred and eight shall in nay Manner affect the first and fourth Clauses in the Ninth Section of the first Article; and that no State, without its Consent, shall be deprived of its equal Suffrage in the Senate.
SUMMARY OF RECORD REGARDING PRIMARY ISSUES
Need for an Amendment Process and the Convention Method
452

Some delegates to the Constitutional Convention questioned the need for 2 providing a procedure for amending the new Constitution. $^{459}$  Some delegates even 3 4 expressed fear that the proposed amending provision could be used as a means 5 by which the rights of some states could be subverted by a majority of other states. 460 However, most of the delegates realized the plan of government 6 7 created by the Convention would not be perfect and would require, from time to time, amendments to correct imperfections and the changing needs of America. $^{461}$ 8 Several delegates, especially Colonel Mason, strongly believed the amendment 10 process was absolutely necessary, not only to correct defects in the new 11 system, 462 but also to protect the people and the states from an abusive or oppressive national legislature. 463 In response to these fears, the Convention 12 13 acceded to the request to create a process of proposing amendments by a convention method. 464 14 15 16 Role of the States and Congress in Proposing Amendments 17 18 19 The Virginia Plan, while calling for an amendment process, did not specify whether the states or the national legislature would propose

_

20

 $<sup>^{459}</sup>$  See supra text accompanying notes 357,361,449.

<sup>460</sup> See supra text accompanying notes 407,434-436.

<sup>461</sup> See supra text accompanying notes 358,362-364,369-371,408.

<sup>462</sup> See supra text accompanying notes 345,349,358,362-365,367,369.

<sup>463</sup> See supra text accompanying notes 363-364,435-436.

<sup>464</sup> See supra text accompanying notes 437-440.

amendments, but it did specify "that the assent of the National Legislature 1 ought not be required thereto."465 Both the Pinckney and Hamilton plans 2 envisioned the national legislature as the initiator of proposed amendments, 3 and neither called for a convention to propose amendments, but Hamilton's plan 4 did allow for a state convention to ratify amendments proposed by the national 5

6 legislature. 466 When the amendatory provision emerged from the Committee of

7 Detail, it provided that state legislatures could apply to the national

8 legislature for an amendment, and that the national legislature would then be required to call a convention for that purpose. 467 The amendatory article was 10 later amended to also allow the national legislature to propose amendments, 468 and then subsequently revised further to provide that the states could apply to the national legislature for amendments they desired, rather than for a 13 convention, with the national legislature then being required to actually propose the desired amendments. 469 At this time, the reference to the national legislature calling a convention upon the application of two-thirds of the states was dropped. $^{470}$  Therefore, when the amendatory provision emerged from the Committee of Style, only the national legislature was authorized to propose amendments.  $^{471}$  When this change was discovered, the provision was amended a final time, permitting either the national legislature, or a 20 convention applied for by two-thirds of the states, to propose amendments and

11

12

14

15

16

17

18

19

 $<sup>^{465}</sup>$  See supra text accompanying notes 344-345.

<sup>466</sup> See supra text accompanying notes 349-352.

<sup>467</sup> See supra text accompanying note 402.

<sup>468</sup> See supra text accompanying note 412.

<sup>469</sup> See supra text accompanying notes 418,430.

<sup>470</sup> See supra text accompanying notes 418,430.

1	requiring the national legislature to call a convention "on application of 2/3
2	of the Sts." 472
3	This series of revisions and proposals to Article V was the product of
4	the dispute between those in the Convention who believed the federal
5	government would be in the best position to perceive the need for particular
6	amendments, and those who believed the amending process of the Constitution
7	should contain language to thwart or redress the actions or excesses of an
8	unresponsive or corrupt national governing body. It was clearly a
9	confrontation between those wishing a powerful national government and those
10	fearing that result. In the end, both sides got what they sought: the national
11	legislature could propose amendments it felt were needed, and the national
12	legislature could be circumvented by the states through the convention process
13	when the state legislatures considered such circumvention necessary.
14
15
16
17
18	Ratification: Method and Number of States Required.
19
20	Under the Articles of Confederation, the state legislatures were
21	empowered to ratify amendments proposed by the national legislature. 473 The
-

 $^{472}$  See supra text accompanying notes 437,458.  $^{473}$  See supra text accompanying note 334.

Pinckney Plan used this approach, 474 while the Hamilton Plan included ratification by a convention held in each state. 475 The Convention paid little 2 attention to the details of ratification until nearly the end, at which time 3 Madison proposed his revision of the amendatory article which left it to the 4 national legislature to actually propose all amendments. In doing so, he 5 resurrected Hamilton's proposal that ratification could be either by the 6 7 consent of the state legislatures or by state conventions called for that purpose. 476 This change in ratification was carried forward by the delegates in 8 the final version of Article V. 477 10 Hamilton's initial plan also envisioned ratification by two-thirds of the states. 478 During the convention, there were attempts by some delegates to 11 revert back to the unanimity requirement found in the Articles of 12 Confederation. 479 But the real debate centered on whether ratification would 13 occur upon the consent of two-thirds or three-fourths of the states. When the 14 matter was finally voted, ratification by two-thirds was narrowly defeated, 480 15 and the delegates then agreed to ratification of amendments by three-fourths

18

16

17 of the states. 481

19 Amendment (Singular) vs. Amendments (Plural)

 $<sup>^{474}</sup>$  See supra text accompanying note 349.

<sup>475</sup> See supra text accompanying note 352.

<sup>476</sup> See supra text accompanying note 418.

<sup>477</sup> See supra text accompanying note 458.

<sup>478</sup> See supra text accompanying note 352.
479 See supra text accompanying notes 412,444.

<sup>480</sup> See supra text accompanying notes 414-415.

<sup>481</sup> See supra text accompanying note 416.

2

13

14

15

16

17

18 proposed at any one time, referring to "any alteration" and requiring 3 ratification by the states of "such alteration." 482 While the Virginia Plan 4 5 did not specify any details of an amendment process, 483 the Hamilton Plan did 6 allow for more than one amendment to be proposed at a time, providing that the 7 Constitution "may receive such alterations and amendments" as proposed by the states and agreed to by both houses of the national legislature. 484 Despite 8 9 this, when the amendatory article emerged from the Committee of Detail, the

The Articles of Confederation only allowed for one amendment to be

10 provision allowed that the states could apply for "an amendment" to the 11 constitution, and that the national legislature would call a convention "for that purpose." 485 12

The subsequent amendment to Article XIX by Roger Sherman retained the language for a single amendment when proposed by a convention, but then added that the national legislature could "propose amendments" and that "no amendments" could be binding until consented to by the states. 486 Soon after the adoption of Sherman's amendment, Madison succeeded in having the delegates delete any reference to the states proposing single (or any) amendments by the

 $<sup>^{482}</sup>$  See supra text accompanying note 334.

<sup>483</sup> See supra text accompanying notes 344-345. 484 See supra text accompanying note 352.

 $<sup>^{485}</sup>$  See supra text accompanying note 402.

<sup>486</sup> See supra text accompanying note 412. Thus, from approximately July 26 until September 10, proposals were before the Convention that envisioned single amendments proposed to the states. See supra text accompanying notes 395,398,400,402,412. On September 10, the Convention delegates accepted a proposal that allowed the national legislature to propose multiple amendments to the states. See supra text accompanying note 412.

- 1 convention method, leaving the amended version of Article XIX to refer solely
- 2 to the national legislature being able to "propose amendments." The concept
- 3 of singular amendments was never again considered by the delegates. Instead,
- 4 when supporters of the convention method succeeded in reinserting the
- 5 provision, the drafters continued to follow Madison's multiple amendments
- 6 language, allowing the national legislature to "propose amendments" (plural)
- 7 or the states to demand a convention "for proposing Amendments" (plural). 488
- 8 Therefore, the plain language of Article V is clear and decisive:
- 9 Congress shall call a "Convention for proposing Amendments," not a convention
- 10 for proposing an amendment. It is therefore clear than an Article V convention
- 11 has the power to consider various issues (plural) and the right to submit
- 12 various amendments (plural) to the states for consideration and ratification,
- 13 just as Congress has done in the past. 489 In addition, the language in Article
- 14 V does not authorize the states to apply for an amendment; rather they are
- 15 only authorized to apply for a convention for proposing amendments. The states

 $<sup>^{487}</sup>$  See supra text accompanying notes 418,430.

<sup>488</sup> See supra text accompanying notes 437,439,458.

 $<sup>^{489}</sup>$  See S. & H.R.J. Res. 3  $^{1st}$  Cong.,  $1^{st}$  Sess., 1 Stat. 97-98 (1789). In submitting the first set of proposed amendments, Congress forwarded twelve proposed amendments to the state for ratification. Id. Of those twelve, ten were adopted (now known as the Bill of Rights) on Dec. 15, 1791. An eleventh proposal was adopted on May 7, 1992 as Amendment 27 to the United States Constitution leaving only one proposal not ratified.

The text of the rejected article is as follows:

Art. I After the first enumeration required by the first article of the Constitution, there shall be one Representative for every thirty thousand, until the number shall amount to one hundred, after which the proportion shall be so regulated by Congress, that there shall be not less then one hundred Representatives, nor less than one Representative for every forty thousand persons, until the number of Representatives shall amount to two hundred; after which the proportion shall be so regulated by Congress, that there shall not be less than two hundred Representatives, nor more than one Representative for every fifth thousand persons.

have no authority under the article to propose an amendment. That power rests

2 solely with the Congress and the convention to propose amendments. Were it to the contrary, the entire concept of separation of powers would be defeated, as 3

4 the states would have unlimited control of the Constitution, and a small minority of states could easily deflect any effort by the Congress to amend 5

6 the Constitution.

11

15

17

20

7 The focus of Article V is clearly on the ability of the states to demand

8 a convention, and not on the subjects to be considered by such a convention.

In fact, nowhere in the discussion of the delegates at the Constitutional

10 Convention is there demonstrated the slightest inclination toward regulating the subjects of amendments. Rather, the focus is on the process of amendment, 12 and the language of Convention delegates Morris and Gerry who "moved to amend

13 the article so as to require a Convention on application of 2/3 of the Sts...", 490 leaves no doubt as to the intent of the Founding Fathers in regard 14 to the language of Article V. Article V does not require Congress to call a convention when two-thirds of the states call for the same amendment, rather 16

it requires Congress to call a convention when two-thirds of the states call

18 for a convention.

19 The precise reason the convention alternative was included in Article V was to provide a means for proposing amendments despite any opposition or 21 inaction by the national legislature. Therefore, the terms of Article V cannot

22 be construed to defeat that purpose by granting Congress any authority to

<sup>490</sup> See supra text accompanying note 437.

1	obstruct a	convention	in	any	manner	it	might	attempt,	including	failing	tc
---	------------	------------	----	-----	--------	----	-------	----------	-----------	---------	----

2 call in a timely fashion as it is required to do.

3 Thus, if any action of Congress demonstrates the slightest impediment to 4 a convention to propose amendments--- either during the application process by

5 the state legislatures, the required calling, the actual operation of the 6 convention, or in forwarding whatever amendment proposals the convention to 7 the states for ratification--- that action, impediment or inaction must be

8 unconstitutional.

amendatory proposal. 492

9

1011

POST-CONVENTION DISCUSSION OF ARTICLE V

12

19

13 While some Constitutional Convention delegates had expressed little 14 support for an amendatory article during the Convention, saying that such an 15 article wasn't needed, 491 the fact the proposed Constitution was subject to 16 amendment became an important point in support of the adoption of the 17 Constitution, and public debate began as soon as the text of the proposed 18 Constitution became public. Not all views were favorable concerning the

(Footnote Continued Next Page)

&lt;sup>491</sup> 1 FARRAND, supra note 2, at 121 (Madison---June 5), 202 (Madison---June 11). See supra text accompanying notes 357,361,373.

&lt;sup>492</sup> S. MORISON, H. COMMAGER & W. LEUCHTENBURG, A CONCISE HISTORY OF THE AMERICAN REPUBLIC 121 (2nd ed. 1983); W. Peters, A MORE PERFECT UNION: THE MAKING OF THE UNITED STATES CONST.ITUTION 219-20 (1987). On October 10, 1787, Edmund Randolph presented at length his views on the proposed Constitution in a letter to the Speaker of the Virginia House of Delegates. 3 FARRAND, supra note 2, at 123. Randolph specifically discussed his preference that the states should have been allowed to propose amendments to the proposed Constitution, as opposed to either accepting it in its entirety or rejecting it in its entirety:

"I was afraid that if the constitution was to be submitted to the people, to be wholly adopted or wholly rejected by them, they would not only reject it, but bid a lasting farewell to the union. This formidable event I wished to avert, by keeping myself free to propose amendments, and thus, if possible, to remove the obstacles to an effectual government."

Id. at 126. In defending his view, Randolph described why the amendment process contained in the proposed Constitution was not sufficient to alleviate his concerns:

"Again, may I be asked, why the mode pointed out in the constitution for its amendments, may not be a sufficient security against its imperfections, without now arresting it in its progress? My answers are --- 1. That it is better to amend, while we have the constitution in our power, while the passions of designing men are not yet enlisted, and while a bare majority of the States may amend than to wait for the uncertain assent of three-fourths of the States. 2. That a bad feature in government, becomes more and more fixed every day. 3. That frequent changes of a constitution, even if practicable, ought not to be wished, but avoided as much as possible. And 4. That in the present case, it may be questionable, whether, after the particular advantages of its operation shall be discerned, three-fourths of the States can be induced to amend."

Id. at 126-27 Two days later, the fourth installment of the Federalist Farmer was published, criticizing the proposed constitution and particularly focusing on the amendatory provision:

"It may also be worthy our examination, how far the provision for amending this plan, when it shall be adopted, is of any importance. No measures can be taken towards amendments, unless two-thirds of the Congress, or two-thirds of the legislatures of the several states shall agree. Every man of reflection must see, that the change now proposed, is a transfer of power from the many to the few, and the probability is, artful and ever active aristocracy, will prevent all peaceable measures for changes, unless when they shall discover some favourable moment to increase their own influence. I am sensible, thousands of men in the United States are disposed to adopt the proposed constitution, though they perceive it to be essentially defective, under an idea that amendment of it, may be obtained when necessary. This is a pernicious idea..." THE FEDERALIST FARMER No. 4, Storing 2.8.58 (Oct. 12, 1787).

"...[A]fter the constitution is once ratified, it must remain fixed until two-thirds of both the houses of Congress shall deem it necessary to propose amendments; or the legislatures of two-thirds of the several states shall make application to Congress for the calling a convention or proposing amendments..."

"Two-thirds of both houses of congress, or the legislatures of two-thirds of the states, must agree in desiring a convention to be called." ANTIFEDERALIST No. 49 printed in The Massachusetts Gazette, January 29, 1788. (emphasis added).

Clearly, in these passages, the concern of the opponents was that a small numeric number of states could prevent the passage of an amendment desired by the majority of states or members of Congress. It is important to realize that nowhere in this passage, nor in any other argument presented by the opponents of the convention was any other standard but a numeric total of states causing a convention used as an argument. Obviously, if such powers as

(Footnote Continued Next Page)

- On October 27, 1787, several writers favoring the Constitution, using
- 2 the pseudonym "Publius", began publishing arguments in favor of the
- 3 Constitution, which were later republished as THE FEDERALIST. 493 James Madison
- 4 focused particularly on Article V in THE FEDERALIST No. 43. He discussed the
- 5 great value of allowing both Congress and the states to proposed changes in
- 6 the Constitution:

7

8

9

10

11

12

13 14

15

16

"`[t]o provide for amendments to be ratified by three-fourths of the States, under two exceptions only.' That useful alterations will be suggested by experience, could not but be foreseen. It was requisite therefore that a mode for introducing them should be provided. The mode preferred by the Convention seems to be stamped with ever mark of propriety. It guards equally against that extreme facility which would render the Constitution too mutable; and that extreme difficulty which might perpetuate its discovered faults. It moreover equally enables the general and the state governments to originate the amendment of errors as they may be pointed out by the experience on one side or on the other." 494

the Congress now claims by its refusal to call a convention were understood as powers of Congress, clearly the opponents would have used them.  $^{493}$  THE FEDERALIST No. 1 (A. Hamilton) See generally S. MORISON, H. COMMAGER & W. LEUCHTENBUR, A CONCISE HISTORY OF THE AMERICAN REPUBLIC 121 ( $2^{\rm nd}$  ed. 1983). ON January 16, 1788, James Madison, in THE FEDERALIST No. 39, argued that the plan of government reported by the Convention, including the method of amending the proposed Constitution, had the character of being federal as opposed to nation, but that the amendatory provision was a combination of both:

"If we try the Constitution by its last relation to the authority by which amendments are to be made, we find it neither whole national, nor wholly federal. Were it wholly national, the supreme and ultimate authority would reside in the majority of the people of the Union; and this authority would be competent at all times, like that of a majority of every national society to alter or abolish its established government. Were it wholly federal, on the other hand, the concurrence of each State in the Union would be essential to every alteration that would be binding on all. The mode provided by the plan of the convention is not founded on either of these principles. In requiring more than a majority, and particularly, in computing the proportion by States, not by citizens, it departs from the national and advances towards the federal character; in rendering the concurrence of less than the whole number of States sufficient, it loses again the federal, and partakes of the national character."

THE FEDERALIST No. 39 (J. Madison) (Jan. 16, 1788)(emphasis in original).

494 THE FEDERALIST No. 43 (J. Madison)(emphasis added). Madison then went onto state the basis for the two exceptions contained in Article V relating to equal suffrage in the senate and slavery:

"The exception in favour of the equality of suffrage in the senate was probably meant as a palladium to the residuary sovereignty of the States, implied and secured by the principle of representation in one branch of the

(Footnote Continued Next Page)

- 1 In THE FEDERLIST No. 49, Madison discussed whether the people should be
- 2 called upon to resolve conflicts between the various branches of government,
- 3 or to correct breaches of one branch of government against the other branches
- 4 of government. 495 While Madison said he did not refer "the proposed recurrence legislature; and was probably insisted on by the States particularly attached to that equality. The other exception must have been admitted on the same considerations which produced the privilege defended by it." See infra text accompanying note 1620.

Id. One week later, on January 30, the delegates to the Massachusetts Ratifying convention discussed Article V of the proposed Constitution. 2 ELLIOT'S DEBATES 116 (1937). Rufus King began the discussion by responding to the opponents to the new constitution, stating that "many of the arguments of (the) gentlemen were founded on the idea of future amendments being impracticable." Id. No other nation's constitution, King opined, "had so fair an opportunity to correct any abuse which might take place in the future administration of the government under it." Id.

A Dr. Jarvis next spoke on the value of the amendatory provision:
"Whatever may have been my private opinion of any other part, or whatever faults or imperfections I have remarked, or fancied I have Seen, in any other instance, here, sir, I have found complete satisfaction: this has been a resting place on which I have reposed myself in the fullest security, whenever a doubt has occurred, in considering any other passage in the proposed Constitution."

 ${\it Id.}$  Dr. Jarvis especially noted the fact that Article V created an opportunity for peaceful change:

"In other countries, sir---unhappily for mankind,---the history of their respective revolutions has been written in blood... When we shall have adopted the Constitution before us, we shall have in this article an adequate provision for all the purposes of political reformation. If, in the course of its operation, this government shall appear to be too severe, here are the means by which this severity may be assuaged and corrected. If, on the other hand, it shall become too languid in its movements, here, again, we have a method designated, by which a new portion of health and spirit may be infused into the Constitution."

Id. at 116-17. Noting the weakness of the Massachusetts own amendatory provision, which limited the operation of the article for alteration to a given time, Dr. Jarvis state that "in the present Constitution, the article is perfectly at large, unconfined to any period, and may admit of measure being taken in any moment after it is adopted.": Id. at 117. Dr. Jarvis then concluded his argument in favor of the proposed constitution by asserting the following:

"[A]s it is clearly more difficult for twelve states to agree to another convention, than for nine to unite in favor of amendments, so it is certainly better to receive the present Constitution, in the hope of its being amended, tan it would be to reject it altogether, with, perhaps, the vain expectation of obtain another more agreeable than the present."

 $\it Id.$  The Massachusetts Ratifying Convention ratified the proposed national Constitution on February 6, 1788.  $\it Id.$  at 162, 181.  $^{495}$  THE FEDERALIST No. 49 (J. Madison)(Feb 2, 1788). 1 to the people, as a provision in all cases for keeping the several departments

2 of power within their constitutional limits," he nevertheless stated that "a

3 constitutional road to the decision of the people, ought to be marked out, and

4 kept open, for certain great and extraordinary occasions." 496 The proposed

5 Article V would serve this important task.

6 The documentation is clear. By these comments it is obvious the Founding

7 Fathers saw that limits on governmental powers were clearly required, either

8 by the originators of the Constitution working on the document until they got

9 it right, as Mr. Randolph proposed, or by the use of the amendment system

10 contained within the document as Madison and others proposed. But all held a common theme that government powers required checks which that government

12 could neither avoid, deny, regulate nor otherwise blunt in order to limit governmental power. Clearly, therefore, a convention to propose amendments was intended as a check to regulate excesses of the national government, and it was not intended that the national government could avoid, deny, regulate or otherwise blunt this constitutional check for its own self-interest.

17 During the public debate on the adoption of the proposed Constitution, calls such as Randolph's, urging corrections on the document before adoption, led to discussion of calling of a second convention to amend the proposed

Constitution. On May 28, in THE FEDERALIST No. 85, Alexander Hamilton argued

21 against this idea. In his writing, Hamilton said he believed numerous problems

22 would result from attempts to amend the proposed Constitution prior to its

_

11

13

14

15

16

18 19

20

&lt;sup>496</sup> Id.

- 1 adoption. He preferred therefore to correct the faults in the Constitution
- 2 through the amendment process already provided for within the document.
- 3 Hamilton stated:

"[E]very amendment to the constitution, if one established, would be a 5 single proposition, and might be brought forward singly. There would then be 6 no necessity for management or compromise, in relation to any other point, no 7 giving nor taking. The will of the requisite number would at once bring the matter to a decisive issue. And consequently whenever nine, or rather ten 8 9 states, were united in the desire of a particular amendment, that amendment 10 must infallibly take place. There can therefore be no comparison between the facility of effecting an amendment, and that of establishing the first instance a complete constitution."  $^{497}$ 11 12

Many proponents of the view that any convention for proposing constitutional amendments must be limited to a single issue often refer to this passage as supporting their position. However, it is clear these proponents read more into the passage than is actually there, to the point of blatant misconstruement.

First, only when three-quarters of the states (ten states) are "united in the desire of a particular amendment, [must] that amendment must infallibly take place." Two-thirds of the states (nine) will not accomplish the matter, whether the issue is brought by the Congress or a convention, because it does not reflect "the will of the requisite number." Until a proposal is ratified, it has no effect and thus cannot "infallibly take place". Therefore, the only logical conclusion to the meaning of this passage is that Hamilton was speaking of amendment ratification, not proposal. 499

18

19 20 21

22

23

24

25

<sup>497</sup> THE FEDERALIST No. 85 (A. Hamilton)(May 28, 1788).

&lt;sup>499</sup> In FEDERALIST No. 85, Hamilton added a footnote that clearly explained his intent regarding the phrase "nine, or rather ten, states". He wrote:

"It may rather be said TEN, for though two-thirds may set on foot the measure, three fourths must ratify."

- 1 Hamilton's goal in this passage is an attempt to assure people that if
- 2 changes to the national government were desired, the national government would
- 3 not be able to block them. His argument was also directed against the current
- 4 system of change in government, that of the Confederation, which required
- 5 unanimous consent to amend its provisions. 500 He was attempting to show an
- 6 advantage in the new system, that it only required ten states in the
- 7 Constitution to effect change as opposed to the unanimous situation required
- 8 at the time under the Confederation.
- 9 When Hamilton's remarks are considered in their context, the
- 10 interpretation that any convention for proposing constitutional amendments
- 11 must be limited to a single issue is clearly incorrect. 501 Hamilton's comments
- 12 do not address the question of whether a convention would be limited to a

Prefacing the quoted remarks of this suit, Hamilton stated:

BRIEF IN SUPPORT OF CONVENTION GENERAL BRIEF ARGUMENTS PAGE 256

<sup>500</sup> See supra text accompanying note 334.

&quot;It appears to me susceptible of absolute demonstration, that it will be far more easy to obtain subsequent than previous amendments to the Constitution. The moment an alteration is made in the present plan, it becomes, to the purpose of adoption, a new one, and must undergo a new decision of each State. To it complete establishment throughout the Union, it will therefore require the concurrence of thirteen States. If, on the contrary, the Constitution proposed should once be ratified by all the States as it stands, alterations in it may at any time be effected by nine States. Here, then, the chances are as thirteen to nine in favor of subsequent amendment, rather than of the original adoption of an entire system." Footnote omitted; see supra text accompanying note 499.

&quot;This is not all. Every Constitution of the United States must inevitably consist of a great variety of particulars, in which thirteen independent States are to be accommodated in their interests or opinions of interest. We may of course expect to see, in any body of men charged with its original formation, very different combinations of the parts upon different points. Many of those who form a majority on one question, may become the minority on a second, and an association dissimilar to either may constitute the majority on a third. Hence the necessity of moulding and arranging all the particulars which are to compose the whole, in such a manner as to satisfy all the parties to the compact, and to a final act. The degree of that multiplication must evidently be in a ratio to the number of particulars and the number of parties."

- 1 single subject. Instead, his language is clearly focused on his opposition to
- 2 calling a second convention prior to the adoption of the proposed
- 3 Constitution, a convention that could rewrite the document from scratch and
- 4 place the whole of its work before the state legislatures again. His language
- 5 argues that any defects in the proposed Constitution should be repaired by
- 6 post-ratification amendments targeting specific problems, and that the states
- 7 could review and ratify the proposed amendments one at a time.
- 8 It should be remembered, as indicated by the Randolph comments, 502 that
- 9 not all Americans favored adoption of the Constitution. Certainly the calling
- 10 of a second convention would have played into the hands of the document's
- 11 opponents.
- 12 Obviously, Hamilton used arguments that he intended would prevent this
- 13 by demonstrating the advantages and strengths of the proposed Constitution. It
- 14 would be illogical to assume he would therefore propose an amendment system
- 15 for the states that could be vetoed by Congress or was limited in use by the
- 16 states to a single subject as defined by Congress, thus rendering the states
- 17 virtually impotent to amend the Constitution.
- 18 Further, Hamilton did not state that the scope of the subjects
- 19 considered by a convention called for proposing amendments would be limited to
- 20 a single issue. Rather, he was merely stating that once Congress or the
- 21 convention determined what amendments should be made to the Constitution,
- 22 every proposed amendment "would be a single proposition, and might be brought

_

 $<sup>^{502}</sup>$  See supra text accompanying note 492.

- 1 forward singly."503 By such a method, each amendment would be considered by the
- 2 states singly and without the turmoil associated with the rewriting and
- 3 adopting of a completely new constitution each time a change was required.
- 4 This method would also prevent the "all or nothing" result that would occur if
- 5 a block of amendments were presented as one unit.
- 6 It must be remembered that Hamilton was addressing the idea of
- 7 amendments generally, and that his remarks were not addressed specifically to
- 8 the convention method of proposing amendments, any more than they were
- 9 addressed specifically to the identical amendment power of Congress. It is
- 10 only common sense to assume amendments proposed by either Congress or a
- 11 convention would be submitted to the states as individual proposals. Congress,
- 12 after all, submitted the Bill of Rights to the states as a package of twelve
- 13 separate proposals, of which eleven were ratified, but nevertheless each
- 14 separate amendment required individual ratification. 504 By this action, the
- 15 matter of single subject is silenced as Congress itself simultaneously
- 16 submitted twelve different amendments, all on various subjects, to the states
- 17 for ratification. Therefore, like Congress, a convention for proposing
- 18 amendments can draft and simultaneously propose several amendments on
- 19 different subjects that the states could ratify or reject, each on its own
- 20 merits. Hamilton was only pointing out the preferability of this approach to

.

&lt;sup>503</sup> Id

 $<sup>^{504}</sup>$  4 FARRAND, supra note 2, at 93 n.3. The ten amendments received ratification from the states on Dec. 15, 1791. The eleventh proposal was ratified in 1992. See supra text accompanying note 489.

- starting over again with another pre-ratification convention of the originally
- 2 proposed Constitution.
- 3 This point of view especially makes sense when one considers Hamilton's
- 4 concern, which he had just previously discussed in his text, that a second
- 5 convention for the purpose of adding amendments to the proposed Constitution
- 6 would doubtlessly not succeed because of:
- 7 "the necessity of moulding and arranging all the particulars which are
- 8 to compose the whole in such a manner as to satisfy all the parties to the
- 9 compact; and hence also an immense multiplication of difficulties and
- 10 casualties in obtaining the collective assent to a final act." 505
- 11 Thus, any assertion based on Hamilton's words that a convention is
- 12 limited to a single issue is without merit, as clearly Hamilton was discussing
- 13 holding another general convention prior to the original Constitution being
- 14 ratified.

17

18 19 20

21

22

23 24

25

26 27

28

29

30

31 32

33

34

35

36

37

- 15 Hamilton next addressed the assertion that the national government would
- 16 be able to block the amendment process:

"In opposition to the probability of subsequent amendments, it has been urged, that the persons delegated to the administration of the national government, will always be disinclined to yield up any portion of the authority of which they were once possessed. For my own part I acknowledge a thorough conviction that any amendments which may, upon mature consideration, be thought useful, will be applicable to the organization of the government, not the mass of its powers; and on this account alone, I think there is no weight in the observation just stated. I also think there is little weight in it on another account. The intrinsic difficulty of governing THIRTEEN STATES at any rate, independent of calculations upon an ordinary degree of public spirit and integrity, will, in my opinion, constantly impose on the national rulers the necessity of a spirit of accommodation to the reasonable expectations of their constituents. But there is yet a further consideration, which proves beyond the possibility of doubt, that the observation is futile. It is this, that the national rulers, whenever nine states concur, will have no option upon the subject. By the fifth article of the plan the Congress will be obliged 'on the application of the legislatures of two-thirds of the states, (which at present amounts to nine) to call a convention for proposing amendments, which shall be valid to all intents and purposes, as part of the constitution, when ratified by the legislatures of three-fourths of the states, or by conventions in three-fourths thereof.' The words of this article

BRIEF IN SUPPORT OF CONVENTION GENERAL BRIEF ARGUMENTS PAGE 259

 $<sup>^{505}</sup>$  THE FEDERALIST No. 85, supra note 497, 501. (A. Hamilton).

```
particular is left to the discretion of that body. And of consequence all the 3 declamation about their disinclination to a change, vanishes in air. Nor however difficult it may be supposed to unite two-thirds or three-fourths of 5
     the states legislatures, in amendments which may affect local interest, can 6 there be any room to apprehend any such difficulty in a union on points which are merely relative to the general liberty or security of the people. We may 7 safely rely on the disposition of the state legislatures to erect barriers 8 against the encroachments of the national authority."506 10
           It is totally illogical to maintain that Hamilton, in the same article, would propose a convention that would have such sweeping power as to leave:
11
12
           "[T]he national rulers...no option upon the subject... By the fifth article of the plan the Congress will be obliged 'on the application of the 13
14 legislatures of two-thirds of the states, (which at present amounts to nine) to call a convention for proposing amendments, which shall be valid to all 15 intents and purposes, as part of the constitution, when ratified by the 16 legislatures of three-fourths of the states, or by conventions in three-17
18 fourths thereof.' The words of this article are peremptory. The Congress 'shall call a convention.' Nothing in this particular is left to the 19 discretion of that body. And of consequence all the declamation about their 20 disinclination to a change, vanishes in air."507
21
22 and then try to maintain that he believed the same convention system would be 23 limited to a single subject in the proposal of amendments. The idea of using 24
     Hamilton's words to argue for a single subject convention simply collapses in are peremptory. The Congress 'shall call a convention.' Nothing in this 27 minimum number of states applied for a convention to propose amendments for 28 proposing amendments, Congress was required to call such a convention:
```

29 "...national rulers, whenever nine states concur, will have no option
30 upon the subject... The words of this article (V)are peremptory. The Congress
31 'shall call a convention.' Nothing in this particular is left to the 32 discretion of that body."508

It is also clear from Hamilton's language that he believed that once the Hamilton clearly points out that the applications by the states are for applying for a convention to propose amendments, not for a specific amendment.

<sup>507</sup> Id.(emphasis added).

_

25

26

the face of Hamilton's own words.

&lt;sup>506</sup> Id.

&lt;sup>508</sup> Id.

- 1 It is also clear that even Hamilton, the preeminent proponent of national
- 2 power, 509 believed that Congress' role in calling a convention was extremely
- 3 limited, as shown by his comment, "[n]othing...is left to the discretion of
- 4 that body." 510 As Hamilton, and Morris, one of the originators of the Gerry-broad interpretation of implied powers for the federal government. As such, when Hamilton said the government had no discretion in calling a convention to propose amendments, it must be eminently clear he was leaving absolutely no room for the government to maneuver out of the obligation. Had there been any intent on the part of the Founders that Congress possessed even the tiniest speck of discretion in issuing a convention call, Hamilton, as the author of the final language inserted into the Constitution, would have found that speck and expanded it into a mountain. Instead, Hamilton is emphatic as only Hamilton could be. Congress shall have no discretion in the matter.

510 Id. On June 5 the delegates of the Virginia Ratifying Convention began discussing Article V of the proposed Constitution. Concerned that the method of amending the proposed Constitution would prove too difficult, Patrick Henry stated:

"The way to amendment is, in my conception, shut... However uncharitable it may appear, yet I must tell my opinion---that the most unworthy characters may get into power, and prevent the introduction of amendments. Let us suppose---for the case is supposable, possible, and probable---that you happen to deal those powers to unworthy hands; will they relinquish powers already in their possession, or agree to amendments? Two-thirds of the Congress, or of the state legislature, are necessary even to propose amendments. If one-third of these be unworthy men, they may prevent the application for amendments; but what is destructive and mischievous, is, that three-fourths of the state legislatures, or of the state conventions, must concur in the amendments when proposed! In such numerous bodies, there must necessarily be some designing, bad men. To suppose that so large a number as three-fourths of the states will concur, is to suppose that they will possess genius, intelligence, and integrity, approaching to miraculous. It would indeed be miraculous that they should concur in the same amendments..."

3 ELLIOT'S DEBATES 49 (1937). According to Patrick Henry, "a most despicable minority" could prevent amendment if the government should prove to be oppressive. Id. at 55.

The next day, James Madison respond to Patrick Henry's concerns. Madison argued that it was better to adopt a constitution that allows amendment by three-fourths of the states rather than to continue with the unanimity requirement contained in the Articles of Confederation. Madison stated:

"He [Patrick Henry] complains of this Constitution, because it requires the consent of at least three-fourths of the states to introduce amendments which shall be necessary for the happiness of the people. The assent of so many he urges as too great an obstacle to the admission of salutary amendments, which, he strongly insists, ought to be at the will of a bare majority... Does not the thirteenth article of the Confederation expressly require that no alteration shall be made without the unanimous consent of all the states?!... Would the honorable gentleman agree to continue the most

- 1 Morris amendment, were members of the committee<sup>511</sup> that drafted the final
- 2 language of the Constitution, it is obvious Hamilton knew exactly what the
- 3 Constitution meant regarding the actions of the national government. His
- 4 answer is emphatic: no discretion. 512 The only standard Hamilton recognized as
- 5 a limitation to a convention being called was that of the prerequisite number
- of states applying for one; 513 after that things were automatic. 514 radical defects in the old system, because the petty state of Rhode Island would not agree to remove them?"

Id. at 88-89. Wilson Nicholas also responded to the assertion that it would be difficult to obtain amendments to the new Constitution. Nicholas referred directly to the alternative of conventions for proposing amendments:

"The worthy member [Patrick Henry] has exclaimed, with uncommon vehemence, against the mode provided for securing amendments. He thinks amendments can never be obtained, because so great a number is required to concur. Had it rested solely with Congress, there might have been danger. The committee will see that there is another mode provided, besides that which originates with Congress. On the application of the legislatures of two-thirds of the several states, a convention is to be called to propose amendments, which shall be part of the Constitution when ratified by the legislatures of three-fourths of the several states, or by conventions in three-fourths thereof. It is natural to conclude that those states who will apply for calling the convention will concur in the ratification of the proposed amendments."

Id. at 101-102. Nicholas added that the state ratifying conventions would be even more likely to agree to the proposed amendments because the proposals would be presented to the states singly. Nicholas stated:

"There are strong and cogent reasons operating on my mind, that the amendments, which shall be agreed to by those states, will be sooner ratified by the rest than any other that can be proposed. The conventions which shall be so called will have their deliberations confined to a few points; no local interest to divert their attention; nothing be the necessary alterations. They will have many advantages over the last Convention. No experiments to devise; the general and fundamental regulations being already laid down."

Id. at 102. Virginia ratified the Constitution on June 25, 1788. Id. at 627, 654-55.

511 See supra text accompanying note 426,427.

It is clear Hamilton's language not only discusses the expressed power of Congress but the limits and extent of Congress' implied powers. After all, the term "no discretion" is not used in Article V. Thus, the term must be meant to describe the implied powers of Congress in this matter. See infra text accompanying note 627.

In the paragraph following the statement "Nothing in this particular is left to the discretion of that body" Hamilton continued:

"If the foregoing argument is a fallacy, certain it is that I am myself deceived by it, for it is, in my conception, one of those rare instances in which a political truth can be brought to the test of a mathematical demonstration." FEDERALIST No.85 (A. Hamilton)(emphasis added). See infra text accompanying note 1439.

However his words have been misinterpreted, it is clear that James Madison also understood the intent of Article V, that the purpose of the applications by the states was not to favor a particular amendment proposal but to compel Congress to call a convention. In a letter written to George Eve, January 2, 1789, Madison wrote:

"I have intimated that the amendments [referring to the yet to be written Bill of Rights] ought to be proposed by the first Congress. I prefer this mode to that of a General Convention. 1st. Because it is the expeditious mode. A convention must be delayed, until 2/3 of the State Legislatures shall have applied for one; and afterwards the amendments must be submitted to the States: whereas if the business be undertaken by Congress the amendments may be prepared and submitted in March next." (emphasis added) UNFOUNDED FEARS: MYTHS AND REALITIES OF A CONSTITUTIONAL CONVENTION (1989) (P. Weber, B. Perry).

The language is unequivocal. Madison clearly understood the purpose of the applications by the states was to cause a convention to be called, not to submit a subject to Congress for that body to approve. While he clearly recognized the congressional method of proposal was more "expeditious", nevertheless his words are clear and unambiguous regarding the purposes of applications to Congress for a convention.

This is not the only example where Madison's interpretation was expressed and agreed to by other Framers:

"Framer John Dickinson, in a newspaper essay, agreed: 'whatever their [Congress] sentiments may be, they [Congress] must call a convention for proposing amendments, on the applications of two-thirds of the legislatures of the several states.'(1)

"In a published letter, Madison wrote: 'the question concerning a General Convention, does not depend on the discretion of Congress. If two thirds of the States make application, Congress cannot refuse to call one; if not, Congress have no right to take the step.'(2) On May 5, 1789, when Virginia's convention application was resented to Congress, Madison informed his colleagues in the House of Representatives that when 'two-thirds of the State Legislatures concurred in such application,... it is out of the power of Congress to decline complying, the words of the Constitution being express and positive relative to the agency Congress may have in case of applications of this natures.' From the words of article V 'it must appear that Congress have no deliberative power on this occasion.'"(3) Caplan, Constitutional Brinksmanship: Amending the Constitution by National Convention, (1988)(emphasis in original). Footnotes as noted below:

- (1) 3 Elliot at 636; 4id. at 178; Letter No. 8 of "Fabius" (John Dickinson), in P. Ford, ed., Pamphlets on the Constitution of the United States 204, 210 (1888) (letters first published serially in the Delaware Gazette [Wilmington], 1788; first pamphlet ed., 1797).
- (2) James Madison to Thomas Mann Randolph, Jan. 13, 1789, in 11 Madison Papers at 417. The letter was published in the Virginia Herald on January 15, in the Virginia Independent Chronicle on January 28, and in other periodicals. R. Ketcham, James Madison: A Biography 276 (1971). Similarly, James Madison to George Eve, Jan. 2, 1789, in 11 Madison Papers at 405.

Hamilton's interpretation is repeated and even more defined by the

- 2 comments of Wilson Nicholas of Virginia: 515
- 3 "On the application of the legislatures of two-thirds of the several states, a convention is to be called to propose amendments..."  $^{516}$
- 5 Then, in reference to ratifying any proposed amendment, Nicholas
- 6 restates the proposition and clearly demonstrates the correct interpretation
- 7 of the power of the convention to propose amendments:
- 8 "...those states who will apply for calling the convention will concur 9 in the ratification of the proposed amendments."  $^{517}$
- 10 In the North Carolina ratifying convention, James Iredell discussed the
- 11 manner in which amendments could be proposed, specifically referring to the
- 12 ability of the states to demand changes through the convention method of
- 13 proposing amendments. Iredell stated:

"Let us attend to the manner in which amendments may be made. The proposition for amendments may arise from Congress itself, when two-thirds of both house shall deem it necessary. If they should not, and yet amendments be generally wished for by the people, two-thirds of the legislatures of the different states may require a general convention for the purpose, in which case Congress are under the necessity of convening one." 518

14

15

16 17

18

19

<sup>(3) 1</sup> Annals of Cong. 260 (1789). Similarly, id. at 260-61 (Reps. Boudinot, Bland, and Tucker); 5 id. at 498, 530 (1796) (Reps. Smith and Lyman).

 $<sup>^{515}</sup>$  See supra text accompanying note 510.

<sup>516</sup> TA

 $<sup>^{517}</sup>$  Id. (emphasis added).

 $<sup>^{518}</sup>$  4 ELLIOT'S DEBATES 177 (1937).(emphasis added). Earlier during his speech, Iredell spoke out on the importance of Article V:

&quot;Mr. Chairman, this is a very important clause. In every other constitution of government that I have ever heard or read of, no provision is made for necessary amendments. The misfortune attending most constitutions which have been deliberately formed, has been, that those who formed them thought their wisdom equal to all possible contingencies, and that there could be no error in what they did. The gentlemen who framed this Constitution though with much more diffidence of their capacities; and undoubtedly, without a provision for amendment it would have been more justly liable to objection, and the characters of its framers would have appeared much less meritorious. This, indeed, is one of the greatest beauties of the system, and should strongly recommend it to every candid mind."

Id. at 176. Iredell also perceived the ability of the amendment process to prevent bloodshed, as is shown by his language quoted at the beginning of this document. (see Id.; see supra text accompanying note 1). According to Iredell, it was "highly probable that amendments agreed to in either of these methods

Iredell's comments again serve to underscore the intent of the meaning 2 of the convention provision in Article V. 3 "If...amendments [are]...generally wished...two-thirds of the legislatures may require a general convention for the purpose, in which case 4 Congress are under the necessity of convening one."519 5 6 Iredell words cannot be more plain. The purpose of Article V is allow 7 the states to apply for a general convention, not for an amendment. The 8 convention can propose amendments, and Congress must call a convention on the 9 application of the proper number of states. If there is any further doubt, then the discussion between Iredell and a 10 11 Mr. Bass at the North Carolina ratifying convention ends it. Bass commented to 12 the ratifying convention that: 13 "[I]t was plain that the introduction of amendments depended altogether on [the will of] Congress." 520 14 15 Iredell responded to Bass by saying: 16 "[I]t was very evident that it did not depend on the will of Congress; would be conducive to the public welfare, when so large a majority of the states consented to them." 4 ELLIOT'S DEBATES 176 (1937).

519 See supra text accompanying note 518. (emphasis added).

application for calling a convention to propose amendments and, on such application, it is provided that Congress shall call such a convention, so that they will have no option."  $^{521}$ for that the legislatures of two-thirds of the states were authorized to make

<sup>520</sup> 4 ELLIOT'S DEBATES 178 (1937).

17 18

19 20

Jet Id. Although North Carolina's first ratifying convention refused either to adopt or reject the proposed Constitution, North Carolina's second ratifying convention finally ratified the Constitution on November 19, 1789, some seven months after the first Congress assembled and some six months after President Washington's inauguration. W. Peters, A MORE PERFECT UNION; THE MAKING OF THE UNITED STATES CONST.ITUTION 234 (1987). Article V was also of great concern to President Washington. In his first inaugural address (1789), Washington said:

"Beside the ordinary objects submitted to your care, it will remain with your judgment to decide how far an exercise of the occasional power delegated by the fifth article of the Constitution is rendered expedient...by the nature of objections which have been urged against the system, or by the degree of inquietude which has given birth to them."

43 THE HARVARD CLASSIC, AMERICAN HISTORICAL DOCUMENTS 1000-1904, at 225, 227

(C. Eliot ed. 1910)(reprinting Washington's First Inaugural Address (Apr. 30, 1789)). In his Farewell Address (1796), after eight years of service as president, Article V again occupied Washington's thoughts: "The basis of our political systems is the right of the People to make and to alter their

(Footnote Continued Next Page)

BRIEF IN SUPPORT OF CONVENTION GENERAL BRIEF ARGUMENTS PAGE 265

1	It is clear from the various comments made at the ratifying conventions
2	that Article V was perceived as a viable method of correcting errors that
3	might be found in the new Constitution. It is also as clear that no one, not
4	even the opponents of the Constitution, interpreted Article V's convention
5	clause to mean that Congress had a right to regulate the convention, that the
6	convention could only propose a single subject, that two-thirds of the states
7	had to agree on this subject before a convention was called, or that Congress
8	had the power to interpret whether or not a single subject had been applied
9	for by the states.
10	Instead, the post-convention record demonstrates that the Founding
11	Fathers and those who ratified the Constitution believed that the convention
11	Fathers and those who ratified the Constitution believed that the convention method contained in Article V was intended to provide a way to circumvent
12	method contained in Article V was intended to provide a way to circumvent
12 13	method contained in Article V was intended to provide a way to circumvent  Congress, that Congress had no choice but to call a convention upon the proper
12 13 14	method contained in Article V was intended to provide a way to circumvent  Congress, that Congress had no choice but to call a convention upon the proper  number of states requesting a convention, that this convention was free and
12 13 14 15	method contained in Article V was intended to provide a way to circumvent  Congress, that Congress had no choice but to call a convention upon the proper  number of states requesting a convention, that this convention was free and  independent of congressional control and regulation, and that it had the power

19

Constitutions of Government---But the constitution which at any time exists, 'till changed by and explicit and authentic act of the whole People, is sacredly obligatory upon all." Id. at 233, 239 (reprinting Washington's Farewell Address (Sept. 19, 1796)). Washington further added: "If, in the opinion of the People, the distribution or modification of the Constitutional powers be in any particular wrong, let it be corrected by an amendment in the way which the Constitution designates -- But let there be no change by usurpation..."Id. at 242. In these two famous orations, Washington referred more specifically to Article V than to any other provision of the Constitution.

2

21

3 In spite of the attention the convention method of amendment received during and after the 1787 Constitutional Convention, an amendment has never 4 been drafted and proposed by convention. 522 In fact, the convention method of 5 6 amendment has been called a "constitutional curiosity," the forgotten part of 7 the article, and "[o]ne of the best-known 'dead letter' clauses in the federal Constitution."523 8 9 This assumption is completely false. It cannot be assumed that simply 10 because the convention to propose amendments has not been used since the 11 implementation of the Constitution, that it is "dead," any more than it can be assumed that because no dictator has ever taken control of a state that the 12 13 constitutional guarantee of a republican form of government for the states is 14 "dead." 15 The Supreme Court stated the matter succinctly: "Nothing new can be put into the constitution except through the 16 amendatory process, and nothing old can be taken out without the same process."  $^{524}\,$ 17 18 19 If it is granted that the convention provision of Article V is "dead," 20 then how can it be said the Constitution is the supreme law of the land if the government the Constitution is supposed to limit possesses the unlimited power

Ullmann v. U.S. 350 U.S. 422 (1956). In the same ruling the Court also stated, "As no constitutional guarantee enjoys preference, so none should suffer subordination or deletion.". See Marbury v. Madison, 5 U.S. 137 (1803). "It cannot be presumed that any clause in the constitution is intended to be without effect."

- to arbitrarily and capriciously ignore its provisions with impunity? Does it
- not mean, in fact, the entire Constitution, not just the convention, is 2
- "dead"? 3
- The doctrine of laches simply does not apply here. 525 The fact is, a 4
- convention to propose amendments has not occurred not because the states have 5
- 6 failed to exercise their right to apply for a convention, but because Congress
- 7 has failed to follow its mandated constitutional duty to call one. Its failure
- 8 to obey the Constitution does not "kill" that portion of Article V and render
- it invalid; rather this congressional laches threatens the entire
- 10 Constitution.
- 11 The Supreme Court has repeatedly ruled that any provision in the United - States Constitution may only be altered or invalidated by an amendment to the 12
- Constitution, 526 not by arbitrary decision on the part of the government.527 13

 $<sup>^{525}</sup>$  'Doctrine of laches,' is based upon maxim that equity aids the vigilant and not those who slumber on their rights. It is defined as neglect to assert a right or claim which, taken together with lapse of time and other circumstances causing prejudice to adverse party, operates as bar in court of equity." BLACK'S LAW DICTIONARY, 6th ed. (1990).

This doctrine, however, has absolutely no place in constitutional law. The idea that the government can void a right guaranteed by the Constitution simply by delaying any action on the matter is so blatantly repulsive to the spirit, if not the letter, of the Constitution as to warrant no further comment.

Further, is it not Congress, under the doctrine of laches that has forfeited any supposed right to influence a convention call in refusing to deal with the matter in a timely fashion? The government cannot be allowed to bury its head in the sand for almost a century regarding the calling of a convention, refusing to enact any legislation on the matter when mandated to do so, then cry "Foul! The doctrine of laches applies to the states!"

The Court has ruled the states still retain the rights assigned them by the Constitution even if they have use them; thus, there are no time limits on rights. Further, the Court has held the states cannot consent to an unconstitutional act and therefore cannot negate these rights. Under both circumstances, therefore, the doctrine of laches cannot apply. See infra text accompanying notes 1180-1205.

526 It could be argued that any statute which is contrary to the Constitution, and thus unconstitutional, technically is an illegal "amendment" to the

- 1 Further, as revisions contained in several amendments indicate, 528 the
- 2 provisions of the Constitution are only "dead" when they are replaced or
- 3 altered by a constitutional amendment. Indeed, almost all amendments have been
- 4 added to correct deficiencies in the original document, which is exactly what
- 5 the Founders intended when they wrote Article V.

Constitution. The Supreme Court has struck down over 124 such acts as of 1992. CONGRESSIONAL QUARTERLY'S GUIDE TO THE U.S. SUPREME COURT,  $2^{\rm ND}$  EDITION, 1992, E. WITT, p.1001-1009. Further, the Court has addressed specific challenges regarding constitutional clauses, i.e. Hollingsworth v. Virginia, 3 U.S. 378 (1798), Slaughterhouse cases, 83 U.S. 36 (1872), Powell v. McCormack, 395 U.S. 486 (1969), U.S. Term Limits, Inc. v. Thornton, 514 U.S. 779 (1995). See supra text accompanying note 524.

Indeed, in United States v. Sprague, 282 U.S. 716 (1931), it was urged by the appellate party that "it was the intent of its framers, and the Constitution must, therefore, be taken impliedly to require, that proposed amendments conferring on the United States new direct powers over individuals shall be ratified in conventions...that the framers thought that ratification of the Constitution must be by the people in convention assembled and not by legislatures, as the latter were incompetent to surrender the personal liberties of the people to the new national government."

The Court disagreed and said in response:

"Thus, however, clear the phraseology of article 5, they urge we ought to insert into it a limitation on the discretion conferred on the Congress, so that it will read, 'as the one of the other mode of ratification my be proposed by the Congress, as may be appropriate in view of the purpose of the proposed amendment.' This can not be done.

"The Constitution was written to be understood by the voters; its words and phrases were used in their normal and ordinary as distinguished from technical meaning; where the intention is clear there is no room for construction and no excuse for interpolation or addition. Martin v. Hunter's Lessee, 1 Wheat. 304; Gibbons v. Ogden, 9 Wheat, 1; Brown v. Maryland, 12 Wheat 419; Craig v. Missouri, 4 Pet. 410; Tennessee v. Whitworth, 117 U.S. 139, 6 S.Ct. 649; Lake County v. Rollins, 130 U.S. 662, 9 S. Ct. 651; Hodges v. United States, 203 U.S. 1, 27 S. Ct. 6; Edwards v. Cuba R. Co., 268 U.S. 628, 45 S. Ct. 614; The Pocket Veto Case, 279 U.S. 655, 49 S. Ct. 463; Story on the Constitution (5th Ed.) 451; Cooley's Constitutional Limitations 2d Ed.) pp. 61, 70.

"If the framers of the instrument had any thought that amendments differing in purpose should be ratified in different ways, nothing would have been simpler that so to phrase article 5 as to exclude implication or speculation. The fact that an instruments drawn with such meticulous care and by men who so well understood how to make language fit their thought does not contain any such limiting phrase affecting the exercise of discretion by the Congress in choosing one or the other alternative mode or ratification is persuasive evidence that no qualification was intended." (emphasis added).  $^{528}$  U.S. CONST.,  $11^{\rm th}$ ,  $16^{\rm th}$ ,  $18^{\rm th}$ ,  $20^{\rm th}$ ,  $25^{\rm th}$ ,  $26^{\rm th}$  amendments.

1	The	point	of	constitutional	law	is	obvious	and	plain:	any	provision	οſ

- 2 the United States Constitution is in full effect and force until altered by
- 3 amendment. Any other concept would be catastrophic, reducing the entire
- 4 document to nothing more than national hypocrisy.
- 5 The right of the people to "alter or abolish...any Form of Government" 529
- 6 was seen by the colonists as a right central to the new system of American
- 7 democracy. Critical to this concept was Article V of the United States
- 8 Constitution which embodied a convention to propose amendments called by the
- 9 states. However, to this date, due to the laches by Congress, the right of the
- 10 states to hold a convention has been effectively abrogated.
- 11 This laches has spawned many popular and completely mistaken beliefs.

12 Among them:

13

14

15

16

17 18

19 20 21

22

23

- 1. A convention to propose amendments may only be held to propose a single subject amendment;
- 2. A convention to propose amendments may only be held if two-thirds of the states request the same single subject for amendment;
- 3. A convention to propose amendments may only be held if the subject is contemporaneous;
- 4. A convention to propose amendments may only be held under those regulations Congress may choose to impose;
- 5. A convention to propose amendments may have its proposed amendment vetoed by Congress should Congress refuse to submit said amendments to the states for ratification.  $^{530}$

<sup>529</sup> S. MORISON, H. COMMAGER & W. LEUCHTENBURG, A CONCISE HISTORY OF THE AMERICAN REPUBLIC 98 (2d ed. 1983); see also the Declaration of Independence para. 2 (U.S. 1776); see also FEDERALIST No. 40 (J. Madison); "...the transcendent and precious right of the people to "abolish or alter their governments as to them shall seem most likely to effect their safety and happiness."

<sup>530</sup> See infra text accompanying notes 593-612. See also Bond & Engdahl, THE CONSTITUTIONAL CONVENTION, The Duties and Powers of Congress Regarding Conventions For Proposing Amendments", Nat'l. Legal Center for the Public Interest, p.4-5(1987). It is interesting to note that despite the apparent support by Bond & Engdahl for this mistaken belief, they conclude:

&quot;In sum, the determinative function of Congress with regard to Article V conventions for proposing amendments begins and ends with the call; and even the determination whether to issue a call is removed from Congress' discretion, when two-thirds of the States apply. The Framers seem deliberately

- Of course Congress has determined that Congress is to be the sole 1
- arbiter of whether the states have met these pseudo-constitutional 2
- standards. 531 But even when these pseudo-constitutional standards of same 3
- 4 subject, contemporaneousness, et al., are met by the states, Congress has not
- acted. 532 5
- 6 Commentators are mistaken in their assertions that the Article V
- 7 convention provision is "forgotten" or a "dead letter" because the mere threat
- 8 posed by drives to call a convention for proposing amendments has a
- substantial in terrorem effect on the actions of Congress. 533 As a result of
- 10 this phenomenon, Congress has been prodded into proposing several
- constitutional amendments. 534 11
- It is true the threat of a convention has caused Congress to propose 12
- amendments regarding the direct election of senators (17th Amendment), 535 13
- repealing prohibition (18th Amendment), 536 limiting Presidential terms (22nd 14
- 15 Amendment), $^{537}$  and instituting the presidential succession plan (25th

to have made it so. If this be true, regardless how desirable it might seem for Congress to legislate answers to some of the many questions that are certain to arise if such a convention is called, those questions simply are beyond Congress' power to resolve. (emphasis added). The most it can do, even in the form of legislation, is to offer non-binding counsel." Id. p. 15. 531 See infra text accompanying notes 435-437,439,458,465-472,486,487,496,497-

532 See infra text accompanying notes 541,1302,

TABLE 6-SAME SUBJECT APPLICATIONS, PART I, p.681;

TABLE 6-SAME SUBJECT APPLICATIONS, PART II, p. 682;

TABLE 9-SAME SUBJECT APPLICATIONS INCLUDING CAPLAN, PART I, p.689;

TABLE 9-SAME SUBJECT APPLICATIONS INCLUDING CAPLAN, PART II, p.690.

 $^{533}$  See Voegler, supra text accompanying note 332, at 358.

 $^{535}$  Conley, Amending the Constitution: Is This Any Way to Call For a Constitutional Convention?, 22 ARIZ. L. REV. 1011, 1016 n.49 (1980). <sup>536</sup> Id. <sup>537</sup> Id.

- 1 Amendment). 538 Even during this current session of Congress, efforts to add
- 2 amendments to the Constitution by convention continue in such areas as term
- 3 limits. 539 This effect has also caused Congress to enact earlier legislation,
- 4 such as the Budget Control  $Act^{540}$  and the Balanced Budget  $Act.^{541}$  Further, the
- 5 risk of a single topic reaching the two-thirds requirement for a convention
- 6 has caused Congress to seek relief by amendment from controversial Supreme
- 7 Court decisions. For example, during the first four months of the 97th
- 8 Congress (1981-82), 145 proposals for constitutional amendments were offered
- 9 dealing with school busing, racial integration, prayer in public schools,
- 10 abortion, and the use of racial quotas. 542
- 11 This congressional preemptive response to a single topic convention has
- 12 been termed "...a natural and even desirable process." 543 Congress, as the
- 13 national legislative body, serves as a testing ground for evaluating the
- 14 strengths, wisdom and consequences of various amendment proposals. It then
- 15 responds, sometimes by taking no action, other times by drafting and proposing

&lt;sup>538</sup> Id.

&lt;sup>539</sup> U.S. Term Limits, www.termlimits.org. (April 5, 1997).

<sup>540</sup> Congressional Budget and Parliament Control Act of 1974, Pub. L. No. 93-344, 88 Stat. 297 (1974); Pub. L. No. 95-100, 91 Stat. 994 (1977); Pub. L. No. 99-177, 99 Stat. 1039, 1062 (1985). See also Buckwalter, Constitutional Conventions & State Legislators, 20 J. Pub. L. 543, 548 (1971).
541 Palarged Pudget & Transports Posicit Control Act of 1085 Pub. L. No. 90

Balanced Budget & Emergency Deficit Control Act of 1985, Pub. L. No. 99-177, Title 2,99 Stat. 1038 (1985); Pub. L. No. 99-509, Title 7, 100 Stat. 1949 (1986). As to convention applications, the states have submitted more than enough applications in this pseudo-constitutional standard to compel a convention. See

TABLE 6-SAME SUBJECT APPLICATIONS, PART I, p.681;

TABLE 9-SAME SUBJECT APPLICATIONS INCLUDING CAPLAN, PART I, p.689.

&lt;sup>542</sup> Rackoff, "The Monster Approaching the Capital": The effort to Write Economic Policy into the United States Constitution, 15 AKRON L. REV. 733, 745 (1982).

Van Sickle, A Lawful and Peaceful Revolution: Article V and Congress' Present Duty to Call a Convention for Proposing Amendments", 14 HAM. L. REV. No. 1 at 38 (1990).

1 amendments, and sometimes by using the less cumbersome solution of statutory

2 enactment. But this testing ground concept does not relieve Congress of its

3 obligation under the Constitution to call a convention when the states have

4 applied for it. It is the actual act of calling that must set the standard to 5 determine that Congress has satisfied the constitutional requirement, not

6 attempts by that body to placate the states by proposing amendments or 7 employing other legislative actions to avoid the constitutional mandate.

8 What Congress has ignored is the cumulative intent of the states, i.e.,

9 the correct and legal desire by the states to hold a convention regardless of whatever subjects are discussed. Forty-nine states have applied for a 11 convention to propose amendments. 544 While the subject matters of the applications vary, they all share one commonality: the calling of a convention

13 to propose amendments.

10

12

15

16

17

18 19 20

21

14 As the number and frequency of the applications has increased in the last several years, Congress has responded, but in a totally inappropriate and unconstitutional manner. Its response to its constitutionally mandated action of calling a convention has been, instead of a call, a history of attempts to pass legislation that would give Congress complete control over an Article V convention and serve to make that process of amendment no more than a subservient arm of congressional whim and veto, precisely opposite of what the Founding Fathers intended. 545 This response by Congress can only be considered

TABLE 2-STATES APPLYING FOR A CONVENTION, p.673.

BRIEF IN SUPPORT OF CONVENTION GENERAL BRIEF ARGUMENTS PAGE 273

&lt;sup>544</sup> See infra

&lt;sup>545</sup> See supra text accompanying notes 437, 459-490, 518.

1	a direct threat to the concept of government "by the people" and beyond the
2	authority of Congress as granted to it by the Constitution.
3
4
5
6
7
8
9 10 11
12
13	CONGRESS' LIMITED ROLE IN CALLING A CONVENTION FOR PROPOSING AMENDMENTS
14
15	INTRODUCTION
16
17	Limited Power Granted to Congress by Article V
18
19
20	Some organizations, such as the American Bar Association, $^{546}$ and
21	prominent individuals, such as senators, attorneys general and legal scholars
22	have asserted that Congress has the power to establish procedures governing

 $<sup>^{546}</sup>$  See infra APPENDIX C---1973 REPORT OF THE ABA SPECIAL CONSTITUTIONAL CONVENTION STUDY COMMITTEE, p. 1.

- 1 the calling of a national convention to propose amendments. 547 The decisive
- 2 defect in the position supporting congressional control of a convention to
- 3 propose amendments and in proposed legislation attempting to control and limit
- 4 the convention, is that proposals would far exceed the authority of Congress
- 5 to legislate in this area.
- 6 Congress can only possess the authority granted to it by the
- 7 Constitution. 548 The Constitution's only grant of authority to Congress to
- 8 involve itself in a convention for proposing amendments is found in Article V:

E.g., S. REP. No. 135, 99th Cong. 1st Sess., at 22-23; Ervin, Proposed Legislation to Implement the Convention Method of Amending the Constitution, 66 MICH. L. REV. 8875, 879 (1968); Connely, Amending the Constitution: Is This Any Way to Call for a Constitutional Convention?, 22 ARIZ. L. REV. 1011, 1018 (1980); ABA Special Constitutional Convention Study Comm., Amendment of the Constitution By the Convention Method Under Article V 31-32 (1974), referred to in S. REP No. 135, 99th Cong., 1st Sess., at 23 (1985); 79-75 Memo. Op. Att'y Gen 390 (1979); Bond & Engdahl, THE CONSTITUTIONAL CONVENTION, The Duties and Powers of Congress Regarding Conventions For Proposing Amendments", Nat'l. Legal Center for the Public Interest, 4-5 (1987). See supra text accompanying notes 418,430.

U.S. CONST., amend. 10; "The government of the United States can claim no powers which are not granted to it by the Constitution." Martin v. Hunter's Lessee, 14 U.S. 304 (1816); "[The] court may not construe Constitution so as to defeat its obvious ends when another construction equally accordant with the words and sense thereof, will enforce and protect them." Prigg v. Commonwealth of Pennsylvania, 14 U.S. 539 (1842); "In construing the Federal Constitution, Congress must be held to have only those powers which are granted expressly or by necessary implication." Chicago B&Q Railroad Co. v. Otoe County, 83 U.S. 667 (1872); "The national government possesses no powers but such as have been delegated to it, whereas the states have all but such as have been surrendered." Gilman v. City of Philadelphia, 70 U.S. 713 (1865); Hall v. State of Wisconsin, 103 U.S. 5 (1880); "The government of the United States is one of limited powers, and no department possesses any authority not granted by the Constitution." Hepburn v. Griswold, 75 U.S. 603 (1869); "Federal government is one of enumerated powers, and, while such powers are to be reasonably and fairly construed with a view to effectuating their purposes, an attempted exercise of a power clearly beyond true purpose of grant cannot be sustained." United States v. Harris, 106 U.S. 629 (1882); "If an act passed by Congress is not one which Congress is expressly authorized to enact, the question arises as to whether it is properly an incident to a power expressly granted to Congress, and necessary to the execution of such powers, and if it is not the act is void." Id.; "Every act of Congress must find in the Constitution some warrant for its passage." Id.. See also Railroad Retirement Board. v. Alton Railroad Co., 295 U.S. 330 (1935).

- 1 "The Congress...on the Application of the Legislatures of two-thirds of 2 the several States, shall call a Convention for proposing Amendments..." <sup>549</sup>
- 3 The language of Article V is plain and simple. Article V clearly and
- 4 plainly limits Congress' role in a convention for proposing amendments to the
- 5 "calling" of the convention. 550 This interpretation is supported by the long-
- 6 standing rule of constitutional construct that "[t]he words are to be taken in
- 7 their natural and obvious sense and not in sense unreasonably restricted or
- 8 enlarged." 551

Clearly, in the case of the convention to propose amendments, the framers sought to withdraw authority from the Congress to exclusively control the amendatory process and this "withdrawal" was approved by the people in conventions assembled. Therefore, Congress cannot exceed its limited authority granted to it under Article V. See supra text accompanying notes 436-439,527. 551 Martin v. Hunter's Lessee, 14 U.S. 304 (1816); see also: "Where the text of the constitution is clear and distinct, no restriction on its plain and obvious import should be admitted unless the inference is irresistible." Id.; "The framers of the constitution and the people who adopted it must be understood to have employed words in their natural sense and to have intended that which was said." Gibbons v. Ogden, 22 U.S. 1 (1824); "Where provision in United States Constitution is unambiguous and its meaning is entirely free from doubt, the intention of the framers of the constitution cannot be inquired into, and the Supreme Court is bound to give the provision full operation, whatever might be the views entertained of its expediency." (Per Justice Thompson) Ogden v. Saunders, 25 U.S. 213 (1827); see also Trimble, J., concurring; Brown v. Maryland, 25 U.S. 419 (1827); Craig v. Missouri, 29 U.S. 410 (1830); Holmes v. Jennison, 39 U.S. 540 (1840); "Court may not construe

 $<sup>^{549}</sup>$  U.S. CONST., art. V.

 $<sup>^{550}</sup>$  Id. See also United States v. Chambers, 291 U.S. 217 (1934): "The Congress, however, is powerless to expand or extend its constitutional authority. The Congress, while it could propose, could not adopt the constitutional amendment or vary the terms or effect of the amendment when adopted... The National Prohibition Act was not repealed by act of Congress, but was rendered inoperative, so far as authority to enact its provisions was derived from the Eighteenth Amendment, by the repeal, not by the Congress but by the people, of that amendment... In the instant case, constitutional authority is lacking. Over the matter here in controversy, power has not been granted but has been taken away. The creator of the Congress has denied to it the authority it formerly possessed, and this denial, being unqualified, necessarily defeats any legislative attempt to extend that authority... The question is not one of public policy which the courts may be considered free to declare, but of the continued efficacy of legislation in the face of controlling action of the people, the source of the power to enact and maintain it. It is not a question of the developing common law... The principle involved is thus not archaic, but rather is continuing and vital-that the people are free to withdraw the authority they have conferred and, when withdrawn, neither the Congress nor the courts can assume the right to continue to exercise it."

1 The extremely limited role in the convention process allotted to the

2 Congress by the Framers of the Constitution arose out of the desire of a

3 majority of the Framers to provide a safeguard against an abusive or

4 recalcitrant national legislature. 552

5 Despite the early desires to exclude the national government from any

6 involvement in the amendment process, primarily demonstrated by the Virginia

7 Plan, 553 the Framers were willing to allow the national legislature to propose

8 amendments, perhaps in accordance with Hamilton's argument that the national

9 legislature would be in a good position to perceive the need for alterations

10 to the system of government.<sup>554</sup> They also provided, however, the alternative

11 method of calling a convention at the direction of the states.<sup>555</sup> The records

Constitution so as to defeat it obvious ends when another construction, equally accordant with the words and sense thereof, will enforce and protect them." Prigg v. Commonwealth of Pennsylvania, 41 U.S. 539 (1842); "A constitutional provision should not be construed so as to defeat its evident purpose, but rather so as to give it effective operation and suppress the mischief at which it was aimed." Jarrolt v. Moberly, 103 U.S. 580 (1880); Lake County v. Rollins, 130 U.S. 662 (1889); Edwards v. Cuba R.R., 268 U.S. 628(1925); The Pocket Veto Case, 279 U.S. 655(1929); "Where intention of words and phrases used in Constitution is clear, there is no room for construction and no excuse for interpolation." United States v. Sprague, 282 U.S. 716 (1931); Williams v. United States, 289 U.S. 553 (1933); "In expounding the Constitution, every word must have its due force and appropriate meaning." Wright v. United States, 302 U.S. 583 (1938); "Where there are several possible meanings of the words of the constitution, that meaning which will defeat rather than effectuate the constitutional purpose cannot rightly be preferred." United States v. Classic, 313 U.S. 299 (1941); United States v. South-Eastern Underwriters Ass'n., 322 U.S. 533 (1944).

&lt;sup>552</sup> 1 FARRAND, supra note 2, at 202-03 (Madison---June 11)(Madison's comments);2 Id. at 629 (Madison---Sept. 15)(Mason's comments); See also 3 Id. at 127 (Randolph's comments to the Virginia House of Delegates), 367-68 (Mason's account as told to Thomas Jefferson), 575 n.6 (Letter from George Read to John Dickinson of Jan. 17, 1787); 4 Id. at 61 (Mason's notes). See supra text accompanying notes 345,435-437,497-521.

&lt;sup>553</sup> See supra text accompanying notes 325,345-346.

U.S. CONST., art. V; 2 FARRAND, supra note 2, at 558 Madison---Sept. 10)(recording Hamilton's comments). See supra text accompanying notes 351-352, 413.

<sup>555</sup> U.S. CONST., art. V

- 1 of the debate on this subject make it plain that the purpose of this
- 2 alternative method was to allow the states to circumvent the national
- 3 legislature and to propose amendments despite congressional opposition or
- 4 recalcitrance. 556 But as accurately predicted by Colonel Mason, 557 the national
- 5 legislature has proved to be recalcitrant in its mandated obligation to call a
- 6 convention. Mason warned about allowing the national legislature any voice
- 7 concerning the convention when he said:

8

9

10

11

12

13

14

"The plan now to be formed will certainly be defective, as the confederation has been found on trial to be. Amendments therefore will be necessary, at it will be better to provide for them, in an easy, regular and Constitutional way than to trust to chance and violence. It would be improper to require the consent of the Natl. Legislature, because they may abuse their power, and refuse their consent on that very account. The opportunity for such an abuse, may be the fault of the Constitution calling for amendmt." 558

- 15 Clearly, with comments such as Mason's, it would be absurd to say that
- 16 the Framers of the Constitution intended to entrust Congress with
- 17 constitutional authority over the very institution that was created
- 18 specifically in the Constitution to bypass and restrain Congress should it act
- 19 against the will of the people. Thus, Congress' powers relating to Article V
- 20 must be construed in the narrowest terms possible, so that the purpose of the
- 21 convention in providing a means to circumvent Congress can be most fully
- 22 realized. The role of Congress must be, as much as possible, a purely
- 23 mechanical or ministerial one, rather than a discretionary one. As Alexander
- 24 Hamilton succinctly stated, "[t]he words of this article are peremptory. The

&lt;sup>556</sup> 1 FARRAND, supra note 2, at 203 (Madison---June 11)(Mason's comments); 2 Id. at 629 (Madison---Sept. 15)(Mason's comments); See also 3 Id. at 127 (Randolph's comments to the Virginia House of Delegates), 367-68 (Mason's account as told to Thomas Jefferson), 575 n.6 (Letter from George Read to John Dickinson of Jan. 17, 1787); 4 Id. at 61 (Mason's notes).

<sup>557</sup> See supra text accompanying notes 362,363.

<sup>558</sup> Td

1 Congress 'shall call a convention.' Nothing in this particular is left to the

2 discretion of that body." 559

3 The structure of the federal government created by the Constitution also

4 supports the fact that Congress' role in the amendments-by-convention process

5 is entirely limited to the simple calling of the convention. The convention

6 process derives its constitutional authority from Article V; it is not a

7 component of any of the three branches of the government created by the first

8 three articles. The convention derives its power from a separate and 9 independent grant of authority in the Constitution itself; it cannot be made subservient to any branch of the government. Further, the sole purpose of the 11 convention is to propose changes in the pre-existing system of government.

12 This function, by its very nature, renders the convention distinct from, if not superior to, the three branches of government it is meant to alter.

14

15

13

10

Legislative Procedure Issues

16

18

19

17 If it is assumed that Congress can legislate over a convention to propose amendments, as Congress by its own attempts has demonstrated, 560 then this authority must somehow be implied within Article I. 561 Clearly, the power

20 must be implied, as nowhere in Article I is it expressed. Article I clearly 21 deals with the legislative authority of Congress.

<sup>559</sup> THE FEDERALIST No. 85 (A. Hamilton).

&lt;sup>560</sup> See infra text accompanying notes 593-612.

 $<sup>^{561}</sup>$  U.S. CONST., art. I, § 8, (1-18).

- 1 Contained within Article I are specific procedures regarding how a piece
- 2 of proposed legislation becomes law. 562 In every case, before such an event may
- 3 occur, the proposed legislation, after it has been passed by the Senate and
- 4 the House of Representatives, must be submitted to the President of the United
- 5 States for his approval. 563
- 6 The Supreme Court has addressed the question of ambiguity surrounding
- 7 these sections of the Constitution and found none. 564 Further, in one of its
- 8 earliest decisions, the Supreme Court addressed the issue of the participation
- 9 of the President in the amendatory process<sup>565</sup> and determined that the
- 10 presidential veto or approval only applied to ordinary cases of legislation,
- 11 not amendments to the Constitution. 566

&lt;sup>562</sup> U.S. CONST., art. I, § 7, (2),(3).

U.S. CONST., art. I,§7,(2): "Every bill which shall have passed the House of Representatives and the Senate, shall, before it become a law, be presented to the President of the United States..."; see also U.S. CONST., art. I,§ 7 §§ 3: "Every order, resolution, or vote to which the concurrence of the Senate and House of Representatives may be necessary (except on a question of adjournment) shall be presented to the President of the United States; and before the same shall take effect, shall be approved by him, or being disapproved by him, shall be repassed by two-thirds of the Senate and House of Representatives, according to the rules and limitations prescribed in this case of a bill."

&quot;Under constitutional provision that bill not returned by the President to House of Congress wherein it originates within 10 days shall be become a law, "unless the Congress by their Adjournment prevent its Return, in which Case it shall not be a Law," quoted words are entirely free from ambiguity, so that there is no occasion for construction." Wright v. United States, 302 U.S. 583 (1938).

&quot;And in the case of amendment, is evidently a substantive act, unconnected with the ordinary business of legislation, and not with the policy, or terms, of investing the President with a qualified negative on the acts and resolutions of Congress" Hollingsworth v. Virginia, 3 U.S. 378 (1798); "The negative of the President applies only to the ordinary cases of legislation. He has nothing to do with the proposition, or adoption, of amendments to the Constitution." Id.

<sup>566 &</sup>quot;[T]he evidence relating to the role of the president does not, in a positive sense, demonstrate an intent one way or the other. However, the answer to this question rests as much on what was not said in the 1787-88 debates as on the opinions that were expressed. Considered in this light, the negative evidence points overwhelmingly to the conclusion that Article I,

1 Thus, by this single decision, the Court established that Congress has

2 two distinct sets of power: legislative, which requires the participation of

3 the President of the United States to exercise; and amendatory, which does not

4 require the participation of the president. 567

5 The only other alternative that could possibly exist to allow Congress

6 to legislate in amendatory matters, outside of its own power to propose

7 amendments and choose the method of ratification, 568 would be the creation of a

8 new legislative procedure to enact legislation to supplement the current

9 procedure carefully and specifically laid out in Article I. This procedure

10 would have to allow Congress to enact legislation, ostensibly to regulate the 11 convention, but would also provide a precedent whereby Congress could section 7 was intended to apply only to those legislative functions referred to in other portions of that article and not to Congressional actions taken under Article V. In the thousands of words and many months of argument devoted to the powers of the president, including his position vis-à-vis Congress, one can find no evidence that the specific question of his role in any aspect of the amendment process ever arose, either in connection with Article I or Article V. It is difficult to conceive of two constitutional issues --- which strict-constructionists insist are related---being subjected to such close scrutiny by so great a variety of politically astute observers, for so long a period of time, without someone, somewhere, raising a question or making a comment about the effect of one procedure on the other. Hence, although in a literal sense one may argue that under Article I, section 7, "a resolution is a resolution is a resolution," and every act of Congress so identified must be subject to presidential approval, nothing in the formative history of Article I will support the application of this principle to actions taken under Article V. One the contrary, the very fact that the amendment process was, one every occasion, debated as a separate and distinct problem unrelated to other legislative functions, suggests that the intent was not to treat that process in the same way as matters requiring both legislative and executive action." A CONSTITUTIONAL CONVENTION: THREAT OR CHALLENGE (1981) (Edel). <sup>567</sup> It can be reasonably implied from a reading of Hollingsworth that Justice Chase in his footnote derived his decision from a strict and direct reading of Article V. Nowhere in that article is there the slightest implication, procedure. See supra text accompanying note 2.  $^{568}$  U.S. CONST., art. Vi see supra text accompanying note 2.

expressed or implied, of presidential participation in the amendatory

- 1 circumvent the President by simply passing legislation and not presenting it
- 2 to him for his disposition.
- 3 Absent this alternative, which on its face is fraught with
- 4 constitutional danger, should it be assumed Congress can legislate in regard
- 5 to the convention to propose amendments, under its Article I, Section 8
- 6 powers, it would follow that such legislation must be approved by the
- 7 President of the United States, or, subject to his veto, 569 be re-approved by a
- 8 two-thirds vote of each house of Congress. 570 The provision is mandatory;
- 9 Congress cannot legislate without involving the President of the United
- 10 States.
- 11 This legislative authority of Congress would therefore mean the
- 12 President could veto the amendment process and in the political course of
- 13 matters stop its progress altogether, as the needed two-thirds override vote
- 14 by Congress might not necessarily or automatically occur. 571 This principle
- 15 clearly violates the concept of separation of powers, not to mention the
- 16 Court's previous rulings. 572 It is possible this situation might serve to open

&quot;While Congress can repeat or supersede legislation in subsequent sessions, general legislation will control without such action, and the president's veto may serve to balance hasty action to override procedures that have been put in place." PROPOSED PROCEDURES FOR A LIMITED CONSTITUTIONAL CONVENTION, AEI Legislative Analysis, 98th Congress, 2nd Sess. (1984), p.11.

570 In Missouri Pacific Railway Co. v. Kansas, 248 U.S. 276 (1919), the Supreme quorum.  $^{571}$  By the same token, expecting the president's veto to be able to hold up against a determined Congress offers little consolation as the Congress may be able to override the vetoes of the executive as was done, for example, with President Andrew Johnson's veto of the Reconstruction Act in which Congress raised several constitutional amendatory issues. See infra text accompanying notes 1248-1309.

&lt;sup>570</sup> In Missouri Pacific Railway Co. v. Kansas, 248 U.S. 276 (1919), the Supreme Court determined the two-thirds vote of each House required to pass a bill over a veto means two-thirds of the members present provided there was a quorum.

&lt;sup>572</sup> Hollingsworth v. Virginia, 3 U.S. 378 (1798); see also Martin v. Hunter's Lessee. 14 U.S. 304 (1816), Prigg v. Commonwealth of Pennsylvania, 41 U.S. 539

- 1 a pathway for an ambitious chief executive to seize power over the entire
- 2 Constitution by vetoing the amendment process.
- 3 As the words of the Constitution must have their "due force and
- 4 appropriate meaning," 573 it follows that each word must be considered
- 5 individually and uniquely and may not be exchanged either in meaning or effect
- 6 for another word in the Constitution unless such exchange is clearly
- 7 expressed.
- 8 The Founding Fathers clearly understood the difference between a law, a
- 9 resolution, a vote, an order and a call. $^{574}$  Congress may not refer to an
- 10 amendatory procedure as a "call", then use legislative powers granted
- 11 expressly and exclusively for an order, law, resolution or vote, 575 to
- 12 accomplish it.

(1842), Chicago B&Q Railroad Co. v. Otoe County, 83 U.S. 667 (1872); Gilman v. City of Philadelphia, 70 U.S. 713 (1865); Hepburn v. Griswold, 75 U.S. 603 (1869); Hall v. State of Wisconsin, 103 U.S. 5 (1880); "Federal government is one of enumerated powers, and, while such powers are to be reasonably and fairly construed with a view to effectuating their purposes, an attempted exercise of a power clearly beyond true purpose of grant cannot be sustained." United States v. Harris, 106 U.S. 629 (1882); "If an act passed by Congress not one which Congress is expressly authorized to enact, the question arises, as to whether it is properly an incident to a power expressly granted to Congress, and necessary to the execution of such powers, and if it is not the act is void." Id.; "Every act of Congress must find in the Constitution some warrant for its passage." Id.; Railroad Retirement Bd. v. Alton Railroad Co., 295 U.S. 330 (1935); Linder v. United States, 45 S.Ct. 446 (1925); United States v. Butler, 297 U.S. 1 (1936).

&lt;sup>574</sup> 2 FARRAND, 301-302, 304-305; see also Hawke v. Smith 253 U.S. 221 (1920), discussion by Justice Day regarding the framers understanding of the term "legislatures". See infra text accompanying note 1651.

<sup>575</sup> U.S. CONST., art. I,§ 2 §§ 3;see also S. Rept. No. 1335, 54th Congress, 2nd Sess.; 4 A. Hinds, PRECEDENTS OF THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES (Washington: 1907), Sec. 3483, "[Any] order, resolution, or vote if it is to have the force of law must be submitted [to the president for approval.] Id.; "Whether actions taken by either House are, in law and in fact, an exercise of legislative power depends not on their form but upon 'whether they contain matter which is properly to be regarded as legislative in its character and effect.'", Immigration and Naturalization Service v. Chadha, 462 U.S. 919

1 Each of these words has a procedure expressly associated with it that

- 2 must be followed in order to effectuate it. Each legislative method, whether
- 3 law, order, resolution or vote, requires the participation of the president, 576
- 4 but not a call<sup>577</sup> as it is amendatory in nature and not part of the Article I
- 5 procedures. As the convention exists completely within Article V (amendatory),
- 6 as do all congressional amendatory powers, it follows Congress must use its
- 7 amendatory powers specified in Article V, and not its legislative powers
- 8 specified in Article I, when dealing with an amendment issue. Thus, each power
- 9 of Congress is separate and unique in authority, and none can constitutionally
- 10 be mixed.

15

16 17

- 11 Therefore, unless it is decided that massive changes in the construement
- 12 of the Constitution are warranted, or the principal expressed by Chief Justice
- 13 Marshall is to be overturned, 578 it must be concluded Congress cannot legislate
- 14 in the area of the convention to propose amendments because:
  - It would require Congress to use its legislative powers in an area where the Constitution only permits Congress to use its amendatory powers;

(1983). The other major component of the Court's reasoning in Chadha stemmed from its reading of the Constitution as making only "explicit and unambiguous" exception to the bicameralism and presentment requirements. Thus, the House alone is given power of impeachment, and the senate alone is given power to convict upon impeachment, to advise and consent to executive appointment, and to advise and consent to treaties; similarly, the Congress may propose a constitutional amendment without the President's approval, and each House is given autonomy over certain "internal matter," e.g., judging the qualifications of its members. By implication then, exercises of legislative power not falling within any of these "narrow, explicit, and separately justified: exceptions must conform to the prescribed procedures: "passage by a majority of both Houses and presentment to the President." Id.; see also Metropolitan Washington Airports Authority v. Citizens for the Abatement of Aircraft Noise, 501 U.S. 252 (1991).

&lt;sup>577</sup> Hollingsworth v. Virginia, 3 U.S. 378 (1798).

&lt;sup>578</sup> See supra text accompanying note 287.

- 1 2. It would permit the President of the United States to use the veto in the amendatory process;
- 3 3. The convention to propose amendments "call" is not legislation either in character or effect, since it is an amendatory process.
- 5 Thus, in the case of the convention, Congress is restricted to an
- 6 expressed, limited, specified amendatory power of Article V: the call. And as
- 7 Congress cannot legislate in this area, it therefore follows it may only
- 8 perform that which is not legislation, a non-binding call. 579

9

10 Definition and Limits of the Congressional "Call"

11

- What is a "call" in the sense of a convention to propose amendments?
- 13 Simply put, the "call" is a means to effectuate the commencement of a
- 14 convention to propose amendments.
- The definition of the word "call" is:
- "To say in a loud voice; to shout; to announce", 580 and "to summon; as,
- 17 to call a messenger, to call a meeting." 581

<sup>579</sup> See supra text accompanying notes 506, 530. The call, while mandated upon Congress to issue, does not bind the states to attend as demonstrated by Rhode Island's lack of attendance at the 1787 Convention. (See supra text accompanying note 322). As the Supreme Court has ruled, an amendatory vote in Congress is not a binding requirement on any member. That is, no member of Congress is required to cast a vote on an amendatory proposal and therefore must be seated for the vote to be legal and binding. (See infra text accompanying note 869). Therefore, the Court has allowed that less than the total membership of Congress can vote for an amendatory proposal and still satisfy the two-thirds support of Congress as required in Article V. If it were otherwise, a single member of Congress, by his absence, could stymie the entire amendatory process, even if every other member of Congress was in favor of an amendment. Similarly, the states have the same right not to attend a convention but the convention would still continue. But this right of the states not to send delegates, once a call has been issued to a convention to propose amendments, does not translate into a power of the states veto the Congress' call prior to it being issued; see infra text accompanying notes

WEBSTER'S NEW TWENTIETH CENTURY DICTIONARY, UNABRIDGED,  $2^{nd}$  ed. (1983).

- 1 Similarly, the word "meeting" is also revealing:
- 2 "[A]n assembly, a gathering of people especially to discuss or decide on matters," and "a point of contact or intersection; a junction." 582
- 4 It is upon these two definitions that the limits of Congress' role must
- 5 be defined. 583 A meeting cannot occur unless a mutual place and time frame
- 6 exists. 584 At this point the meeting has occurred. Therefore, no further input
- 7 from anyone "calling" a meeting is required. Thus, the power of the call by
- 8 Congress must include, even under the narrowest of construction, two parts.
- 9 First, the call must consist of an acknowledgment by Congress that the
- 10 proper number of states has applied for a convention to propose amendments. 585
- 11 However, this acknowledgment does not imply a choice on the part of
- 12 Congress, 586 as in whether or not that body may decide if a convention occurs;

In Ullmann v. United States, 350 U.S. 422 (1956), the Supreme Court discussed the strict dictionary definition of words as they relate to the Constitution. "The significance of constitutional provisions is vital, not formal, and is to be gathered not simply by taking the words in the dictionary but by considering their origin and the line of their growth." Id.

In the case of the convention call, however, there has been no "line of growth" as it has never been used since 1787. Further, the historic record clearly demonstrates that Congress was to be given "no discretion" in the matter of calling a convention to propose amendments. (See supra text accompanying notes 437-439,459-490,493-521). Under these narrow historic circumstances, therefore, the dictionary definitions of the words must be the proper interpretation of their meaning as they are the narrowest interpretation possible that satisfies the clear intent of the Founding Fathers, yet still grant the necessary authority to Congress needed to carry out its mandated constitutional duty.

while the popular interpretation of a "meeting" is a physical face to face engagement, it is significant that a meeting is also "a point of contact or intersection". Thus it is as faithful to the intent of the definition if a "meeting" is held on the telephone or even on the Internet. Even though there is no physical location involved, nevertheless such an event does transpire in a single time frame at a particular junction, in this instance a linkage between one or more physical locations by means of electronic connection. In this mode, in countless numbers a day, matters are discussed or decided: thus a meeting. See also infra text accompanying notes 1403-1417.

&lt;sup>582</sup> Id.

<sup>585</sup> See supra text accompanying note 2.

<sup>586</sup> See supra text accompanying notes 435-437,506-521.

- 1 rather, it is the required action Congress must follow when the proper number
- 2 of states applies for a convention to propose amendments. 587
- 3 Second, the call must entail a non-binding recommendation as to the time
- 4 and place the convention will meet. As Congress has no discretion in the
- 5 matter, 588 it is entirely prevented from dictating any of the terms regarding a
- 6 convention. However, even under the narrowest interpretation, Congress does
- 7 have an obligation to ensure a convention occurs. At the least this means that
- 8 Congress must suggest a time and place for that convention. If Congress does
- 9 not suggest a time and place, then it leaves open a door for constitutional
- 10 chaos with the possibility of fifty states trying to resolve fifty different
- 11 locations and times for the convention.
- 12 With a time and place at least offered by Congress, a common point of
- 13 reference is provided. The states may alter either the time or place if they
- 14 choose, 589 but this fact is immaterial to the call. Congress will have already
- 15 fulfilled its obligation, thus satisfying the definition of the word "call".
- 16 Further, this will consume Congress' minuscule authority granted by the
- 17 Constitution to effectuate a convention to propose amendments by a call. After

<sup>588</sup> Td

&lt;sup>587</sup> Id.

Congress is allowed to change the time of its meetings; "The Congress shall assemble at least once in every year, and such meeting shall be on the first Monday in December, unless they shall by law appoint a different day." (U.S. CONST., art I,  $\S4$  (2); and neither house may "adjourn... to any other place than that in which the two houses shall be sitting." U.S. CONST., art. I,  $\S5$  (4). Since the Congress can, by its determination, change its meeting time and, by implication, move itself to a new place so long as both houses in the same location, it follows the states have the same authority and limitations toward the convention. The states can establish a different time for the convention once a call has been issued and the entire convention must meet at a single place and cannot be divided, but this place may be moved by the states if they choose.

1	that, Congress' constitutional authority and obligation terminates. 590 The rest
2	is up to the states or the people themselves.
3	Despite these facts, there persists a congressional tradition of
4	attempting to manage the convention at every level, thus reducing it to a mere
5	handmaiden of congressional whim.
6	Obviously, the Court cannot rule on proposed legislation. However, the
7	history and obvious intent of that legislation, together with the
8	constitutional interpretation by Congress that it represents, offers more than 9	just interesting reading. It serves to justify the clear definition of the 10	constitutional perimeters of the convention to propose amendments by the
11	Court, based on the clear intent of the Founding Fathers which can be summed
12	up by Hamilton's comment that "Nothing in this particular is left to the 13	discretion of that body [Congress]". 591 This definition cannot be left to the
14	political shortsightedness of Congress, if indeed that were even possible,
15	which fortunately it is not. 592
16
17

18

19 CONGRESSIONAL PROPOSALS ATTEMPTING TO LIMIT ARTICLE V

20

&lt;sup>590</sup> In an analogous decision, the Supreme Court determined congressional participation ends once legislation is passed by Congress."[A]s Chadha makes clear, once Congress makes its choice in enacting legislation, its participation ends. Congress can thereafter control the execution of its enactment only indirectly---by passing new legislation." Bowsher v. Synar, 478 U.S. 714 (1986). See supra text accompanying note 575. <sup>591</sup> See supra text accompanying note 506.

&lt;sup>592</sup> See supra text accompanying notes 2,459-490,493-521,547-579.

```
2.
           Recent congressional efforts to control and limit the scope of a convention for proposing amendments began with the Ervin Bill, Senate Bill 2307, in 1967.593 Since that time, a number of bills aimed at regulating so-called constitutional conventions has been introduced. 594 These bills, building on previous versions, have been refined from year to year, but fortunately 7 have never been enacted into law. 595 In the 101st Congress, for example, this 8 line of proposed legislation was embodied in Senate Bill 204 introduced by 9
 3
 4
 5
 6
     Senator Orrin Hatch of Utah. 596 Among its provisions, this proposed 10 legislation:
11
12
           1. Requires that state legislatures, when petitioning for a convention, 13 state the subject matter of the amendment(s) to be proposed; ^{597} 14
            2. Provides that petitions remain in effect for only seven years after submission to Congress; 598
15
16
            3. Requires that only petitions pertaining to the same subject be counted together toward the two-thirds state requirement;5 17
18
           4. Provides that Congress shall call a convention to address only a single subject; 600
19 20
           5. Regulates the number of delegates to be sent by each state, and the manner of election; 601
21
22
           6. Forbids the election of United States senators, representatives and other federal officers as convention delegates; 602
23
           7. Provides that a convention be convened by the President Pro Tempore of the Senate and the Speaker of the House; ^{603}
24
25
```

```
    593 S. 2307, 90th Cong., 1st Sess. (1967).
    594 See Voegler, supra note 332, at 357 n.14.
    595 Id.; See also S.1272, 93rd Cong., 1st Sess, (1973)
```

 $<sup>^{595}</sup>$  Id.; See also S.1272, 93rd Cong.,1st Sess, (1973); S. 119, S. 2812, H.R. 3373, 98th Cong., 2nd Sess; S. 40, 99th Cong., 1st Sess, (1985); S. Rep. No. 135, 99th Cong., 1st Sess. (1985).

&lt;sup>596</sup> S. 204, 101st Cong., 1st Sess. (1989).

&lt;sup>597</sup> Id. § 2(a).

&lt;sup>598</sup> Id. § 5(a).

&lt;sup>599</sup> Id. § 6(a).

<sup>600</sup> Id. §§ 6(a), 10, 11(b)(ii).

&lt;sup>601</sup> Id. § 7.

 $<sup>^{602}</sup>$  Id. § 7(a).

<sup>603</sup> Id. § 8(a).

8. Requires that delegates take an oath to comply with the Constitution of the United States during the convention; 604 9. Determines how votes are to be allocated; 605 10. Sets a six month time limit on the operation of a convention; 606 5 11. Prohibits a convention from proposing an amendment outside the subject matter for which the convention was called; 607 6 7 12. Permits Congress to refuse to transmit a proposed amendment to the states for ratification. 608 9 Had this bill been enacted, it is evident it would have asserted 10 sweeping congressional regulation over all phases of a convention for 11 proposing amendments, granting enormous implied and expressed powers to 12 Congress. Congress, essentially, would be able to circumvent the prescribed amendment process by use of unconstitutional statutory means. 609 Congressional 13 14 thinking on this matter is clear. Nowhere in its history has Congress 15 demonstrated any inclination, by the submission of a single proposed piece of 16 legislation, toward staying within its limited role of call as prescribed by the Constitution and clearly intended by the Framers. 610 17 The strategy of the sponsors of this legislation is obvious: to assert 18 complete congressional control over the procedural and substantive matters of 19

<sup>605</sup> Id. § 9(a).

the convention in such a way as to subvert the original intentions of the

 $<sup>^{604}</sup>$  Id. § 8(a).

&lt;sup>606</sup> Id. § 9(c).

&lt;sup>607</sup> Id. §§ 10.

<sup>608</sup> Id. §§ 11(b)(ii).

<sup>609</sup> See supra text accompanying notes 561-579.

This trend by Congress has continued through the present day. H.J. Res. 29, 106th Cong., 1st Session (1999) introduced by Congressman Tom Bliley would permit the states to submit to Congress actual proposed amendments but gives Congress veto power over those amendments by establishing an automatic veto of proposed amendments by the states unless two-thirds of each house of Congress voted to defeat the required legislation expressly vetoing the amendment.

Section 2 of the proposed constitutional amendment reads in part; "If a proposed amendment is submitted to the Congress under this article and...two-thirds of each House vote against legislation expressly disapproving the proposed amendment, the proposed amendment shall be deemed to be submitted to the several States for their consideration." (emphasis added).

1	Framers and instead substitute its own agenda for the Constitution. Such
2	control would significantly limit the scope of the convention to amendments
3	concerning a single topic, as that subject may be defined by Congress. $^{611}$
4	Congress' effort to place the convention under its control is motivated by
5	"[c]oncern [that] has frequently been expressed about the possibility of a
6	'runaway' convention, unfaithful to the mandate with which it was charged by
7	the States and the Congress."612 This reason, however altruistic, is based on
8	utterly false reasoning and historic fact. Simply put, Congress does not have
9	nor ever was intended to have, the constitutional authority to control or
10	regulate the convention in any way outside of its minuscule role in calling
11	the convention. 613
12
13
14
15	POLITICAL PRE-CONDITIONS FOR CALLING A CONVENTION TO PROPOSE AMENDMENTS 16
17	INTRODUCTION
18
19

 $^{611}$  Such a perspective is demonstrated in a senate report: "The perspective of S. 40 is that the States may call a convention to be limited to a particular subject matter... If the requisite number of States apply for convention on a specific subject matter, the convention may consider and propose only amendments pertaining to that subject matter.." S. REP No. 135 99 $^{\rm th}$  Cong.,  $1^{\rm st}$  Sess., at 3 (1985).

<sup>612</sup> Id. at 2 (emphasis added).

<sup>613</sup> See supra text accompanying notes 2,459-490,493-521,547-560.

1 In order to bolster the contention that a convention to propose

2 amendments should not be called as required in the Constitution, 614 various

3 pseudo-constitutional assumptions have evolved over the years, that in reality

4 are no more than political pre-conditions designed to favor continued

5 congressional dominance of the amendatory system. The intent of these

6 political pre-conditions is to allow Congress either to regulate the 7 convention to such an extent as to render its calling meaningless, or to 8 simply ensure that no convention is ever called, regardless of the desire of 9 the states.

15

10 The plain answer to all these pre-conditions and pseudo-constitutional

11 assumptions is the following: The Constitution demands Congress call a

12 convention when two-thirds of the Several States apply. 615 There are no other

13 conditions or standards the states are required to meet 616 before Congress must

14 issue the call. Congress has no further role in the convention beyond a basic, limited call. 617 The applications of the states are used merely to express the 16 intent of the states to hold a convention and have nothing to do with the 17 subject matter or matters to be discussed at a convention. 618 Finally, the 18 convention to propose amendments is as much a valid, legitimate and proper of An analogous decision regarding the unconstitutionality of Congress adding pre-conditions to clearly specified textual terms spelled out in the Constitution was addressed in Powell v. McCormack, 395 U.S. 486 (1969) in which the court found "Congress is limited to the standing qualifications prescribed in the Constitution." This principle should apply here: Congress is limited to the standing qualifications prescribed in the Constitution regarding a convention to propose amendments, i.e., two-thirds of the state legislatures have applied for one.

<sup>614</sup> U.S. CONST., art. V.

<sup>615</sup> Id.; see supra text accompanying notes 2,459-490,493-545.

<sup>617</sup> See supra text accompanying notes 547-592.

<sup>618</sup> See infra text accompanying notes 669-728.

part of the Constitution as the three branches of government and cannot be 1 2 regulated or subjugated by them except as provided by the Constitution. 619 Nevertheless, each of these pre-conditions and pseudo-constitutional 3 4 assumptions will be examined separately in this suit in order to refute them 5 once and for all. 6 7 8 THE NECESSARY AND PROPER CLAUSE PRE-CONDITION 9 10 11 The pre-condition states that the convention may be regulated and legislated by Congress because of the "necessary and proper" clause. 620 12 Proposed Senate Bill  $204^{621}$  and its history of legislation  $^{622}$  are perfect 13 examples of the "necessary and proper" clause 623 run amok. The assumption 14 15 behind this proposed legislation is that somehow this clause gives Congress the implied power to entirely regulate a convention to propose amendments. 16 While it is true the clause certainly applies to Congress' statutory 17 authority, it neither grants nor applies the same freedom of regulation and 18 legislation to Congress' amendatory role. 624 19

619 See infra text accompanying notes 921-1134.  $^{620}$  U.S.CONST., art. I, § 8 (18). The full clause reads:

&quot;To make all laws which shall be necessary and proper for carrying into execution the foregoing powers, and all other powers vested by this Constitution in the government of the United States, or in any department or officer thereof." (emphasis added).

621 See supra text accompanying note 596.

<sup>622</sup> See supra text accompanying note 593,594.

<sup>623</sup> U.S. CONST., art. I, § 8 (18).

 $<sup>^{624}</sup>$  See supra text accompanying notes 561-592.

- 1 There is no mention of Congress having a broad scope of implied powers
- 2 in addition to its direct powers outlined in Article V; no corresponding
- 3 "necessary and proper" clause exists in Article V. 625 Therefore, the "necessary
- 4 and proper" clause can only refer to the foregoing statutory powers of
- 5 Congress as outlined in Article I, not to its Article V amendatory powers.
- While it is true  $McCulloch^{626}$  recognized that broad implied powers were
- 7 granted to Congress, even Chief Justice Marshall, in his ruling, limited these
- 8 powers to Congress' statutory authority and, most notably, nowhere mentioned
- 9 amendatory powers. 627 As early as 1798, less than three years before Marshall
- 10 became Chief Justice, the Supreme Court recognized two separate areas of
- 11 constitutional authority, statutory and amendatory, acknowledging the
- 12 authority for each power was derived from distinct areas of the

 $<sup>^{625}</sup>$  As observed by the Court, the Constitution must first clearly grant a power before such power can be exercised by the government.

The Court said:

&quot;Under a constitution conferring specific powers, the power contended for must be granted or it cannot be exercised." United States v. Fisher, 6 U.S.  $358 \ (1805)$ .

In a later decision the Court said:

&quot;Every act of Congress must find in the Constitution some warrant for its passage... If an act passed by Congress is not one which Congress is expressly authorized to enact, the question arises, as to whether it is properly an incident to a power granted to Congress, and necessary to the execution of such power, and if it is not the act is void." United States v. Harris, 106 U.S. 629 (1882).

<sup>626</sup> McCulloch v. Maryland, 17 U.S. 316 (1819).

In McCulloch, Marshall said:

&quot;This provision is made in a constitution intended to endure for ages to come, and, consequently, to be adapted to the various crises of human affairs... To have declared that the best means shall not be used, but those alone without which the power given would be nugatory, would have been to deprive the legislature of the capacity to avail itself of experience, to exercise its reason and to accommodate its legislation to circumstances." (emphasis added). Marshall then concluded:

&quot;If no other motive for its insertion can be suggested, a sufficient one is found in the desire to remove all doubts respecting the right to legislate on that vast mass of incidental powers which must be involved in the constitution..." (Id.) (emphasis added).

- 1 Constitution. 628 Marshall made no attempt to imply in McCulloch that
- 2 Hollingsworth had in any way been overturned. 629
- 3 Therefore, it is clear McCulloch was only intended to refer to and
- 4 clarify that portion of the Constitution that it specifically referred to,
- 5 namely the statutory powers of Congress expressed in Article I, because it is
- 6 only here the term "necessary and proper" is used in relation to congressional
- 7 power. The "necessary and proper" clause of "foregoing" powers 630 serves not
- 8 only to divide, but to determine that these powers are not interchangeable,
- 9 i.e., statutory powers cannot be used as a substitute for amendatory powers.
- 10 Simply put, Congress is not authorized in Article I to legislate changes to
- 11 the Constitution itself. To do that, Congress must employ its amendatory
- 12 powers.

13

14

15 16

17 18

19 20 21

22

23

24

25

26 27

28

29

As Chief Justice Marshall stated in McCulloch v. Maryland:

"The result of the most careful and attentive consideration bestowed upon this clause is, that if it does not enlarge, it cannot be construed to restrain the powers of Congress, or to impair the right of the legislature to exercise its best judgment in the selection of measures to carry into execution the constitutional powers of the government. If no other motive for its insertion can be suggested, a sufficient one is found in the desire to remove all doubts respecting the right to legislate on that vast mass of incidental powers which must be involved in the constitution, if that instrument be not a splendid bauble.

"We admit, as all must admit, that the powers of the government are limited, and that its limits are not to be transcended. But we think the sound construction of the constitution must allow to the national legislature that discretion, with respect to the means by which the powers it confers are to be carried into execution, which will enable that body to perform the high duties assigned to it, in the manner most beneficial to the people. Let the end be legitimate, let it be within the scope of the constitution, and all means

&quot;And in the case of amendments is evidently a substantive act, unconnected with the ordinary business of legislation..." Hollingsworth v. Virginia, 3 U.S. 378 (1798).

 $<sup>^{629}</sup>$  In fact, in Hawke v. Smith, 253 U.S. 221 (1920), the Court reaffirmed Hollingsworth when it said:

&quot;At an early day this court settled that the submission of a constitutional amendment did not require the action of the President." (Id.).  $^{630}$  U.S. CONST., art. I, § 8 (18).

- 1 which are appropriate, which are plainly adapted to that end, which are not
- 2 prohibited, but consist with the letter and spirit of the constitution, are
- 3 constitutional." 631
- 4 The issue, that of the enlargement of the "necessary and proper" clause
- 5 in order to regulate the convention, centers on the simple question of whether
- 6 or not "Congress has sole and complete control over the amending process,
- 7 subject to no judicial review, "632 and whether that "sole and complete
- 8 control" 633 may be judged to be part of "that vast mass of incidental powers
- 9 which must be involved in the constitution."634 If the Court affirms that
- 10 amending the Constitution is nothing more than an incidental power of
- 11 Congress, then the matter is rested. 635 Congress may then proceed to use the
- 12 "necessary and proper" clause to alter or abolish the Constitution at will,
- 13 unrestricted by any provision of the document, as it could successfully be
- 14 argued that any decision by Congress could always be construed as "necessary
- 15 and proper." 636

(Footnote Continued Next Page)

 $<sup>^{631}</sup>$  McCulloch v. Maryland, 17 U.S. 316 (1819) (emphasis added).

<sup>632</sup> Coleman v. Miller, 307 U.S. 433 (1939).

&lt;sup>633</sup> Id.

<sup>634</sup> McCulloch v. Maryland, 17 U.S. 316 (1819).

This, of course, would be in direct conflict with Hollingsworth v. Virginia, 3 U.S. 378 (1798), where the court referred to the amendatory process as "substantive act, unconnected with the ordinary business of legislation". However, in a later case, the Court held that Congress did have exclusive control over the amendatory process. It could be inferred this overturned Hollingsworth though there are substantial questions surrounding this interpretation. See infra text accompanying notes 1053-1141.

&lt;sup>636</sup> The Court addressed this "unrestricted" use of the "necessary and proper clause in a recent case when it said:

&quot;The dissent of course resorts to the last, best hope of those who defend ultra vires Congressional action, the Necessary and Proper Clause. It reasons...that the power to regulate the sale of handguns under the Commerce Clause, couple with the power to 'make all Laws which shall be necessary and proper for carrying into Execution the foregoing Powers,' Art. I §8, conclusively establishes the Brady Act's constitutional validity, because the Tenth Amendment imposes no limitations on the exercise of delegated powers but merely prohibits the exercise of powers 'not delegated to the United States.' What destroys the dissent's Necessary and Proper Clause argument, however, is not the Tenth Amendment but the Necessary and Proper Clause itself. When a 'La[w]...for carrying into Execution' the Commerce Clause violates the principle of state sovereignty reflected in the various constitutional provisions we mentioned earlier, ['It is incontestable that the Constitution established a system of "dual sovereignty" Gregory v. Ashcroft, 401 U.S. 452, 457 (1991), Tafflin v. Levitt, 493 U.S. 455, 458 (1990). Although the States surrendered many of their powers of the new Federal Government, they retained "a residuary and inviolable sovereignty." THE FEDERALIST No. 39 at 245 (J. Madison). This is reflected throughout the Constitutional's text, Lane County v. Oregon, 7 Wall 71, 76 (1869); Texas v. White, 7 Wall. 700, 725 (1869), include (to mention only a few examples) the prohibition on any involuntary reduction or combination of a States' territory. Art. IV, §3, the Judicial Power Clause, Art. III, §2, and the Privileges and Immunities Clause, Art. IV, §2, which speak of the "Citizens" of the States; the amendment provision, Article V, which requires the votes of three fourths of the States to amend the Constitution; and the Guarantee Clause, Art. IV, §4, which "presupposes the continued existence of the states and ...those means and instrumentalities which are the creation of their sovereign and served rights." Helvering v. Gerhardt, 304 U.S. 405, 414-415 (1938). Residual state sovereignty was also implicit, of course, in the Constitution's conferral upon Congress of not all governmental powers, but also discrete, enumerated ones, Art. I, §8, which implication was rendered express by the Tenth Amendment's assertion that "[t]he powers not delegated to the United States by the Constitution, nor prohibited by it to the states, are reserved to the states respectively, or to the people."'] it is not a 'La[w]...proper for carrying into Execution the Commerce Clause, ' and is thus, in the words of the Federalist, 'merely [an] ac[t] of usurpation' Which 'deserve[s] to be treated as such.' The FEDERALIST No. 33, at 204 (A. Hamilton). See Lawson & Granger, The 'Proper' Scope of Federal Power: A Jurisdictional Interpretation of the Sweeping Clause, 43 Duke L.J. 267, 297-326, 330-333 (1993). We in fact answered the dissent's Necessary and Proper Clause argument in New York: 'Even where Congress has the authority under the Constitution to pass laws requiring or prohibiting certain acts, it lacks the power directly to compel the States to require or prohibit those acts... [T]he Commerce Clause, for example, authorizes Congress to regulate interstate commerce directly; it does not authorize Congress to regulate state governments' regulation of interstate commerce.' 505 U.S., at 166.

"The dissent perceives a simple answer in that portion of Article VI which requires that 'all executive and judicial Officers, both of the United States and of the several States, shall be bound by Oath or Affirmation, to support this Constitution,' arguing that by virtue of the Supremacy Clause this makes 'not only the Constitution, but every law enacted by Congress as well,' binding on state officers, including laws requiring state officer enforcement. The Supremacy Clause, however, makes 'Law of the Land' only 'laws of the United States which shall be made in Pursuance [of the Constitution]'; so the Supremacy Clause merely brings us back to the question discussed earlier, whether laws conscripting state officers violate state sovereignty and thus not in accord with the Constitution." Printz v. United States, 521 U.S. 98 (1997).

Clearly, the Supreme Court held unless an action of Congress is itself constitutional, Congress cannot use its necessary and proper clause to accomplish it. In other words, Congress cannot use a constitutional means to accomplish an unconstitutional end.

- 1 But, if as Marshall asserts, the power must be limited by "those high
- 2 powers assigned to it", 637 and the execution of those powers must be
- 3 "legitimate" 638, "within the scope of the constitution," 639 and "consist[ent]
- 4 with the letter and spirit of the constitution, "640 and that it "does not
- $\,$  5  $\,$  enlarge,"  $^{641}$  then the Court must acknowledge the "necessary and proper" clause
- 6 does not allow Congress to romp about the Constitution unbridled and
- 7 unfettered.
- 8 Let us take these terms in turn and summarize what Marshall and others
- 9 have set out as the limit of the "necessary and proper" clause.
- 10 It is obvious the first limit established by the Chief Justice is that,
- 11 however broad the power of "necessary and proper" is construed, an original
- 12 power must be assigned to Congress in order to support it. 642 Second, any
- 13 attempt to construe the enlargement of the power must be a legitimate

 $<sup>^{637}</sup>$  McCulloch v. Maryland, 17 U.S. 316 (1819) (emphasis added).

&lt;sup>638</sup> Id.

&lt;sup>639</sup> Id.

&lt;sup>640</sup> Id.

<sup>641</sup> Id.

&lt;sup>642</sup> "We admit, as all must admit, that the powers of the government are limited, and that its limits are not to be transcended... Let the end be legitimate, let it be within the scope of the constitution, and all means which are appropriate, which are plainly adapted to that end, which are not prohibited, but consist with the letter and spirit of the constitution, are constitutional." McCulloch v. Maryland, 17 U.S. 316 (1819)(emphasis added).

&quot;The powers actually granted the government of the United States by the constitution are those which are expressly given or given by necessary implication." Martin v. Hunter's Lessee, 14 U.S. 304 (1816); "The government of the United States can claim no powers which are not granted to it by the Constitution." Id.; "Court may not construe Constitution so as to defeat its obvious ends when another construction equally accordant with the words and sense thereof, will enforce and protect them" Prigg v. Commonwealth of Pennsylvania, 41 U.S. 539 (1842); "In construing the Federal Constitution, Congress must be held to have only those powers which are granted expressly or by necessary implication.", Chicago B&Q Railroad Co. v. Otoe County, 83 U.S. 667 (1872).

- 1 enlargement, within the scope of the Constitution and consistent with the
- 2 letter and spirit of the Constitution. 643 The expansion of Federal authority
- 3 must fulfill the criterion of being a necessary and proper expansion of power
- 4 in order to adequately complete the original expressed power contained within
- 5 the Constitution, as Chief Justice Marshall said:

To employ the means necessary to an end, is generally understood as employing any means calculated to produce the end, and not as being confined to those single means, without which the end would be entirely

9 unattainable..."644

- 10 It can therefore be assumed that the "necessary and proper" clause

  11 extends implied powers to Congress only to the extent that "without which, the 12 end would be entirely unattainable." 645

  - Therefore, if it is possible for Congress to satisfy the provisions and demands of the Constitution with current authority and powers, it cannot employ the "necessary and proper" clause to expand its powers. Thus, the concept of "necessary and proper" is self-limiting: Congress gets no more power than it requires to get the job done, and that such power does not enlarge the limited powers granted to Congress in the Constitution, thus granting new powers not provided in the Constitution.
- 20 If all the power Congress needs in order to effect the notifying of the 21 states of the convention to propose amendments is to pass a call suggesting a 22 time and place for the convention and to acknowledge the proper number of

-

13

14

15

16

17

18

&quot;The "necessary and proper clause" of the federal Constitution is not a grant of power but a declaration that Congress possesses all of the means necessary to carry out its specifically granted powers." Kinsella v. United States ex rel. Singleton, 361 U.S. 234 (1960). See supra text accompanying notes 631,642.

&lt;sup>645</sup> Id.

- 1 states has applied for a convention, thus satisfying the generally accepted
- 2 meaning of the word "call", 646 together with fulfilling the "spirit and the
- 3 letter of the Constitution", 647 then this is the necessary and proper extent of
- 4 its power as authorized by the Constitution. Congress is granted no more
- 5 authority by the Constitution. Consequently, it can take no further action in
- 6 the matter. 648
- 7 Even Justice Marshall agreed, however, that the power of the "necessary
- 8 and proper" clause must comply with "the letter...of the Constitution," 649
- 9 never exceeding that which is "prohibited." 650 Are there any expressed
- 10 prohibitions within the Constitution relating directly to the "necessary and
- 11 proper" clause? The answer is yes.
- 12 The full clause reads:
- "To make all laws which shall be necessary and proper for carrying into
- 14 execution the foregoing powers and all other powers vested by this
- 15 constitution in the Government of the United States, or in any department or
- 16 officer thereof." 651
- 17 Even if the arguments and court decisions preventing the use of the
- 18 statutory power in the amendatory process could be circumvented, 652 the fact is
- 19 the "necessary and proper" clause is limited by the word "foregoing", clearly

 $<sup>^{646}</sup>$  See supra text accompanying notes  $580\mbox{-}590\mbox{.}$

See supra text accompanying notes 435-437,506,513; U.S. CONST., art. V. 648 Clearly implicit in this however is the fact that Congress must act, i.e., it must undertake an action in order to solve the problem. If Congress has taken an action that clearly precludes the need for it to obtain any more power, and if this action has produced a power so pervasive and encompassing that no further power needed, then this is the limit of congressional power and satisfies the term "necessary and proper." See infra text accompanying notes 917,1108.

 $<sup>^{649}</sup>$  McCulloch v. Maryland, 17 U.S. 316 (1819) (emphasis added).

<sup>650</sup> Td

 $<sup>^{651}</sup>$  U.S. CONST., Art. I, § 18.

&lt;sup>652</sup> See supra text accompanying notes 561-592.

- 1 indicating the Founding Fathers' intent<sup>653</sup> to allow congressional discretion
- 2 only in its statutory powers. 654
- 3 The Congress is clearly authorized only to make laws necessary and
- 4 proper to carry out the "foregoing" powers enumerated in Article I of the
- 5 Constitution. Nowhere in enumerated powers is any power of amendment
- 6 mentioned. 655 Therefore, the term "foregoing" removes the "necessary and

"There can be no question that the framers of the Constitution clearly understood and carefully used the terms in which that instrument referred to the action of the Legislatures of the states. When they intended that direct action by the people should be had they were no less accurate in the use of apt phraseology to carry out such purpose." Id.

It is not beyond reasonable implication to assume that such understanding of the meaning and intent of the words of the Constitution by the Framers extended to all words contained within the Constitution.
<sup>654</sup> Id.; see also McCulloch v. Maryland, 17 U.S. 316 (1819); "The words 'all laws necessary and proper for carrying into execution' powers expressly granted or vested, have in the constitution a sense equivalent to that of words laws not absolutely necessary indeed, but appropriate, plainly adapted to constitutional and legitimate ends; laws not prohibited, but consistent with letter and spirit of the constitution; laws really calculated to effect objects intrusted to government." Hepburn v. Griswold, 75 U.S. 603 (1869). This suit maintains the clear intent of the Framers was that the convention to propose amendments was not an "object[s] intrusted to government". See supra text accompanying notes 2,459-490,493-521,547-560.

Indeed, the Constitution does specify what the enumerated powers of Congress shall relate to and thus, by clear implication, what the "necessary and proper" clause must also relate to.

The Preamble of the Constitution states:

"We the People of the United States, in Order to form a more perfect Union, establish Justice, insure domestic Tranquility, provide for the common Defence, promote the general Welfare, and secure the Blessings of Liberty to ourselves and our Posterity, do ordain and establish this Constitution for the United States of America."

There is little question the Preamble is as valid law as the rest of the Constitution. Such a question was settled early by the Court in McCulloch v. Maryland, 17 U.S. 316 (1819) when Chief Justice John Marshall wrote:

"The government proceeds directly from the people; is 'ordained and established' in the name the people; and is declared to be ordained, 'in order to form a more perfect union, establish justice, ensure domestic tranquility, and secure the blessings of liberty to themselves and to their posterity.'...

"The government of the Union, then is, emphatically, and truly, a government of the people. In form and in substance it emanates from them. Its powers are granted by them, and are to be exercised directly on them, and for their benefit.

(Footnote Continued Next Page)

&lt;sup>653</sup> In Hawke v. Smith, 253 U.S. 221 (1920), the Supreme Court addressed the question of clarity and meaning of words in the Constitution as they related to the intent and understanding of those words by the Founding Fathers:

- 1 proper" clause from the amendatory process that follows later in the
- 2 Constitution. The word prohibits the power from extending beyond the
- 3 legislative powers granted in Article I. However, there still remains the
- 4 clause, "all other powers vested by this constitution in the Government of the
- 5 United States." 656

"This government is acknowledged by all to be one of enumerated powers. The principle, that it can exercise only the powers granted to it [is] now universally admitted."

It also speaks plainly to the fact that certain powers are reserved to the states or to the people. (The powers not delegated to the United States by the Constitution, nor prohibited by it to the States, are reserved to the States respectively, or to the people. U.S. CONST.,  $10^{\rm th}$  Amend.) Thus, if the power is not assigned to either state or federal government, it remains a power of the people.

What powers of those claimed by the people in the Preamble are then assigned Congress? The Constitution states the matter plainly:

"The Congress shall have Power to lay and collect Taxes, Duties, imports and Excises, to pay the Debts and provide for the common Defence and general Welfare of the United States..." (U.S. CONST., art. I,  $\S$  8,  $\S\S$  1). A careful examination of the enumerated powers listed in Section 8

A careful examination of the enumerated powers listed in Section 8 clearly shows all enumerated powers are all related to this summation of power—the power to tax, to provide for the defense of the nation and the power to provide for the general welfare of the nation. The power to regulate the convention to propose amendments by no stretch of the imagination falls under any of these general, yet enumerated, powers.

Thus, it can be argued the language of the Preamble of the Constitution reinforces the proposition that the people and the states have a right to a convention to propose amendments absent any interference from the national government.

Therefore, if the federal government is assigned by the Constitution "[to] provide for the common Defence, [and] promote the general Welfare," (Preamble) and if it is taken that the government is a limited government of limited powers, and if those limits are specific as to what areas the government may concern itself with, then it follows the people of the United States have reserved to themselves the right "[to] secure the Blessings of Liberty..." as they have not specified this power is assigned to Congress or to the government as a whole. They have only assigned Congress the right of taxation, defense and general welfare but not the securement of liberty.

Clearly, the "Blessings of Liberty" as the Founding Fathers understood the term, means the people possess the right to alter or abolish their government to secure these blessings (See generally Declaration of Independence (1776)) and therefore, the right of the people to employ a convention to propose amendments to alter or abolish the government by amendatory procedure cannot logically be said to be a power of Congress or of the Federal government.

The Constitution also authorizes Congress "To make Rules for the Government and Regulation of the land and naval forces;" (U.S. CONST., art I, § 8, §§

(Footnote Continued Next Page)

- 1 Here, obviously, the "necessary and proper" clause is expanded beyond
- 2 Article I, but how far does that power relate to Article V's requirement that
- 3 "Congress...shall call a convention..."? 657
- 4 The answer to the question is simple: like the "rules of government"
- 5 clause, 658 the power of the convention to propose amendments is not "vested by
  - 14). There has never been a court decision regarding what "rules" Congress is authorized to make for the government. Therefore the matter must be arrived by deduction.
    - "Government" is defined as:

"In the United States, government consists of the executive, legislative, and judicial branches in addition to administrative agencies. In a broader sense, includes the federal government and all its agencies and bureaus, state and county governments, and city and township governments... The regulation, restraint, supervision, or control which is exercised upon the individual members of an organized jural society by those invested with authority; or the act of exercising supreme political power or control." BLACK'S LAW DICTIONARY 6th ed. (1990) (emphasis added).

Unlike Congress, which possesses governmental powers through its legislative authority and amendatory powers, the convention to propose amendments possesses only amendatory powers which as established in the Constitution are advisory in nature.

As noted by Madison in FEDERALIST No. 40:

"In the preceding inquiries the powers of the convention have been analyzed and tried with the same rigor, and by the same rule, as if they had been real and final powers for the establishment of a Constitution for the United States. We have seen in what manner they have borne the trial even on that supposition. It is time now to recollect that the powers were merely advisory and recommendatory; that they were so meant by the States, and so understood by the convention; and that the latter have accordingly planned and proposed a Constitution which is to be of no more consequence than the paper on which it is written, unless it be stamped with the approbation of those to whom it is addressed. This reflection places the subject in a point of view altogether different, and will enable us to judge with propriety of the course taken by the convention."

The central point is the convention to propose amendments does not govern; it has no authority under the Constitution to enforce any ruling (or amendment) it may propose. It does not have any power that allows it to act in the exercise of supreme authority or control. Thus it does not satisfy the definition of the word government. The convention is advisory, not governmental in nature. Therefore, the convention to propose amendments cannot be construed to be part of the government of the United States because the government of the United States does have the power to act and enforce its rules and decisions. Rather, a convention is a constitutional body and thus can only construed to be part of the form of government created by the Constitution. As the convention is not governmental in nature and not a part of the government of the United States, it follows Congress cannot establish rules for it under its power to establish "rules for the government".

1 the Constitution in the Government of the United States", but instead is a

2 separate power of the Constitution. That power, in turn, is controlled by the

3 states and the people who have ability to cause a convention to be called. The 4 states and the people are clearly not part of the Government of the United

5 States and thus do not fall under the "necessary and proper" clause because

6 their powers are not "vested in the Government of the United States." 659

7 Congress cannot call until the states apply, and as Hamilton said,

8 "nothing is left to the discretion of that body." Further, as Hamilton

9 noted, "Congress shall call a convention." 661 Thus, Congress is given no choice

10 in the matter and is granted no discretion regarding it.

11 Legislating, at the very least, involves choices and decisions by a legislative body. Compromises between opposing views frequently have to be 13 formulated, weighed and melded into a product of law created by a consensus of 14 legislators. If, as the Framers intended, Congress is given no discretion

15 regarding the call, then it follows that Congress cannot legislate they cannot legislate the matter because it has no choice. There is simply nothing to 17 legislate. There are no compromises or decisions to reach because all the choices and decisions have been made by the Founding Fathers and the applying 19 states. And as there is nothing to legislate, the "necessary and proper"

661 Id.

12

16

18

<sup>658</sup> See supra text accompanying note 656.

<sup>659</sup> However, the provisions of Article V vest Congress with the actual procedural call. Within the minuscule clerical role this matter entails, Congress has the power and the obligation to pass such legislation as to cause the calling of the convention. Even here, Congress falls far short of the mark. See infra text accompanying note 879.
660 See supra text accompanying note 209.

1 clause cannot apply in the matter of an Article  ${\tt V}$  convention to propose

2 amendments.

3 Finally, the clause allows Congress to "make all laws..." There is a

4 clear difference between a law and an amendment to the Constitution. 662 The two

5 terms are not interchangeable, nor are the procedures for creating them the

6 same. 663 Therefore, if Congress invokes a law, it draws upon one source of the 7 Constitution for authority. 664 If it acts in an amendatory manner, it draws

8 upon an entirely different source of constitutional authority. 665 Thus, the 9 "necessary and proper" clause only applies to Congress' power to "make all

10 laws" and does not apply to any amendatory power. Thus, the provision itself

11 is limited to statutory matters and does not grant any such latitude in the 12 amending portion of the Constitution.

13 In light of the extremely limited power of Congress to call a convention, 666 and the comments of the Founding Fathers, 667 can the extension of the power through the use of "necessary and proper" be greater in scope than 16 the original grant of power directly prescribed in the Constitution? If the 17 Constitution prescribes only that Congress "shall call", 668 does that

18 infinitesimal grant of original constitutional power enlarge through the use of the "necessary and proper" clause to grant Congress complete and utter 20 control of the amendatory process? Or, to paraphrase Chief Justice Marshall,

662 See supra text accompanying notes 561-579.

<sup>664</sup> Id.

14

15

&lt;sup>663</sup> Id.

&lt;sup>665</sup> Id.

<sup>666</sup> See supra text accompanying note 660.

&lt;sup>667</sup> See supra text accompanying notes 140-142,202,209,214,217,220.

<sup>668</sup> U.S. CONST., Art. V.

1	must "the power be construed so as to be a legitimate need upon Congress for
2	it to enlarge its powers beyond the original scope conceived by the Founding
3	Fathers in the Constitution?"
4	The answer to Marshall's question is both profound in its logic and
5	brutal in its implications. Either the Court must ignore all concepts of the
6	separation of powers found within the Constitution and grant Congress
7	unlimited power to regulate that which the Founders specifically intended it
8	should not-or the Court must side with the intent and wisdom of the Founding
9	Fathers and thus limit and construe Congress' calling power narrowly as was
10	intended.
11	The Court in its wisdom must decide the course of this nation. Shall it
12	follow the rule of law as laid out so carefully by the Founders, a tried-and-
13	true path that has resulted in untold benefits? Or shall it walk the
14	treacherous path of providing the Federal government untold, unlimited and
15	uncontrolled power-the very tyranny the Revolution was fought to overturn? A
16	walk on the latter path will have consequences that will ring down through the
17	ages.
18
19	THE SINGLE SUBJECT PRE-CONDITION
20
21	Introduction

- 1 Some have proposed<sup>669</sup> that Congress has the power to ignore applications
- 2 by the states for a convention unless those applications relate to the same
- 3 subject, thus granting Congress the power of content-based discrimination.
- 4 Thus, states this argument, unless the required two-thirds of the states apply
- 5 on the same subject, Congress has the right to reject or ignore the
- 6 applications and not call a convention to propose amendments. 670
- 7 Despite these opinions, Congress has never bothered to establish
- 8 criteria for the determination of exactly what is "same subject" where a
- 9 convention to propose amendments is concerned. Instead, that deliberative body
- 10 has at various times responded with proposed amendments of its own regarding
- 11 subjects of which many states, as expressed in their applications, have
- 12 requested as amendments. 671 This proposing of an amendment itself rather than

<sup>669</sup> See supra text accompanying note 547.

The Court disposed of this argument in the closely related case, United States v. Sprague, 282 U.S. 716 (1931), in which the Court utterly rejected the notion that the mode of ratification chosen by Congress needed to be based on the particular subject matter of the amendment.

The Court said in part:

&quot;Thus, however, clear the phraseology of article 5, they [appellants] urge we ought to insert into it a limitation on the discretion conferred on the Congress, so that it will read, 'as the one or the other mode of ratification may be proposed by the Congress, as may be appropriate in view of the purpose of the proposed amendment' This can not be done." (emphasis added). See supra text accompanying note 527; infra text accompanying note 1048.

Obviously, if the Court found the subject matter of a proposed amendment or amendments can have no bearing as to the method of ratification chosen by Congress, it follows the subject matter of application for a convention to propose amendments must be equally irrelevant as that would require the introduction of phrases (such as cited in Sprague) into Article V, either expressed or implied, that were simply never intended by the Framers to be there.

&lt;sup>671</sup> See supra text accompanying notes 535-538.

calling the convention has been the congressional pattern of response in all 1 cases but one. 672 2 By its actions, Congress has in effect read Article V as if the Gerry 3 amendment  $^{673}$  had never existed. But the Gerry amendment to Article V was4 5 proposed and accepted by the Founding Fathers, 674 ratified by the people in 6 conventions assembled, and therefore cannot be ignored by Congress. An action-7 or inaction-taken by Congress is not necessarily constitutional, no matter how 8 many times that action is taken. 9 10 11 The Basis of the Same Subject Pre-Condition 12 13 14 Ignoring the convention issue for a moment, it is probably safe to say, 15 if the intent of the Founding Fathers regarding any constitutional issue was to be based on early drafts of the Constitution, that almost any 16 interpretation desired of that intent could be created. At one point, for 17 18 example, there was no electoral college contained within the Constitution. Would it therefore be a proper interpretation of the Constitution to maintain 19 20 the Founding Fathers did not mean to have an electoral college involved in  $^{672}$  See infra text accompanying note 437.

673 See supra text accompanying notes 435-437; infra text accompanying notes 682-686.

<sup>674</sup> Id.

- 1 presidential elections, and therefore it is constitutionally permissible not
- 2 to have those electors vote for President? Obviously not.
- 3 But the proponents of "same subject" rush in where constitutional intent
- 4 fails to tread. The pre-condition presented by these proponents of "same
- 5 subject" rests on early drafts of Article V. Here, say proponents, the
- 6 Founding Fathers wrote language that indicated "same subject" should hold
- 7 sway, and therefore this is what the Constitution should be construed to mean.
- 8 In other words, they would have the construement of the article based,
- 9 not on its final form, but on earlier drafts of the Constitution, works in
- 10 progress, written while the delegates were still deliberating-adding,
- 11 revising, deleting and changing that article. They construe the Constitution
- 12 based on half-finished work that was later deliberately changed by the
- 13 delegates and would have this construement ignore those later additions,
- 14 revisions and deletions by those delegates.
- 15 During the Convention the delegates repeatedly were forced to compromise
- 16 strongly held and opposing points of view. The early drafts reflected the
- 17 evolution of these compromises beginning with various concepts of government
- 18 refined over time to reach the final form we know today as the Constitution.
- 19 Clear evidence exists that the Founders changed their minds often on many
- 20 issues over the course of the Constitutional Convention of 1787. To use early
- 21 drafts of the Constitution, where such changes and compromises were being
- 22 hammered out, to attempt to prove the final intent of the Founders, where
- 23 clear evidence exists that such intent had changed over time, is ludicrous on
- 24 its face.

The Erroneous Historic Basis of the Same Subject Pre-Condition 1 2. 3 It should therefore come as no surprise that "same subject" proponents rest their pre-condition primarily on an interpretation of the first draft of 5 the amendment article that read: 6 "This Constitution ought to be amended whenever such Amendment shall be 7 necessary; and on Application of the Legislatures of two-thirds of the Sates of the Union, the Legislature of the United States shall call a Convention for 8 that Purpose."675 9 10 There is no doubt that had the Founding Fathers stopped at this point in the formation of Article V, the applications for an amendment would have had 11 12 to all concern the same subject. Further, the convention could have only 13 considered one subject per convention. However, the delegates did not stop 14 here and instead revised the article several times. 15 On August 6, this first draft of the Constitution was submitted to the Convention by the Committee of Detail. 676 The amendatory process contained in 16 17 Article XIX of the draft provided: 18 "On the application of the Legislatures of two-thirds of the States of the Union, for an amendment of this Constitution, the Legislature of the 19 United States shall call a Convention for that purpose." 677 20 Under this plan, had there been no changes, "same subject" certainly 21 would have applied. First, the provision called for an amendment, not 22 amendments as in the final version. 678 Further, it clearly required [an] 23

"application" of the "Legislatures of two-thirds of the States of the

 $<sup>^{675}</sup>$  1 FARRAND at 152 n. 14, 159 & n.16 (Comm. Of Detail, Doc. VIII) (emphasis added), 174 (a similarly worded draft proposed by the Committee of Detail).  $^{676}$  Id. at 176 (Journal-August 6), 177 (Madison), 190 (McHenry).

Id. at 188 (Madison-Aug. 6)(emphasis added).

 $<sup>^{678}</sup>$  See supra text accompanying note 2.

- 1 Union..." This being the case, clearly "same subject" would have been proper,
- 2 and in fact it could be argued the application would have to be the same
- 3 application from all the states applying in order to be a proper application
- 4 to which Congress must respond.
- 5 Later Madison introduced a proposal reading:

"The Legislature of the U--- S---- whenever two-thirds of both Houses shall deem necessary, or on the application of two-thirds of the Legislatures of the several States, shall propose amendments to this Constitution which shall be valid to all intents and purposes as part thereof, when the same shall have been ratified by three-fourths at least of the Legislatures of the several States, or by Conventions in three-fourths thereof, as one or the other mode of ratification may be proposed by the Legislature of the U.S[.]"679

- 13 Then, on September 12, a further amendment revision was proposed by the
- 14 Committee of Revision.
- The amendment read:

16 "The Congress, whenever two-thirds of both houses shall deem necessary, 17 or on the application of two-thirds of the legislatures of the several states, shall propose amendments to this constitution, which shall be valid to all 18 19 intents and purposes, as part thereof, when the same shall have been ratified by three-fourths at least of the legislatures of the several states, or by 20 conventions in three-fourths thereof, as the one or the other mode of 21 ratification may be proposed by the Congress; Provided, that no amendment 22 23 which may be made prior to the year 1808 shall in any manner affect the and sections of article..."680 24

- 25 The Committee had made minor stylistic changes but otherwise had 26 followed the last version (Madison's) approved by the delegates. 681 This new 27 version required all amendments to be proposed by Congress.
- In other words, Congress was charged with the actual writing of a proposed amendment. The effect of this method, had the Founding Fathers adopted it, would have also required the states to apply for the same subject,

_

<sup>679</sup> Id. at 555 (Journal---Sept. 10), 559 (Madison---Sept. 10)(emphasis added). 680 Id.(footnotes omitted)(emphasis added). See supra text accompanying note 418.

 $<sup>^{681}</sup>$  Compare Id. at 555 (Journal---Sept. 10), 559 (Madison---Sept. 10) with Id. at 602 (Comm. on Style).

- 1 as clearly the wording only allowed Congress to act to propose an amendment
- 2 after two-thirds of the states had applied for it. Obviously, Congress could
- 3 not have done this if the applications concerned different subjects.
- 4 The most important impact of this wording was that Congress, not the
- 5 states, had ultimate control of the Constitution through the amendment
- 6 process. The states could apply for an amendment, but it was Congress that
- 7 actually wrote it and therefore determined when the two-thirds requirement was
- 8 satisfied.
- 9 Under Madison's proposal Congress clearly would have possessed power to
- 10 regulate the application language of the states to the last comma. There is no
- 11 question that the content of the application, not the number of the
- 12 applications, would have determined when the two-thirds requirement was
- 13 satisfied. Thus, Congress would have been able to veto such applications if
- 14 the application language did not meet some congressional standard. Further, it
- 15 is clear that Congress would have had the authority to change these standards
- 16 at any time and thus forever stall any application by the states if it chose
- 17 to do so.
- 18 The dangers of this method of amendment are obvious and were directly
- 19 addressed by Colonel Mason following the adoption of Madison's proposal by the
- 20 delegates. His discussion focused on his concern that Congress could prevent
- 21 the proposing of amendments. On the back of his copy of the draft
- 22 Constitution, Mason wrote the following:
- 23 "Article 5th. By this Article Congress only have the Power of proposing
- 24 Amendments at any future time to this constitution, & shou'd it prove ever so

- 1 oppressive, the whole people of America can't make, or even propose
- 2 Alterations to it; a Doctrine utterly subversive of the fundamental Principles
- of the Rights & Liberties of the people[.]"682
- 4 Clearly, by these comments, Mason realized that if Congress did possess
- 5 the power of "same subject" determination, it could use that power to veto the
- 6 applications of the states, no matter how carefully they worded their
- 7 applications.
- 8 Mason's notes served as the basis for the comments he gave on the
- 9 convention floor, which were recorded by Madison:
- 10 "Col. Mason thought the plan of amending the Constitution exceptionable
- 11 & dangerous. As the proposing of amendments is in both the modes to depend,
- 12 the first immediately, and in the second, ultimately, on Congress, no
- 13 amendments of the proper kind would ever be obtained by the people, if the
- 14 Government should become oppressive, as he verily believed would be the
- 15 case."683
- 16 As a result of these concerns, Gouverneur Morris of Pennsylvania and
- 17 Elbridge Gerry of Massachusetts "moved to amend the article so as to require a
- 18 Convention on application of 2/3 of the Sts..."684
- James Madison then addressed the motion:
- 20 "Mr. Madison did not see why Congress would not be as much bound to
- 21 propose amendments applied for by two-thirds of the States as to call a
- 22 Convention on the like application. He saw no objection however against
- 23 providing for a Convention for the purpose of amendments, except only that
- 24 difficulties might arise as to the form, the quorum &c. which in
- 25 Constitutional regulations ought to be as much as possible avoided." 685
- 26 The Convention unanimously agreed to the motion by Morris and Gerry, 686
- 27 thus acceding to Mason's request to re-insert the convention method of
- 28 amending the Constitution into Article V; this changed the meaning of the

 $<sup>^{682}</sup>$  4 Id. at 59 n.1, 61; 2 Id. at 637 n. 21 (stating that the quoted language "was written by Mason on the blank pages of his copy of the draft of September 12").

 $<sup>^{683}</sup>$  2 Id. at 629 (Madison---Sept. 15). See supra text accompanying notes 363,418,430,435.

&lt;sup>684</sup> Id. (emphasis added).

<sup>685</sup> Id. at 629-30.

&lt;sup>686</sup> Id. at 630.

- 1 article from that of "same subject" applications to a simple numeric count
- 2 causing a convention to occur. 687 The language of the motion is unequivocal: 688
- 3 a convention is required on the application of two-thirds of the states, and
- 4 these applications must be considered as an expression of intent by the states
- 5 to hold a convention, not to offer an amendment 689 to Congress for its
- 6 potential veto by any means Congress might devise. Therefore, Congress has no
- 7 power of discretion in the matter.

There is further evidence supporting the desire of the delegates to have a convention provision within the Constitution. This involves the attempt by a minority of delegates to remove the provision from the proposed draft constitution. The account was provided by Thomas Jefferson as told to him years later by George Mason:

"Anecdote. The constn. As agreed at first was that amendments might be proposed either by Congr. or the legislatures a commee was appointed to digest & redraw. Gov. Morris & King were of the commee. One morng. Gov. M. Moved an instrn for certain alterns (not ½ the members yet come in) in a hurry & without understanding it was agreed to. The Commee reported so that Congr. shd have the exclusive power of proposg. Amendmts. G. Mason observed it on the report & opposed it. King denied the constrn. Mason demonstrated it, & asked the Commee by what authority they had varied what had been agreed. G. Morris then impudently got up & said by authority of the convention & produced the blind instruction beforementd, which was unknown by ½ of the house & not till then understood by the other. They then restored it as it stood originally." (3 FARRAND at 367-68)(footnote omitted).

According to Jefferson's retelling of Mason's recollection, a minority of delegates almost succeeded in deleting the convention method of amendment from the Constitution, but their attempt was foiled by the vigilance of several other delegates.

The point of the anecdote is obvious. The Constitutional Convention desired a method whereby the states could amend the Constitution absent Congress' participation or permission. And as they "restored it as it stood originally," clearly this includes the Morris-Gerry amendment "requiring a Convention on application of 2/3 of the Sts..." Thus, the convention method of amendment was approved twice by the delegates prior to final approval of the document.

<sup>688</sup> See supra text accompanying notes 435-437.

The final blow to "same subject" comes when it is realized that the convention, like Congress, has the right to propose amendments, not just an amendment (See supra text accompanying note 2). Congress itself has proposed amendments, all on different subjects, simultaneously. (See supra text accompanying note 489). If Congress has the power to simultaneously propose amendments, and the convention has the power to propose amendments, it follows the convention also has the power to propose amendments on different subjects simultaneously.

The single criterion for calling a convention is the number of 1 applications. Thus, any specific amendment subject proposed for discussion at 2 a convention to propose amendments and contained within a state's application 3 is immaterial. While the reasons for placing such subjects in an application 4 may have political significance, the subject matter is constitutionally 5 6 irrelevant. It is as constitutionally valid for a state to submit a general, non-specific application, as several have done, 690 as it is to apply for a 7 specific subject, as many have done. 691 Each application by the state, whether 8 it contains subject matter or not, is equally valid. 692 10 11 A Brief Summation of the History of Article V 12 13 14 15 The final version of Article V specifies that a convention propose (or write) the actual amendments. 693 The applications by the states are made in 16 order to cause this convention to occur, not to propose specific amendments. 694 17 Earlier drafts of Article V, either expressly or by implication, provided that 18 Congress write all amendments to the Constitution. 695 Thus, it can be inferred 19 690 See infra text,

TABLE 4-GENERAL APPLICATIONS, NON SPECIFIC, p.680.

691 See infra text,

TABLE 5-GENERAL APPLICATIONS, INCLUDING SPECIFIC, p.680.

692 See infra text,

TABLE 1-STATE APPLICATIONS FOR A CONVENTION, p.661.

693 See supra text, accompanying notes 2,458.

694 See supra text, accompanying notes 683,684.

695 See supra text, accompanying notes 675-681.

- 1 Congress was intended to possess the right to "judge" the applications for
- 2 "same subject" before it could act on them. But the Morris-Gerry amendment
- 3 changed all that from a "same subject" application to a simple numeric count
- 4 in order for a convention to be called. 696
- 5 Thus, Congress cannot judge the content of the convention applications
- 6 by the states because:
- 7 1. The applications by the states are numeric in nature rather than subjective;
- 9 2. The states are not empowered to write proposed amendments, and therefore the applications contain no actual amendment language or substance to judge;
- 12 3. Congress has no implied or expressed constitutional authority, as this was 13 removed by the Morris-Gerry amendment, to propose amendments desired by the 14 states and therefore has no reason to judge the content of the applications 15 by the states for any amendment;
- 4. Congress is given no option in calling a convention; as Congress must call, regardless of application content, "same subject" cannot be used as a criterion to satisfy the two-thirds requirement.
- 19 The point of this change to the meaning and intent of Article V cannot
- 20 be overemphasized. Before Gerry's and Morris' amendment to Article V, the
- 21 "same subject" interpretation was correct. However, it was deliberately
- 22 changed by the Founding Fathers to a simple numeric count 697 following Colonel
- 23 Mason's speech on the subject. 698 The intent of the applications was changed by
- 24 the Founding Fathers from applying for an amendment to simply notifying
- 25 Congress of the desire of the states to hold a convention. This change was
- 26 made because Mason feared that Congress, if it held the sole power of
- 27 amendment through use of "same subject", would ignore the wishes and desires
- 28 of the states to amend the Constitution. The Convention unanimously agreed

_

&lt;sup>696</sup> See supra text, accompanying notes 682-684.

&lt;sup>697</sup> See supra text accompanying notes 506-513.

<sup>698</sup> See supra text accompanying notes 682,683.

1 with Mason and passed Gerry's amendment to prevent Congress from doing this.

2 Events have demonstrated Mason's fear was well founded. Congress has been

3 allowed to use completely false and unconstitutional pre-conditions, such as

4 "same subject", as an excuse to ignore the Constitution and refuse to call a

5 convention. 699

6

7 The Right of Discussion Issue

8

9

18

The same subject pre-condition, as with all the other pre-conditions proposed to defeat the calling of a convention, presents another inherent

12 difficulty in that it mandates a violation of the doctrine of equal protection

13 under the Constitution. 700

Whenever a member of Congress wishes to discuss a proposed amendment,

15 that member may introduce such a subject on his own accord to Congress. He

16 requires no permission from Congress to do so, nor is there any requirement

17 for a minimum number of members of Congress affirming the matter for it to be discussed. 701 No member of Congress represents more than a single state, or a 19 portion thereof, in the Union. Under our system of government, members of 20 Congress are representatives of their constituencies, and it is assumed at the

&lt;sup>699</sup> See supra text accompanying note 363.

 $<sup>^{700}</sup>$  U.S. CONST.,  $14^{\rm th}$  amend. § 1, "due process of the laws." Further, such limitations of subject matter of amendments have been declared unconstitutional by the Supreme Court as per the  $1^{\rm st}$  Amendment. See infra text accompanying notes 1196,1310-1333.

&lt;sup>701</sup> Of course, in order for the amendment subject to become an amendment proposal by Congress, it requires consent from two-thirds of each house.

- least that they represent the desires of those who elected them. 702 Therefore,
- 2 if a member of Congress proposes an amendment for discussion, it can be
- 3 presumed this submission represents the desires of those at home who elected
- 4 that member. 703
- 5 As representation to the national government is determined by state
- 6 boundaries or portions of a state, and as no representatives at large exist
- 7 whose representation in Congress encompasses more than a single state, it
- 8 follows that it only requires a single state, represented by a single member
- 9 of Congress, to introduce a subject regarding a constitutional amendment for
- 10 discussion in Congress. 704 However, the same subject pre-condition would hold
- 11 that in order to discuss a measure at a convention to propose amendments, it
- 12 requires two-thirds agreement by the states just to discuss a subject for a
- 13 proposed amendment. 705

(Footnote Continued Next Page)

 $<sup>^{702}</sup>$  See Hawke v. Smith, 253 U.S. 221 (1920).

 $<sup>^{703}</sup>$  The Supreme Court, in discussing ratification, addressed this concept when it said in part:

&quot;The method...call[s] for action by deliberative assemblages of representative[s] of the people, which it was assumed would voice the will of the people." Id.

 $<sup>^{704}</sup>$  It can be argued if it were true that a single member of Congress could not introduce a subject for discussion, but instead required the consent of other members of Congress to introduce the subject, that this would be a violation of the member's immunity under Article I, § 6 (1): "They shall in all cases...be privileged...for any speech or debate in either house, they shall not be questioned in any other place." If members of Congress required consent from other members just to introduce an amendment subject, it could argued, as these members represent sovereign states, that such consent was a form of questioning "in another place" and thus a violation of their constitutional guarantee of freedom of debate, which at the least must be the freedom to discuss any subject a particular member wishes.

To Congress has long adhered to the "same subject" pre-condition, for it has refused to call a convention in spite of a numeric total of state applications far in excess of the two-thirds threshold established in Article V. It can be argued that Congress is violating the convention's right by subjecting the debate to propose an amendment to questioning "in another place" when it stubbornly forbids that debate by refusing to call the required convention.

1 This raises an interesting hypothetical. For the sake of argument, let

- 2 us assume that "same subject" is the correct interpretation of Article V,
- 3 i.e., two-thirds of the states must concur on a given topic before that topic
- 4 may be entertained at a convention to propose amendments. As no higher
- 5 standard for proposal exists for the convention than for Congress, 706 and as
- 6 the states by their applications have already granted consent, it may be
- 7 argued that the subject has passed the convention before its delegates have
- 8 discussed or even written a proposed amendment.
- 9 But this hypothetical casts an even longer shadow: under the same
- 10 subject pre-condition, it would take only four more states to ratify an
- 11 amendment. Thus, if three-quarters of the states should apply for a convention
- 12 on the same subject before Congress could act to call a convention, one could
- 13 argue that the subject has legitimately become part of the Constitution before
- 14 an amendment has even been written.
- 15 While this assertion may appear absurd on its face, this shadow has
- 16 substance. 707 While Congress may propose an amendment to the states for
- 17 ratification, the states may only submit applications for a convention "for
- 18 the purpose of proposing amendments," as stated in Article V of the Congress' inaction is patently unconstitutional and must be recognized as such. See infra text accompanying notes 1320-1333.

Under the doctrine of equal protection as provided in the  $14^{\rm th}$  Amendment to the Constitution. See supra text accompanying notes 1209-1244; 1418-1510. According to at least two authors, two subjects, balanced budget and limited taxation (Repeal of the  $16^{\rm th}$  Amendment) have received enough applications to not only satisfy application but also ratification standards. See infra

TABLE 9-SAME SUBJECT APPLICATIONS INCLUDING CAPLAN, PART I, p. 689; TABLE 9-SAME SUBJECT APPLICATIONS INCLUDING CAPLAN, PART II, p. 690.

- 1 Constitution. Thus, an amendment is not actually written until a convention is
- 2 held and the delegates write and submit such an amendment to the states for
- 3 ratification. A convention may very well choose not to submit an amendment,
- 4 just as Congress often does. 708 The Constitution avoids giving the states the
- 5 power to write an amendment; instead it only grants them the power to apply
- 6 for a convention. 709
- 7 For this reason, while certain characteristics of ratification and
- 8 application may be interpreted simultaneously, this interpretation is not
- 9 ubiquitous. In ratification, the states and Congress are dealing with an
- 10 already written, specific proposal. In applications, the states and Congress
- 11 are dealing with yet-to-be written, conceptual proposals. This difference is
- 12 crucial.

17

- 13 If the Court should stipulate the following conditions:
- 14 1. A state application for a convention to propose amendments, like a ratification, is a vote or approbation for approval of a particular amendment; 710
  - 2. An application cannot be recessed; 711
- 18 3. "Single subject" is the correct interpretation of Article V;
- 19 then it follows that the "amendment" has already been approved by at least
- 20 two-thirds of the states before it has even been written.
- 21 The above stipulation creates a paradox. How can the states change an
- 22 amendment they have already approved? What if the number of states required
- 23 for ratification of an amendment applies for a convention before Congress can
- 24 call one? This hypothetical, if followed to its logical conclusion, would

-

&lt;sup>708</sup> See supra text accompanying notes 535-542.

&lt;sup>709</sup> U.S. CONST., art. V.

 $<sup>^{710}</sup>$  See infra text accompanying note 776.

&lt;sup>711</sup> See infra text accompanying notes 890-920.

- dictate that an unspecified, unwritten amendment has become part of the - Constitution and is free from review by either Congress or the states. 2
- If true, then who would write this amendment? And, should there be 3
- disagreement or advantage taken in this already approved process by those 4
- 5 given the task of writing this carte-blanche amendment check, can there be
- 6 redress as the issue has already been ratified?
- 7 Paradoxes such as this make for bad law. The only logical interpretation
- 8 of Article V is that the two-thirds application standard explicitly deals with
- compelling Congress to call a convention, not with approval by the states of
- 10 any subject of an amendment.
- 11 Objections to this interpretation are of course based on the provision
- 12 of Article V that states:
- 13 "[amendments]...which shall be valid to all intents and purposes, as
- part of this Constitution, when ratified by the legislatures of three-fourths 14
- 15 of the several states, or by conventions in three-fourths thereof, as the one
- or the other mode of ratification may be proposed by the Congress..." 122 16
- 17 But if "same subject" is the accepted interpretation, once the proper
- 18 number of states seeking a "same subject" amendment reaches the two-thirds
- threshold, 713 Congress would have already selected the method of ratification, 19
- 20 which would be the convention method by default.
- 21 However, a careful, exact reading of Article V prohibits this
- 22 interpretation. Article V states clearly that the conventions must be
- "conventions in three-fourths [of the states] thereof..." Proponents of "same 23

 $<sup>^{712}</sup>$  See infra text accompanying note 2.

&lt;sup>713</sup> See infra

TABLE 6-SAME SUBJECT APPLICATIONS, PART I, p.681; TABLE 6-SAME SUBJECT APPLICATIONS, PART II, p.682.

- 1 subject" conveniently ignore the "s" in "amendments"; the Constitution
- 2 empowers the convention to consider more than one subject at a time, which
- 3 alone should eliminate "same subject" as a basis for determining the
- 4 convention call.
- 5 Should one choose to ignore the "s" in "conventions", another
- 6 unconstitutional precondition may be created, in which an already proposed
- 7 amendment, if concurred by enough states, would be considered as ratified even
- 8 before written. To reduce this argument ad absurdum, one could state that as
- 9 the Federal convention clearly includes all the states, thus a Federal
- 10 convention is merely holding all the state conventions simultaneously. While
- 11 this type of quick fix could be considered a convenience, it would completely
- 12 demolish the doctrine of separation of powers.
- 13 But the "s" in "conventions" may not be ignored, and neither may the
- 14 "in" in "in convention"; both would alter the entire meaning of Article V as
- 15 intended by the Founders. Thus, the "s" in "amendments" may not be ignored
- 16 either, for this would change the proposing process as intended by the
- 17 Founders. 714
- 18 However, if one uses the interpretation of a simple numeric tally of the
- 19 states in Article V as intended by the Founding Fathers, $^{715}$  this paradox, as
- 20 with all other pre-conditions used to oppose a convention, vanishes. 16 Under

_

 $<sup>^{714}</sup>$  See infra text accompanying notes 852-867;1669-1671.

&lt;sup>715</sup> See supra text accompanying notes 507,513,514.

<sup>716 &</sup>quot;Nothing in this particular is left to the discretion of that [Congress] body. And of consequence all the declamation about their disinclination to a change, vanishes in air." THE FEDERALIST, No. 85 (A. Hamilton) (emphasis added). See supra text accompanying notes 506,507.

1 the numeric count interpretation, no matter what subject or subjects are

2 mentioned in applications by the states, no matter how old the applications,

3 no matter how radical the proposals, they must still win approval at a

4 convention where vigorous and spirited public debate will most certainly occur

5 before they are even proposed to the states for ratification. The proposal

6 will be written as a proposed amendment prior to its approval instead of the 7 other way around. No proposal will have any previous advantage coming into a

8 convention that otherwise might occur under the same subject pre-condition,

9 and issues regarding pre-ratification or adoption completely disappear.

Assuming consent of the convention, the proposed amendment would face a complete ratification vote requiring three-quarters approval by the states as was intended by the Founding Fathers before the proposal would be part of the Constitution. Thus, a proposed amendment would suffer great and deliberative debate, as it should before becoming part of the Constitution, instead of being slipped through by use of some constitutional loophole as amendment 16 advocates, in the heat of political battle, might attempt.

Legislative Issues Regarding Same Subject Pre-Condition

Without a doubt, "same subject" clearly presents Congress with the *most*discretion possible regarding a convention to propose amendments. Among the items placed on Congress' discretionary menu are:

<sup>717</sup> See supra text accompanying note 2.

_

10

11

12

13

14

15

17

18

19

- 1. Definition of "same subject"; 718
  - 2. Rejection of applications because the subject does not meet with congressional approval; 719
  - 3. Limitation of applications to an approved subject; 720
  - 4. Refusal of applications because so much as one word was out of  $place;^{721}$
  - 5. Veto of any amendment proposed by a convention by refusing to pass it on to the states for ratification;  $^{722}$
  - 6. Dismissal of a state legislature should it incur congressional disapproval by ratifying or not ratifying an amendment. 723
- 11 The matter does not stop there. Because of the committee system in
- 12 Congress, it is not only possible, but likely, that a single member of
- 13 Congress, such as a powerful committee chairperson, would decide all aspects
- 14 of the amendatory process for the convention and whether any amendment desired
- 15 by the states would ever reach a convention to propose amendments.
- 16 The amendment procedure, now constitutionally immune from the sullied
- 17 world of day-to-day politics, would become infected by political
- 18 considerations. Further, there would be no guarantee of consistency in the
- 19 amendment process by allowing Congress legislative participation. What one
- 20 Congress might establish, the next might undo. Therefore, what was acceptable
- 21 as an application to one Congress might, to the next Congress, be
- 22 unacceptable. The constitutional guarantee of congressional action "on the
- 23 application of the states" 724 would effectively be voided.
- 24 All of this, of course, requires resolutions, votes and laws on the part
- 25 of Congress. Certainly no one can argue that "same subject", which allows

3

5

6 7

8 9

 $<sup>^{718}</sup>$  See supra text accompanying note 597.

 $<sup>^{719}</sup>$  See supra text accompanying note 599.

&lt;sup>720</sup> See supra text accompanying note 600.

See supra text accompanying note 607.

&lt;sup>722</sup> Td

<sup>723</sup> See infra text accompanying note 917.

&lt;sup>724</sup> See supra text accompanying note 2.

- 1 Congress to completely regulate the only other means of amending the
- 2 Constitution and grants Congress the ability to veto or otherwise neutralize
- 3 that amendment process, would be an incidental congressional power subject
- 4 only to the usual rules of common legislation. Therefore, infusing Congress
- 5 with these broad powers that enable it to so deeply regulate the amendatory
- 6 process must be considered substantive in nature.
- 7 Thus, if such powers are substantive and relate exclusively to the
- 8 amendatory process, it follows that the issue raised in Hollingsworth must be
- 9 addressed. How can it be held that the proposal of an amendment, "a
- 10 substantive act, unconnected with the ordinary business of legislation,"725
- 11 does not require the participation of the President, yet the regulation of the
- 12 process producing such amendments does require participation of the President
- 13 and is merely an incidental power? Are the two separable? The answer is
- 14 clearly no.
- 15 As has been shown, the intention of the Founding Fathers 726 and the
- 16 interpretation of the Supreme Court 127 is that Congress has no discretion in a
- 17 convention to propose amendments and does not possess the power of legislation
- 18 within the proposal process. Therefore, Congress has no constitutional
- 19 authority to enforce any discretion regarding the subjects 728 of applications
- 20 by the states for a convention to propose amendments.

(Footnote Continued Next Page)

&lt;sup>725</sup> Hollingsworth v. Virginia, 3 U.S. 378 (1798).

&lt;sup>726</sup> See supra text accompanying notes 561-592.

Hollingsworth v. Virginia, 3 U.S. 378 (1798).

&lt;sup>728</sup> Congressional interpretations of Supreme Court interpretations of Article V appear to be limited only to those cases that may be misconstrued to favor Congress remaining in control. Such an example is a report issued by the PROPOSED PROCEDURES FOR A LIMITED CONSTITUIONAL CONVENTION, AEI Legislative Analysis,  $98^{th}$  Congress,  $2^{nd}$  Sess., (1984).

The report said:

"The Senate Judiciary Committee report (Senate Report 98-594, p.28, citing Dillon v. Gloss, 256 U.S. 368 (1921)) argues that the underlying principle of Article V is the need for constitutional consensus. Congress now has before it petitions for convening a convention from well over two-thirds of the states, but these petitions address different subjects and thus do not present the consensus required by Article V as interpreted by the Supreme Court. If the Constitution is in fact concerned with consensus, the states are enabled to call a limited convention. If the Constitution is not concerned with consensus, then the Congress is already delinquent in not calling a convention to deal with the numerous petitions now on hand. Opponents of a limited convention, according to the report, cannot have it both ways; they must choose one horn of the dilemma or the other."

The problem with congressional reliance upon Dillon as support for "same subject" consensus is that this ignores a later decision regarding the matter, United States v. Sprague, 282 U.S. 716 (1931). In Dillon, the Court discussed ratification. It incorrectly assumed that none of the earlier proposed amendments would ever gain enough support for ratification and thus concluded:

"That this is the better conclusion becomes even more manifest when what is comprehended in the other view is considered; for, according to it, four amendments proposed long ago—two in 1789, one in 1810 and one in 1861—are still pending and in a situation where their ratification in some of the states many years since by representatives of generations now largely forgotten may be effectively supplemented in enough more states to make three-fourths by representatives of the present or some future generation. To that view few would be able to subscribe, and in our opinion it is quite untenable. We conclude that the fair inference or implication from article 5 is that the ratification must be within some reasonable time after the proposal."

Hence, from this ruling, came the concept of "consensus". However, the ratification of the  $27^{\rm th}$  Amendment defeated this argument of the Court. See infra text accompanying notes 756-764.

But even more significant in the effect of Court rulings on the amendatory process is the direct language of Sprague. Simply put, the Court addressed directly the idea of adding limitations as is urged by "same subject" advocates.

The Court disagreed, saying:

"The United States asserts that article 5 is clear in statement and in meaning, contains no ambiguity, and calls for no resort for rules of construction. A mere reading demonstrates that this is true. It provides two methods for proposing amendments. Congress may propose them by a vote of two-thirds of both houses; or, on the application of the legislatures of two-thirds of the States, must call a convention to propose them." (emphasis added).

The Court then continued:

"[Appellees] urge we ought to insert into it a limitation on the discretion conferred on the Congress, so that it will read, 'as the one or the other mode of ratification may be proposed by the Congress, as may be appropriate in view of the purpose of the proposed amendment.' This can not be done." (emphasis added).

Thus, in this single ruling, the Court refutes "same subject". True, the Court was in both cases discussing ratification, not a convention call. But if opponents of a convention-or proponents of "same subject"--can maintain that

(Footnote Continued Next Page)

7

2 INSUFFICIENT APPLICATIONS PRE-CONDITION

3

13

4 This pre-condition is actually nothing more than a variation on "same

5 subject", and the same rebuttals generally apply.

6 First, it is argued that Congress must determine whether it has received

7 applications from two-thirds of the state legislatures and therefore is

8 inherently entitled to determine that the content of the applications matches

9 Congress' view on what is an application. Then, so the pre-condition goes, if

10 the content of the applications does not conform to Congress' view, Congress

11 may reject the application or applications.

12 This pre-condition entirely misses the point of the purpose of Article

V's provision. The constitutional intent of the applications is to establish 14 the desire of the states to have a convention, not to win approval from 15 Congress of a proposed amendment. The Founding Fathers never intended to such rulings support their view and may be applied, it then follows that this must also apply where such evidence exists that this view is incorrect.

In the specific matter, the Court in Sprague made it clear the convention can deal with more than one amendment by the simple use of the word "them" describing the convention's proposal process. Thus, a single subject convention is defeated because it is clear the convention can propose multiple amendments simultaneously.

Secondly, "same subject" was defeated by the Court when it affirmed that Congress is denied the limiting power to view an amendment for ratification (and presumably for proposal) "as may be appropriate in view of the purpose of the proposed amendment." In other words, the particular subject matter of a proposed amendment cannot be used to specify which mode of ratification is employed by Congress. Using the logic of extending the ratification decision by the Court to apply to proposal processes, it also follows that subject matter "as may be appropriate in view of the purpose of the proposed amendment" may not be used by Congress as the basis to judge whether a convention to propose amendments call shall be issued.

729 Supporters of "same subject" applications are clearly inconsistent on this

Supporters of "same subject" applications are clearly inconsistent on this point.

(Footnote Continued Next Page)

- 1 give Congress a choice in the matter of calling a convention to propose
- 2 amendments. The existence of the applications, once they have reached the
- 3 two-thirds threshold, are in and of themselves full satisfaction of the
- 4 Article V provision and thus serve as a constitutional mandate on both
- 5 Congress and the states. No other determination by Congress is therefore
- 6 required except for a simple numeric count.
- 7 If Congress is permitted to define what is and is not a "proper"
- 8 application, i.e., assume the power of veto over the application process of
- 9 the states in spite of the mandate of Article V, then the potential exists for
- 10 Congress to abuse that authority and unconstitutionally refuse to call a

There is no dispute that an application from a state for a convention must be submitted to Congress in order for it to "count", numerically, or otherwise. However, in his own book, Caplan defeats his own argument in establishing Congress as "the agent entrusted to...decide on the validity of applications" when discussing the form of the application.

In a footnote discussing a 19th Century application by the state of Alabama, the author discussed the intent of the application conceding that the word "apply" need not appear in an application for it to be valid. If the author concedes that a specific word need not be in the application for it to be valid, that the intent of the application is the only criterion required for the application to be valid, it is unreasonable and illogical to assume any other words in the application are needed in order for it to be valid. The intent of the application, according to the author himself, transcends all other such considerations.

Caplan wrote:

"Acts Passed at the extra and Annual Sessions of the General Assembly of the State of Alabama 142, 141 (Tuscaloosa, 1833); Message from His Excellency, Henry W. Edwards, to the Legislature of Connecticut, May, 1833, at 11 (Hartford,1833); 1 T. Cooper, ed., The Statues at Large of South Caroline 390, 400-401 (Columbia, 1836). Since the Alabama act only 'recommended' a convention rather than 'applied' for one, it has been considered not a true article V application. W. Pullen, 'The Application Clause of the Amending Provision' at 45. The intent, however, is plain, and there is not requirement that the word 'apply' be used in an application." (emphasis added).

730 See supra text accompanying notes 435-437,458,472,506-516,518-521.

&quot;In providing that 'on the Application of the Legislatures' Congress 'shall call a Convention,' article V implies that Congress is the agent entrusted to receive, inspect, and decide on the validity of applications, and that applications must be submitted to Congress to be counted toward a convention call." Caplan, Constitutional Brinksmanship: Amending the Constitution by National Convention, (1988) p.94.

- convention, even when the requisite number of states has applied for one, such
- as is now the case. $^{731}$ 2
- It is unfortunate that the Framers chose to grant Congress even this 3
- ministerial role in the convention process. It appears from Hamilton's remark
- 5 that the Framers did not foresee the possibility that Congress would seize on
- this slight authority to prevent a convention from ever being called. 732 6
- 7 The fact remains, however, that Congress is involved in the convention
- 8 process. The Framers clearly limited the definition of an application to that
- 9 of a numeric count expression of intent by the states to hold a convention to
- 10 propose amendments. 733 Obviously, Congress must count the applications even
- 11 under the numeric tally concept. But this limited constitutional power
- 12 allowing Congress to count the applications of the states does not translate
- 13 into an authority to reject, define or otherwise determine the content or

&lt;sup>731</sup> See infra text,

TABLE 2-STATES APPLYING FOR A CONVENTION, p.673.

<sup>732</sup> In FEDERALIST No. 85 Hamilton wrote:

&quot;In opposition to the probability of subsequent amendments, it has been urged, that the persons delegated to the administration of the national government, will always be disinclined to yield up any portion of the authority of which they were once possessed. For my own part I acknowledge a thorough conviction that any amendments which may, upon mature consideration, be thought useful, will be applicable to the organization of the government, not the mass of its powers; and on this account alone, I think there is no weight in the observation just stated. I also think there is little weight in it on another account. The intrinsic difficulty of governing THIRTEEN STATES at any rate, independent of calculations upon an ordinary degree of public spirit and integrity, will, in my opinion, constantly impose on the national rulers the necessity of a spirit of accommodation to the reasonable expectations of their constituents."

Here, sadly, it must be concluded that Hamilton, the great supporter of national government, put more faith in the desire of the national government to "accommodate the expectation of their constituents" than the facts bear out, and that the opponents in this case were correct "that the persons delegated to the administration of the national government, will always be disinclined to yield up any portion of the authority of which they were once possessed."

733 See supra text accompanying note 730.

- 1 context of an application. Once the proper number of states has applied,
- 2 Congress must call. Just as obviously, if a numeric count of the applications
- 3 is less than two-thirds of the states, the Congress cannot call a convention
- 4 to propose amendments. 734
- 5 At presently therefore, the insufficient applications pre-condition is
- 6 defeated because more than two-thirds of the states have applied for a
- 7 convention. $^{735}$  Once a convention is held, however, and the applications have
- 8 thus been discharged, it then becomes the only pre-condition that disallows a
- 9 congressional call.

10

11

THE CONTEMPORARY PRE-CONDITITON

12

- 13 The contemporaneous or timeliness pre-condition rests on a simple, if
- 14 flawed, premise: Congress has the right to reject applications from the states
- 15 for a convention to propose amendments because it finds the applications are
- 16 not "contemporary" or no longer "timely"--i.e., they do not fall within an
- 17 undefined time period, or the issue discussed in the application, if any, is
- 18 no longer a politically contemporaneous subject.
- 19 At first glance, the contemporary requirement for applications—i.e.,
- 20 applications must be "contemporary" to "count"--does present some intuitive
- 21 appeal based on the sense that the Framers inserted the two-thirds requirement
- 22 so that a convention would be called only if there were a substantial

TABLE 2-STATES APPLYING FOR A CONVENTION, p.673.

BRIEF IN SUPPORT OF CONVENTION GENERAL BRIEF ARGUMENTS PAGE 330

_

 $<sup>^{734}</sup>$  See infra text accompanying note 869.

<sup>735</sup> See infra text

1	nationwide	consensus	that	а	convention	were	needed.	The	contemporary	pre-
---	------------	-----------	------	---	------------	------	---------	-----	--------------	------

2 condition then states that if applications are given ongoing effectiveness,

3 then conceivably applications from two-thirds of the states could accumulate

4 over many years, requiring a convention to be called at a time when there is

5 no present or "contemporary" consensus among two-thirds of the states that a

6 convention is needed at that time. Therefore, it is the right of Congress to reject those applications that it determines are no longer "contemporary",

8 leaving only those Congress determines are "contemporary". If Congress finds enough applications are not "timely", then Congress is not required to call a 10 convention regardless of how many applications have been filed by the states.

The contemporary pre-condition presents nearly as many problems in the areas of definition and logic as does the same subject pre-condition. In addition, the contemporary pre-condition raises several constitutional issues and ultimately fails in the face of congressional actions regarding current 15 amendments to the Constitution.

16

7

9

11

12

13

14

The Definition "Problem"

18 19 20 21

22

23

24

25

17

Proponents of the contemporary pre-condition fail in the most basic of areas. They misconstrue the word "contemporary". They use the word to mean "current event." Thus the contemporary standard is defined by its proponents as meaning Congress should only call a convention if what it is desired to be amended is a "current event", i.e., a subject that is being already considered by Congress as a subject for amendment, and that unless an undefined time period of contemporaneousness is fulfilled, calling a convention based simply

- 1 on the constitutionally mandated two-thirds requirement would be "useless" and
- 2 therefore should not occur. 736
- 3 The problem with this narrow definition of the word "contemporary" in
- 4 the limited "current event" sense is that it would defeat a basic
- 5 constitutional principal: that any action by the government in relation to the
- 6 Constitution is to be that of fulfilling, not disobeying, its provisions and

"The 'consensus' requisite seems necessary upon a few moments' reflection. Surely there should be no obligation to call a convention, for example, if just twenty states seek one on a particular topic and just fourteen seek one on another. That clearly would indicate only that minorities are concerned about different points, neither of which concerns a majority." Bond & Engdahl, THE CONSTITUTIONAL CONVENTION, The Duties and Powers of Congress Regarding Conventions For Proposing Amendments", Nat'l. Legal Center for the Public Interest,(1987), p. 4,5. (emphasis added). See also APPENDIX C--1973 REPORT OF THE ABA SPECIAL CONSTITUTIONAL CONVENTION STUDY COMMITTEE, p.1.

"The Committee feels that some limitation is necessary and desirable but takes no position on the exact time except it believes that either four or seven years would be reasonable and that a Congressional determination as to either period should be accepted." ABA Report at p.37.

The report then discussed the ability of the states to withdraw applications. The report stated:

"Since a convention should reflect a "contemporaneously-felt need" that it take place, we think there should be no such limitation [to withdrawing applications]." ABA Report at p.37.

Further, the report urged that the states should have a say in whether or not their applications cover the same subject as other applications from other states.

The report said:

"From a slightly different point of view, the power to withdraw implies the power to change and this relates directly to the question of determining whether two-thirds of the state legislatures have applied for a convention to consider the same subject. A state may wish to say specifically through its legislature that it does or does not agree that its proposal covers the same subject as that of other state proposals. The Committee feels that this power is desirable." ABA Report at p.37.

In sum, the ABA Report favors granting to each state a veto power over a congressional determination that a convention should be called.

&quot;The 'contemporaneity' requisite to Congress' call obligation is not explicit in the text of Article V, but it seems implicit even without any certainty as to how much time should be permitted to elapse. The notion that the Congress is obligated to call a convention, simply because two-thirds of the States have--over some extended period of time--requested one, makes little sense. While it may be true that the States would probably not ratify the product of any such convention, it seems useless to call one under such circumstances. Amendment is after all extremely unlikely in the absence of a contemporaneous belief that amendment is necessary.

1 intents. The Constitution clearly mandates that if two-thirds of the states

2 apply, Congress must call a convention. 737 Even if applications were considered

3 in some "contemporary" standard, that standard must favor satisfying the

4 states' right to a convention, not granting Congress power to veto the mandate

5 of Article V. 738

16

17

19

6 The reason for this interpretation is obvious. If Congress is given the

7 power to decide what is and is not a "contemporary" application, it could

8 easily use this power of definition to veto the calling of a convention even

9 if the proper number of states had applied, simply by defining the 10 contemporary standard more narrowly than whatever record of application

11 existed, thus eliminating some states' applications and thus reducing the 12 number of state applications below the two-thirds threshold. 739 Clearly, this

13 would violate the intention of the Founding Fathers who intended "no 14 discretion"<sup>740</sup> on the part of Congress when it came to calling a convention.

15 The "current event" contemporary pre-condition fails to recognize the basic federalist intent of the Founding Fathers. In allowing Congress to determine what is "contemporary" the pre-condition assumes only Congress

18 (i.e., the national government) may set the agenda for an amendment or amendments to the Constitution. The Founding Fathers clearly intended both the

<sup>740</sup> See supra text accompanying notes 435-442,506-521.

<sup>737</sup> See supra text accompanying note 2.

<sup>738</sup> See supra text accompanying notes 278,286-288,291-293.

<sup>739</sup> No less at issue here are the problems involving legislating contemporary standards, whatever they might be, in the area of Article V, when no such constitutional authority exists for Congress to pass legislation. The problems presented earlier of non-presidential involvement in the amendment process present constitutional issues in Congress using its legislative powers. See supra text accompanying notes 598,599,620-1099,718-728.

1 states and the Congress should have the ability to amend the Constitution to

2 redress issues each saw was needed for the good of the nation. 741 Under this

3 concept of dual sovereignty, it is not improbable, therefore, that Congress

4 may pursue one or more amendments to the Constitution while the states and

5 people through the convention system, pursue others, neither of which is

6 related to the other at all. The states clearly have a right to contribute to the Constitution as much as Congress does and not be bound to Congress solely 8 setting the national agenda.

9

7

The Congressional Laches "Problem"

11

13

15

19

10

12 The contemporary pre-condition is based on an assumption that Congress, by its laches, has proven is not valid. The pre-condition assumes Congress

14 will obey the Constitution in a timely fashion. That is, the pre-condition presupposes that Congress, upon receiving applications, will move to determine

16 if they are contemporary or not while the question surrounding the application

17 still possesses validity. But Congress has not done this.

18 Instead, by its laches Congress has allowed applications to pile up in the Congressional Record with no indication that it ever intends to act and &lt;sup>741</sup> See supra text accompanying note 2. "The Congress, whenever two-thirds of both Houses shall deem it necessary, shall propose Amendments to this Constitution, or, on the Application of the Legislatures of two-thirds of the several States, shall call a Convention for proposing Amendments, which, in either Case, shall be valid to all Intents and Purposes, as Part of this Constitution, when ratified by the Legislatures of three-fourths of the several States, or by Conventions in three-fourths thereof, as the one or the other Mode of Ratification may be proposed by the Congress..." (U.S. CONST., art. V, (emphasis added).

- call a convention. 742 Congress cannot be permitted to veto portions of the 1
- Constitution -- for any reason, no matter how politically expedient -- by refusing 2
- to act on the applications in a timely manner, then use this deliberate 3
- inaction as the excuse upon which to later declare the applications no longer 4
- "contemporary". Congress cannot be allowed to set the timetable regarding 5
- 6 applications for the states, deciding for them when they will be "allowed" to
- 7 participate in the formulating of national policy, anymore than the states
- 8 should be allowed to do the same for Congress.
- 9 If Congress acts when it is supposed to, as specified by Article V,
- 10 there can be no question of contemporary applications because the convention
- 11 is called when the applications are unquestionably contemporary, i.e., when
- the minimum number needed to call a convention has been submitted. It is only 12
- 13 by its delay of obeying the Constitution that Congress has generated this
- pseudo-issue. 14
- The final proof that causes the contemporary pre-condition to fall is 15
- the application record of the states themselves.  $^{743}$  Certainly, a set of 16
- 17 applications less than ten years old fulfills any reasonable "contemporary"
- 18 standard. However, as Congress has never defined this standard, one may state
- 19 emphatically that no such standard exists. In using this standard to define
- 20 when a convention shall be called, Congress is attempting to use something

&lt;sup>742</sup> See infra text TABLE 1-STATE APPLICATIONS FOR A CONVENTION, p.661; TABLE 2-STATES APPLYING FOR A CONVENTION, p.673.

 $<sup>^{743}</sup>$  See infra text,

TABLE 1-STATE APPLICATIONS FOR A CONVENTION, p.661. As the record shows, a set of thirty-four applications were filed by the several states to Congress between 1976 and 1989.

1 that does not exist to define something that does exist. Thus, the age of the

2 applications can have no bearing on whether the states have satisfied the two-

3 thirds requirement.

4

5 The Ex post facto "Problem"

б

9

12

14

16

19 20 21 22

23

24

25 26

7 Ex post facto is the first of many constitutional problems facing any

8 contemporary pre-condition imposed by Congress. The Constitution specifically forbids Congress and the states from passing any ex post facto law. 744

10 In one of its earliest decisions, the Supreme Court defined the 11 prohibition against the passage of ex post facto laws by the legislature as applying exclusively to penal or criminal cases. As any law Congress might 13 impose on regulating a convention to propose amendments clearly is civil in nature, it would seem the Court removed any prohibition against Congress

15 regulating the convention using this provision of the Constitution. However, a closer examination of Justice Chase's opinion and the concurring opinion of 17 Justice Iredell presents a different view.

18 Justice Chase said in part:

"I cannot subscribe to the omnipotence of a State Legislature, or that it is absolute and without control; although its authority should not be expressly restrained by the Constitution, or fundamental law, of the State. The people of the United States erected their Constitution, or forms of government, to establish justice, to promote the general welfare, to secure the blessings of liberty; and to protect their persons and property from violence. The purposes for which men enter into society will determine the nature and terms of the social compact, and as they are the foundation of the legislative power, they will decide what are the proper objects of it. The nature, and ends of legislative power will limit the exercise of it. This fundamental principle flows from the very nature of our free Republican 4 governments, that no man should be compelled to do what the laws do not 5 require; nor to refrain from acts which the laws permit. There are acts which 6 the Federal, or State, Legislature cannot do, without exceeding their 7 authority. There are certain vital principles in our free Republican governments, which will determine and over-rule an apparent and flagrant abuse 9 of legislative power; as to authorize manifest injustice by positive law; or 10 to take away that security for personal liberty; or private property, for the protection whereof of the government was established. An act of the 11 12 Legislature (for I cannot call it a law) contrary to the great first 13 principles of the social compact, cannot be considered a rightful exercise of 14 legislative authority. The obligation of a law in governments established on 15 express compact, and on republican principles, must be determined by the 16 nature of the power, on which it is founded. A few instances will suffice to 17 explain what I mean. A law that punished a citizen for an innocent action, or, 18 in other words, for an act, which, when done, was in violation of no existing 19 law; a law that destroys, or impairs, the lawful private contracts of 20 citizens; a law that makes a man Judge in his own cause; or a law that take 21 property from A and gives its to B. It is against all reason and justice, for 22 a people to entrust a Legislature with such powers; and therefore, it cannot be presumed that they have done it. The genius, the nature, and the spirit, or 23 24 our State Governments, amount to a prohibition of such acts of legislation; and the general principles of law and reason forbid them." 746 25

 $<sup>^{744}</sup>$  "No bill of attainder or ex post facto law shall be passed." U.S. CONST., art. I, § 9, §§ 3; "No state shall...pass any...ex post facto law..." U.S. CONST., art. I, § 10, §§ 1.  $^{745}$  Calder v. Bull, 3 U.S. 386 (1798).

Justice Chase made a presumption regarding legislative power and acts that the evidence of this suit clearly demonstrates was correct: it was never the intent of the Framers that Congress could use its powers to deprive citizens of a "fundamental principle" [that] "flows from the very nature of our free Republican governments, that no man should be compelled to do what the laws do not require; nor to refrain from acts which the laws permit."

However, in the same Court decision, Justice Chase made another presumption regarding legislative power and acts which the evidence of this suit clearly demonstrates was incorrect, in that the Congress has deprived citizens of their right to alter or abolish without it being a benefit to any group

 $^{746}$  Id. (emphasis added).

26

27

28

29

30

31

32

33

34

35

 $<sup>^{747}</sup>$  See infra text accompanying notes 921-1020,1136-1147.

- 1 except Congress, 748 and there clearly has been no effort by Congress to make
- 2 full satisfaction in this regard. Therefore, Congress has violated the
- 3 principle of ex post facto.
- 4 Justice Chase said:

"It is not to be presumed, that the federal or state legislatures will pass laws to deprive citizens of rights vested in them by existing laws; unless for the benefit of the whole community; and on making full satisfaction... When I say that a right is vested in a citizen, I mean, that he has the power to do certain actions; or to possess certain things, according to the law of the land." 749

11 Justice Iredell was even more specific in his concurring opinion in

12 which he said:

13

14

15

16

17

18 19

20 21

22

23 24

25 26

27

28 29 30

31

32

33

"In order, therefore, to guard against so great an evil, it has been the policy of all the American states, which have, individually, framed their state constitutions since the revolution, and of the people of the United States, when they framed the Federal Constitution, to define with precision the objects of the legislative power, and to restrain its exercise within marked and settled boundaries. If any act of Congress, or of the Legislature of a state, violates those constitutional provisions, it is unquestionably void; though, I admit, that as the authority to declare it void is of a delicate and awful nature, the Court will never resort to that authority, but in a clear and urgent case. If, on the other hand, the Legislature of the Union, or the Legislature of any member of the Union, shall pass a law, within the general scope of their constitutional power, the Court cannot pronounce it to be void, merely because it is, in their judgment, contrary to the principles of natural justice... There are then but two lights, in which the subject can be viewed: 1st If the Legislature pursue the authority delegated to them, their acts are valid. 2nd If they transgress the boundaries of that authority, their acts are invalid. In the former case, they exercise the discretion vested in them by the people, to whom alone they are responsible for the faithful discharge of their trust; but in the latter case, they violate a fundamental law, which must be our guide, whenever we are called upon as judges to determine the validity of a legislative act."  $^{750}\,$

34 Thus, while the Calder decision specifically confined its ruling only to 35 acts of a legislature that punished a citizen criminally for acts previously

36 not criminal, nevertheless it made it clear that legislatures were forbidden

37 from violating the terms of the social compact that serves as the basis of <sup>750</sup> Id. (emphasis added).

_

 $<sup>^{748}</sup>$  See infra text accompanying note 1126.

<sup>749</sup> Calder v. Bull, 3 U.S. 386 (1798). (emphasis added).

this Constitution. The court made it clear that "act[s] which, when done, was 1 in violation of no existing law" cannot be subsequently voided by a 2 legislative act and that if the legislature does act in such a manner such 3

4 acts are "void."

20

21

5 Under this general interpretation of ex post facto, 751 because the 6 applications represent an expression of the fundamental right of the people--7 that of the right to alter or abolish--it is clear Congress is forbidden from 8 enacting legislation that would in any manner render state applications for a convention to propose amendments invalid. 752 Further, ex post facto dictates 9 10 that as Congress has enacted no legislation that challenges the legality or 11 validity of any application, it must be assumed all applications are legal, valid and in current force; congressional inaction in this case merely serves 12 13 to strengthen, not weaken, the ex post facto argument. Thus, the contemporary standard, or any other such pseudo-standard, cannot be applied to any 14 application already filed with Congress because such applications represent 15 16 the action of a fundamental right that the Congress is not empowered to 17 overturn. It equally clear as the Founding Fathers intended no discretion on 18 the part of Congress in the calling of the convention, any limitations in legislation, if indeed such legislation may legally be proposed, 753 cannot 19 include any provisions excluding any state application, as this would provide Congress a veto over state applications which is a direct violation of an

 $^{751}$  See supra text accompanying notes 746-750.

 $<sup>^{752}</sup>$  See infra text accompanying notes 868-920.

 $<sup>^{753}</sup>$  See supra text accompanying notes 560-579.

1 expressed constitutional provision and violates the fundamental principles

2 of ex post facto. For the same reason, the states cannot recess their

3 convention applications on the basis of contemporaneousness or any other

4 pseudo-standard, because this would be a similar violation of the Constitution

5 and ex post facto. 755

6

7 The 27th Amendment "Problem"

8

9 If one argues, as does the ABA Report, that the rules regarding 10 ratification should "be equally applicable to state applications for a 11 national constitutional convention," then the pre-condition that

12 applications must be "contemporary"-i.e., "reflect the will of the people in all sections at relatively the same period..." $^{758}$ --to "count" must certainly 14 fail in light of the most obvious contrary example: the 27th Amendment to the 15 Constitution. This amendment was proposed by Congress in 1789 but did not 16 receive ratification by the states until 1992, some 203 years later. The it

17 is argued that an application by a state must be "contemporary" to "count",

18 and that court decisions concerning ratification also apply to applications,

19 then the 203 years needed in order to ratify the 27th Amendment must establish

 $<sup>^{754}</sup>$  "Congress...shall...call a convention" U.S. CONST., art. V. (emphasis added).

<sup>755</sup> See infra text accompanying notes 921-1009,1136-1146,1148-1205.

 $<sup>^{756}</sup>$  See infra APPENDIX C---1973 REPORT OF THE ABA SPECIAL CONSTITUTIONAL CONVENTION STUDY COMMITTEE, p.1.

&lt;sup>757</sup> Id.

&lt;sup>758</sup> Id.

<sup>759</sup> See supra text accompanying note 489.

- 1 the contemporaneous standard called for by those advocating such a standard
- 2 for applications for a convention to propose amendments.
- 3 Those advocating that court interpretations applying to ratification
- 4 also apply to applications for a convention to propose amendments ignore the
- 5 most obvious problem: the Court was not even considering such a question when
- 6 it ruled. Thus, these advocates rely on a connection that even the Court
- 7 itself has never attempted to make. 760 Despite this obstacle, how can it be
- 8 argued in any way but the affirmative that an application filed in 1789, 761 for
- 9 example, is just as effective and current as a 203 year old ratification vote
- 10 for a constitutional amendment that caused that amendment to become part of
- 11 the Constitution when these ratifying states are the same states applying for
- 12 a convention using the same power derived from the same article in the
- 13 Constitution,?
- 14 The age issue surrounding applications is further diluted by the fact
- 15 that all but four of the state applications have occurred in this century. 762
- 16 In fact, more applications for a convention have been filed by the states
- 17 within the past 35 years than in the entire 172 years previous. 763 Thus, these
- 18 applications clearly express a more contemporaneous desire by the states than
- 19 does the ratification vote of the 27th Amendment.

&lt;sup>760</sup> See infra text accompanying note 767.

&lt;sup>761</sup> See infra text

TABLE 1-STATE APPLICATIONS FOR A CONVENTION, p.661.

&lt;sup>762</sup> Id.

&lt;sup>763</sup> Between the years 1789 and 1961, the states filed a total of 150 applications(eliminating duplicate applications filed by the same state) with the Congress requesting a convention to propose amendments. From 1962 until 1992, the states filed 209 applications. See infra TABLE 1—STATE APPLICATIONS FOR A CONVENTION, p.661.

2 limits on convention applications, nor was it intended t plications based on
3 no discretion. $^{764}$ To grant Congress the power to limit ap
4 some arbitrary "contemporary" standard regulated by Cong	ress grants that body
5 as much discretion, if not more, than if Congress regula	ted the convention
6 using the same subject pre-conditions presented earlier.
7 In light of the 27 th Amendment and the ex post fact	o issues, a
8 contemporary standard would be extremely difficult to de	fine, let alone
9 justify, even for Congress. If the states express, eithe	r by application or
10 ratification, their desire to deal with a question of co	nstitutional
11 amendment, regardless of the age of that question, then	the matter of 12 contemporaneousness is satisfied.
13
14
15
16
17 The Dillon v. Gloss "Problem"
18
19 Proponents of the contemporary pre-condition usual	ly refer to Dillon v.
20 Gloss <sup>765</sup> to provide constitutional support <sup>766</sup> for their po	-

(Footnote Continued Next Page)

&lt;sup>764</sup> See supra text accompanying notes 506-513.

Dillon v. Gloss, 256 U.S. 368 (1921).

766 Dillon is a weak argument for effecting a convention to propose amendments because the issue was clearly limited to congressional amendment proposals. Except for quoting Article V, at no time was the convention to propose amendments mentioned. Considering the question before the Court--the limits of

- however, where the Supreme Court did directly address the question of
- 2 contemporaneousness as it applied to ratification, the Court did not say a
- proposed amendment must be contemporaneous--i.e., dealing with a subject that 3
- is a "current event" -- rather it said "ratification [must] represent[s] a 4
- contemporaneous sentiment of the required number of states." In other words, 5
- 6 ratification must represent the "current" situation of the desire for
- 7 ratification of an amendment by the states.
- 8 Thus, if one accepts the pre-condition that Dillon defines the issue of
- contemporaneousness insofar as convention applications are concerned, the
- 10 issue becomes not whether the applications represent a "current event", but
- 11 whether these applications represent the current desire by the states for a
- convention. What are the facts regarding this desire? Firstly, more than two-12
- thirds of the states have applied for a convention to propose amendments. 769 13
- Secondly, a mass of applications, well in excess of the required two-thirds, 14
- remain currently in force today. 770 15

congressional power to affect the ratification process--one might have expected it to come to the fore. One of the most obvious questions arising from ratification is whether Congress has the power to affect, by ratification limitation, an amendment proposed by a convention to propose amendments should the convention desire a different limit, or no limit at all. As the court was mute on this subject, it must be assumed that the Court intended to limit itself strictly to congressional amendment proposals, leaving the products of a convention to propose amendments alone. See infra text accompanying note

 $^{767}$  See infra APPENDIX C---1973 REPORT OF THE ABA SPECIAL CONSTITUTIONAL CONVENTION STUDY COMMITTEE, "We believe the reasoning of Dillon v. Gloss to be equally applicable to state applications for a national constitutional convention." ABA Report at p.35.

768 Dillon v. Gloss, 256 U.S. 368 (1921).

TABLE 2-STATES APPLYING FOR A CONVENTION, p.673.

&lt;sup>769</sup> See infra

<sup>770</sup> See infra text accompanying notes 851-920;

TABLE 1-STATE APPLICATIONS FOR A CONVENTION, p.661;

TABLE 2-STATES APPLYING FOR A CONVENTION, p.673.

- Thus, those who attempt to use Dillon to present a reason not to call a
- 2 convention are faced with the fact that even their "contemporary" standard--
- 3 i.e., that the applications must be "current"--is satisfied by these
- 4 applications that clearly demonstrate a "contemporaneous sentiment of the
- 5 required number of states." 771
- 6 Dillon, however, dealt with more than just the definition of
- 7 "contemporaneous" as it applied to constitutional ratification. The Court
- 8 upheld Congress' right to prescribe time limits on the ratification of
- 9 amendments proposed by Congress. Further, the Court intimated that proposals
- 10 that were not ratified "within some reasonable time" were no longer open for
- 11 ratification. 772 However—and quite significantly—the Court did not intimate
- 12 that Congress had the power to impose a time limit on the calling of a
- 13 convention to propose amendments. The silence is persuasive. 773
- 14 The Court acknowledged it found nothing in Article V expressly relating
- 15 to time constraints, 774 yet allowed that it found intimated in the amending

(Footnote Continued Next Page)

 $<sup>^{771}</sup>$  Dillon v. Gloss, 256 U.S. 368 (1921). See infra text accompanying note 1553.

&quot;That this is the better conclusion becomes even more manifest when what is comprehended in the other view is considered; for, according to it, four amendments proposed long ago—two in 1789, one in 1810 and one in 1861—are still pending and in a situation where their ratification in some of the states many years since by representatives of generations now largely forgotten may be effectively supplemented in enough more states to make three-fourths by representatives of the present or some future generation. To that view few would be able to subscribe, and in our opinion it is quite untenable. We conclude that the fair inference or implication from article 5 is that the ratification must be within some reasonable time after the proposal." Dillon v. Gloss, 256 U.S. 368 (1921).

&lt;sup>773</sup> See supra text accompanying note 766.

&quot;It will be seen that this article says nothing about the time within which ratification may be had—neither that it shall be unlimited nor that it shall be fixed by Congress. What then is the reasonable inference or implication? Is it that ratification may be had at any time, as within a few years, a century or even a longer period, or that it must be had within some reasonable period

- 1 process a "strongly suggest[ive]" argument that proposed amendments are not
- 2 open to ratification for all time or by states acting at widely separate
- 3 times. 775

5

6 7

8 9

10

11

12

13

14 15

4 Three related considerations were put forward:

"First, proposal and ratification are not treated as unrelated acts but as succeeding steps in a single endeavor, the natural inference being that they are not to be widely separated in time. Secondly, it is only when there is deemed to be a necessity therefore that amendments are to be proposed, the reasonable implication being that when proposed they are to be considered and disposed of presently. Thirdly, as ratification is but the expression of a approbation of the people and is to be effective when had in three-fourths of the States, there is a fair implication that that it must be sufficiently contemporaneous in that number of States to reflect the will of the people in all sections at relatively the same period, which of course ratification scattered through a long series of years would not do."

- Those opposed to a convention to propose amendments reason that this
- 17 opinion by the Supreme Court may be carried carte blanche to the application
- 18 process of the convention, thus justifying a "contemporary" standard for
- 19 applications and permitting Congress to set "reasonable" time limits on
- 20 applications just as it has done in ratification. However, Congress has never
- 21 set such time limits for applications.
- 22 That there exists a "reasonable" time period for ratification, however,
- 23 has been strongly controverted. The 1992 the Office of Legal Counsel of the which Congress is left free to define? Neither the debates in the federal convention which framed the Constitution nor those in the state conventions which ratified it shed any light on the question." Dillon v. Gloss, 256 U.S. 368 (1921).

However, it appears that the ratification of the  $27^{\rm th}$  Amendment does "shed...light on the question." See supra text accompanying notes 489,756-764. Dillon v. Gloss, 256 U.S. 368 (1921) at 374.  $^{776}$  Id. at 374-375.

"Article V says an amendment 'shall be valid to all Intents and Purposes, as part of this Constitution' when 'ratified' by three-fourths of the states—not that it might face a veto for tardiness. Despite the Supreme Court's suggestion, no speedy ratification rule may be extracted from Article V's text, structure or history." Tribe, The 27th Amendment Joins the Constitution, Wall Street Journal, May 13, 1992, A 15.. See also In re State Tonnage Tax

(Footnote Continued Next Page)

- 1 Department of Justice prepared for White House counsel an elaborate memorandum
- 2 which disputed all aspects of the Dillon. The First, Dillon's discussion of
- 3 contemporaneity was discounted as dictum. 779 Second, the three "considerations"
- 4 relied on in Dillon were deemed unpersuasive. 780 Third, the OLC memorandum
- 5 argued that the proper mode of interpretation of Article V was to:
- 6 "[P]rovide a clear rule that is capable of mechanical application, 7 without any need to inquire into the timeliness or substantive validity of the 8 consensus achieved by means of the ratification process. Accordingly, any 9 interpretation that would introduce confusion must be disfavored."<sup>781</sup>
- 10 The rule ought to be, echoing Professor Tribe, that an amendment is
- 11 ratified when three-fourths of the States have approved it. The memorandum
- 12 vigorously pursued a "plain-meaning" rule of constitutional construction. It
- 13 noted that Article V says nothing about time limits, 783 and elsewhere in the
- 14 Constitution when the Framers wanted to include time limits they did so. The Cases, 79 U.S.  $204\ (1870)$ —-"Courts cannot add any new provisions to the constitution by construction."

 $<sup>^{778}</sup>$  16 Ops. Of the Office of Legal Council 102 (1992).

 $<sup>^{779}</sup>$  Id., 109-110. Coleman's (see Coleman v. Miller, 307 U.S. 433 (1939)) endorsement of the dictum in Dillon was similarly pronounced dictum. Id., 110.  $^{780}$  "Thus, the Court simply assumes that, since proposal and ratification are steps in a single process, the process must be short rather than lengthy, the argument that an amendment should reflect necessity says nothing about the length of time available, inasmuch as the more recent ratifying States obviously thought the pay amendment(27th Amendment) was necessary, and the fact that an amendment must reflect consensus does not so much as intimate contemporaneous consensus."16 Ops. Of the Office of Legal Council 102 (1992) at 111-112; U.S. CONST.,  $27^{\rm th}$  amend. See supra text accompanying notes 759-763.

&lt;sup>781</sup> 16 Ops. Of the Office of Legal Council 102 (1992) at 113. The question naturally must be asked, that if the OLC report finds that in regards to Article V ratification, "any interpretation that would introduce confusion must be disfavored", and that such interpretation must provide "a clear rule of...mechanical application, without any need to inquire into the timeliness or substantive validity of the consensus achieved...", can a lesser constitutional standard of process held for the convention to propose amendments be valid where opponents argue for the "need to inquire into the timeliness or substantive validity of the consensus achieved"?

<sup>782</sup> Id. at 113-116.

&lt;sup>783</sup> This was acknowledged by the Supreme Court in Dillon v. Gloss, 256 U.S. 368 (1921). See infra text accompanying note 774.

- 1 absence of any time language in Article V means there is no requirement of
- 2 contemporaneity or of a "reasonable" period. 784
- 3 The true question regarding state applications for a convention is not
- 4 so much whether Congress has set time limits on the applications but whether
- 5 Congress may set such time limits.
- 6 As "nothing in [that] particular is left to the discretion of that body
- 7 [Congress]"<sup>785</sup>, it follows Congress cannot have any determining authority
- 8 surrounding the contemporaneousness of applications. If, contrary to the
- 9 Founding Fathers and the arguments of the OLC and others, such a
- 10 contemporaneous standard shall exist, then who shall establish such an
- 11 arbitrary standard for applications under Article V, the states or Congress?
- 12 The answer is obvious: neither. The Founding Fathers made it clear that
- 13 Congress was to be excluded from such discretion in the area of the convention
- 14 to propose amendments. 786 Further, the states cannot veto each other's
- 15 sovereign actions, so it follows this power cannot belong to the states. 787
- 16 Therefore, as both Congress and the states are excluded, the only logical

<sup>784 16</sup> Ops. Of the Office of Legal Council 102 (1992) at 103-106. The OLC also referenced previous debates in Congress in which members had assumed this proposal and the others remained viable. Ibid.; see also Martin v. Hunter's Lessee, 14 U.S. 304 (1809)---"Where the text of the constitution is clear and distinct, no restriction on its plain and obvious import should be admitted unless the inference is irresistible."; Wright v. U.S. 302 U.S. 583 (1938)--"In expounding the constitution, every word must have its due force and appropriate meaning."; U.S. v. Classic, 313 U.S. 299 (1941)---"Where there are several possible meanings of the words of the constitution, that meaning which will defeat rather than effectuate the constitutional purpose cannot rightfully be preferred." Finally, it would appear that Congress itself, in certifying the 27th Amendment, effectively laid to rest this particular proposition of Dillon. See supra text accompanying notes 489,759.

785 See supra text, accompanying notes 506,561-613,620-667.

&lt;sup>786</sup> See supra text accompanying notes 497-513.

&lt;sup>787</sup> See infra text accompanying notes 837-867.

- conclusion is there may be no contemporary pre-condition because neither the 1
- 2 states or Congress have the right to create it.
- The only definition that can possibly be relevant regarding the 3
- 4 contemporary pre-condition is that the critical mass of applications from the
- 5 "required number of states" exists to satisfy the two-thirds threshold
- specified by the Constitution for a convention to propose amendments. This 6
- 7 condition exists now, thus satisfying "the contemporaneous sentiment of the
- required number of states" 789 criterion necessary for Congress to fulfill its 8
- 9 mandated constitutional obligation.

10 11

12 THE "RUNAWAY" CONVENTION PRE-CONDITION

13

- 14 Some commentators and members of Congress have expressed fear of a
- "runaway" convention. 790 This fear is entirely unfounded. It is a shibboleth 15
- raised in support of the assertion of sweeping congressional control over the 16
- 17 convention.
- Most of the concern expressed by these authorities centers around the 18
- concept of a "runaway" convention, 791 i.e., a convention that, despite any 19
- 20 limits regarding the agenda placed upon it either by the several states, the

<sup>791</sup> Id.

&lt;sup>788</sup> See infra text,

TABLE 1-STATE APPLICATIONS FOR A CONVENTION, p.661;

TABLE 2-STATES APPLYING FOR A CONVENTION, p.673.
789 Dillon v. Gloss, 256 U.S. 368 (1921).

 $<sup>^{790}</sup>$  See, e.g., Kern, A Constitutional Convention Would Threaten the Rights We Have Cherished for 200 Years, 4 Det. C.L. Rev. 1087, 1089-90 (1986); S. Rep. No. 135,  $99^{th}$  Cong.,  $1^{st}$  Sess., at 2-3 (1985). See supra text accompanying note 612.

- 1 courts, or Congress, 792 persists in "running away." The term usually was
- 2 intended to sustain the popular notion that the convention would draft radical
- 3 amendments that would overthrow the entire government. Under this notion these
- 4 amendments would be proposed by some faction of radicals and fanatics
- 5 representative of some unknown element of the political spectrum. Despite
- 6 their lack of political power, these fanatics would nevertheless slip
- 7 stealthily into the convention and, like a virus, seize control.
- 8 While the political realities surrounding the election of delegates may
- 9 largely be ignored as they relate to the constitutional question presented, it
- 10 must be realized that they exist. One of these realities will be the interest
- of all Americans surrounding the convention process. If election of delegates
- 12 is deemed constitutional, such election will doubtless involve a scrutiny by
- 13 millions of voters in the several states focusing on perspective delegates'
- 14 character and political views, not to mention the inevitable media attention
- 15 attached thereto, all of which will serve to expose every voting tendency the
- 16 candidate might have.
- 17 In order for such a radical overthrow of the government to occur as the
- 18 "runaway" convention advocates fear, a group would have to control three-
- 19 quarters of the legislatures, Congress, the courts and a greater number of
- 20 voters in order to get its delegates elected and overcome the inevitable
- 21 opposition that would arise to its radical platform. The simple fact is this:
- 22 no such radical element with sufficient political base to control the $<sup>^{792}</sup>$  As has been shown throughout this suit, Congress has no such authority to set such limits on the convention.

- 1 convention exists, secret or not, in this country today. If such a group did
- 2 exist, it would suffer the same public scrutiny other political groups would
- 3 face, and thus its motives would be well known and, assuming the group did
- 4 take control, done with the assent of the people.
- 5 Following the convention, it is probable that individual delegates may
- 6 elect to support the ratification of certain amendments in their individual
- 7 states, lending their support for the proposed amendments with whatever public
- 8 credit they may have. However, the fate of the amendments proposed by the
- 9 convention will be decided by the state legislatures or by votes in
- 10 ratification conventions. Both ratification groups will be composed of
- 11 entirely different individuals than composed the convention. Therefore, unless
- 12 the state legislatures and ratification conventions can also be subverted by
- 13 this secret fanatical group, the constitutional fact is that the radical
- 14 amendments proposed by them will be no more than historic footnotes. 793
- Of course, such "fanaticism" has occurred once in our history, with the
- 16 27th Amendment, which required some 200 years to ratify. But it should be
- 17 noted that this specific amendment was proposed by the Founding Fathers in
- 18 order to control exorbitant pay raises granted by the politicians to
- 19 themselves at the national government level; when, in modern times, Congress
- 20 attempted to give itself a fifty percent pay raise, the "fanaticism" of the $<sup>^{793}</sup>$  "...four amendments proposed long ago—two in 1789, one in 1810 and one in 1861—are still pending and in a situation where their ratification in some of the states many years since by representatives of generations now largely forgotten may be effectively supplemented in enough more states to make three-fourths by representatives of the present or some future generation." Dillon v. Gloss 256 U.S. 368 (1921).

- 1 people caused the amendment to be revived and ratified. Therefore, it was not
- 2 an external group "taking over" the government, but the actions of Congress
- 3 itself which trigged the "fanatical" reaction.
- 4 This is the specific purpose of the amending process: to correct and
- 5 control the national government, its excesses, and such actions by the
- 6 Congress as in the area of pay raises, that clearly demonstrates Mason's
- 7 concerns regarding the assumption of power by the federal government and the
- 8 need for both systems of amendment. 794
- 9 The concept is offered to show that Congress must "protect" the
- 10 Constitution. The simple fact is, the Constitution requires no such
- 11 "protection." Its makeup and provisions more than adequately provide ample
- 12 protection against any actions of a runaway convention should that be
- 13 necessary. But this is quite unlikely. The delegates to a convention to
- 14 propose amendments would hardly constitute a dangerous mob. They will, without
- 15 a doubt, be the cream of their representative states. Delegates will likely be
- 16 community leaders elected by and from the same populace that elects the
- members of Congress. 795 It is fair to assume these people will be reasoned, $^{795}$  We cannot ignore the common sense the American voter has consistently shown in rejecting extreme positions. As noted by Dean James E. Bond:

_

&lt;sup>794</sup> See supra text accompanying note 363.

&quot;Delegates...would probably represent mainstream philosophies. American legislatures seldom breed radicals, and the American people at large rarely embrace radicals. A convention to propose amendments would probably look a lot like an average Congress---and while that might not be an inspiring prospect, it is scarcely an alarming one, either." (Bond & Engdahl, "THE CONSTITUTIONAL CONVENTION, The Duties and Powers of Congress Regarding Conventions For Proposing Amendments", Nat'l. Legal Center for the Public Interest, p.19 (1987).

1 experienced people that the nation, by its very election, shows that it can

2 trust.

Furthermore, and most significantly, a convention can do nothing more

4 than propose amendments. Even if the most extreme fears of the advocates of 5 congressional control came to pass and a convention proposed several dozen

6 radical, dangerous or otherwise potentially destructive amendments, the simple

7 rejection of these proposals by a mere thirteen states would render them

8 entirely void and without effect. 796 On the other hand, any amendment that can

9 pass through the proposal process, be it through Congress or a convention, and then muster the needed thirty-eight states approval deserves to be part of the 11 Constitution.

10

13

14

12 Hamilton's arguments in FEDERALIST No. 85, that all amendments once proposed either by Congress or the convention must be presented singly to the states for their individual consideration, 797 lends great weight against the 15 preposterous notion that calling a convention to propose amendments would

&lt;sup>796</sup> As observed by Madison in FEDERALIST No. 40 commenting on the power of the 1787 Convention, "It is time now to recollect that the powers [of the convention] were merely advisory and recommendatory, that they were so meant by the States, and so understood by the convention; and that the latter have accordingly planed and proposed a Constitution which is to be of no more consequence than the paper on which it is written, unless it be stamped with the approbation of those to whom it is addressed."

The constitutional safeguard--ratification by three-quarters of the states, which prevents a runaway convention, or possibly, a runaway Congress-simply cannot be ignored. Article V's ratification provision means that no proposed amendment can take effect until it is ratified by three-quarters of the states. After the convention has proposed its amendments, its work is finished. Therefore, the convention is disbanded, and its members are free to return to their lives with their constitutional privilege to propose amendments ended. Thus, any effect that their combined numbers might have is entirely diluted before a single action by them has any legal or constitutional effect.

&lt;sup>797</sup> See infra text accompanying notes 497-511.

- 1 inevitably lead to a runaway convention. Thus, this constitutional fact
- 2 destroys any concerted effort by the convention, or parts thereof, to ensure
- 3 its runaway efforts would be successful. Different propositions could be
- 4 individually attacked, leaving only what the states desired to have in the
- 5 Constitution and thus removing the rest.
- 6 Even the argument that delegates might "slip" radical parts into
- 7 otherwise desired amendments falls under this constitutional safeguard. Under
- 8 the strict interpretation of Article V that allows the states only to affirm
- 9 or reject a proposed amendment, this attempt by delegates could be thwarted.
- 10 The states could request Congress to call a new convention and pass a
- 11 different amendment or amendments, or Congress could propose a different
- 12 amendment or amendments and remove the offending passage even if it were
- 13 ratified, as occurred with the  $18^{th}$  and  $21^{st}$  Amendments.
- 14 But if the argument of implied powers within Article V ratification is
- 15 accepted, then a whole range of options must be conceded for the states in
- 16 their area of ratification. Under this concept, if it is granted that under
- 17 implied powers Congress may establish limits, regulations and other standards
- 18 beyond the non-discretionary standards set forth by the Founding Fathers, then
- 19 it follows the states may likewise assume discretion regarding their powers in
- 20 the article, particularly in ratification, allowing them to go beyond a simple
- 21 affirmation vote for a proposed amendment.
- 22 This said, then as Madison observed, if the convention's amendatory
- 23 authority (or Congress') is merely advisory to the states, then it follows the

- states have the right not to accept all or some of the advice given. 798
- 2 Therefore, they could vote to accept only portions of the proposed amendment
- or amendments. However, while the states, under the concept of implied powers, 3
- could select which part of an amendment proposal to ratify, they could not 4
- change the proposal itself as this would violate the exclusive constitutional 5
- 6 power of the Congress and the convention.
- 7 Despite the Supreme Court ruling that ratification is nothing more than
- "the expression of the assent of the state to a proposed amendment," 799 it is 8
- nevertheless clear by Madison's comments that the Founding Fathers intended
- 10 that the legislatures can determine what kind of expression of assent they
- 11 give, and that this assent was in fact the most important part of the
- amendment process. 800 If three-quarters of the legislatures, for example, 12
- 13 ratified a proposed amendment but specifically gave instructions that a
- certain clause of the proposed amendment was not ratified, it would create a 14
- difficult constitutional position for Congress to void this ratification vote 15
- 16 if it did not agree with it. Nevertheless it is conceded Congress does possess
- 17 this power to void a ratification vote and could choose to use it by removing
- the offending state legislatures from power by legislative fiat.801 18

801 See infra text accompanying note 917.

&lt;sup>798</sup> See supra text accompanying note 796.

&lt;sup>799</sup> Hawke v. Smith, 253 U.S. 221 (1920).

 $<sup>^{800}</sup>$  The states are entirely free, for example, to express the reasons why they give assent or rejection and are free to examine the matter before them for as long as they wish or, if they so desire, not even take up the matter at all.

The most important evidence of this power, however, rests not with ratification, but with convention applications. The states can place whatever language they want in them concerning any matter they want, file them at any time and as many times as they desire and all are equally valid.

1 Support for this overwhelming power is made in a concurring opinion of

2 the Supreme Court which stated:

3

4

5

6

"Such division between the political and judicial branches of the government is made by Article V which grants power over the amending of the Constitution to Congress alone. Undivided control of that process has been given by the Article exclusively and completely to Congress." 802

7 It is interesting to note, however, that this concurring opinion of Justice Black neglected the convention method of amendment entirely and, if 8 9 these words are taken literally in the fullest extent, then the Constitution has been amended by judicial fiat in that the convention system of amendment, 10 if not the entire ratification process, has been summarily removed by the 11 Court. As the Court has ruled that such cannot be the case, 803 it is likely 12 13 Justice Black was only referring to those specific, limited powers granted to Congress under Article V which allow Congress to propose amendments, choose 14 15 the mode of ratification, and its mandatory obligation to call a convention 16 upon application of the state legislatures without discretion on the part of 17 Congress, and not to a complete revision of the balance of power laid out in the Constitution. However, there is nothing stated in Coleman that supports 18 this view. 804 As United States v. Chambers 805 demonstrated, the Court clearly 19 recognized the limited power of Congress to amend the Constitution. Nothing in

_

20

 $<sup>^{802}</sup>$  Coleman v. Miller, 307 U.S. 433 (1939). See infra text accompanying notes 1053-1055.

<sup>803</sup> See supra text accompanying notes 548,777.

However, an indication of the Court's rejection of Coleman may be found in a recent case where the Court discussed the ability of Congress to impinge on the sovereign immunity of the states. It is interesting that in this recent discussion, the Court did not even mention Article V powers as a basis on which Congress could abrogate state immunity. See infra text accompanying note 1208.

&lt;sup>805</sup> 291 U.S. 217 (1934).

- 1 Coleman specifically altered this earlier decision. 806 Thus, while the language
- 2 in Coleman may be interpreted as granting Congress unlimited amendatory power,
- 3 the Court did not actually rule that this was the case.
- 4 Thus, as noted in Chambers, 807 within those specified, limited amendatory
- 5 powers, Congress does have absolute control, but at the expense of implied
- 6 powers that grant Congress regulation and control of the convention to propose
- 7 amendments and the states' ratification decisions.
- 8 Only when it is accepted that the grant of implied powers given by the
- 9 Court to Congress relates to its proposal power to place one or more
- 10 amendments before the states--which is advisory, instead of Congress'
- 11 ratification power (which the Constitution states is no more than a simple
- 12 choice between one of two methods of state ratification) -- can constitutional
- 13 chaos be avoided. Similarly, realization that the states are as equally
- 14 limited in their ratification choice, whether to accept a proposed amendment
- 15 or not, avoids any constitutional chaos at this level. In short, neither
- 16 Congress nor the states possesses implied ratification powers.
- 17 Finally, the Constitution only empowers the convention, like Congress,
- 18 to offer amendments as "part of this Constitution." 808 The term "part of this
- 19 Constitution" clearly implies and expresses that any proposed amendment must
- 20 allow for the present Constitution to continue 809 as it is that document which

(Footnote Continued Next Page)

 $<sup>^{806}</sup>$  See supra text accompanying note 550.

&lt;sup>807</sup> Td.

 $^{\rm 808}$  U.S. CONST., art. V.

&quot;Article V provides that adopted amendments become 'Part of this Constitution,' a phrase that (as Nathaniel Gorham said at Philadelphia) refers exclusively 'to the existing Constitution.' Congress and a convention are alike limited by article V to amendments respecting this, and not some other,

- 1 is being amended. 810 A new constitution cannot be considered an "amendment" to
- 2 the Constitution as there would be nothing left of the old Constitution for
- 3 the "amendment" to be part of. Thus, this type of "amendment" is not
- 4 authorized by the Constitution and therefore is unconstitutional.
- 5 In order for such an action to be constitutional, a convention or
- 6 Congress would first have to offer an amendment to the states amending Article
- 7 V allowing for the writing of a new constitution by one of those two bodies.
- 8 Assuming passage, then a convention, or whatever body was specified in the new
- 9 amendment procedure, would propose a new constitution. But it is impossible,
- 10 under the strict interpretation of Article V, for a single convention to
- 11 constitutionally propose a new constitution.
- 12 The possibility of this double system of amendment-ratification being
- 13 undertaken without the more expedient use of amendments first being employed
- 14 to deal with the issues involved virtually ensures against a runaway new, frame of government. One reason why the Constitution could not be amended by interweaving the proposals within the text to create a totally new draft, said Representative Livermore in 1789, was that 'neither this Legislature, nor all the Legislatures in America, were authorized to repeal a constitution.'

&quot;'Roger Sherman agreed:

&#x27;By the present constitution, we, nor all the Legislatures in the Union together, do not possess the power of repealing it. All that is granted us by the 5th article is, that whenever we shall think it necessary, we may propose amendments to the constitution; not that we may propose to repeal the old, and substitute a new one.'" Constitutional Brinksmanship: Amending the Constitution by National Convention, Caplan (1988). (emphasis in text).

810 Of course, the argument springs to mind that the Founding Fathers themselves "amended" the Articles of Confederation despite its rules of amendment. This argument is simply not true. Madison refuted this position in FEDERALIST No. 40 by pointing out the much more generalized words of the acts authorizing the Convention than the Article V language provides. In any event, as Madison noted, the Convention's actions were purely advisory. See supra text accompanying note 796; infra text accompanying note 1659. The new amendment would have to provide language similar to that authorizing the 1787 Constitutional Convention.

- 1 convention. 811 Even in amending the Constitution, the convention had limits
- 2 placed upon it by the Founding Fathers, thus remaining true to the concept of
- 3 limited government. Thus, the pre-condition of a runaway convention is
- 4 entirely false because the convention constitutionally has no place to run
- 5 away to.
- 6 If Congress holds it has the power to regulate a convention to propose
- 7 amendments and maintains the reason it must do so is because of the
- 8 "unlimited" power of the convention, then does this not in fact mean Congress
- 9 is actually seeking a power it does not possess? Does it not in fact mean
- 10 Congress itself gains "unlimited" power otherwise denied it by the
- 11 Constitution? Does it not in fact mean that the threat now becomes a runway
- 12 Congress, rather than a "runaway" convention?
- 13 The Constitution states the single standard for the calling of a
- 14 convention is application of two-thirds of the states. If Congress has the
- 15 power to regulate a convention or otherwise determine the "validity" of
- 16 applications and reject them should it find them not "valid," has not Congress
- 17 in fact become a runaway Congress, acquiring the power to amend the
- 18 Constitution either by adding provisions to this two-thirds standard or
- 19 failing to call despite the constitutional mandate?

However, this is not necessarily true in respect to a runaway Congress. The Congress has "acquired" implied powers over the years which violate the strict procedural standards of Article V. Taken as a whole, these implied powers allow Congress to circumvent all constitutional safeguards regarding amending the Constitution. None of these special powers are possessed by the convention to propose amendments and thus the convention is actually a "safer" bet constitutionally than the Congress. See supra text accompanying notes 565,577,629; infra text accompanying notes 917,921-1134,1188.

1 A major fear about a convention is the mistaken notion that somehow its

2 power is unlimited, i.e., the convention is a extraconstitutional body above

- 3 the Constitution itself. The basis for this assumption is usually found by
- 4 those examining state constitutional conventions where on many occasions
- 5 throughout our history such conventions have routinely proposed new
- 6 constitutions for various states. In some instances, these conventions have
- 7 acted in a manner that has been considered "runaway." 812
- 8 While this is certainly true for state constitutional conventions, it is
- 9 certainly not true for the federal convention to propose amendments. This
- 10 convention is intraconstitutional, i.e., its power is clearly limited by the
- 11 Constitution itself and is limited to offering amendments to the Constitution,
- 12 rather than the unlimited power of writing a new Constitution. The power that
- 13 authorizes it, the right of the people to alter or abolish, is transcendent,
- 14 and therefore is extraconstitutional, but this power must be exercised through
- 15 a constitutional procedure that is a limit or restraint on the convention
- 16 amendatory procedure. Further, as the convention is intraconstitutional, other
- 17 restraints may exist. 813 But simply because the convention is
- 18 intraconstitutional, this fact alone does not mean that a branch of the
- 19 government may simply presume to regulate and control it unless the

&lt;sup>812</sup> See CONSTITUTIONAL CONVENTIONS: THEIR NATURE, POWERS AND LIMITATIONS (1917) (Hoar) pp. 105-119 generally where the author cites several examples of state conventions throughout history exceeding various limits placed on their powers. For the most part, such actions by the conventions were supported either in the state courts or by the people or state legislatures involved.

<sup>813</sup> The notable examples of restraint on the convention are the specific procedural requirements expressed in Article V that make the convention's actions no more than advisory in nature. See supra text accompanying note 796,810; infra text accompanying note 1659.

	1	Constitution	permits	such	regulation	and	control	which	in	this	case	the
--	---	--------------	---------	------	------------	-----	---------	-------	----	------	------	-----

2 Constitution does not.

3 The convention to propose amendments, like the rest of the branches of 4 the government, possesses certain powers and is limited by the Constitution.

5 If the convention violates these powers or limits, remedy through the courts is available. Thus, the idea the convention is unlimited in power simply is 7 not true.

6

10

11

13

8 Probably the greatest limit on the convention's power, however, is the 9 ratification vote by the states. If the proposal suffers defeat in thirteen states, the proposal dies for all time unless re-proposed either by Congress or another convention (a highly unlikely event). Bluntly, if opponents to 12 these "frightful" and seemingly "invincible" amendments cannot muster enough opposition to defeat the matter in thirteen states, they should pack up and go 14 home.

15

16 17

18 19

22

THE PROTECTIONISM MOVEMENT PRE-CONDITION

The Framers of the Constitution hoped that their work would endure but 21 realized at the same time that changes would be necessary from time to time to correct excesses of the national government. 815 But this fact provides no

23 support for the assertion that Congress should or may exercise control over

 $<sup>^{814}</sup>$  S. Rep. No. 135,  $99^{th}$  Cong.,  $1^{st}$  Sess., at 7-8,9-10,25 (1985).

<sup>815</sup> See supra text accompanying notes 345,362-364,371,374-376.

1 the convention process for the purpose of continuing the Constitution as it

2 now reads. The ultimate strength of the Constitution lies in its ability to

3 change in response to the needs of the nation that created it. Any

4 construction of the Constitution that would seek to freeze the Constitution as

5 it now reads would in reality defeat the Constitution, which the opponents of 6 a convention so reverently espouse, by removing its greatest strength and

7 simultaneously destroying its supremacy as law of the land. Ironically, those

8 who promote limits to the convention method in the guise of protecting the 9 Constitution are actually emasculating it. In any event, these self-appointed

10 "protectors" of the Constitution are not needed. The Constitution has already 11 provided for its own protection. Every provision of the Constitution will

12 "endure" precisely until three-fourths of the states concur that it should be 13 changed. 816 Congress should not, and cannot, under the guise of "protecting the 14 Constitution," impose any barrier against the right of the states to alter the Constitution when two-thirds of them call for a convention and three-fourths 16 of them ratify the amendments proposed by the convention.

17

15

While most of the Constitution falls under the concept of implied powers for one or more branches of the government, the amendatory procedure should be as much as possible immune from this concept, as it is an expressed quantitative process, each step of which provides not only proper deliberation and consideration for a proposed change to the Constitution, but simultaneously guards against rash, unwise or excessive acts by either minority or majority. See supra text accompanying notes 559,781; infra text accompanying note 895.

Indeed, it is only by accepting one or more of the pre-conditions to "protect" the Constitution proposed by the opponents of a convention, that the Constitution can be subverted. All of the "protections" proposed by opponents essentially allow for a small group to regulate and control the amendatory process to its ends and eliminate the carefully constructed safeguards built into Article V.

1 2	CONGRESSIONAL CALL SANS STATE APPLICATIONS PRE-CONDITION
3
4	By the same token some scholars $^{817}$ have stated that Congress may call a
5	convention to propose amendments on its own initiative without naming it as
6	such or without the states having first submitted applications. This assertion
7	is entirely without merit. There can be little support for this as the Framers
8	were presented with this option at the Convention and chose not to include it
9	as a provision in Article V. <sup>818</sup>
10	The Constitution clearly states a convention may only be called "on the 11	application ofthe states" $^{819}$ Thus, if the states have not applied, the
12	Congress may not call one on its own accord, presumably with its own agenda as
13	the purpose of the call. The power to initiate a convention, i.e., the filing
14	of applications, 820 rests with the states, not Congress.
15
16	THE RATIFICATION "VETO" PRE-CONDITION

15

THE RATIFICATION "VETO" PRE-CONDITION

17

Article V charges Congress with the plainly worded constitutional duty 18 19 to select the mode of ratification for amendments that have been proposed--

<sup>820</sup> Id.

 $^{\rm 817}$  Bond & Engdahl, THE CONSTITUTIONAL CONVENTION, The Duties and Powers of Congress Regarding Conventions For Proposing Amendments", Nat'l. Legal Center for the Public Interest, p. 8-10 (1987).

<sup>818</sup> See supra text accompanying notes 404-405; "Gouverneur Morris's suggestion on that day that Congress be left at liberty to call a convention "whenever it pleased" was not accepted." (APPENDIX C---1973 REPORT OF THE ABA SPECIAL CONSTITUTIONAL CONVENTION STUDY COMMITTEE, p.14. 819 U.S. CONST., art. V.

1 ratification either by the state legislatures or state conventions. 821 It does

2 not provide for a third choice by Congress, that of a veto or "no" vote, on

3 the amendments proposed by a convention to propose amendments. Congress cannot

4 refuse this duty of designation for the purpose of exercising a de facto veto

5 over the convention, nor may it use this duty as a means "of reviewing" a

6 proposed amendment. Such a naked assertion of unconstitutional power would

7 scarcely deserve serious discussion, yet Congress' history of action--or

8 inaction-described above shows how it has effectively exercised this thinly

9 disguised veto power.822

10

11

The Time Limit Ratification "Problem"

12

20

The Supreme Court has ruled Congress has the implied authority to fix a reasonable time period in which states must ratify a proposed constitutional amendment. B23 It has also ruled that what constitutes a reasonable time period is a nonjusticiable political matter for Congress to determine. Period established that such implied powers of Congress extend to a convention's amendment proposals. More significantly, neither suit determined that the convention does not possess on its own right the same implied powers in regard to its own amendment proposals, or that under the doctrine of equal

821 See supra text accompanying note 2.

<sup>822</sup> See supra text accompanying notes 593-612.

<sup>823</sup> Dillon v. Gloss, 256 U.S. 368 (1921).

<sup>824</sup> Coleman v. Miller, 307 U.S. 433 (1939).

- 1 protection, it may "review" congressional amendment proposals even after
- 2 ratification has taken place.
- 3 However, an objective examination of the intent of the Founding Fathers
- 4 and a determination of the effect of such implied powers on a convention to
- 5 propose amendments and its relationship to Congress lead to the conclusion
- 6 that the establishment of ratification time limits by Congress on amendments
- 7 proposed by convention is unconstitutional for two reasons:
- 8 1. It is an exercise of amendatory power not granted by the Constitution to Congress; 825
- 2. After a convention amendment has left the convention, if Congress may place conditions on it, then the final form of that amendment is actually
- 12 proposed by Congress, not the convention.
- The Constitution establishes two equal amendatory proposal procedures. 826
- 14 Permitting Congress to alter or otherwise affect an amendment proposed by a
- 15 convention, thus creating a method of proposal whereby Congress alone is the
- 16 only proposing amendatory body, clearly defeats the expressed intent of
- 17 Article V.

_

Implication has a way of inflating national power, not shrinking it. There is nothing contained in Dillon or Coleman that limits Congress solely to establishing time limits on the ratification within its ratification power. If Congress can regulate the ratification of an amendment by placing such provisions within it after it has been already proposed by the convention, it follows it can place other changes in it. If this is correct, then the convention amendment is subject to congressional review (amendment) and approval (or veto) before being submitted for ratification. However, this was not the intention of the Founding Fathers and does not follow the prescribed amendatory format of Article V.

Further, the issue of Congress possessing the power of veto of a convention amendment is raised in that, given the convention proposes a time limit of its own within its own amendment, and Congress establishes another different time period, which shall take precedence? If it is established that the congressional action does, then a de facto "veto" power exists which could easily then be applied to the entire proposed amendment. This was clearly not the intention of the Founding Fathers. See supra text accompanying notes 2,435-437,506-513.

<sup>826</sup> See supra text accompanying note 2.

- 1 While Dillon was correct that Congress may set time limits for
- 2 ratification on its own amendments, the Court erred in attributing this
- 3 authority to ratification power. The proper source of constitutional authority
- 4 is congressional amendatory proposal power.
- 5 In each circumstance that Congress has proposed ratification time limits
- 6 for an amendment, the provision has been contained within the specific
- 7 amendment under consideration, 827 thus creating a take-it-or-leave-it situation
- 8 for the states. At no time has Congress ever presented to the states a
- 9 separate proposal of time limit ratification that the states then could
- 10 address independently of the amendment language. 828 Thus, only through its

 $<sup>^{827}</sup>$  U.S. CONST.,  $18^{\rm th}$  Amend, § 3; "This Article shall be inoperative unless it shall have been ratified as an amendment to the Constitution by the legislatures of the several states, as provided in the Constitution within seven years from the date of the submission hereof to the states by the Congress."; see also U.S. CONST.,  $20^{\rm th}$  Amend., § 6; U.S. CONST.,  $21^{\rm st}$  Amend. § 3; U.S. CONST.,  $22^{\rm nd}$  Amend., § 2. It is important to note Amendments 23, 24, 25, 26, and most notably 27, contain no such limiting ratification language and therefore Congress was obviously not proposing a limitation on the ratification time for the states.

&lt;sup>828</sup> It is easy to see why the Supreme Court might make the error and attribute the authority of Congress to establish time limits on ratification to Congress' ratification power. The association is obvious. Even the language of Article V lends some credence to the concept:

&quot;...when ratified by the Legislatures of three-fourths of the several States, or by Conventions in three-fourths thereof, as the one or the other Mode of Ratification may be proposed by the Congress..." (U.S. CONST. Art. V).

However, it is clear by the concerned language of Article V that the choice Congress is presented by the Constitution lies in a simple choice as to which type of ratification shall be used for the particular amendment, not a power to propose a different amendment process each time an amendment is considered. Further, such a concept flies in the face of the axiom that the amendatory process should be as "mechanical" as possible. See supra text accompanying notes 781-784.

A simple hypothetical should prove the point. Let us first stipulate that two amendments are simultaneously proposed by Congress, such as in the case of the first ten amendments. (See supra text accompanying note 489.) Let us further stipulate that different modes of ratification are proposed for each beyond the simple choice of either legislature or convention. The inference is that Congress could favor one proposed amendment over another by placing terms of ratification on it that it does not impose on the other proposed amendment. Would this not violate the equal protection clause of the

- 1 amendatory proposal power has Congress exercised the right to limit its own
- 2 amendment proposals. 829 Why? If the ratification limit was not part of the
- 3 amendment, it could not be created using Congress' amendatory proposal power,
- 4 but would be an exercise of Congress' legislative power. As Congress'
- 5 legislative power cannot be used in the amendatory process, 830 such a separate
- 6 action by Congress could be constitutionally rejected by the states.
- 7 Therefore, the only way Congress may propose a time limit on an amendment is
- 8 through its amendatory proposal authority.
- 9 Congressional ratification time limits on a convention proposed
- 10 amendment(s) not only violates Article V but raises serious equal protection
- 11 issues. As it has been shown that the powers in question are part of the
- 12 proposal authority of Congress and that convention proposal authority is equal

<sup>14&</sup>lt;sup>th</sup> Amendment? Surely, based on the spirit of the Constitution, it can be argued as self-evident the Founding Fathers did not intend for Congress to be able to "stack the deck" in the amending of the Constitution.

829 As a practical matter, there is no other logical conclusion. If the time

As a practical matter, there is no other logical conclusion. If the time limit set by Congress is not considered part of the proposed amendment, then it follows that the states have a separate choice as to whether or not to accept its provisions. The subject matter in the amendment is one choice to be decided by the states, and its time limit becomes another. The time limit of the amendment has nothing to do with the subject matter and therefore must be considered a different subject for ratification if the time limit power of Congress is not considered part of its proposal power. Therefore, a state could vote to ratify an amendment, but vote that it wished ratification to take, for example, eight years, or simply reject the proposed time limit completely.

Would this "selective" ratification by the states mean the amendment is rejected or accepted? If enough states voted to reject the proposed time limit, would that mean the entire amendment was rejected by the states or just that provision, thus removing any time limit for ratification? Obviously, such a situation would create constitutional chaos. For this reason, Congress, the convention and the states must be held to a one-way standard in the amendatory process. Otherwise, the states would be empowered to "propose" their own amendments by editing the convention or congressional proposal through selective ratification. See infra text accompanying notes 843-914.

830 See supra text accompanying notes 560-579,620-668.

-	1	1.1.	_	~		C 7 7	1.1.	1.1.	convention	7 7	1.	1.1.
	-	That	$\cap$ T	('Anarea	7 =		That	T n e	CONVENTION	$t_{M} \cap I \cap I \cap I$	natre	The	g a m e

2 limitation power as Congress. This raises many problems. 831

3 When the convention to propose amendments is considered along with

4 Congress in effecting a time limit on an amendment, the only logical way out

5 of this Pandora's Box is to conclude that time limits on ratification—but not

6 the choice of method of ratification—are controlled by whichever body

7 proposes the amendment. Congress is free, therefore, to limit its amendment

8 proposals, and the convention free to limit its amendment proposals. But

9 neither body is free to limit each others' amendment proposals. Therefore,

10 neither body interferes with the constitutional authority of the other, nor is the specific congressional duty of choice of ratification mode in anyway

12 impinged.

1314

11

SUMMATION ON PRE-CONDITIONS

16

17

18 19 20

15

The convention has the same constitutional authority to set time limits on ratification for a particular amendment it proposes. To allow Congress sole power in this would create two constitutional problems. The first would permit Congress to veto proposed amendments by refusing to send them to the states

21 for ratification. The second would enable Congress to edit or change

&lt;sup>831</sup> As Congress is an on-going body and the convention is not, then the question arises, would the convention have the right to "review" amendments already ratified since the last convention and simply "edit" them as it chose without resubmitting them for ratification?

- 1 amendments after they had left the convention. This would make Congress the
- 2 sole proposing body for amendments, a clear violation of Article V.
- 3 The enactment and use of this proposal, or any similar to it, would
- 4 completely defeat the purpose of Article V and would constitute nothing less
- 5 than the nullification of a constitutional provision by legislative fiat. If
- 6 the convention proposes one or more amendments, Congress is obligated under
- 7 Article V to designate the mode of ratification. Article V cannot be read as
- 8 granting Congress the authority to prevent by any means the forwarding of
- 9 proposed amendments to the states for their review, or to review or edit
- 10 proposed amendments once they have left the convention.
- 11 The most important point about all the pre-conditions discussed in this
- 12 suit is that none of them has force of law, i.e., neither the courts nor
- 13 Congress has ever given the slightest credence to any of them. They have been
- 14 derived primarily from various authors who advanced them over the years as the
- 15 basis to oppose a particular amendment that they feared might trigger a
- 16 convention. 832 None of these authors had the ability to separate their
- 17 political agenda from constitutional procedure and appeared entirely willing
- 18 to mix the two for the sake of political expediency. As these opinions have no
- 19 force of law, the Court cannot insert them into the Constitution. 833 This may

BRIEF IN SUPPORT OF CONVENTION GENERAL BRIEF ARGUMENTS PAGE 368

 $<sup>^{832}</sup>$  The best evidence supporting this contention is the fact that none of these authors bothered to discuss a simple numeric count of applying states as the basis on which a convention must be called. Thus, all ignored the clear language of the Founding Fathers. See supra text accompanying notes 436-438,497-514,518-521.

&quot;Nothing new can be put into the constitution except through the amendatory process, and nothing old can be taken out with the same process." Ullmann, v. United States, 350 U.S. 422 (1956); "Court cannot add any new provisions to the constitution by construction." In re State Tonnage Tax Cases, 79 U.S. 204 (1870).

- 1 only be done by the amending process, and none of these pre-conditions exist
- 2 in that document either by implication or expressed language.
- 3 The only pre-condition the Court has ever acknowledged in any of its
- 4 decisions is the single numeric count requirement expressed in the
- 5 Constitution: when two-thirds of the several states shall apply for a
- 6 convention to propose amendments, the Congress shall call one. 834 Regardless of
- 7 Court interpretations of Article V, no decision has altered this fact even
- 8 when the Court was presented in one of its suits with the option of inserting
- 9 changes to the amendatory procedure based on the subject of the amendment. 835
- 10 In summation, then, it is clear that none of the above arguments
- 11 justifies or permits Congress the power to interfere with the clear right of
- 12 the states to apply for a convention and the consequential obligation on
- 13 Congress to call one when the states do apply, nor do these arguments justify
- 14 attempts by Congress to interfere with the self-executing nature of Article V.
- 15 Thus, because Article V is self-executing, Congress is neither required nor
- 16 permitted to add or subtract from it. 836

17

18 19

THE INABILITY OF STATES TO LIMIT AN ARTICLE V CONVENTION

20

 <sup>834</sup> See Dodge v. Woolsey, 59 U.S. 331 (1855); Hawke v. Smith, 253 U.S. 221 (1920); Dillon v. Gloss, 256 U.S. 368 (1921); United States v. Sprague, 282 U.S. 716 (1931); Coleman v. Miller, 307 U.S. 433 (1939).
 835 See supra text accompanying note 728.

&quot;A constitutional provision which is complete in itself need no further legislation to put it in force, but is self-executing." Davis v. Burke, 179 U.S. 399 (1900).

1 Article V provides the states the power to apply for a convention for

2 proposing amendments and the power to ratify amendments proposed either by

- 3 Congress or by the convention process. 837
- 4 The history and plain language of Article V demonstrate that a
- 5 convention for proposing amendments cannot be limited to a single issue or
- 6 subject either by Congress or the states. 838 Article V does not authorize the
- 7 states to apply for an amendment, rather it authorizes them only to apply for
- 8 a convention for proposing amendments. $^{839}$  The power to propose amendments rests
- 9 only with the Congress or the convention to propose amendments. 840 Thus, a
- 10 state does not possess the power to limit a convention to a particular subject
- 11 by limiting the efficacy of its application to a particular subject because
- 12 the purpose of the application is to apply for a convention, not an amendment
- 13 subject. 841 Therefore, just as with Congress, the states have no authority to
- 14 limit the scope of the convention to a single subject.
- Just as a state cannot demand that Congress discuss or propose an
- 16 amendment on a subject it dictates, likewise a state cannot defeat its
- 17 application by claiming it is viable only if the convention accedes to its
- 18 demand that a given subject be addressed. The states have no authority to

_

<sup>837</sup> See supra text accompanying note 2.

<sup>838</sup> See supra text accompanying notes 669-726.

<sup>839</sup> See supra text accompanying note 2.

&lt;sup>840</sup> If this were otherwise, the entire concept of separation of powers would be defeated. The states would have unlimited amendatory control of the Constitution while a small minority of states could easily defeat any effort by the Congress to amend the Constitution.

 $<sup>^{841}</sup>$  See supra text accompanying notes 480-490.

- place such an unconstitutional demand on Congress, nor do they have such
- authority to place such a demand in their applications.842 2
- When a state applies under Article V for the calling of a convention for 3
- proposing amendments, it knows from the language of Article V that it cannot 4
- 5 inhibit the scope of the convention. It is a convention for proposing
- 6 amendments. The clear language of the Article combined with the historic fact
- 7 that the selection of the plural form of the word "amendments" was a
- 8 deliberate act leads steadfastly to the inescapable conclusion that a state
- cannot limit the convention or its application to one subject. 843
- 10 The same logic that excludes Congress from considering "same subject" as
- a standard for determining the validity of state applications 844 also applies 11
- to the states themselves. The states cannot limit themselves to a single 12
- 13 subject convention in their applications as this would be a veto of the
- sovereignty of the states.845 Any state has the right to discuss anything it 14

 $<sup>^{842}</sup>$  Under the 14th Amendment doctrine of equal protection, clearly any immunity or privilege granted Congress by the Constitution regarding Article V powers to propose amendments must equally extend to the convention to propose amendments. In both the congressional and convention methods, the Constitution clearly places the power to propose amendments exclusively in those two bodies. Thus, the states are denied the right to propose amendments. 843 Although Congress may fix reasonable time limits relating to the ratification of its own proposed amendments, Dillon v. Gloss, 256 U.S. 368, 325-76 (1921); Coleman, v. Miller, 307 U.S. 433, 452 (1939), there is nothing in the text of Article V or the intent of the Framers that would support a limitation being placed upon the states relating to time for applying for an Article V convention for proposing amendments. This point can also be shown by the analogous Supreme Court decision in Leser v. Garnett, 258 U.S. 130 (1922), in which the Court points out that the governing law relating to the amendments process resides in Article V of the Constitution, and that Article V necessarily "transcends any limitation sought to be imposed by the people of a state." Id. at 137; see infra text accompanying notes 907 for a more recent analogous decision, North Dakota v. United States, 460 U.S. 300 (1983). 844 See supra text accompanying notes 669-726.

<sup>845</sup> See infra text accompanying note 1444.

- wishes at a convention just as a single member of Congress representing that
- state may institute debate on any amendment subject or subjects he or she 2
- wishes in Congress. 846 3
- 4 This right of discussion by the states is further reinforced by the
- 5 limited power of the states in Article V to apply for a convention to propose
- 6 amendments, but not to propose amendments. If same subject pre-condition is
- 7 accepted, the power of proposal and ratification rests in the same body,
- namely the states.847 This reconstruction of the Constitution would establish a 8
- 9 second, autonomous government independent of the Federal government with full
- 10 ability to reject any constitutional demands of the Federal government while
- 11 possessing the full ability to regulate and control the Constitution absent
- Federal input.848 While Congress could protest, that body could do nothing to 12

<sup>846</sup> See supra text accompanying notes 700-717.

<sup>847</sup> Further, under this erroneous concept of "same subject," the amendment would already be written, so that the convention's participation (if any) would be a mere formality. If the states are denied the right to discuss, their delegates could not negotiate or alter a proposed amendment prior to submission to the states for ratification. Ratification itself would become a mere formality as those states proposing an amendment would certainly ratify it, perhaps simultaneously. This would lead to a complete breakdown of Article

This idea would run totally contrary to any amendatory procedure in our nation's history. No single body has ever been granted both ratification and proposal authority simultaneously. See supra text accompanying notes 2,334.

It is clear, however, the states desire to discuss proposed amendments. As demonstrated in the examples of this suit, (See infra TABLE 1-STATE APPLICATIONS FOR A CONVENTION, p.661.), while the states go sometimes to great lengths to politically justify the submission of an application, in none of them are contained actual amendment language. Therefore, it is obvious the states expect the convention to propose the actual amendment language, thus preserving the concept of separation of powers.  $^{\rm 848}$  In short, it would return this nation to the Articles of Confederation and its associated amendatory problems. See supra text accompanying notes 310-320,334-336,338-341.

2	own Constitution and place the control of that body in the hands of the
3	states.
4	Because state applications cannot be based on subject and cannot limit
5	or otherwise veto the desires of the other states concerning a convention, the
6	only condition the applications can satisfy is the numeric count mandated by
7	Article V. Thus, it follows that all applications from the states serve to
8	satisfy that numeric count requirement. 850 Any subject matter expressed in the
9	application is of no constitutional importance, though certainly the state
10	through its delegation is entirely free to pursue the subject matter once the
11	convention convenes.
12
13 14
15	DECISION AND RECESSION
16
17	Introduction

prevent it. 849 The effect would be to cut off the Federal government from its

18

Unless Congress exercised its power to remove state legislatures such as it did during the ratification of the 14th Amendment. See infra text accompanying notes 917,1006,1053-1073,1077,1079,1089,1094,1188,1239,1333.

850 As no state's application can be considered greater than any other, it follows that no matter how many times a state applies for a convention, its application can only be considered once in any set of applications. (See supra text accompanying note 2; the term "several States" implies no state may be counted twice). However, as the Congress has, by its laches, caused several sets of applications to have accumulated, this fact is immaterial at this point.

1 Two questions remain on Article V and the convention call: decision and

- 2 recession. On decision, who determines that the two-thirds requirement
- 3 mandated by Article V has been met? 851 On recession, does a state have the
- 4 right to recess its application before the two-thirds requirement has been
- 5 met, after the requirement is met but before Congress has issued the call, or
- 6 even after Congress has issued the call?

7

8 The importance of the "little" words

9

- 10 The relevant part of Article V concerning this question states (in
- 11 part):
- "Congress...on the application of the legislatures of two-thirds of the several states shall call a convention for proposing amendments, which in either case...when ratified by the Legislatures of three fourths of the several States..."852
- While political views of proposed amendments have had some bearing on
- 17 legal issues presented to the courts, some issues stemmed from interpretations
- 18 of the meaning and intent of the general wording of Article V with respect to
- 19 ratification as opposed to the language relating to the convention call.

This determination, however is a purely ministerial duty and does not confer upon any person or body the right or ability to establish terms for the call. No person or body may establish arbitrary terms or conditions—not contained within the Constitution—that would thwart the will of the people and the states expressed through their applications. Such power would be contrary to the clear stated intent of the Founding Fathers. (See supra text accompanying notes 361,362,435–437,497–518,521). Therefore, only by using a strict numeric count, which is after all the only standard the Constitution requires for a convention to be called, can this ministerial duty be satisfied. (See supra text accompanying note 2).

852 U.S. CONST., art. V. (emphasis added.)

The reason for this difference is apparent: the call is an immediate 1

- action mandated on Congress. The call is one of the steps of a process 2
- designed by the Founders to allow redress even if the national government does 3
- not desire redress. Realizing the possibility of this governmental opposition, 4
- 5 the Founders used the most direct and strongest word possible 853 so as to
- 6 ensure compliance and remove all obstinacy on the part of the national
- government.854 Ratification, on the other hand, is a choice of the people or, 7
- 8 through them, the state legislatures which, absent judicial interpretations or
- congressional interference, only occurs at their consent whenever that may
- 10 be. 855 The Founding Fathers realized that because choice was involved,
- 11 political considerations would come into play and therefore prescribed no
- 12 definite limits on the process so as to allow as much considered judgment as
- 13 was deemed appropriate for the particular question involved.
- Hence, different words were used to describe different portions and 14
- purposes of the amendatory process. The intent of the Founding Fathers, 15
- 16 therefore, regarding the meaning of these "little" words is critical to the
- 17 proper interpretation of Article V.

BRIEF IN SUPPORT OF CONVENTION GENERAL BRIEF ARGUMENTS PAGE 375

<sup>853</sup> The word "shall" is defined as;

&quot;(a) to express futurity in the first person, and determination, compulsion, obligation, or necessity in the second and third persons; (b) in a question expecting shall in the answer; (c) in law and resolutions; as, the fine shall not exceed $100; (d)in subordinate clauses introduced by if, when, etc. These formal conventions, however, do not reflect prevailing usage, in which, shall and will are used interchangeably with will predominating in all persons." WEBSTER'S NEW TWENTIETH CENTURY DICTIONARY UNABRIDGED 2nd ed., cc 1984. See also supra text accompanying notes 856,858,860.

 $<sup>^{854}</sup>$  See supra text accompanying notes 435-437,497-518,521. The most clear example of this is the  $27^{\rm th}$  Amendment, requiring 203 years to ratify. See supra text accompanying notes 489,774,775,784,794; infra text accompanying note 917.

1 The word "on" and the word "when" do not mean exactly the same thing,

2 and this careful choice in words by the Founding Fathers helps to explain the

- 3 difficulties surrounding ratification that do not encumber a convention call.
- 4 The word "when" is defined as: "the time or moment" or "at the time that; at
- 5 or just after the moment that."856 The word "on" has a much more specific
- 6 meaning: "after and in consequence of; immediately after and as a result; as
- 7 on the ratification of the treaty the armies were disbanded; he made a profit
- 8 on the sale." 857
- 9 The clear difference between the two words is that of timeliness and
- 10 action. 858 The plain meaning of the words "on" and "shall" do not allow
- 11 Congress the luxury of delay or refusal and clearly reinforce Hamilton's
- 12 statements that Congress has no discretion in calling a convention to propose
- 13 amendments. 859 It mandates immediate action upon Congress.
- 14 However, Congress has not acted. In the pure linguistic sense this lack
- 15 of response in calling a convention can only mean Congress has, for its own
- 16 purposes, mixed the meanings of "on" and "shall" with the more generalized,
- 17 non-imperative definition of "when" and allowed that definition to become its 0.5

 $<sup>^{856}</sup>$  WEBSTER'S NEW TWENTIETH CENTURY DICTIONARY UNABRIDGED  $2^{\rm nd}$  ed., cc 1984.  $^{857}$  Id.(emphasis in original).

Certainly the word "when" could have been substituted where "on" exists in Article V. The passage could have said, for example, (in part) "The Congress...when applied for by the state legislatures shall call a convention..." However, using the word "when" at this point in Article V does allow for possible mischief by Congress. If a state recessed an application, for example, would the moment still exist? Obviously, possibilities such as this would have left the calling of a convention in the hands of Congress to decide. Clearly, the Founding Fathers did not want this, hence the choice of the stronger and more definite word "on". See supra text accompanying notes 363,364,435-437.

<sup>859</sup> See supra text accompanying notes 497-513.

- 1 interpretation of the Article V. 860 Thus, Congress erroneously assumes it can
- 2 call a convention if it chooses, under what terms its chooses, by whatever

The word "when" is defined as:

"At what time; at the time that; at which time; at that time. Gehrung v. Collister, 52 Ohio App. 314, 3 N.E.2d 700, 701, 5 O.O. 195. At, during, or after the time that; at or just after the moment that. In re Morrow's Will, 41 N.M. 723, 73 P.2 $^{\rm nd}$ ,130, 1364. In the event that, on condition that, in virtue of the circumstance that. Frequently employed as equivalent to the word "if" in legislative enactments and in common speech."

The key word in Article V in regards to the convention call is obviously the word "shall" which Black's defines as:

"As used in statues, contract, or the like, this word is generally imperative or mandatory. In common or ordinary parlance, and in its ordinary signification, the term "shall" is a word of command, and one which has always or which must be given a compulsory meaning; as denoting obligation. The word in ordinary usage means "must" and is inconsistent with a concept of discretion. People v. Municipal Court for Los Angeles Judicial Dist., 149 C.A.3d 951, 197 Cal, Rptr. 204,206. It has the invariable significance of excluding the idea of discretion, and has the significance of operating to impose a duty which may be enforced, particularly if public policy is in favor of this meaning, or when addressed to public officials, or where a public interest is involved, or where the public or persons have rights which ought to be exercised or enforced, unless a contrary intent appears. People v. O'Rourke, 124 Cal. App. 752 13 P.2d 989, 992." (emphasis added)

However, Black's continues:

"But it may be construed as merely permissive or directory (as equivalent to "may"), to carry out the legislative intention and in cases where no right or benefit to any one depends on its being taken in the imperative sense, and where no public or private right is impaired by its interpretation in the other sense. Wisdom v. Board of Sup'rs of Polk County, 236 Iowa 669, 19 N.W.2d 602, 607, 608."

This final paragraph of definition provides little benefit to Congress. In the first place, the Founding Fathers clearly intended that "[N]othing in this particular is left to the discretion of that body [Congress]" regarding the calling of the convention (See supra text accompanying note 506) thus clearly placing their intended usage of the word "shall" in the command sense. Secondly, the definition clearly says the interpretation of the word "shall" can only be taken to mean "may" when "in cases where no right or benefit to any one depends on its being taken in the imperative sense..."

Clearly, it is evident that the right of the people and the states to have a convention to propose amendments and amend the Constitution despite opposition from the national government, thus preserving the federalist system, depends on the word being taken in the imperative sense; the Founding Fathers realized this when they discussed and formulated Article V. (See supra text accompanying notes 363,364,435-437). The right, as Madison observed, was "transcendent" (see supra text accompanying notes 529; infra text accompanying

 $<sup>^{860}</sup>$  No matter what dictionary source is used, there is no support for Congress misreading the intent of the Founding Fathers. BLACK'S LAW DICTIONARY (6 $^{\rm th}$  ed. 1990), defines the word "on" as:

&quot;Upon; as soon as; near to; along; along side of; adjacent to; contiguous to; at the time of; following up; in."

- 1 regulations it chooses--and not immediately, without interference, and on the
- 2 application of the states, as the Constitution demands. 861
- These "little" words are not insignificant in the Constitution. 862 As
- 4 recently as 1997, the Court took note of their importance in discussing the
- 5 word "in".863 As it has in the past, the Court ruled the intent of the words
- 6 must be used in their commonly understood definitions. 864 These "little" words
- 7 contained in Article V provide for the very essence of federalism---the right
- 8 of the people either through the states or the national government to
- 9 peacefully modify their Constitution, 865 as was the clear intent of the
- 10 Founding Fathers. 866 Congress has no constitutional right to misinterpret these
- 11 "little" words so as to allow it to prostitute the separate and equal
- 12 amendatory methods of the Constitution into a single, unconstitutional
- 13 amendatory system that it exclusively regulates and controls. 867

14

note 1659) and therefore demands the word "shall" in this instance be only interpreted in the imperative, command sense leaving Congress no discretion in calling a convention.

<sup>861</sup> See supra text accompanying notes 596-608.

<sup>862</sup> See supra text accompanying notes 700-716,1669-1671.

&quot;The CFTC's interpretation violates the ordinary meaning of the key word "in," which is usually thought to be "synonymous with [the] expression 'in regard to,' 'respecting,' [and] 'with respect to.'" BLACK'S LAW DICTIONARY 758 (6th ed. 1990)." Dunn v. Commodity Future Trading Commission et al. 519 U.S. 465 (1997).

<sup>864</sup> See supra text accompanying note 551.

Because our basic concept of sovereignty holds that such sovereignty resides with the people, it is self-evident they may exercise that sovereignty in any manner they choose. Therefore, if their state legislatures apply for a convention to consider proposing amendments to the Constitution, it is no less a valid exercise of sovereignty than that of petitioning Congress for similar amendments. For Congress to ignore the applications of the state legislatures not only violates the states' right to apply for a convention but the people's transcendent sovereign power. See supra text accompanying note 755.

<sup>866</sup> See supra text accompanying notes 363,364,435-437,497-513.

<sup>867</sup> See supra text accompanying notes 278,548,551,572,642,784.

1 Decision

2

3 The Supreme Court has ruled on the definition of "two-thirds" as it

- 4 applies to Article V:868 it refers to members of Congress present and voting
- 5 for a proposed amendment--assuming a quorum--and not to two-thirds of the
- 6 total membership of Congress. 869 Thus, a proposed amendment may come from

The Court said:

"The identity between the provision of article 5 of the Constitution, given the power by two-thirds vote to submit amendments, and the requirements we are considering as to the two-thirds vote necessary to override a veto makes the practice as to the one applicable to the other.

"At the first session of the first Congress in 1789 a consideration of the provision authorizing the submission of amendments necessarily arose in the submission by Congress of the First ten amendments to the Constitution embodying a bill of rights. They were all adopted and submitted by each house organized as a legislative body pursuant to the Constitution, by less that the vote which would have been necessary had the constitutional provision been given the significance now attributed to it. Indeed, the resolutions by which the action of the two houses were recorded demonstrate that they were formulated with the purpose of refuting the contention now made.

"'Resolved: That the Senate do concur in the resolve of the House of Representatives on "articles to be proposed to the Legislatures of the states as amendments to the Constitution of the United States," with amendments; two-thirds of the Senators present concurring therein.' 1st Cong. (1st Sess.) September 9, 1789, Senate Journal, 77.

"And the course of action in the House and the record made in that body is shown by a message from the House to the Senate which was spread on the Senate Journal as follows:

"'A message from the House of Representatives, Mr. Beckley, their clerk, brought up to resolve of the House of this date, to agree to the...amendments proposed by the Senate to "Articles of amendments to be proposed to the Legislatures of the several states as amendments to the Constitution of the United States,"...;two-thirds of the members present concurring on each vote...' 1st Cong. (1st Sess.) Sept. 21, 1789, Senate Journal, 83.

"When it is considered that the chairman of the committee in charge of the amendments for the House was Mr. Madison, and that both branches of

 $<sup>^{868}</sup>$  See supra text accompanying note 273; see also State of Rhode Island v. Palmer, 253 U.S. 350 (1920).

While State of Rhode Island v. Palmer, 253 U.S. 350 (1920), only briefly summarized the Supreme Court's position, Missouri Pacific Railway v. Kansas, 248 U.S. 276 (1919) discussed the matter at length. In that decision, it was contended a law banning the transportation of liquor across state lines was void because it had been vetoed by the President of the United States and when returned to Congress did not receive a two-thirds override vote from the Senate, as the full body was not present at the time of the vote. The Court disagreed and in its reasoning discussed Article V and the amendatory process at length.

- 1 Congress with less than two-thirds of the total number of both houses having
- 2 approved the measure, and this is considered constitutionally valid. 870

Congress contained many members who had participated in the deliberations of the convention or in the proceedings which led to the ratification of the Constitution, and that the whole subject was necessarily vividly present in the minds of those who dealt with it, the convincing effect of the action cannot be overstated."

This was the same Mr. Madison who, as the same chairman of the same congressional committee, in May of that same year, prescribed the actions of Congress as to the first convention application by a state in which Mr. Madison made it clear that Congress was to have no discretion in the matter, not even so much as a debate. See infra text accompanying note 1655.

The Court then continued:

"The construction which was thus given to the Constitution in dealing with a matter of such vast importance, and which was necessarily sanctioned by the states and all the people, has governed as to the every amendment to the Constitution submitted from that day to this. This is not disputed, and we need not stop to refer to the precedents demonstrating its accuracy. The settled rule, however, was so clearly and aptly stated by the Speaker, Mr. Reed, in the House, on the passage in 1898 of the amendment to the Constitution providing for the election of Senators by vote of the people, that we quote it:

"'The question is one that has been so often decided that it seems hardly necessary to dwell upon it. The provision of the Constitution says "two-thirds of both houses." What constitutes a house? A quorum of the membership, a majority, one-half and one more. That is all that is necessary to constitute a house to do all the business the comes before the House. Among the business that comes before the House is the reconsideration of a bill which has been vetoed by the President, another is a proposed amendment to the Constitution, and the practice is uniform in both cases that if a quorum of the House is present the House is constituted, and two-thirds of those voting are sufficient in order to accomplish the object...' Hinds' Precedents of the House of Representatives, pp. 1009-1010." (emphasis added).

Is it not obvious that the states are in fact "voting" when they apply for a convention? After all, an application is nothing more than the formal affirmation of the state to hold a convention. The Constitution mandates that, "two-thirds of those [states] voting are sufficient in order to accomplish the object." What is the object? It is "to require a Convention on application of 2/3 of the Sts." (See supra text accompanying notes 437,439). The two-thirds standard has existed since the first session of Congress and has been supported by both Article V and the  $14^{\rm th}$  Amendment. Clearly Congress can not hold the states to a higher standard of amendment procedure than it has held itself, which is a simple two-thirds numeric vote of those voting (assuming a quorum) "in order to accomplish the object."

quorum) "in order to accomplish the object."

870 Just as Congress has done in passing amendments, the Court did not interpret the key word "two-thirds" as anything other than a strictly numeric value for the purposes of the amendment process and did not add provisions or provisos other than that which related directly to a numeric determination regarding a congressional vote for proposing an amendment. See supra text accompanying note 869.

By the same token, therefore, the "two-thirds" applications called for in Article V must be interpreted as strictly a numeric value of applying

1	The (	Court	has a	ılso	ruled	on	when	an	amendment	is	considered	ratified	and
---	-------	-------	-------	------	-------	----	------	----	-----------	----	------------	----------	-----

- 2 has determined it is a political question left either to Congress<sup>871</sup> or to a
- 3 designated executive official, upon whom, once having determined the proper
- 4 number of states has ratified a proposed amendment, it is "conclusive" for
- 5 that official to proclaim such ratification. 872 In 1922 when the Supreme Court
- 6 made its decision, the designated executive officer under then current law was
- 7 the Secretary of State. 873 Later, Congress changed the law and designated the
- 8 Archivist of the United States as the executive officer charged with
- 9 determining when a proposed amendment to the Constitution has been ratified.<sup>874</sup>
- 10 However, under current law, no person or persons is specifically
- 11 designated to decide when an amendment has been ratified. The law does state
- 12 the Archivist is to publish such amendments when "adopted" but does not
- 13 specify who is to provide "official notice" to the Archivist that such
- 14 ratification has taken place. 875 The law makes it clear that the Archivist may states and, like Congress in its amendatory votes, can have no provisos or terms (i.e. same subject, contemporaneousness etc.; see supra text accompanying notes 614-831,869) added to it before such applications can be considered valid for compelling Congress to call a convention.

The Congress has only certified one amendment to the Constitution as ratified: the 14th Amendment. This process, however, did involve an executive officer who reached a determination regarding ratification of that amendment to which Congress later agreed. See infra text accompanying note 917; see also Coleman v. Miller, 307 U.S. 433 (1939).

&quot;Official notices to the Secretary of State, duly authenticated, that the Legislatures of the states had ratified a proposed amendment, was conclusive upon him, and his proclamation to the effect that the required number of states had ratified the amendment is conclusive on the courts, so that the validity of the ratifications by the Legislatures cannot be questioned in the courts." Leser v. Garnett, 258 U.S. 130 (1922); see also Hawke v. Smith, 253 U.S. 221 (1920), Dillon v. Gloss, 256 U.S. 368, (1921).

<sup>874</sup> See supra text accompanying note 917.

&lt;sup>875</sup> "Whenever official notice is received at the National Archives and Records Administration that any amendment proposed to the Constitution of the United States has been adopted, according to the provisions of the Constitution, the

- 1 only take action after he has "received" official notice. Therefore, it is
- 2 clear the Archivist cannot act in an independent manner and instead must wait
- 3 for "official notice." 876 Interestingly, Congress does not even authorize
- 4 itself to perform this duty. Likewise, the law does not authorize the
- 5 Archivist of the United States, nor any other body or official, to record, let
- 6 alone decide, whether the proper number of applications for a convention to
- 7 propose amendments has been received, though it does call on the Archivist to
- 8 record all "bill[s],order[s],resolution[s] or vote[s]."877 This portion of
- 9 United States Code, of course, complies with the requirements specified in the
- 10 Constitution. 878 However, as far as an official notice of ratification of Archivist of the United States shall forthwith cause the amendment to be published, with his certificate, specifying the States by which the same may have been adopted, and that the same has become valid, to all intents and purposes, as a part of the Constitution of the United States." 1 U.S.C.A. Sec. 106b (1997).

<sup>876</sup> Id.

"Whenever a bill, order, resolution, or vote of the Senate and House of Representatives, having been approved by the President, or not having been returned by him with his objections, becomes a law or takes effect, it shall forthwith be received by the Archivist of the United States from the President, and whenever a bill, order, resolution, or vote is returned by the President with his objections, and, on being reconsidered, is agreed to be passed, and is approved by two-thirds of both Houses of Congress, and thereby becomes a law or takes effect, it shall be received by the archivist of the Untied States from the President of the Senate, or Speaker of the House of Representatives in whichsoever House it shall last have been so approved, and he shall carefully preserve the originals." 1 U.S.C.A.. Sec. 106a (1997).

While the Archivist is clearly required to record all bills, orders, resolutions, or votes in Congress, the law does not mention a convention call. Therefore, the Archivist of the United States has no connection whatsoever with the convention to propose amendments or the call process.

Nowhere, in fact, is there any reference in U.S.C.A. to the convention call, except in the Constitution itself. Therefore, as the Constitution is supreme law (see US CONST. art. VI § 2), and no other laws have been created by Congress regarding this matter, the only law that applies is Article V, which specifies when a certain number of states has applied, a convention must be called by Congress.

"Each house shall keep a journal of its proceedings, and from time to time publish the same..." US CONST., art. I, §5, §§3. "Every bill which shall have passed the House of Representatives and the Senate shall, before it become a

- 1 amendments, as well as convention calls, Congress has not provided in United
- 2 States Code a procedure for either constitutional act, 879 leaving the matter at
- 3 best ambiguous and vague.

law, be presented the President of the United States; if he approve he shall sign it, but if not he shall return it, with his objections to that house in which it shall have originated, who shall enter the objections at large on their journal, and proceed to reconsider it." (US CONST., art. I,  $\S7$ ,  $\S\S2$ .) "Every order, resolution, or vote to which the concurrence of the senate and House of Representatives may be necessary (except on a question of adjournment) shall be presented to the President of the Untied States; and before the same shall take effect, shall be approved by him, or being disapproved by him, shall be repassed by two-thirds of the Senate and House of Representatives, according to the rules and limitations prescribed in the case of a bill." (US CONST., art. I,  $\S7$ ,  $\S\S3$ .)

Certainly a simple procedure for Congress to maintain a record of convention applications is clearly implied in Article V, or else how would Congress know when two-thirds of the states had applied for a convention? And in this, Congress clearly has met at least that obligation by continuing the practice established by Madison and recording the applications from the states for a convention as they have come into Congress over the years. (See supra text accompanying notes 869; infra text accompanying note 1655. See infra TABLE 1—STATE APPLICATIONS FOR A CONVENTION, p.661). However, this simple recording alone does not satisfy the constitutional mandate of Article V: "Congress...shall...call a convention." Congress is mandated to take action by Article V when the states have applied and therefore is remiss in not providing a legislative method whereby action on the applications can be taken.

Clearly, therefore, there must be a simple procedure in law allowing Congress to issue a convention call. This acknowledgment would seem to contradict an earlier portion of this suit (See supra text accompanying notes 560-579), but this is not so. So long as Congress remains within the limited constitutional bounds of the definition of the call, its actions are proper and constitutional. (See supra text accompanying notes 580-592). There is a critical point here. Congress has the right to establish legislative procedures governing its own conduct as to how it will issue a convention call. But this procedure can provide no discretion to Congress regarding the call itself once the proper number of states has applied. Further, this procedure may not place terms or conditions upon the convention, its agenda, its delegates, the states, or those amendments the convention may propose. In no way may Congress attempt to regulate, control, veto or otherwise interfere with the constitutional authority and duties of the convention.

In short, this minuscule constitutional and legislative requirement does not justify congressional attempts to entirely regulate and control every aspect of the convention. (See supra text accompanying notes 593-612,620-668). A simple stitch in the fabric of the law to repair a small tear does not authorize Congress to weave an entirely new garment of power, absent any constitutional grant to do so.

The law required for Congress to issue a convention call need be no more complex than the following example:

"The Congress, upon receipt of applications for a convention to propose amendments (or any other term describing such a convention as a state legislature may choose to employ) from at least two-thirds of the several state legislatures shall, within a period not to exceed five days (excluding weekends and holidays), issue a call for the convening of a convention to propose amendments as required by Article V of the United States Constitution.

"A specific section of the Congressional Record shall be set aside to record all past and present convention applications by the states. A table showing when states have applied, the date(s) of application, and the total number of states that have applied shall be continuously kept in this part of the Congressional Record. When Congress shall call a convention, those applications already on file whose filing shall have caused the convention to have been called, shall be noted in a separate table and kept continuously in the Congressional Record as applications having been satisfied.

"Immediately upon the applications of the states reaching the two-thirds numeric requirement of Article V of the United States Constitution, the Speaker of the House shall notify the Congress of the same who shall then issue the call as prescribed in the first section of this law. It will be incumbent on the duties of the Speaker of the House to monitor the Congressional Record and report to Congress at least once a year on the current standing of applications on file requesting a convention to propose amendments.

"It will be incumbent on the Speaker of the House as part of his duties to certify the applications of the states. This shall consist solely and exclusively of obtaining written verification from the Secretary of State of each state that shall make an application which shall attest to the date the application was submitted to Congress and the text of its contents. All such verifications shall be obtained within five working days of the submission of a convention application by a state to Congress and shall continuously be kept in a designated section of the Congressional Record.

"The convention to propose amendments call shall be limited solely and entirely to an acknowledgment of the two-thirds numeric count of the states applying for a convention to propose amendments and shall list the applying states, together with a proposed time and place for said convention to propose amendments to convene.

"Such location shall include an Internet web page that shall serve as a temporary location for the convention until the delegates shall be elected and shall assume the cost of their own Internet page, server and other related Internet services. Nothing in this law shall be construed as limiting or restricting the several states from establishing a different time and place for the convention to propose amendments to convene on the Internet should the states or their delegates so determine once the call has been issued.

"The Archivist of the United States shall, upon official notice either by Congress or a designated officer of the convention, record and keep all documents, papers, transcripts or any other material related to the convention and shall publish all proposed amendments passed by the convention.

"Congress, upon official receipt of amendments proposed by the convention to propose amendments which shall be transmitted to Congress by a designated officer of the convention, shall, within a period not to exceed ten days from the date of receipt of such amendments, issue and transmit to the several states, a mode of ratification for such amendments, as prescribed by Article V of the United States Constitution, which shall be either ratification by three-fourths of the legislatures of the several states or conventions in three-fourths thereof and, upon receipt of the proper number of states ratifying, shall notify the Archivist of the United States of the

1 It must be assumed Congress knows its constitutional duties. 880 If true,

2 why has Congress not provided itself specific procedures for both ratification

- 3 and a convention call? Do they perhaps suffer from an institutional memory
- 4 lapse? Hardly. No, it is far more likely Congress, as has become its usual
- 5 time-honored tradition, desires to pass the buck to someone else thus avoiding
- 6 any political disaster that might otherwise befall it. Could it be that
- 7 Congress, by its laches in this matter, intends that a non-elected executive
- 8 official or an appointed bureaucrat should have the power to determine whether
- 9 the Constitution of the United States has been ratified or whether a
- 10 convention to propose amendments call should be issued by Congress? More
- 11 importantly, may Congress delegate such authority? In the area of the
- 12 ratification, there is little doubt that Congress may, and has, delegated the
- 13 determination of ratification, but can this also be extended to the convention
- 14 call?
- 15 Can an executive official have any discretionary role in the calling of
- 16 a convention, and if such a role exists, is it constitutional to allow this
- 17 discretion to prevent a convention from being called?
- 18 Fortunately, the Supreme Court addressed this issue in one of its
- 19 earliest rulings, and it determined the President "has nothing to do with the
- 20 proposition, or adoption, of amendments to the Constitution."881 The Court
- 21 said:

ratification of such amendments and cause and compel the same to be certified as part of the United States Constitution."

BRIEF IN SUPPORT OF CONVENTION GENERAL BRIEF ARGUMENTS PAGE 385

See supra text accompanying note 877.

Hollingsworth v. Virginia, 3 U.S. 378, (1798).

"And in the case of amendments is evidently a substantive act, unconnected with the ordinary business of legislation, and not within the policy, or terms, of investing the President with a qualified negative on the acts and resolutions of Congress." 882

5 Clearly, as the Supreme Court has ruled the President of the United

- 6 States is to be "unconnected" with amending the Constitution, 883 it is clear
- 7 that any subservient member of the executive branch, such as the Secretary of
- 8 State, must also be excluded from the amendatory process in any substantive
- 9 manner, 884 and such exclusion would certainly include the bureaucracy, i.e.,
- 10 the Archivist of the United States. 885

Obviously, this ruling must be interpreted as including both Congress and the convention as both deal with the amendatory process. While a less studied reading might interpret the ruling only to mean Congress, it must be remembered the Court was addressing veto power over legislation by the president and acknowledging the fact that the amendatory procedure was different than "ordinary business of legislation." The president, like Congress, can only exercise those powers given to him in the Constitution. Nowhere does that document provide or even imply that the President of the United States is in any way connected with the convention to propose amendments and, therefore, his veto power is confined strictly to the refutation of congressional action as this is the only event in which the president is authorized by the Constitution to intervene with such power. The Court did not mention the convention simply because veto power never was granted to the president in the first place.

Further, as the Court made no distinction between the two methods of amendment proposal, it clear that "amendments" [were] a substantive act", not the method of proposal, and thus, whether they originated from Congress or a convention, they were immune from presidential veto.

In any event, the question is entirely silenced by the Court's all-encompassing edict that the president "has nothing to do with the proposition, or adoption, of amendments to the Constitution."

This means the official or bureaucrat, therefore, can have no more than a minuscule role in which there is provided no discretion in the matter, i.e., a clerical role. See supra text accompanying notes 871-873,875,877,879; infra text accompanying note 885.

<sup>885</sup> In 1992, the OLC report (see supra text, accompanying notes 778-779,781,784) argued that the executive officer charged with the function of certifying—then the Archivist—has only the ministerial duty of counting the notifications sent to him. Separation of powers and federalism concerns also counseled against a congressional role, and past practice, in which all but the 14th Amendment were certified by an executive officer, was noted as supporting a decision against a congressional role.(16 Ops. Of the Office of Legal Coun. 121-126 (1992)(prelim. pr.).

If this rule is adopted that the appropriate executive official has the sole responsibility, it would appear that an official—then the Archivist—

<sup>882</sup> TA

- Simply put, the issue of whether a sufficient number of convention
- 2 applications exists to satisfy the numeric count requirement of the
- 3 Constitution cannot be left to the discretion of an executive official or
- 4 bureaucrat. Congress is specifically named in the Constitution to issue a call
- 5 for a convention to propose amendments. Congress cannot delegate that would have no discretion but to certify once he receives state notification. (United States ex rel. Widenmann v. Colby, 265 F. 998, 999 (D.C. Circ. 1920), affd. mem. 257 U.S. 619 (1921); United States v. Sitka, 666 F. Supp. 19,22 (D. Conn. 1987), affd., 845 F.2nd 43 (2d Circ.), cert. Den., 488 U.S. 827 (1988). See also 96 Cong. Rec. 3250 (Message from President Truman accompanying Reorg. Plan No. 20 of 1950); 16 Ops. Of the Office of Legal Coun. 102, 117 (1992) (prelim. pr.).

Under the old Administrative Procedures Act, the official could request the Department of Justice for a legal opinion on some issue, such as the validity of rescissions. That course has been advocated by the executive branch, naturally, but it is one a little difficult to square with the ministerial responsibility of the Archivist. (OLC report, 116-118.) Thus, OLC said, the action "clearly requires that, before performing this ministerial function, the Archivist must determine whether he has received 'official notice' that an amendment has been adopt 'according to the provisions of the Constitution.' This is the question of law that the Archivist may have properly submitted 'to the Attorney General for resolution.'"(Id. at 118) But if his duty is "ministerial," it would appear the Archivist may only officially notice the receipt of a state resolution. If he may, in consultation with the Attorney General, determine whether the resolution is valid, that is considerably more than a "ministerial" function.

In any event, there would seem to be no support for a political question precluding judicial review under these circumstances. Whether the Archivist certifies on the mere receipt of a ratification resolution or does so only after ascertaining the resolution's validity, it would appear it is action subject to judicial review. The notion of leaving to a non-elected bureaucrat the decision as to whether or not the Constitution of the United States is amended or whether a convention to propose amendments should be called is ludicrous on it face and deserves no further comment.

Ultimately, current law has rendered this entire matter moot as it is clear the Archivist is given no discretionary powers in the matter and can only respond after receiving "official notice". See supra text accompanying note 875.

In any event, while ratification issues may arise as a result of executive involvement, no such obstacle can possibly stand regarding applications for a convention. "Congress...shall...call on the application..." precludes any executive involvement or bureaucratic discretion and would be a direct violation of the principle clearly expressed in Hollingsworth v. Virginia, 3 U.S. 378 (1798). "The approval of the President is not necessary for a proposed amendment." (Id.).

- 1 constitutional authority to any other branch of government, 886 any more than it
- 2 can ignore this specified constitutional duty. 887 Congress' sole duty is to
- 3 count the applications, 888 and if a sufficient number exists to cross the two-
- 4 thirds threshold, as it does at present, then Congress must issue a call for a
- 5 convention. 889 No other option exists in the Constitution.

The convention call is unique in that it does not allow nor does it require any input from the president yet it has important constitutional consequences. It is a unique legal device, exclusive to the amendatory procedure, found only in the Constitution and related exclusively to that procedure. Therefore, while the Constitution does authorize Congress to perform this minuscule, yet vital, constitutional duty, the Constitution

&lt;sup>886</sup> As might be interpreted under the old Administrative Procedures Act. See supra text accompanying note 885.

The failure of Congress to provide a minuscule legal procedure by which it would issue a convention call or establish a clear procedure for the ratification of the convention's amendments is just as unconstitutional as is attempting to regulate the convention beyond the obvious intent of the Founding Fathers. See supra text accompanying note 879.

It would seem at first glance that this argument for a law by Congress runs counter to all thus presented in this suit. Such is not the case. It is not that this suit maintains Congress cannot pass a law regarding the convention call, rather it is with the extent and effect of proposed laws thus formulated, together with the congressional refusal despite a constitutional mandate to call a convention that this suit takes issue.

Simply put, this suit holds that some statutory law must certainly exist in order for Congress to carry out its minuscule duty as specified in the Constitution, but that this constitutional specification does not permit Congress to expand its power beyond that which was intended: a simple call for a convention to propose amendments absent any national government interference or regulation.

888 Solely for the purposes of this suit, it is intrinsically assumed without evidential proof: (1) that members of Congress can count and perform basic fractional math so as to arrive at the conclusion that fifty states have applied, (2) that this mathematical number exceeds the two-thirds numeric count application requirement established by Article V of the Constitution, and (3) therefore a convention to propose amendments must be called.

889 Despite the minuscule provisions suggested above for legislative action in the convention call by Congress, (see supra text accompanying notes 879,887) the call itself can in no way be considered legislative action. Indeed, the call must issued by Congress without the consent or review of the President of the United States (see supra text accompanying notes 560-579), as to do otherwise would violate the separation of powers and grant discretion to Congress in that, should the president veto the action of Congress, Congress would have discretion in its reconsideration of the matter. (See supra text accompanying note 878). Therefore, a legislative act such as is found in United States Code is not constitutional as it requires presidential approval before taking effect.

1

2

3 Recession

4

5 As previously discussed, the immediate action demanded by the use of the

- 6 word "on" as it relates to Article V of the United States Constitution, is
- 7 much less definitive for the word "when" as it relates to ratification. 890 It
- 8 simply refers to that "time or moment". 891 Thus, the word "when" is much more
- 9 prone to interpretative mischief. 892
- 10 In the past, opponents endeavoring to prevent the adoption of a
- 11 particular amendment to the Constitution have used this less definite withholds the usual legislative powers of Congress in performing it. Thus, such a matter must be entered as a separate legal action of Congress, removed from any legislative record such as United States Code to avoid any implication of Congress possessing any legislative power in the matter.

Because this power of the national legislature is absent either presidential or judicial review (In the case of judicial review the Court does not possess the power to prevent the call once the states have applied, but does possess the power to compel a call if the states have applied and Congress refuses to obey the Constitution. See supra text accompanying notes 278,281,286-288,291-293.), the call must be extremely narrow and focused on the minuscule roll prescribed in the Constitution. The reason for this is obvious. On the application of the states, Congress must act, and no option or discretion by Congress is provided or was intended. If the expressed agency of government is so clearly limited, restrained and compelled, then all other branches of the government must be as equally bound.

Therefore, the actual convention call should as simple and direct as possible and need be no more complex than this example:

"The Congress of the United States, having received applications from at least two-thirds of the several states applying for a convention to propose amendments as prescribed in Article 5 of the United States Constitution, hereby issues a call to the several states for a convention to propose amendments. The Congress suggests the following time and place for said convention to convene on the Internet, but acknowledges the states may, at their discretion, alter either time or place for the convention. Such time and place shall be... The states applying for the convention are as follows..."

890 See supra text accompanying notes 852-867.

<sup>892</sup> See supra text accompanying notes 856,860.

- 1 interpretation as a basis to raise questions to the Court either concerning
- 2 procedural issues of its adoption, such as the number of members in Congress
- 3 voting for its adoption, or to maintain the right of states to recess or
- 4 change their previously filed ratifications in order to have the Court
- 5 overturn the adoption of the amendment. $^{893}$  The Court has refused to do so. In
- 6 some suits the Court has ruled the objections are political in nature and thus
- 7 not judicable. 894 But even where the Court has heard a specific objection, in
- 8 no case has it ever invalidated a constitutional amendment. Meanwhile, lower
- 9 federal courts have, on at least one occasion, invalidated the ratification of
- 10 a proposed amendment based on the specific issue that time had expired for
- 11 ratification. 895

<sup>893</sup> See Hollingsworth v. Virginia, 3 U.S. 378 (1798), Missouri Pacific Railway Co. v. Kansas, 248 U.S. 276 (1919), State of Rhode Island v. Palmer, 253 U.S. 350 (1920), Hawke v. Smith, 253 U.S. 221 (1920), Dillon v. Gloss, 256 U.S. 368 (1921), Leser v. Garnett, 258 U.S. 130 (1922), Coleman, v. Miller, 307 U.S. 433 (1939).

&lt;sup>894</sup> Coleman v. Miller, 307 U.S. 433 (1939).

The issue of states revoking ratification might have come to a final conclusion had time literally not run out. In the case of the proposed Equal Rights Amendment, Congress sought to extend the time limit necessary for ratification after it had first established a seven year limit. (See Equal Rights Amendment Extension, Hearings before the Senate Judiciary Subcommittee on the Constitution, 95th Congress, 2d sess. (1978); Equal Rights Amendment Extension, Hearings before the House Judiciary Subcommittee on Civil and Constitutional Rights, 95th Congress, 1st/2nd sess. (1977-78)). Congress passed a three year extension of the ratification process. (See H.J. Res. 638, 95th Congress, 2nd sess. (1978); 92 Stat. 3799.) Litigation ensured and a federal district court, finding the issue to be justiciable, held that Congress did not have the power to extend, but before the Supreme Court could review the decision the extended time period expired and mooted the matter. (See Idaho v. Freeman, 529 F. Supp. 1107 (D.C.D. Idaho, 1981) prob. juris. noted, 455 U.S. 918 (1982), vacated and remanded to dismiss, 459 U.S. 809 (1982).

Also much disputed during consideration of the Equal Rights Amendment was the question whether once a state had ratified, could it thereafter withdraw or rescind its ratification, precluding Congress from counting that state toward completion of ratification. Four States (Nebraska, Tennessee, Idaho, South Dakota) had rescinded their ratifications, and a fifth had declared that its ratification would be void unless the amendment was ratified within the original time limit (South Dakota). Another state's recession was

The Supreme Court has in one suit held that it was up to Congress to 1 determine whether or not recessions by the states were valid. 896 In that suit, 2

the Court said:

3

5

8

9

12

16

18

19

23

"We think that in accordance with this historic precedent the question of the efficacy of ratifications by the states legislatures, in the light of previous rejection or attempted withdrawal, should be regarded as a political question pertaining to the political departments, with the ultimate authority in the Congress in the exercise of its control over the promulgation of the adoption of the amendment."897

10 On its face, it would appear the Court had answered the question,

11 leaving the entire issue of recession of ratification votes by the states, and--some would argue--the question of convention applications completely in the hands of Congress to decide at its discretion. 898 Therefore, if 13 applications are to be treated the same as ratification votes by the states, 14

15 the Court has ruled conclusively that the matter is entirely up to Congress to decide when and if a convention to propose amendments is to be called.

17 However, there are several problems with this presumption. In the first place, it was the clear intent of the Founding Fathers that Congress should have no discretion in the calling of a convention to propose amendments. 899

Certainly, if Congress is provided the means whereby it becomes the final 20

arbiter in such matters, this is a clear violation of the Framers' intent. 900 21

22 In the second place, the Court was divided on the suit, i.e., the decision was only rendered by four justices, the rest of the Court concurring in the vetoed by the lieutenant governor of that state (Kentucky). This question too was left unanswered by the expiration of the time limit of the amendment. <sup>896</sup> Coleman v. Miller, 307 U.S. 433 (1939).

&lt;sup>897</sup> Id.

<sup>898</sup> See supra text accompanying notes 756.

&lt;sup>899</sup> See supra text accompanying notes 497-513.

<sup>900</sup> See supra text accompanying notes 435-439,1655.

decision but "for somewhat different reasons." 901 Therefore, it can be held

2 that Coleman was nothing more than dicta, and the court actually never reached

3 a decision. 902

7

15

16

17

18

20

4 Most important, however, was the basis of the political question the

5 Court cited in Coleman. Obviously, a decision based on an event can be no more

6 conclusive than the event itself. In Coleman, the Court specifically referred to the ratification of the  $14^{\mathrm{th}}$  Amendment to the Constitution in which five

8 states either voted not to ratify or later changed their minds after they had

 $^{903}$  ratified as justifying Congress being the ultimate judge in such matters. $^{903}$

10 In the ratification of the 14th Amendment, Congress allowed that 11 recessions by two northern states that had previously voted in favor of 12 ratification of the 14th Amendment were invalid, while it simultaneously held

13 that three southern states that voted against ratification of the 14th

14 Amendment, then voted in favor of ratification (after their state legislatures were removed by the national government and replaced by new members of Congress' own choosing), were valid. 904 Thus, in the north, Congress ruled the states could not recess their ratifications after the state had voted, but in the south, the Congress held the states could recess their ratification vote

19 after the state had voted. The political decision of Congress therefore was the states could and could not recess their ratification vote once they had

&lt;sup>901</sup> Id.

 $<sup>^{902}</sup>$  However, the decision reached in <code>Coleman</code> was reached by a concurrence, and thus it is possible to argue that all arguments used by the <code>Court</code> to arrive at its decision must be valid. <code>See infra</code> text accompanying notes 1053-1108.  $^{903}$  <code>See infra</code> text accompanying note 917.  $^{904}$  <code>Td</code>

1 voted, thus leaving the question of ratification recession, i.e., whether or

2 not a state recession of a ratification vote is valid, a definite maybe. 905 The

3 only thing the  $14^{th}$  Amendment ratification did establish was that the national

4 government could refute ratifications of the states by armed overthrow of the 5 state legislatures, based totally on the arbitrary and capricious political

6 whim of Congress. It is most unlikely the Founding Fathers, under the guise of 7 choosing a mode of ratification, ever intended to grant such arbitrary powers

8 to Congress. 906

9 Thus, while the question of state recession of ratification votes has

10 been presented to the Supreme Court, no definitive decision has ever been

11 reached either by the courts or the Congress. In recent years, the Supreme

12 Court has ruled on states recessing statutory law agreements with the federal

13 government, however. The Court held that once a state gives its permission in

14 a Federal matter, it cannot rescind that position, as the role assigned to the 15 state has been "exhausted." 907

"The United States takes the position that...once consent has been given, "the $<sup>^{905}</sup>$  It is probably good for the convention question that the  $14^{\rm th}$  Amendment, despite any ratification issues surrounding it, did become part of the Constitution. Under that amendment, recession of ratification votes or convention applications must have "equal protection under the law" which means at the minimum that a single standard must apply. As the Court in Coleman allowed for two diametrically opposed standards to apply in its example, i.e., the states could and could not recess applications, it is clear that such a double standard is not valid under the doctrine of equal protection as provided by the  $14^{\rm th}$  Amendment.

&quot;The consent required...cannot be revoked at the will of an incumbent Governor... Nothing in the statute authorized the withdrawal of approval previously given. Nor does...legislative history suggest that Congress intended to permit Governors to revoke their consent." "Since [the legislation] does not permit North Dakota to revoke its consent outright, the State may not revoke its consent based on noncompliance with the conditions set forth in the 1977 legislation." "North Dakota's central argument is that the gubernatorial consent...once given, may be revoked by the State at will."

1 Does this concept of "exhaustion" apply to the application procedure for

2 a convention to propose amendments? It would appear so. North Dakota v. United

- States 908 cited two reasons under which the states could revoke or withdraw 3
- "approval". First, if the statute in question "authorized the withdrawal of 4
- 5 approval previously given," and second, if the "legislative history
- 6 suggest[ed] that Congress intended to permit Governors to revoke their
- 7 consent." In other words, revocation is valid if there is specific Federal
- 8 language allowing recession or if the authors of the legislation intended to
- 9 grant states the right of recession.
- 10 Neither reason for granting recession cited by the Court seems to apply
- 11 to convention to propose amendments applications. First, there is no specific
- language in the Constitution allowing for recession of applications. 909 As the 12
- 13 Founding Fathers went through several drafts regarding amending the
- Constitution, it is logical to suggest that should the Founding Fathers have 14
- wished states to have the power of recession, they would have written it into 15
- 16 the Constitution. Nothing in the record suggests they did. It follows then
- 17 that the applications for a convention must be viewed in the same manner.
- 18 Unless there is specific language in the Constitution or the Framers intended
- 19 that the states have the right to rescind, recession by the states of
- 20 convention to propose amendments applications is unconstitutional. The role role assigned to the state by Congress has been exhausted." North Dakota v. United States, 460 U.S. 300 (1983).

&lt;sup>908</sup> 460 U.S. 300 (1983).

 $<sup>^{909}</sup>$  See supra text accompanying note 2. See also Hawke v. Smith, 253 U.S. 221 (1920); "It is not the function of courts or legislative bodies, national or state, to alter the [amendatory] method which the Constitutional has fixed."

- 1 assigned to the states by the Constitution for applying for a convention is
- 2 "exhausted" once the state has filed, and the state cannot rescind its
- 3 application. 910 Congress then calls the convention which fulfills the
- 4 applications and thus voids them. Then the state is free to apply or not apply
- 5 for a future convention if it wishes.
- 6 There are other problems with the concept of allowing state recessions
- 7 of convention applications beyond granting immense congressional power in the
- 8 matter. A withdrawal of an application by a state after the necessary two-
- 9 thirds requirement is reached cannot be considered effective or constitutional
- 10 because once two-thirds of the states have applied, the terms of Article V
- 11 oblige Congress to call a convention, 911 and no subsequent act by a state may
- 12 vitiate that obligation. 912
- 13 Permitting the states to rescind their applications after two-thirds of
- 14 them have applied for a convention creates the disastrous effect of granting
- 15 each state a veto over a constitutionally mandated congressional action in
- 16 addition to a veto over the sovereign state right of application. Both actions
- 17 are clearly unconstitutional. 913

_

&lt;sup>910</sup> The same concept applies to the ordinary citizen's vote and can be used as an analogous example. The citizen has all the time he requires before entering the ballot box to choose. Even during the vote, he may take a reasonable time in casting his ballot. But, once the vote is made and placed in the ballot box, he may not rescind it.

&quot;Congress...on...application of the states...shall call a convention..."
U.S. CONST., art. V.

&quot;This Constitution...shall be the supreme law of the land...anything in the constitution or laws of any state to the contrary notwithstanding." U.S. CONST., art. VI,  $\S$  2.

<sup>913</sup> Id. See also infra text accompanying note 915.

- 1 Neither the states nor Congress has the right to veto the Constitution,
- 2 either by overstepping the bounds of authority granted them by the
- Constitution by vetoing the authority granted to the other, or by ignoring its 3
- 4 mandates. Because the two-thirds threshold required by the Constitution has
- 5 been met and was met before the filing of any recessions, 914 any application
- 6 language containing recession or "sunset" clauses must be deemed
- 7 unconstitutional. Thus, all applications on record remain in full force until
- 8 Congress issues a convention call, thus discharging them.
- 9 Not even before reaching the two-thirds threshold does a state have the
- 10 ability to rescind its application or to include a time limit on the
- application's effectiveness.915 In the present situation, the question of 11

The convention to propose amendments only deals with amendments to the federal Constitution. The Constitution is supreme over that of any single state. Thus, the Constitution's sovereign authority is supreme to that of any single state.

As observed by the Supreme Court:

"The sovereignty of a State extends to everything which exists by its own authority, or is introduced by its permission; but does it extend to those means which are employed by Congress to carry into execution powers conferred on that body by the people of the United States? We think it demonstrable that it does not. Those powers are not given by the people of a single State. They are given by the people of the United States, to a government whose laws, made in pursuance of the constitution, are declared to be supreme. Consequently, the people of a single State cannot confer a sovereignty which will extend over them." McCulloch v. Maryland, 17 U.S. 316 (1819) (emphasis added).

&lt;sup>914</sup> See infra

TABLE 1-STATE APPLICATIONS FOR A CONVENTION, p.661; TABLE 3-STATE RECESSIONS,

p.674.

915 If this were allowed, it would permit a single state applying for a convention to decide the issue of the convening of a convention to propose amendments by withdrawing its application just as the two-thirds requirement was reached, thus permitting that state to "veto" the matter. Despite the fact the application comes from the state, it must be remembered the convention to propose amendments is federal, not state, in nature. Thus, this is not a state action in the usual sense but is a federal action by the state permitted it by the Constitution. As such, the state's application cannot be viewed as a state matter. The application action, once filed, passes from state to federal, and thus matters such as equal sovereignty between the states come into question that simply do not exist within a single state. See infra text accompanying notes 1418-1510.

- 1 recessing a state's application is moot because the threshold was met before
- 2 any recessions were introduced. 916

Thus, if a state attempts to veto a convention call through the removal of its application, it is attempting to extend its sovereignty over other states and the federal government, which the Court has made clear it cannot do.

If a time limit on applications is permitted, it is possible a state, for whatever political reason, could have its application read, "This application shall no longer be effective on the moment when two-thirds of the states shall apply for a convention." As to the reason for such unusual writing, it could be the motivation of the state to merely act as if it was in favor of a particular political position when in fact it was not. However such political expediencies should not be the basis upon which such an important constitutional issue as a convention should be decided.

Of course it can be argued there are other states available that can provide the necessary two-thirds requirement, and therefore a state, once it has submitted, can withdraw its application because other states are available.

This position ignores the central argument against it, that of permitting one sovereign state a veto authority over another sovereign state in which both possess equal authority under the Constitution. It would be the same as permitting one state to approve the ratification vote of another state or allowing that state to approve actions of the second state's legislature before they took effect.

Allowing a state to withdraw its application, no matter when that state originally applied, gives a veto over the other states that do wish a convention. This is a clear violation of the concept expressed by the Supreme Court in several of its decisions in which the Court made it clear that the states, whenever admitted, possess all the powers granted to states under the Constitution and that these powers must be equal in all states.

"[The] right of...every...new state to exercise all the powers of government, which belong to and may be exercised by the original states of the Union, must be admitted, and remain unquestioned." Pollard v. Hagan, 44 U.S. 212 (1845).

The Court has further ruled that:

"Equality of constitutional right and power is the condition of all the States of the Union, old and new." Escanaba Co. v. Chicago, 107 U.S. 678 (1883).

Any such action by a state would necessarily have to be based on state law or state constitutional authority. However, as the court ruled in Hawke v. Smith, no such state authority exists; in fact, it is clearly unconstitutional. See supra text accompanying note 909; infra text accompanying notes 1148-1207.

Further, such an action by a state as rescinding its application would be a violation of the right of the people to alter or abolish. See infra text accompanying notes 991-1009,1136-1146.

916 See infra

TABLE 1-STATE APPLICATIONS FOR A CONVENTION, p.661; TABLE 3-STATE RECESSIONS, p.674.

- 1 While the recession of applications has never been addressed by the
- 2 Court or Congress, the question of recession of ratifications by the states
- 3 has. The essential logic of Congress and the courts in the area of state
- 4 recession of ratification seems to be a one-way street, i.e., once a state
- 5 consents to the ratification of an amendment, it may not rescind that consent.
- 6 This standard, however, is not without questions. 917 If a ratification vote of
- 7 the state can suffer no recession once made, it would appear that the

A second more modern example is the ratification of the 27th Amendment to the Constitution. In 1992, the Archivist of the United States proclaimed the 27th Amendment ratified a day before both Houses of Congress adopted resolutions accepting ratification. (F.R. Doc. 92-11951, 57 Fed. Reg. 21187; 138 Cong. Rec. (daily ed.) S 6948-49, H 3505-06). This completed a ratification vote that spanned 203 years. While Congress did not remove any state legislatures during the process of ratification, it did, by its actions, recognize ratification votes that had taken place several years before, thus confirming the concept of a "one-way street" in ratification. See supra text accompanying note 1088.

 $<sup>^{917}</sup>$  In the past, the states have withdrawn their ratifications only to have these ignored by the national government. The 14th Amendment was ratified by the legislatures of Ohio and New Jersey, both of which subsequently passed rescinding resolutions. Contemporaneously, the legislatures of Georgia, North Carolina and South Carolina rejected ratification resolutions. Pursuant to the Act of March 2, 1867 (14 Stat. 428) the governments of those states were reconstituted, and the new legislatures ratified. Thus, there were presented both the question of the validity of a withdrawal and the question of the validity of a ratification following rejection. Congress requested the Secretary of State, who was then responsible for receiving notices of ratification and proclaiming adoption, to report on the number of states ratifying the proposal, and the Secretary's response specifically noted the actions of the Ohio and New Jersey legislatures. The Secretary then issued a proclamation reciting that 29 states, including the two that had rescinded and the three which had ratified after first rejecting, had ratified, which was one more than the necessary three-fourths. He noted the attempted withdrawal of Ohio and New Jersey and observed that it was doubtful whether such attempts were effectual in withdrawing consent.(15 Stat. 706,707) He therefore certified the amendment to be in force if the rescissions by Ohio and New Jersey were invalid. The next day Congress adopted a resolution listing all 29 states, including Ohio and New Jersey, as having ratified and concluded that the ratification process was completed.(15 Stat. 709) The Secretary of State then proclaimed the amendment as part of the Constitution. These actions by Congress have raised questions of the validity of the  $14^{\text{th}}$  Amendment and congressional authority in the amendatory process. See supra text accompanying note 849; infra text accompanying notes 1006,1053-1073,1077,1079,1089,1094,1188,1239,1333.

- 1 convention application, which allows no option on the part of Congress, must
- 2 be held to this same minimum standard.
- 3 As to application recessions, as the record demonstrates, the minimum
- 4 number of states required to apply for a convention had applied previous to
- 5 any recessions by the states being filed. 918 The Constitution is emphatic.
- 6 Congress must call "on the application of two-thirds of the states." If
- 7 Congress does not act, this inaction does not nullify the applications. They
- 8 remain in force, and thus any recessions under any circumstances are invalid
- 9 until a convention is called. 919 Therefore, all convention applications on file
- 10 with Congress are valid, contemporary and in full effect until Congress calls
- 11 a convention. 920

TABLE 1-STATE APPLICATIONS FOR A CONVENTION, p.661; TABLE 3-STATE RECESSIONS, p.674.

<sup>918</sup> See infra

only Louisiana has attempted to rescind all its applications with a 1992 notice. (Id.) If the concept of states having the right to recess applications is accepted, then it must be based on the same concept expressed by the Court regarding the definition of the word "two-thirds" in the Constitution. (See supra text accompanying note 869). This would mean that Louisiana is not "present". Thus, this would reduce the total number of states applying to 49 and the two-thirds mark to thirty-three states rather than thirty-four states. In any event, this still leaves forty-nine states still applying for a convention, a number far in excess of the minimum under either standard. However, it is clear that only one interpretation of count is correct. See infra text accompanying note 920.

As noted earlier, "while certain characteristics of ratification and application can be interpreted in a simultaneous manner, this interpretation cannot be ubiquitous." See supra text accompanying note 700-716.

Another example of this is in the interpretation of the word "two-thirds". The Court, in allowing less than the full number of Congress to be a valid number for that body to propose amendment, (See Missouri Pacific Railway Co. v. Kansas, 248 U.S. 276 (1919); State of Rhode Island v. Palmer, 253 U.S. 350 (1920); supra text accompanying notes 273,570,734,869.) apparently opened the door to an interesting situation concerning convention applications. By allowing that it does not require an actual two-thirds count of both houses, but rather two-thirds of those participating in the meeting (assuming a quorum), the Court left the door open to the concept that less than two-thirds of the states applying actually are required for a convention to convene. The logic is simple for this position. If Congress can legally propose an amendment based on a sliding scale of numbers, i.e., that a small minority of membership could in fact propose an amendment, then it follows under the equal protection clause of the  $14^{\rm th}$  Amendment that such a power must exist for the states in their application procedure.

Using this sliding scale, it is mathematically possible to achieve the proposal of an amendment in Congress with only 181 members voting: thirty-five in the Senate and 146 in the House. While the minimum number of states needed in the House is almost impossible to predict, (though it can be estimated that only a few large states such as California, New York and Texas would certainly be sufficient) it is clear that only eighteen states are required in the Senate to agree to an amendment proposal in order for it to be sent to the states for ratification. This calculates out to 36 percent of the states, or slightly over one-third.

Obviously, under this interpretation, there is a problem as a minority of states (the same 36 percent) could cause a convention to occur when two-thirds of the states have not actually applied. How is the matter to be resolved? In the application sense, there is no such thing as a "quorum" of states. Obviously, for the purposes of application, all states are always "present"; thus any quorum must be based on the relationship of applying states to the total number of states.

The answer lies in the strict numeric count interpretation of the meaning of the word "two-thirds" as discussed by Hamilton. (See supra text accompanying notes 505-513.) Only under this rule can the constitutional intent of the Framers be preserved and thus, any subterfuge prevented.

The two-thirds numeric count standard, as Madison noted, "guards equally against that extreme facility, which would render the Constitution too mutable; and that extreme difficulty, which might perpetuate its discovered faults. It, moreover, equally enables the general and the State governments to originate the amendment of errors, as they may be pointed out by the experience on side, or on the other." FEDERALIST No. 43.

Further, the fact that applications cannot be recessed, once applied for by the states, further buttresses against this danger; it removes any concept of quorum from the equation. If a state can withdraw its application, then the remainder of the states might otherwise argue that the state is not "participating" in the convention application process and, like a member of Congress not present at an amendment proposal vote, can not effect outcome by his absence. Therefore, the state does not "count," so the two-thirds number needed is lower than what it would be if the state were "counted." Using this logic, it is possible that a single state could cause a convention to be held if no other state has applied.

This argument, of course, is entirely false as it clearly violates the equal sovereignty afforded all states. Simply put, because a state does not participate in applying for a convention to propose amendments does not mean that the two-thirds requirement of the Constitution can be ignored. Article V clearly calls for a convention "on the Application of the Legislatures of two thirds of the several States..." There is no exemption clause in Article V, either expressed or implied, that permits any state to be exempted from the term "several states." However, the implication is clear that the term "several states" includes all the states in the Union, and therefore the two-thirds calculation must be based on a fractional calculation of this total.

In summary, therefore, there is an important difference in the meaning of the word "two-thirds" in regard to Congress and the convention to propose amendments. In Congress, the two-thirds requirement is a sliding scale based on members present at the time of vote; in the application process, the two-

1 2 3 4 5 6 THE TREATY OF PARIS AND THE CONVENTION 7 8 INTRODUCTION 9 10 Following the end of the Revolutionary War, through a series of agreements 921 culminating in the signing of the Treaty of Paris, 922 Great 11 Britain "acknowledged" 923 the independence and sovereignty of the American 12 13 colonies.

thirds requirement is an absolute numeric total based on total number of states currently in the Union. However, in both cases, a pure number will trigger the event in question. But, in the actual convention to propose amendments, the question of quorum is germane where the quorum rule must be observed. See infra text accompanying note 1344,1418-1510.

921 Preliminary Articles of Peace, November 30, 1782; Declarations of the Treaty of Paris appears to give sovereignty either expressly or by Ordinarily, this should be the alpha and omega of the matter. However,

Suspension of Arms and Cessation of Hostilities, January 20, 1783; Proclamation Declaring the Cessation of Arms, April 11, 1783.

922 September 3, 1783.

The full text of Article I of the Treaty of Paris reads as follows:

"His Britannic Majesty acknowledges the said United States, viz., New Hampshire, Massachusetts Bay, Rhode Island and Providence Plantations, Connecticut, New York, New Jersey, Pennsylvania, Maryland, Virginia, North Carolina, South Carolina and Georgia, to be free sovereign and independent states, that he treats with them as such, and for himself, his heirs, and successors, relinquishes all claims to the government, propriety, and territorial rights of the same and every part thereof." Treaty of Peace with Great Britain, Sept. 3, 1783, (Malloy, ed. Treaties, Conventions, etc., Vol. I, p. 586 ff.) hereafter referred to as Treaty of Paris, (1783).

14

15

- 1 implication to several political entities. By definition, sovereignty can only
- 2 belong to one supreme political body within a nation. 924 So, the question
- 3 becomes to whom was this sovereignty ultimately acknowledged?
- 4 The Treaty of Paris names "the said United States" 925 which could be
- 5 argued was no more than a collective name for the colonies. 926 As of the
- 6 signing of the treaty, "the said United States" consisted of the Congress of
- 7 the United States, created under the Articles of Confederation. 927 There were
- 8 no executive or judicial branches of government in the Articles of
- 9 Confederation; all national power resided with Congress. 928

BRIEF IN SUPPORT OF CONVENTION GENERAL BRIEF ARGUMENTS PAGE 402

<sup>924</sup> See infra text accompanying note 939.

&quot;United States. This term has several meanings. It may be merely the name of a sovereign occupying the position analogous to that of other sovereigns in family of nations, it may designate territory over which sovereignty of United States extends, or it may be collective name of the states which are united by and under the Constitution. Hooven & Allison Co., v. Evatt, U.S. Ohio, 324 U.S. 652, 65 S.Ct. 870, 880, 89 L.Ed. 1252." BLACK'S LAW DICTIONARY, 6th ed. (1990).

&lt;sup>926</sup> "The Stile of this Confederacy shall be "The United States of America." Art. I, Articles of Confederation (1781).

&quot;And that persons of any other description shall have free liberty to go to any part or parts of any of the thirteen United States..." Art. V, Treaty of Paris, (1783). (emphasis added).

It is clear from these citings that: (1) the United States, from the point of view of the Americans, was no more than a name that the thirteen original colonies called themselves when working collectively, (2) that the British understood and accepted this fact, (3) it was as proper to refer to "the United States" indicating a single body, as it was to call them "the thirteen United States" indicating multiple bodies. Thus, there can be no conclusion drawn as to whether "the United States" received sovereignty simply by reading "the United States" in Article I as that name referred both to the nation and the individual states.

&quot;For the most convenient management of the general interests of the United States, delegates shall be annually appointed in such manner as the legislatures of each State shall direct, to meet in Congress..." Art. V, Id. Parallel Paral

Certain powers were designated to Congress, among which were the rights 1 to approve any treaty made by a state and to negotiate treaties. 929 Further, 2

- the Articles of Confederation specifically forbade any state in the United 3
- States "from entering into any...treaty with any King..." 930 This expressed 4
- power of Congress was clearly reinforced under Article II of the Articles of 5
- Confederation. 931 6
- 7 As the Articles of Confederation provided that no state could enter into
- 8 a treaty with a king, it could be argued that Congress, as the sole national
- power of the United States, was the only political entity that could receive
- 10 sovereignty. Is this a correct point of view?
- 11 After all, in the same sentence acknowledging United States sovereignty,
- the treaty also acknowledged the sovereignty of the thirteen original 12
- 13 colonies, going so far as to name each colony separately as being "free,
- sovereign and independent states." 932 There appears to be a conflict between 14
- the Treaty of Paris and the Articles of Confederation. On the one hand, the 15
- 16 treaty "sends" sovereignty to the states, but the Articles of Confederation
- prevent the states from "receiving" it. 933 There is no question sovereignty was 17

<sup>929 &</sup>quot;The United States in Congress assembled, shall have the sole and exclusive right and power of determining on peace and war...of sending and receiving ambassadors---entering into treaties and alliances..." Art. IX, Id.;

<sup>930 &</sup>quot;No State, without the consent of the United States in Congress assembled, shall send any embassy to, or receive any embassy from, or enter into any conference, agreement, alliance or treaty with any King, Prince or State..."

<sup>931 &</sup>quot;Each state retains its sovereignty, freedom, and independence, and every power, jurisdiction, and right, which is not by this Confederation expressly delegated to the United States, in Congress assembled." Art. II, Id. (emphasis

<sup>932</sup> See supra text accompanying note 923.

<sup>933</sup> See supra text accompanying notes 929,930.

1 conferred by the Treaty of Paris. But to whom? The issue seems murky at best.

2 Was it conferred on the Congress, "the said United States", the thirteen

3 enumerated states, the thirteen United States or on yet another unnamed

4 political entity?

5 The answer to this question is critical. If sovereignty resides in the 6 Congress of the United States, and it would appear at first glance based

7 congressional actions regarding the ratification of the  $14^{\rm th}$  Amendment  $^{934}$

8 together with its refusal to call a convention despite mandated constitutional

9 decree,  $^{935}$  that this may be the case, then the thrust of this suit must fail.  $^{936}$

10 But if sovereignty resides elsewhere, and in such a manner and form as to 11 preclude and exclude congressional dominance of that sovereignty, thus making

Congress subservient to that sovereignty, and if such sovereignty exists in 13 such a form and manner as to control or otherwise direct the Congress of the 14 United States, then the thrust of this suit must succeed. Thus, the Treaty of 15 Paris' relationship to the Constitution and, in turn, its amendatory procedure

16 require close scrutiny; whoever possesses the sovereignty created by the 17 Treaty of Paris determines who can exercise it.

18

12

19

20 DEFINITIONS

BRIEF IN SUPPORT OF CONVENTION GENERAL BRIEF ARGUMENTS PAGE 404

&lt;sup>934</sup> See supra text accompanying notes 917; infra text accompanying notes 1055,1056,1106-1108.

&lt;sup>935</sup> See supra text accompanying notes 2,435-439,497-509,515-517,519,521.
<sup>936</sup> Clearly, if the Congress can reject, ignore or otherwise veto or void provisions of the Constitution, it must be sovereign and supreme to the Constitution.

2 We begin by defining those important terms related to the Treaty of 3 Paris.

4

What is Independence?

9 10 11

"The state or condition of being free from dependence, subjection, or control. Political independence is the attribute of a nation or state which is entirely autonomous, and not subject to the government, control, or dictation of any exterior power." 937

"The state or quality of being independent; freedom from the influence, control or determination of another or others; self-maintenance or selfgovernment."938

13 14

12

What is Sovereignty?

19 20 21

22

23 24

25

26 27

28

29

30

31 32

33 34

35

36 37

"The supreme, absolute, and uncontrollable power by which any independent state is governed; supreme political authority; the supreme will, paramount control of the constitution and frame of government and its administration; the self-sufficient source of political power, from which all specific political powers are derived; the international independence of a state, combined with the right and power of regulating its internal affairs without foreign dictation; also a political society, or state, which is sovereign and independent.

"The power to do everything in a state without accountability, -- to make laws, to execute and to apply them, to impose and collect taxes and levy contributions, to make war or peace, to form treaties of alliance or of commerce with foreign nations, and the like.

"Sovereignty in government is that public authority which directs or orders what is to be done by each member associated in relation to the end of the association. It is the supreme power by which any citizen is governed and is the person or body of persons in the state to whom there is politically no superior. The necessary existence of the state and that right and power which necessarily follow is 'sovereignty.' By 'sovereignty' in its largest sense is meant supreme, absolute, uncontrollable power, the absolute right to govern. The word which by itself comes nearest to be the definition of 'sovereignty' is will or volition as applied to political affairs. City of Basbee v. Cochise County, 52 Ariz. 1, 78 P.2d 982, 986."939

38 39

What is a Subject?

40 41

<sup>937</sup> BLACK'S LAW DICTIONARY 6th ed. (1990).

<sup>938</sup> WEBSTER'S NEW TWENTIETH CENTURY DICTIONARY, 2nd ed. (1983).
939 BLACK'S LAW DICTIONARY 6th ed. (1990).

"One that owes allegiance to a sovereign and is governed by his laws. The natives of Great Britain are subjects of the British government. Men in free governments are subjects as well as citizens; as citizens they enjoy rights and franchises; as subjects they are bound to obey the laws. Swiss Nat. Ins. Co. v. Miller, 267 U.S. 42, 45 S.Ct. 213, 214, 69 L.Ed. 504."  $^{940}$

What is a Citizen?

"One who, under the Constitution and laws of the United States, or of a particular state, is a member of the political community, owning allegiance and being entitled to the enjoyment of full civil rights. All persons born or naturalized in the United States, and subject to the jurisdiction thereof, are citizens of the United States and of the state wherein they reside. U.S. CONST.,  $14^{\rm th}$  Amend.

"'Citizens' are members of a political community who, in their associated capacity, have established or submitted themselves to the dominion of a government for the promotion of their general welfare and protection of their individual as well as collective rights. Herriott v. City of Seattle, 891 Wash.2d. 48, 500 P.2d 101, 109." 941

What is a Treaty?

"A treaty is in its nature a contract between two nations, not a Legislative Act. It does not generally effect, of itself, the object to be accomplished, especially so far as its operation is infraterritorial; but is carried into execution by the sovereign power of the respective parties to the instrument. In the United States a different principle is established. Our Constitution declares a treaty to be the law of the land. It is, consequently to be regarded in courts of justice as equivalent to an Act of the Legislature, whenever it operates of itself without the aid of any legislative provision. But when the terms of the stipulation import a contract—when either of the parties engages to perform a particular act—the treaty address itself to the political, not the judicial department; and the Legislature must execute the contract before it can become a rule for the court." 942

What is a Contract?

"A contract is a compact between two or more parties, and is either executory or executed. An executory contract is one in which a party binds himself to do, or not to do, a particular thing; such was the law under which the conveyance was made by the governor. A contract executed is one in which the object of contract is performed; and this, says Blackstone, differs in nothing from a grant... A contract executed, as well as one which is executory, contains obligations binding on the parties. A grant, in its own nature, amounts to an extinguishment of the right of the grantor, and implies a contract not to reassert the right. A party is, therefore, always estopped by his own grant."943 3 4 Contracts-Implied and Expressed Powers 5 As the courts consider a treaty to be essentially a contract, it follows that the general concepts of contract law applies to treaties. Certainly, at 6 the least, this includes the concept of expressed and implied powers of contract.944 8 9 The word "implied" is defined as: 10 "This word [implied] is used in law in contrast to 'express'; i.e. where the intention in regard to the subject-matter is not manifested by explicit 11 and direct words, but is gathered by implication or necessary deduction from 12 13 the circumstances, the general language, or the conduct of the parties. Term 14 differs from 'inferred' to the extent that the hearer or reader 'infers" while the writer or speaker 'implies.'"945 15 16 The definition of "express" is: "Clear; definite; explicit; plain; direct; unmistakable; not dubious or 17 ambiguous. Declared in terms; set forth in words. Directly and distinctly 18 stated. Made known distinctly and explicitly. And not left to inference. 19 Minneapolis Steel & Machinery Co. v. Federal Surety Co., C.C.A. Minn., 34 F.2d 270, 274. Manifested by direct and appropriate language, as distinguished from 20 21 22 that which is inferred from conduct. The word is usually contrasted with "implied."946 23 24 The courts have long recognized that the government, in the performance of its duties, requires implied powers not specified in the Constitution in 25 order to perform them. 947 If, as the Court has held, "a treaty...is... 26

 $<sup>^{940}</sup>$  Id. (emphasis in original).

&lt;sup>941</sup> Id.

<sup>942</sup> Foster v. Neilson, 28 U.S. 253 (1829).

<sup>943</sup> Fletcher v. Peck, 10 U.S. 87 (1810).

 $<sup>^{944}</sup>$  "An express contract is an actual agreement of the parties, the terms of which are openly uttered or declared at the time of making it, being stated in distinct and explicit language, either orally or in writing.

&quot;An implied contract is one not created or evidenced by the explicit agreement of the parties, but inferred by the law, as a matter or reason and justice from their acts or conduct, the circumstances surrounding the transaction making it a reasonable, or even a necessary, assumption that a contract existed between them by tacit understanding." BLACK'S LAW DICTIONARY, 6th ed. (1990).

&lt;sup>945</sup> Id.

&lt;sup>946</sup> Id.

 $<sup>^{947}</sup>$  McCulloch v. Maryland, 17 U.S. 316 (1819).

- 1 equivalent of an Act of the Legislature..."948 and that "a treaty is in its
- 2 nature a contract between two nations," 949 it follows that such treaties may
- 3 contain not only expressed provisions granting or removing powers or calling
- 4 for action by the United States, but also implied powers derived from those
- 5 expressed provisions, and that these implied powers are equivalent in legal
- 6 strength and validity as any expressed provision of a treaty.

8 Congressional Power and Treaties

9

- 10 What are the powers of Congress in regard to treaties? Can the Congress,
- 11 for example, change its decision regarding a treaty? Can it ignore its
- 12 provisions? Under what terms, if any, can Congress not change a treaty?
- 13 If, as Chief Justice Marshall said, a party is "always estopped by his
- 14 own grant,"950 then it would seem Congress cannot alter a treaty once it has
- 15 agreed to it. From a strict definition point of view, however, 951 it would
- 16 appear if such congressional power exists, then Congress must be sovereign,
- 17 and the answer to whether Congress can modify a treaty seems to be yes. The
- 18 Supreme Court has found:
- 19 "[A] treaty made by the United States with any foreign nation...is
- 20 subject to such acts as Congress may pass for its enforcement, modification,
- 21 or repeal." 952

&lt;sup>948</sup> Foster v. Neilson, 28 U.S. 253 (1829).

&lt;sup>949</sup> Id.

&lt;sup>950</sup> Fletcher v. Peck, 10 U.S. 87 (1810); see supra text accompanying note 943.

<sup>951</sup> "The power to do everything in a state without accountability,—to make laws, to execute and to apply them, to impose and collect taxes and levy contributions, to make war or peace, to form treaties of alliance or of commerce with foreign nations, and the like." See supra text accompanying note 939 for full text of definition.

 $<sup>^{952}</sup>$  Head Money Cases, 112 U.S. 580 at 598 (1884).

- 1 It would appear by this finding, the Court holds Congress' power to
- 2 enforce, modify or repeal a treaty to be absolute and unchallenged, and,
- 3 therefore, Congress is sovereign. Thus, the alpha and omega of the matter:
- 4 Congress is sovereign and therefore has the right to reject the Constitution
- 5 or any of its provisions.
- 6 However, there are two problems with this rapid judgment. First, such a
- 7 conclusion is based on a decision by the Supreme Court, a branch of the United
- 8 States government subject to control by the Constitution. Therefore, the Court
- 9 appears to have power to define the power of Congress and as, by the
- 10 definition of sovereignty, this cannot be if Congress is sovereign, it would
- 11 appear Congress does not have sovereignty. Further, in the same decision, the
- 12 Court said:

14

15

16

17

18 19 20 21

22 23

24

25

26

27

28

29

30

"A treaty is primarily a compact between independent nations. It depends for the enforcement of its provisions on the interest and the honor of the governments which are parties to it. If these fail, its infraction becomes the subject of international negotiations and reclamations, so far as the injured party chooses to seek redress, which may in the end be enforced by actual wars. It is obvious that with all this the judicial courts have nothing to do and can give no redress. But a treaty may also contain provisions which confer certain rights upon citizens or subjects of one of the nations residing in the territorial limits of the other, which partake of the nature of municipal law, and which are capable of enforcement as between private parties in the courts of the country...

"A treaty then, is a law of the land as an act of Congress is, whenever its provisions prescribe a rule by which the rights of the private citizen or subject may be determined. And when such rights are of a nature to be enforced in a court of justice, that court resorts to the treaty for a rule of decision for the case as it would to a statue." 953

Thus, the Supreme Court determined Congress can rescind provisions of a treaty. Does this mean Congress may also rescind the rights of people secured 31 under a treaty? Chief Justice Marshall answered this question saying:

_

<sup>953</sup> Id. (emphasis added).

"The principle asserted is, that one legislature is competent to repeal any act which a former legislature was competent to pass, and that one legislature cannot abridge the powers of a succeeding legislature.

"The correctness of this principle, so far as respects general legislation, can never be controverted. But, if an act be done under a law, a succeeding legislature cannot undo it. The past cannot be recalled by the most absolute power. Conveyances have been made, those conveyances have vested legal estate, and, if those estates may be seized by the sovereign authority, still, that they originally vested is a fact, and cannot cease to be a fact.

"When, then, a law is in its nature a contract, when absolute rights have vested under that contract, a repeal of the law cannot divest those rights, and the act of annulling them, if legitimate, is rendered so by a power applicable to the case of every individual in the community." 954

Thus the courts recognize that a treaty, like a contract, is subject to change by Congress and that Congress may rescind treaty provisions or entire treaties if it wishes, but under no circumstances may Congress rescind rights granted to people under those treaties.

The Court has acknowledged if Congress modifies a treaty, that change "becomes the subject of international negotiations and reclamations." <sup>955</sup>

Clearly, therefore, the Court recognizes that any changes by Congress, once a treaty is agreed to, like a contract, can mean the treaty may be considered void by either of the parties to that treaty, and thus any provisions, stipulations, grants of authority, or any other recognized power of contract, expressed or implied, are simultaneously voided. <sup>956</sup> In other words, if Congress changes the terms of a treaty, fails to obey or enforce its provisions, or other source of the fact that our courts have determined that no rights may be nullified by changes in a treaty that created them does not in any way obligate the other sovereign nation that is party to the treaty. As a sovereign nation it would have every right to regard the matter in an entirely different light, i.e., the voiding of the treaty does effect or even nullify rights created in the treaty. Simultaneously, despite any rulings of our court system, it would be up to the nation involved in the treaty to determine whether such actions by Congress constituted a breach of the treaty and thus had caused its nullification.

 $<sup>^{954}</sup>$  Fletcher v. Peck, 10 U.S. 87 (1810). (emphasis added).

 $^{\rm 955}$  Head Money Cases, 112 U.S. 580 at 598 (1884).

- 1 otherwise alters the agreed upon stipulations, whether expressed or implied
- 2 within a treaty, that treaty may no longer be in effect.

4

5 THE TREATY OF PARIS-IMPLIED AND EXPRESSED POWERS?

б

- 7 Are the provisions of the Treaty of Paris entirely expressed, or are
- 8 there implied powers and provisions contained within its articles?957 Are the
- 9 provisions executory or executed? 958

The easiest method to examine the treaty is probably article by article. Article I "acknowledges...[the states]...to be free sovereign and independent states..."

Article II establishes the boundaries of the United States.

Article III establishes fishing rights.

 $\,$  Article IV allows for the collection of debts by either side upon the other.

Article V asks for Congress to "provide for the restitution of all estates, rights and properties [belonging to real British subjects] which have been confiscated..." and provides no person have such interest in such recovery shall meet "lawful impediment in the prosecution of their just rights."

Article VI establishes amnesty to those facing prosecution or confiscation and prevents further such reprisals against these people.

Article VII calls for peace between the subjects of Great Britain and the citizens of the United States, orders the release of all prisoners of war, orders all British military forces to leave the United States and orders the return of all records and documents seized by the British to the states.

Article VIII allows for free navigation of the Mississippi River by subjects of Great Britain and citizens of the United States.

Article IX provides that any territory of the other taken by military force before the provisional articles (signed in 1782) arrived in America shall be restored "without difficulty and without requiring any compensation."

Article X is the witness and signatory provisions of the treaty and contains no applicable provisions of execution.

"Contracts are also divided into executed and executory, executed, where nothing remains to be done by either party, and where the transaction is completed at the moment that the arrangement is made, as where an article is sold and delivered, and payment therefor is made on the spot; executory, where some future act is to be done, as where an agreement is made to build a house in six months, or to do an act on or before some future day, or to lend money upon a certain interest, payable at a future time." BLACK'S LAW DICTIONARY, 6th ed. (1990). (emphasis in original).

BRIEF IN SUPPORT OF CONVENTION GENERAL BRIEF ARGUMENTS PAGE 411 1 Clearly Articles II, III, IV, VI, VII, VIII, and IX are expressed

2 provisions, in that they require no further legal action on either the part of

- 3 Britain or the United States in order to carry them out. Their provisions are
- 4 clear and unequivocal. Prohibitions preventing the passage of laws are plain
- 5 and understandable. The returning of property, collection of legal debts,
- 6 freeing of prisoners, removal of troops and other military considerations are
- 7 clear and unambiguous as are territory definitions, fishing and navigation
- 8 rights. As defined by Marshall, 959 they are therefore executed portions of the
- 9 treaty.
- 10 This leaves Article V and Article I. Article V is certainly a executory
- 11 provision. It calls on Congress to recommend an action to the various state
- 12 legislatures regarding property rights of the British subjects. It does not
- 13 bind Congress to a time frame or a specific result regarding this
- 14 recommendation. Clearly Article V calls for further legislative action on the
- 15 part of the Congress before the provision can be carried out, thus satisfying
- 16 the definition of the word "executory". 960
- 17 In addition, Article V's provisions demonstrate an example of implied
- 18 powers within the treaty. In this instance, the United States is given limited
- 19 authority over British subjects, leaving the details of such authority clearly
- 20 in the hands and discretion of the United States. Clearly, Article V leaves it
- 21 to Congress to determine what type of appeal to the states will be made and
- 22 what provisions of law will be sought. Its language suggests the states are

<sup>959</sup> See supra text accompanying notes 942,943.

&lt;sup>960</sup> See supra text accompanying note 943.

1	left to determine $if$ they will enact such legislation, how it will be
2	enforced, for how long and even who will pay for it. All these questions (to
3	be answered by the Americans in this case) imply governmental authority to do
4	the job required, but the authority is in no way specified in the treaty which
5	satisfies the definition of the word "implied". $^{961}$ Thus, this provision clearly
6	establishes that the Treaty of Paris contains implied powers, and that both
7	sides recognized these implied powers as a valid part of the treaty.
8
9 10	ARTICLE I—THE CRUX OF THE CONTRACT
11
12	Executory or Executed?
	Executory or Executed:
13
14	What about Article I, the most important provision of the treaty, the
15	provision "acknowledging" sovereignty and independence to the United States
16	and the several states? Is it an executed or executory provision? Does it
17	contain implied provisions?
18	The obvious conclusion is that Article I is an executed provision. The
19	King of England granted the United States independence and sovereignty, and
20	that is the alpha and omega of the matter. But is this so?
21	A closer examination of the precise wording of the Treaty of Paris
22	shows, in fact, that it is not the alpha and omega. Unlike most royal decrees,

_

 $^{\rm 961}$  See supra text accompanying note 945.

- 1 the King did not "grant" 962 anything; he instead "acknowledged" 963 American
- 2 sovereignty and independence. 964 As provided in the remainder of the treaty,
- 3 this required several actions for fulfillment:
  - A territory defining where such existed;
  - The removal of foreign influences;
  - The resolution of debts;
    - The issue of prisoner exchange;
- The settling of criminal charges;
- The resolution of property rights disputes.
- 10 Clearly these important issues were based on the executory nature of
- 11 Article I. But if the Treaty of Paris' Article I was, in fact, an executory
- 12 provision, what obligation did this place on the United States and the several
- 13 states composing it in order for them to "bind[s] himself to do, or not to do,
- 14 a particular thing"?

6

7

 $^{962}$  The word "grant" used in this context is defined as:

BRIEF IN SUPPORT OF CONVENTION GENERAL BRIEF ARGUMENTS PAGE 414

&quot;In England, an act evidenced by letters patent under the great seal; granting something from the king to a subject." BLACK'S LAW DICTIONARY,  $6^{th}$  ed., (1990). (emphasis added).

<sup>963</sup> The word "acknowledge" is defined as:

&quot;To own, avow, or admit; to confess; to recognize one's acts, and assume the responsibility therefor."  ${\it Id.}$

&quot;To own, avow, or admit to be true, by a declaration of assent; as, to acknowledge the being of a God." WEBSTER'S NEW TWENTIETH CENTURY DICTIONARY UNABRIDGED  $2^{\rm nd}$  ed., (1983). (emphasis in original).  $^{964}$  The language of the Treaty of Paris is noticeably different from the usual

phraseology used by the King of England at the time in granting or bequeathing something. Compare the Treaty of Paris with language used in Trustees of Dartmouth College v. Woodward, 17 U.S. 518 (1819). "We...do, of our special grace, certain knowledge and mere motion, by and with the advice of our counsel for said province, by these presents, will, ordain, grant and constitute..." (Woodward); "His Britannic Majesty acknowledges the said..." (Treaty of Paris).

The change in language cannot be dismissed as merely a change in royal style in proclamations. The evidence is plain. In the earlier Woodward example, (the proclamation issued by George III, December 13, 1769) the King is acting with "certain knowledge" and is "will[ing], grant[ing], ordain[ing] and constitute[ing]" an act, whereas in the Treaty of Paris, also issued by George III, he is simply "acknowledging." See supra text accompanying note 923.

Clearly, a difference in royal decree must mean a difference in meaning. Obviously, the King could not "grant something to his subjects" (see supra text accompanying note 962) as by treaty he was stating the Americans were no longer his subjects; hence the different language.

- 1 The answer is as critical as it is obvious. The obligation of the
- 2 several states was to assume sovereignty, based on the terms of the treaty,
- 3 which was no more than the King acknowledging, formalizing and legitimizing
- 4 that which the Americans themselves defined as sovereignty was indeed, and in
- 5 fact, sovereignty. Under contract law, this acknowledgment became a term of
- 6 the treaty, mutually understood and agreed to by both sides and, upon the
- 7 signing and ratification of the treaty, binding on both sides. 965
- 8 Pragmatically, if there is no mechanism by which a territory can exercise its
- 9 independence and sovereignty, there can be no independence or sovereignty. 966
- 10 Therefore it required actions on both sides, a royal acknowledgment on one
- 11 side, and the creation of a government or governments<sup>967</sup> on the other side
- 12 based on the terms of that acknowledgment in order for sovereignty to exist.

&quot;[I]t is our responsibility to give the specific words of the treaty meaning with the shared expectations of the contracting parties." Air France v. Saks, 470 U.S. 392 (1985); see also El Al Israel Airlines, Ltd. v. Tsui Yuan Tseng, 525 U.S. 155 (1999). (emphasis added).

It is a simple question to ask what were the "shared expectations" of the United States and Great Britain in the signing of the Treaty of Paris. The answer: to acknowledge the sovereignty of the United States. Thus, the meaning of the words of that treaty must be viewed in a light consistent with this shared expectation.

&quot;The necessary existence of the state and that right and power which necessarily follow is "sovereignty." See supra text accompanying note 939.

There is nothing in the Treaty of Paris that precluded the states (or any other body which possessed sovereignty) from creating a national government and extending its sovereignty by one degree or another to it. This is, of course, the familiar term of dual sovereignty, i.e., the somewhat unique American concept that two governmental bodies can govern the same territory simultaneously, each possessing specific, defined powers of government that may or may not conflict with one another.

Indeed, such a system already existed under the Articles of Confederation which established a weak national government by limiting its power. "[E]ach state retains its sovereignty, freedom, and independence, and every power, jurisdiction, and right, which is not by this Confederation expressly delegated to the United States, in Congress assembled." Articles of Confederation, art. II (1781).

- Had not the treaty been signed, it is unlikely there would have been a
- 2 Constitution and therefore no convention amendatory procedure contained within
- 3 that document, and most certainly, if such a document had existed, its legal
- 4 strength would have been in doubt. The political reality is, without
- 5 sovereignty, no nation can create a sovereign government which is, after all,
- 6 no more than a mechanism created by that nation to administer its sovereignty.
- 7 Thus, the Constitution derives its formal sovereign authority from the Treaty
- 8 of Paris, 968 which in turn "acknowledged" an already existing informal

The relationship of dual sovereignty has altered over time. With the ratification of the Constitution, the Constitution became "supreme law of the land...anything in the Constitution or laws of any State to the contrary notwithstanding." (U.S. CONST., Art. VI,  $\S$  2). Thus, the sovereignty of the states, to one degree or another, became subordinate to the national government except whereby such state sovereignty was made equal or supreme within the Constitution, such as the right of the states to apply for a convention and Congress' subordinate obligation to call one.

The concept of relinquishment of sovereignty was clearly noted by the Supreme Court in a case involving the state of Texas:

"When Texas came into the Union, she ceased to be an independent nation. She then became a sister State on an 'equal footing' with all other States. That act concededly entailed a relinquishment of some of her sovereignty." United States v. Texas, 339 U.S. 707 (1950). (emphasis added).

Clearly the relinquishment of sovereignty must equally apply to the national government where such relinquishment either is implied or expressed in the Constitution if dual sovereignty is to be valid. The principle, however convoluted over the years, nevertheless remains constant, that both national government and states each possess mutually exclusive sovereign powers granted them under the Constitution; neither side has the authority to invade the other's prescribed sovereign authority.

As noted by the Supreme Court:

"...[I]t may be said, and in a general way rightfully so, that the powers of the legislature of a state are limited by its constitutional provisions... Whatever the people, framing their organic act, have declared to be the limits of legislative power, and the modes in which the power shall be exercised, must always be recognized by the courts, state and national, as obligatory." Stearns v. State of Minnesota, 179 U.S. 223 (1900).

968 The Constitution was a choice of how the sovereignty created in the Treaty of Paris would be used. The Constitution does not grant sovereignty, it merely of Paris would be used. The Constitution does not grant sovereignty, it merely directs and regulates its use. Nowhere in the document is there any creation of sovereignty, and in fact, a careful reading of the Constitution clearly indicates the assumption of sovereignty based on the Treaty of Paris.

The Constitution specifies that "all treaties made, or which shall be made, under the Authority of the United States, shall be the Supreme Law of

- 1 sovereignty in America. Without this formal acknowledgment, the status of
- 2 American sovereignty would have remained in doubt. With the signing of the
- 3 Treaty of Paris, there was doubt as to the creation of sovereignty for
- 4 America. This permitted the legitimate creation of a government by that
- 5 sovereignty. This sovereignty created the Constitution. Therefore, the
- 6 Constitution is subordinate to the Treaty of Paris and to the terms of
- 7 sovereignty acknowledged by it, as without the treaty and its acknowledgment
- 8 of sovereignty, the Constitution could not exist.
- 9 Is Article I of the Treaty of Paris an executory or executed clause? 969
- 10 The King of England did not grant anything; he only acknowledged. He agreed,
- 11 in a formal, binding contract for both the British and the Americans, to a
- 12 state of affairs already existing and thus legitimized American sovereignty.
- 13 Essentially, the Americans declared their independence and their definition of
- 14 sovereignty. The British agreed to that declaration and definition and bound
- 15 both sides by treaty to that same declaration and definition as, for the
- 16 treaty to remain in effect, the terms of it have to be mutually agreed to.

the Land..." U.S. CONST., art. VI §2. (emphasis added). Thus, the Treaty of Paris and the sovereignty it created became supreme law of the land.

969 The term "executed" implies something performed in the past and completed. (See supra text accompanying note 958). If the provision creating American sovereignty is "executed", then it could be said to be a state existing only in the past tense, i.e., that it does not exist now. The logical question to ask: is this country is sovereign at this moment? Obviously, the United States is sovereign at this moment. On what is this present sovereignty based? As there is no other mechanism that created this sovereignty, it is self evident that the terms of the treaty carry forth to present day and beyond and create the sovereignty. Thus, the Treaty of Paris is a treaty in which Great Britain remains committed to "acknowledge" the sovereignty of the United States and thus keep the treaty valid and in force. Clearly therefore the term "executory" must apply.

- 1 When the terms cease to be mutually agreed to, the treaty, like any contract,
- 2 ceases to exist.
- 3 This contract remains in force today and is the sole basis of our
- 4 sovereignty. Put another way, without the Treaty of Paris in effect, America
- 5 is not sovereign. To remain sovereign, the Treaty of Paris must remain in
- 6 effect. Therefore, the Treaty of Paris' provision creating American
- 7 sovereignty is executory as it creates a continual sovereignty existing in the
- 8 present tense, always in force.

10 Implied or Expressed Powers

11

- 12 Having established that expressed and implied powers exist within the
- 13 Treaty of Paris, 970 that the sovereignty acknowledged in the treaty is an
- 14 executory provision of that treaty that remains in force to this day, 971 that
- 15 the terms of that provision define American sovereignty, 972 that the
- 16 Constitution is subordinate to such a definition of sovereignty, 973 there then
- 17 comes the questions of whether the specific provisions creating American
- 18 sovereignty contain both expressed and implied provisions, upon whom
- 19 sovereignty was acknowledged, and how this all relates to a convention and
- 20 congressional inaction of the calling of a convention.

BRIEF IN SUPPORT OF CONVENTION GENERAL BRIEF ARGUMENTS PAGE 418

<sup>970</sup> See supra text accompanying notes 945-949,957-961.

<sup>971</sup> See supra text accompanying note 969.

<sup>972</sup> See supra text accompanying notes 966-968.

<sup>973</sup> See supra text accompanying note 968.

1 Sovereignty consists of two parts: political supremacy unaccountable to

2 any other power, 974 and unaccountable political powers such as the power to

3 "make peace and war." 975

4 It follows that determining which American political entity received

5 sovereignty as the result of the signing of the Treaty of Paris requires an

6 examination of which entities the King of England either expressly

7 acknowledged sovereignty to, or which entities he negotiated a sovereign power

8 with, thus implying that entity possessed or was "acknowledged" to have

9 sovereign power. By these actions, sovereignty was assigned to the political

10 entity, and as the provisions granting sovereignty, whether implied or 11 expressed, are executory, it follows such assignments of sovereignty remain in 12 full force today.

13

14

15

16

17

18

Where then are relevant provisions in the treaty that relate either to expressed acknowledgment of sovereignty or deal with sovereign powers of a political entity not expressly acknowledged to have sovereignty? There are only two provisions in the Treaty of Paris that apply. In Article I, the King of England "acknowledges" sovereignty to the states, an expressed provision of sovereignty. 976 In Article VII, the King establishes a "firm and perpetual"

&quot;The supreme, absolute, and uncontrollable power by which any independent state is governed; supreme political authority; the supreme will, paramount control of the constitution and frame of government and its administration; the self-sufficient source of political power, from which all specific political powers are derived..." See supra text accompanying note 939.

The power to do everything in a state without accountability,—to make laws, to execute and to apply them, to impose and collect taxes and levy contributions, to make war or peace, to form treaties of alliance or of commerce with foreign nations, and the like." (emphasis added). Id.

See supra text accompanying note 923.

- peace between his Brittanic Majesty and the said states, and between the
- subjects of the one and the citizens of the other..."977 2
- While the treaty uses the terms, "sovereign", "independent" or "free," $^{978}$ 3
- nowhere are there definitions of these important words in the treaty. 4
- Similarly, there are no definitions of the words "subjects" or "citizens". 979 5
- 6 The consequence of this omission is obvious. The meaning of these words,
- 7 expressed and implied, must have been mutually understood and agreed to by
- 8 both Britain and the United States, and therefore these mutually understood
- 9 and agreed to definitions and meanings must be considered part of the implied
- powers of that treaty. 980 10
- 11 Thus, it cannot be simple rhetoric that compelled both America and Great
- Britain to establish peace, not only with the states, but with the citizens of 12
- 13 the states as well. It is particularly significant when it is realized the
- words "citizens" and "subjects" appear only twice in the treaty: once in the 14
- clause that establishes actual peace between Great Britain and the United 15
- States 981 and once establishing free travel along the Mississippi River. 16

<sup>977</sup> Treaty of Paris, art. VII (1783). (emphasis added).

<sup>978</sup> The treaty does specify that Britain (the King) "relinquishes all claims to the government, propriety, and territorial rights of the same and every part thereof." Therefore it can be inferred from this statement that sovereignty, as the British saw it, had to do with "government, propriety, and territorial rights", but again there is no specific definition in the treaty. Id. The treaty states:

&quot;There shall be a firm and perpetual peace between his Britannic Majesty and the said states, and between the subjects of the one and the citizens of the other..." Id. at art. VII.

<sup>980</sup> See supra text accompanying note 965. <sup>981</sup> Id.

While free travel may or may not be a sovereign power, 982, the first use 1 of the word "citizen" negotiating peace certainly is. 983 The meaning of the 2 provision is obvious. Peace could not be established between Great Britain and 3 4 the states unless it was made, not only between the former colonies and the 5 King, but also between the King and the citizens of the several states as 6 well.7 Only a sovereign power has the right to "make peace or war."  $^{984}$  The 8 making of peace between Great Britain and America involved not only the states 9 but the citizens as well. The conclusion therefore is obvious: the King of 10 England acknowledged in the Treaty of Paris not only the sovereignty of the 11 several states, but also the separate political sovereignty of the citizens of the several states. However, by the definition of sovereignty, 985 only one of 12 13 the entities could actually be sovereign, the other forced to be subservient to it. The question is which one? 14 15 16 17 18 19

&lt;sup>982</sup> It is likely that the right to travel is not a sovereign power though it could be argued that the freedom to travel when and where one wishes is a clear sign of sovereignty. Even within a political boundary, however, not everyone is free to travel anywhere, anytime. For various reasons, from safety to security, restrictions have been placed on travel. Clearly therefore, a sovereign power ultimately determines how "free" travel is.

<sup>983</sup> See supra text accompanying note 939.

&lt;sup>984</sup> Id.

&lt;sup>985</sup> Id.

3	What transformed former subjects of the Crown into citizens of the
4	United States (and the sovereign states), separating them from the Crown, and
5	what effect has that separation on a convention and the laches of Congress in
6	calling one? In other words, what event created the American sovereignty
7	"acknowledged" by George III in the Treaty of Paris?
8	While it may have formalized and legitimized this great separation and
9	the resulting sovereignty, the Treaty of Paris did not in fact create it. The
10	use of the word "acknowledge" clearly indicates the King was accepting
11	something that already existed. 986 Obviously then, this separation had to
12	predate the Treaty of Paris. The question becomes a simple one: what historic
13	event differentiated United States citizen and British subject, splitting one
14	people into two, thus creating sovereignty for the one and preserving the 15	status quo for the other? In short, what did the King "acknowledge?"
16	George III did not live in a vacuum and was certainly fully aware of the
17	political realities of the American Revolution. Nevertheless, the well known
18	rules of diplomacy of that time required an official written act notifying him
19	of the desire of the American colonies for sovereignty and the terms of this
20	sovereignty. How else could King George "acknowledge" American desires if he
21	didn't know what those desires were, and how could England and the United States mutually agree to a definition of sovereignty when clearly the two $^{\rm 986}$  See supra text accompanying notes 923,963.

- 1 countries defined that word differently: Britain defining sovereignty as
- 2 emanating from a king and America defining sovereignty as emanating from the
- 3 people. For a treaty to be in effect, both sides had to mutually agree to what
- 4 the term "sovereignty" meant, and this meant the Americans, who were creating
- 5 a new form of sovereignty, had to present some method to define this new form
- 6 of sovereignty whereby the British could understand it and therefore agree to
- 7 it.
- 8 So how did the Americans accomplish this?
- 9 The answer is the Declaration of Independence, an act of Congress, 987
- 10 which was actually nothing more than a declaration of sovereignty. In fact,
- 11 the Founding Fathers used the words interchangeably. Following the surrender
- 12 at Yorktown in 1781, and based on the terms of sovereignty so plainly,
- 13 forcefully and eloquently expressed in the Declaration of Independence,
- 14 diplomatic negotiations between America and Britain commenced. 988 The King of
- 15 England eventually "acknowledged" these terms, thus legitimizing an already
- 16 claimed sovereignty. Therefore, the mutually agreed to definition and ever made, that claim had to be the one "acknowledged" by the king.

The final paragraph of the Declaration of Independence states:

"We, therefore, the Representatives of the United states of America, in General Congress, Assembled..." Declaration of Independence (1776). (emphasis added). It should be noted that at no time in any of the founding documents of the United States are any actions of any earlier Congress rejected. It is obvious, therefore, that despite any name changes that might have occurred—First Continental Congress, Second Continental Congress, Congress of the United States—the Founding Fathers considered "the Congress" to be a perpetual body serving some capacity or another as a national legislature.

988 The United States, in the Declaration of Independence, specified under what conditions independence could be declared, what caused the United States to declare such independence, what that independence was, and who authorized such a declaration. The key of American sovereignty lies in who authorized such a declaration, for it is clear that entity must be sovereign.

989 The Declaration of Independence was the only official declaration of independence or sovereignty made by the United States. As only one claim was

- understanding of sovereignty for the United States were those terms and 2 conditions expressed in the Declaration of Independence. 3 The Terms and Conditions of Independence 4 5 6 Sovereignty is defined as: 7 "The supreme, absolute, and uncontrollable power by which any 8 independent state is governed; supreme political authority; the supreme will, 9 paramount control of the constitution and frame of government and its 10 administration; the self-sufficient source of political power, from which all 11 specific political powers are derived; the international independence of a 12 state, combined with the right and power of regulating its internal affairs 13 without foreign dictation; also a political society, or state, which is sovereign and independent."  $^{990}$ 14 It follows that a claim of sovereignty must satisfy the following 15 16 conditions: 17 1. The creation of a supreme political authority or power from which all 18 other specific political entities within the territory controlled by 19 that sovereignty derive authority; 20 2. The creation of a supreme political authority or power that has 21 paramount control of the government, its form, administration and 22 extent; 23 3. The creation of a supreme political authority or power that is 24 internationally independent and entirely free to regulate its 25 internal affairs without foreign interference or dictation.
- 26 The question then is what phrase or term expressed in the Declaration of
- 27 Independence satisfies these three requirements? There is only one:
  - "...that governments are instituted among men, deriving their just powers from the consent of the governed. That when any Form of Government becomes destructive of these ends, it is the right of the people to alter or abolish it..."  $^{991}$
- 32 No other provision in the Declaration of Independence satisfies the
- 33 three requirements of sovereignty, 992 and no other expression of sovereignty is 29

30

31

 $<sup>^{990}</sup>$  See supra text accompanying note 939.

<sup>991</sup> Declaration of Independence (1776). (emphasis added).

The specific phrase that satisfies the three requirements of sovereignty is not the more famous "government are instituted among men, deriving their just powers from the consent of the governed." Rather, it is the more obscure

- 1 required; simple logic dictates sovereignty need only be established once for
- 2 a particular political entity. 993 Therefore, the expressed right of the
- 3 people<sup>994</sup> to alter or abolish their government is the American definition of
- 4 sovereignty. 995 Being the sole concept of sovereignty expressed in the expressed "...right of the people to alter or abolish [their government]..." that satisfies the requirements of sovereignty.

There are four reasons for this:

First, the phrase "right of the people..." specifically assigns a clear sovereign power to a specific political entity, in this case, the people of the United States.

Second, the phrase provides for a supreme political power that obviously controls the government, its administration, and upon which all other political powers are dependent. It follows that if the people can alter or abolish their government as they desire, this is a supreme sovereign power as no political power in the United States can exist unless the people consent to it. Therefore that political power, even its existence, is entirely subject to the will of the people.

Third, there is the question of executed and executory provisions of a contract. It follows that the term "consent of the governed" could be interpreted as an executed contractual provision, i.e., once the people have consented, they cannot change their minds. (Most dictatorships use a variation of this theme as a basis on which to justify their continued rule despite protests from their people.) However, the term "right of the people to alter or abolish..." clearly is an executory provision; it exists as a continuing power of the people that can be used by them at any time, allowing them to establish procedures, such as a convention call, to alter or abolish their government and which that government is obligated to obey.

Finally, the term "consent of the governed" as used in the Declaration of Independence refers to all governments. The term "right of the people..." refers specifically to the citizens of the United States. See infra text accompanying note 997.

<sup>993</sup> Unless the sovereignty of a specific territory is compromised by foreign intervention, i.e., a war, or by such civil unrest as to degrade the source of sovereignty, that sovereignty remains permanently in effect.

That this right is created by and for the people is further reinforced in the final paragraph of the Declaration of Independence which reads in part:

"We, therefore, the Representatives of the United States of America, in General Congress, Assembled, appealing to the Supreme Judge of the world for the rectitude of our intentions, do, in the Name, and by the authority of the good People of these Colonies, solemnly publish and declare, That these United Colonies are, and of Right ought to be Free and Independent States;" Declaration of Independence (1776). (emphasis added).

The right to alter or abolish, as used in American independence, was clearly a new definition of sovereignty. Beyond establishing a separation between subject and citizen, it redefined the meaning of the word "citizen" in that it conferred upon those so affected the unique right to control, not only their own destiny, but that of the government empowered by them for the common destiny of all. This right never existed in any sovereignty previous to the

- 1 Declaration of Independence, it thus becomes the sole definition of
- 2 sovereignty "acknowledged" by the King of England in the Treaty of Paris. 996
- 3 Further, the right to alter or abolish was claimed exclusively for and
- 4 by the citizens of the United States. 997 America never claimed anyone else had
- 5 the right to declare independence. There is no reference, for example, to the
- 6 peoples of the world having the right to revolt. The rest of the Declaration
- 7 served merely to justify why America felt justified in exercising its claimed
- 8 right. 998 Thus, while the treaty does not expressly grant "the right of the
- 9 people to alter or abolish government", it clearly is an implied power of the
- 10 Treaty of Paris as it served as the term and condition upon which sovereignty
- 11 was acknowledged by the Crown, i.e., the citizens of the United States were

American Revolution. It could never exist for the subjects of Great Britain. In that form of government, the sovereignty resided with a king emanating from him to the people. In America, the sovereignty emanated from the people and was bestowed upon the government with the reserved power of the people to further alter or abolish that government as and when they chose.

Many types of sovereignty could have been claimed by America. The basis for these claims could have been geographic, aristocratic in which a new sovereign replaced the current king, or even historic. None of these was used by America in the Declaration of Independence.

<sup>997</sup> In the Declaration, Jefferson first speaks of "one people...dissolving the political bands which have connected them with another", referring obviously to the people of the United States, then changes to "all men are created equal that they are endowed with certain unalienable rights...", which obviously encompasses the entire human race. When Jefferson refers to the actual act of declaring independence by America, however, he again switches back to "the right of the people..." or even the more specific "We have..." This is no accident of words. Clearly, Jefferson claimed universal rights for all mankind(life, liberty, etc.), but reserved the revolutionary right to alter and abolish (i.e., sovereignty) exclusively for the people of the United States. Declaration of Independence (1776). (emphasis added).

"But when a long train of abuses and usurpations, pursuing invariably the same object evinces a design to reduce them under absolute despotism, it is their right, it is their duty, to throw off such government, and to provide new guards for their futures security... The history of the present King of Great Britain is a history of repeated injuries and usurpations, all having in direct object the establishment of an absolute tyranny over these states. To prove this, let facts be submitted to a candid world." Id. (emphasis added).

- 1 sovereign, claiming for themselves the right to alter or abolish their
- 2 government, a right that has never been transferred to any other political
- entity.999 3
- 4 The British accepted in the Treaty of Paris the condition of the right
- to alter or abolish the government by the people as the meaning and term of 5
- 6 American sovereignty. Under this specific condition and term, sovereignty was
- 7 agreed to by the British. Thus, the Treaty of Paris conferred on the citizens
- of the United States a legal right. 1000 8
- It is short step to consider this right supreme to all other rights, 1001 9
- 10 even above the Constitution itself, as the people also have the right to
- 11 "institute new Government, laying its foundation on such principles and
- organizing its powers in such form, as to them shall seem most likely to 12
- effect their Safety and Happiness." 1002 13
- Nothing in the Declaration of Independence limits the people to a 14
- 15 particular structure or form of government. Instead, it claims the
- 16 transcendent right to alter or abolish. If the people have abrogated that
- 17 right to some degree by establishing a process, such as the amendatory process
- 18 spelled out so carefully in Article V of the Constitution whereby deliberative

<sup>999</sup> While it true the people have bestowed upon various governmental bodies in the United States the privilege to act on behalf of the people, the basic right to alter or abolish still remains with the people. Neither the Declaration of Independence nor the Constitution contains language that removes that right and invests it with any other political entity.  $^{1000}$  A right that Congress has no authority to remove. See supra text accompanying notes 953,954. 1001 Especially when the Founding Fathers considered this right to be "transcendent". See supra text accompanying notes 529,1659.

1002 Declaration of Independence (1776).

- 1 thought and consideration are required before such a step is undertaken, 1003
- 2 this deliberative process does not grant Congress the authority to obstruct
- 3 that right 1004 whenever such standards established by the people in order to
- 4 enact the right have been satisfied. 1005
- 5 It follows that if the Treaty of Paris is still in force, there must be
- 6 at least one method unregulated by the national government--i.e., a method
- 7 whereby "alter or abolish" can be accomplished without obtaining consent in
- 8 some form from the government--allowing the people of the United States "to
- 9 alter or abolish" their national government. The King acknowledged the
- 10 right of the people to institute a new government and recognized them as
- 11 sovereign. They in turn created a government to execute their sovereign
- 12 powers. The King neither acknowledged nor agreed to the transfer of
- 13 sovereignty to another government unless it was a government under the
- 14 sovereign control of the people of the United States.
- 15 If Congress has negated the right of the people to alter or abolish by
- 16 vetoing or obstructing the process established to exercise that right, or if

BRIEF IN SUPPORT OF CONVENTION GENERAL BRIEF ARGUMENTS PAGE 428

&lt;sup>1003</sup> See supra text accompanying notes 790-811; infra 1105.

<sup>1004</sup> See supra text accompanying note 1000. See also U.S. CONST., art. I, § 1, "All legislative Powers herein granted shall be vested in a Congress of the United States..." There is no expressed grant of power, legislative or otherwise, giving Congress the right to obstruct, delay or otherwise interfere with the people's right to alter or abolish.

<sup>1005</sup> See supra text accompanying note 521.

Amendment, Congress presented a serious question as to whether or not the states have the right to amend the Constitution without national government approval. This action also put the sovereignty formerly held by the states within the grasp of Congress. By allowing Congress to veto, obstruct or otherwise control the convention method of amendment, despite a clear constitutional directive to the contrary, there is a question whether Congress today is in fact sovereign. See supra text accompanying notes 849,917; infra text accompanying notes 1053-1073,1077,1079,1089,1094,1188, 1239,1333.

- 1 Congress has obstructed the mechanism through which that right is to be
- 2 exercised, then it is clear that Congress has assumed sovereignty, a
- 3 condition not granted by the Treaty of Paris. It is absurd to argue the United
- 4 States government could void this concept of citizen sovereignty and still
- 5 claim to be a free, independent and sovereign government because it was on the
- 6 basis of citizen sovereignty, and this basis alone, that sovereignty was
- 7 claimed in the first place. Such an action by Congress is a violation of the
- 8 Treaty of Paris; the contract is no longer in effect. 1007

Second, the British hold that while it is the Crown that negotiates a treaty, it is Parliament that continues a treaty in effect. As with Congress, Parliament retains the right to negate treaties Great Britain has made in the past. As was stated by Lord Atkin in delivering the judgment of the Privy Council in Attorney-General for Canada v. Attorney-General for Ontario and Others, L.R.A.C. 326, 347 (1937):

"It will be essential to keep in mind the distinction between (1) the formation, and (2) the performance, of the obligations constituted by a treaty, using that word as comprising any agreement between two or more sovereign States. Within the British Empire there is a well-established rule that the making of a treaty is an executive act, while the performance of its obligations, if they entail alteration of the existing domestic law, requires legislative actions. Unlike some other countries, the stipulations of a treaty duly ratified do not within the Empire, by virtue of the treaty alone, have the force of law. If the national executive, the Government of the day, decide to incur the obligations of a treaty which involve alteration of law they have to run the risk of obtaining the assent of Parliament to the necessary statue

<sup>1007</sup> It would be well to remember that while British and American law share many common attributes and history, they are not the same. How Britain might interpret a violation of the Treaty of Paris so described in this suit is not a predictable result. While at first it may seem absurd that Congress, by the actions so described, could cause the downfall of America's sovereignty, the idea is not so far fetched as might be supposed.

First, there is no savings clause in the Treaty of Paris, i.e., a clause that holds if some provision of the treaty is violated, the rest of the document remains intact and in force. Thus, it is possible to argue that if any term of the treaty is violated, the entire treaty or contract is violated. Similarly, there is no reference in the treaty that could be interpreted as an agreement by the British acknowledging American sovereignty "forever." In fact, as is shown below, the treaty does not even place restrictions on any British government, merely on "himself, heirs and successors..." Therefore, the obligation of the British government could conceivably be brought into question as even the Crown in this instance did not acknowledge American sovereignty on a perpetual basis. By changing royal families, or the removal of royalty from Britain, this obligation could be considered terminated.

- 2 Fathers in the calling of a convention as it would subjugate the
- 3 "...transcendent...right of alter or abolish." 1009

or statues. To make themselves as secure as possible they will often in such case before final ratification seek to obtain from Parliament an expression of approval. But it has never been suggested, and it is not the law, that such an expression of approval operates as law, or that in law it precludes the assenting Parliament, or any subsequent Parliament, from refusing to give its sanction to any legislative proposals that may subsequently be brought before it. Parliament, no doubt, as the Chief Justice pointed out, has a constitutional control over the executive: but it cannot be disputed that the creation of the obligations undertaken in treaties and the assent to their form and quality are the function of the executive alone. Once they are created, while they bind the state as against the other contracting parties, Parliament may refuse to perform them as so leave the State in default. In a unitary State whose Legislature posses unlimited powers the problem is simple. Parliament will either fulfill or not treaty obligations imposed on the State by its executive. The nature of the obligation does not affect the complete authority of the Legislature to make them law if it so chooses... The question is not how is the obligation formed, that is the function of the executive; but how is the obligation to be performed, and that depends on the authority of the competent Legislature or Legislatures." THE LAW Of TREATIES: British Practice and Opinions, A.D. McNair (1938) p. 9.

Third, while the Treaty of Paris does speak of a "firm and perpetual peace between his Britannic Majesty and the said states, and between the subjects of the one and citizens of the other..." it is important to remember within a few short years of the signing of that treaty, America again went to war against Great Britain in the War of 1812. At that time, the British expressed the opinion that this act of war by America negated the Treaty of Paris.

"We shall find in the course of our examination that, the farther back we go, the more sweeping and undiscriminating are the assertions that all treaties are abrogated by the outbreak of war between the contracting parties." (Id. at p. 532 quoting DIGEST OF INTERNATIONAL LAW, vol. v, § 779, p. 383). Lord Bathurst, in an October 30, 1815 note to Mr. John Quincy Adams "on the effect of the war of 1812-14 between Great Britain and the United States on the Treaty of 1783," wrote:

"To a position of this novel nature [Mr. Adams had been contending that the Treaty of 1783 had not been annulled by the recent war] Great Britain cannot accede. She knows of no exception to the rule that all treaties are put an end to by a subsequent war between the same parties."

It should be clearly noted that the Treaty of Ghent ending the War of 1812 contained no reference reestablishing any of the terms of the Treaty of Paris or resolving this issue. The matter is clearly in the hands of the British. They may view the matter quite differently from ourselves. There is no guarantee that if the question of the efficacy of the Treaty of Paris were poised to Great Britain that its answer would be all that predictable.  $^{1008}$  See supra text accompanying notes 497-513.

See supra text accompanying note 529,1659.

THE NON-SOVEREIGN CONGRESS

3

1

1

14

15

4	It is clear the sovereignty of the United States is "the right of the
5	people to alter or abolish their government." This concept of sovereignty
6	was legitimized and acknowledged in the Treaty of Paris. 1011 It is clear that a
7	treaty is a contract, $^{1012}$ that a treaty, like a contract, has both expressed
8	and implied provisions, $^{1013}$ that both implied and expressed provisions exist in
9	the Treaty of Paris, $^{1014}$ and that provisions are, under the Constitution, "law
10	of the land." $^{1015}$ It is clear Congress has the right to re-negotiate a treaty
11	or terminate the same unless the treaty confers rights to a people. 1016
12	Congress does not have the sovereign power to reject at its discretion
13	portions or provisions of the Constitution unless one that concedes that Congress is unaccountable to any political power. 1017 Congress only has the powers "herein granted" 1018 to it in the United States Constitution. 1019 The

<sup>1010</sup> Declaration of Independence (1776) (emphasis added).

 $<sup>^{1011}</sup>$  See supra text accompanying note 923.

See supra text accompanying notes 942,953.

&lt;sup>1013</sup> See supra text accompanying notes 945-949.

&lt;sup>1014</sup> See supra text accompanying notes 961,963,964,968,968.

<sup>1015</sup> U.S. CONST., art. VI, §2.

<sup>1016</sup> See supra text accompanying notes 953,954.

&lt;sup>1017</sup> See supra text accompanying note 939.

<sup>1018</sup> U.S. CONST., art. I, § 1.

 $<sup>^{1019}</sup>$  The sovereignty of the people is confirmed in the Constitution itself with the phrase "We, the People..." which not only sets out great philosophical concepts of liberty and limited government but clearly and legally establishes by whose sovereign authority the Constitution was ordained. It was clear by this phrase the Founding Fathers realized who had been acknowledged as having sovereignty in the Treaty of Paris.

This is further reinforced by the term "herein granted", which clearly indicated that a sovereign power was granting authority to a subordinate. U.S. CONST., art I, § 1. See supra text accompanying notes 964,1004.

- 1 Congress is accountable to the voters, the Supreme Court and the President of
- 2 the United States. It is the instrument of sovereignty, not the source.
- 3 Clearly, therefore, it is not a sovereign body and as such is bound to such
- 4 checks, balances, limitations and instructions as are provided by the people
- 5 in the Constitution to regulate and control Congress.
- As the people possess sovereignty, and this sovereignty was formally
- 7 obtained by the acknowledgment made in the Treaty of Paris, it is clear the
- 8 Treaty of Paris is supreme to the Constitution. Therefore, the Treaty of Paris
- 9 is the one treaty Congress cannot make "subject to such acts as Congress may
- 10 pass for its enforcement, modification, or repeal." 1020
- 11 The reason is obvious. Permitting Congress to tamper with the treaty
- 12 would violate the prohibition that prevents Congress from repealing rights
- 13 obtained under a treaty. Thus, if Congress could modify the treaty under which
- 14 this nation achieved sovereignty, it could switch that sovereignty
- 15 unilaterally from the people to itself.

17 THE SUPREME COURT: CONGRESSIONAL SOVEREIGNTY THROUGH THE BACK DOOR?

18

- 19 Congress is not sovereign, but instead is an instrument of the
- 20 Constitution through which the people administer their sovereignty. 1021 Through
- 21 the Constitution the people have granted to Congress certain limited sovereign

 $^{\rm 1020}$  Head Money Cases, 112 U.S. 580 at 598 (1884).

&quot;Under the constitution, sovereignty in the United States resides in the people." Kennett v. Chambers, 55 U.S. 38 (1852); "The Constitution is the fundamental law of the United States, and no department of government has any other powers than those thus delegated to it by the people." Hepburn v. Griswold, 75 U.S. 663 (1869).

- 1 powers while simultaneously retaining their transcendent sovereign power to
- 2 alter or abolish. 1022 By what source of authority then does Congress claim it
- 3 may ignore the constitutional mandate of calling a convention when the proper
- 4 number of states has applied? 1023 By what source of authority does Congress
- 5 claim it may regulate the convention even to the extent of vetoing a
- 6 convention's proposed amendments? 1024
- 7 The people, the only legitimate authority for such sovereign actions,
- 8 have never expressly granted Congress the authority to veto the Constitution
- 9 in any manner, and indeed the entire principle of limited American government
- 10 leads to the conclusion that no such implied power 1025 has ever been
- 11 granted. 1026 As the people have never granted such authority, and the only
- 12 other source of authority in the United States that could be construed to

TABLE 1—STATE APPLICATIONS FOR A CONVENTION, p.661; TABLE 2—STATES APPLYING FOR A CONVENTION, p.673.

1026 The language of the Constitution is clear. The people expressly granted to Congress certain powers and no others. "All legislative Powers herein granted..." U.S. CONST., art. 1, § 1. There can be little doubt as to the intention of these words. Powers not "herein granted" are not assigned to Congress, and nowhere in the Constitution is Congress granted the right to veto the Constitution, either by expressed language or implication.

BRIEF IN SUPPORT OF CONVENTION GENERAL BRIEF ARGUMENTS PAGE 433

<sup>1022</sup> See supra text accompanying notes 921-1020.

&lt;sup>1023</sup> See infra

&lt;sup>1024</sup> See supra text accompanying notes 593-613.

No part of government can be given the power to define the right to alter or abolish. This is self-evident. For to define is to limit. In a democracy, the right to alter or abolish must have full immunity from government interference except where the people have so explicitly designated a limit. Otherwise the right is meaningless. How, for example, could one say a citizen has the right to alter or abolish if, in an election, he is told by the government whom he shall vote for? How can it be argued that the citizens of the United States have the right to alter or abolish their government if the government can rule that none of their actions can affect the Constitution and that only the government itself possesses the privilege to affect the document independent and autonomous of the people it is supposed to represent? The simple answer is, of course, that it cannot be said the citizen has this right if the government can so act. It is for this reason the principle of immunity from governmental interference must extend to all aspects of this fundamental right.

1 grant such authority is the Constitution that the people created to exercise

2 their sovereignty, it follows this "source of authority" Congress claims by

3 its laches in calling a convention to propose amendments, thus vetoing the 4 Constitution, must be found within the Constitution. As it is the people who

5 are sovereign, it follows this "source of authority", like Congress, cannot be

6 sovereign because it is contained within the Constitution. The same reasons

7 prohibiting congressional sovereignty 1027 also prohibit any other branch of 8 government described in the Constitution from being sovereign, and thus, this

"source of authority" must be submissive, not only to the provisions of the 10 Constitution, but to the people's right to alter or abolish, i.e., the 11 people's sovereignty. Therefore, this "source of authority" offers no more validity to Congress refusing to call a convention to propose amendments than does any other assertion of congressional sovereignty.

Therefore, like the Congress, the other branches are limited by the Constitution. It is as unconstitutional for them to attempt to veto or disobey the Constitution as it for Congress, and any such action, or laches (where the Constitution mandates action on the part of a governmental branch such as the calling of the convention) must be considered an unconstitutional act. To whatever extent that action or laches, removes, obstructs or otherwise interferes with the people's transcendent right to alter or abolish, unless such laches or action is expressly granted by the people, that action or 22 laches must yield to the people's sovereignty. Any such action or laches by

-

9

12

13

14

15

16

17

18 19

20

 $<sup>^{1027}</sup>$  See supra text accompanying notes 921-1020.

2	obstruct or interfere with the people's transcendent right to alter or
3	abolish.
4	Obviously this matter concerns the interpretation of the meaning and
5	intent of the Founding Fathers as expressed through their historic works of
6	the Declaration of Independence and the Constitution. Of the two remaining
7	branches of the government, the Judiciary is the branch of government charged
8	in the Constitution with interpreting the Constitution as to its meaning and
9	intent. $^{1028}$ The only conclusion that can be drawn from the $laches$ of Congress
10	in calling a convention to propose amendments is that Congress has seized upon
11	one or more Supreme Court decisions that, according to Congress, grants it
12	sovereign powers in the amendatory process not envisioned by the Founding
13	Fathers. If this is true, then the Court has opened a back door for
14	unconstitutional actions by Congress, and the Court must then firmly close
15	this door.
16 17 18 19 20 21 22 23	<ul><li>There are two questions to be answered:</li><li>1. Has the Supreme Court written a decision[s] that could be interpreted by Congress as allowing it the sovereign authority to veto the Constitution?</li><li>2. Does the Supreme Court have authority to make such rulings based on the powers vested in it by the Constitution?</li></ul>
24	The Court Rulings: An Accidental Back Door?

any branch of government is invalid, and must be rescinded so as to no longer

"It is, emphatically, the province and duty of the judicial department to say what the law is." Marbury v. Madison, 5 U.S. 137 (1803). See also U.S. CONST., art. III, § 2; "The judicial power shall extend to all cases, in law and equity, arising under this constitution, the laws of the United States, and Treaties made, or which shall be made, under their Authority..."

BRIEF IN SUPPORT OF CONVENTION GENERAL BRIEF ARGUMENTS PAGE 435

1 Only the Judiciary by its various rulings handed down through the years 2 provides any basis of authority from which Congress could assume it has the right to veto the Constitution or possess the right to refuse to follow its 3 4 clear mandates. Obviously the Court is not known for wide-eyed radicalism, nor is it alleged that any overt intent is harbored by the Judiciary to remove the 5 6 people's sovereignty. However, the Court, in its over two hundred year 7 history, has reached thousands of decisions. It is prudent to assume that with 8 all persons, sometimes words are said or written in haste or without full 9 consideration of their effect. The Court on numerous occasions has issued 10 rulings clearly limiting congressional power and therefore limiting any 11 concept of congressional sovereignty. Nevertheless, reckless language can unintentionally slip into any court decision. Such language can then be seized 12 13 upon by the politically opportunistic using it to justify their own selfserving actions, distorting what was neither intended nor envisioned by the 14 15 original author or authors. 16 If unchecked, such avaricious exploitation threatens the fundamental 17

If unchecked, such avaricious exploitation threatens the fundamental concepts of the Constitution; thus the Court is obligated to excise the cancer. A careful examination of the relevant decisions regarding Article V is mandated in order to answer the question of what reckless language, if any, the Court has used that has allowed Congress to seize upon it and claim de facto sovereignty.

While Congress could edit any number of court decisions, plucking a phrase here and a phrase there to build a sand castle of authority, the fact remains the Court has visited the issue of amendatory procedure only a few times in its history. If these decisions contain no reckless language, then it

18

19 20 21

22

23

24

- 1 is likely the basis of authority for the congressional laches and veto of the
- 2 Constitution lies elsewhere. If, on the other hand, such decisions do contain
- 3 such language, then the search need go no further.
- 4 The suits are: Hollingsworth v. Virginia, 3 U.S. 378 (1798); Missouri
- 5 Pacific Railway Co. v. Kansas, 248 U.S. 276 (1919); Hawke v. Smith, 253 U.S.
- 6 221 (1920); State of Rhode Island v. Palmer, 253 U.S. 350 (1920); Dillon v.
- 7 Gloss, 256 U.S. 368 (1921); Leser v. Garnett, 258 U.S. 130 (1922); United
- 8 States v. Sprague, 282 U.S. 716 (1931); United States v. Chambers, 291 U.S.
- 9 217 (1934); Coleman v. Miller, 307 U.S. 433 (1939).

10

11 The Earlier Decisions

12

16 17

18 19 20 21 22

23

24

25 26

- 13 Hollingsworth: This suit is probably the most substantial enforcement of
- 14 the people's right to alter or abolish and therefore contains no language
- 15 giving support to Congress to veto the Constitution. The court said:

"The people limit and restrain the power of the legislature, acting under a delegated authority, but they impose no restraint on themselves. They could have said by an amendment to the constitution, that no judicial authority should be exercised, in any case, under the United States; and, if they had said so, could a court be held, or a judge proceed, or any judicial business, past or future, from he moment of adopting, the amendment? On general ground, then, it was in the power of the people to annihilate the whole and the question is, whether they have annihilated a part, of the judicial authority of the United States... The amendment is paramount to all the laws of the union, and if any part of the judicial act is in opposition to it, that part must be expunged." 1029

- 27 Missouri Pacific: In this suit the court specifically defined the
- 28 meaning of the word "two-thirds" as used in the Constitution. There is no

-

 $<sup>^{1029}</sup>$  Hollingsworth v. Virginia, 3 U.S. 378 (1798) (emphasis added).

- 1 language that can be interpreted as supporting Congress vetoing the
- 2 Constitution. 1030
- 3 Hawke: This suit struck down the use of a state referendum to approve a
- 4 ratification vote by a state legislature on a constitutional amendment. The
- 5 Court said:

6

7

8

9

10

11 12

13

14

15 16

17

18 19 20

21

22

23 24

25

26

27

29

"The fifth article is a grant of authority by the people to Congress. The determination of the method of ratification is the exercise of a national power specifically granted by the Constitution, that power is conferred upon Congress, and is limited to two methods, by action of the Legislatures of three-fourths of the states, or conventions in a like number of states.

"The argument to support the power of the state to require the approval by the people of the state of the ratification of amendments to the federal Constitution through the medium of a referendum rests upon the proposition that the federal Constitution requires ratification by the legislative action of the states through the medium provided at the time of the proposed approval of an amendment. This argument is fallacious in this—ratification by a state of a constitutional amendment is not an act of legislation within the proper sense of the word. It is but the expression of the assent of the state to a proposed amendment.

"It is true that the power to legislate in the enactment of the laws of a state is derived from the people of the state. But the power to ratify a proposed amendment to the federal Constitution has its source in the federal Constitution. The act of ratification by the state derives its authority from the federal Constitution to which the state and its people have alike assented." 1031

Hawke certainly removed the right of the people to alter or abolish their government by removing control of a state legislature's ratification

28 votes. 1032 It did not, however, remove that power entirely. 1033 Further, it specified Congress' power is limited to two methods of ratification. This 30 limit provides no language supporting congressional veto of the Constitution

31 by refusing to call a convention to propose amendments. 1034

<sup>1030</sup> See supra text accompanying note 869.

<sup>1031</sup> Hawke v. Smith, 495 U.S. 221 (1920). (emphasis added).

&lt;sup>1032</sup> See supra text accompanying notes 272,629,653,1076,1096,703, 1651,1681,755,872,909,915.

<sup>1033</sup> See infra text accompanying note 1121.

However, for the opportunistic, there is a misstatement in Hawke that would appear to support the "same subject" advocates. The Court states:

&quot;This article [U.S. CONST., art. V] makes provision for the proposal of amendments either by two-thirds of both houses of Congress, or on application

- 1 However, Hawke does raise several constitutional problems that, while
- 2 they do nothing to expand the power of Congress, certainly weaken the states
- 3 and the people regarding the amendatory procedure.
- 4 Hawke subverts the right of the people to alter or abolish their
- 5 government by denying them the right to use elections to accomplish the same.
- 6 While referenda are specified in the decision, it is too fine a point to
- 7 suppose that the decision cannot or would not be extended to any other form of
- 8 election. Thus, it is irrelevant as to what type of election Hawke prevents;
- 9 an election is an election. To deny one form of election denies all forms; of the Legislatures of two-thirds of the states;" Clearly, the "same subject" advocates have used this error of language as support for their argument.

However, none of these advocates bothers to note that the same Court in a decision reached less than a year later stated:

"A further mode of proposal---as yet never invoked---is provided, which is, that on the application of two-thirds of the states Congress shall call a convention for the purpose." Dillon v. Glass, 256 U.S. 368 (1921).

True, Justice Day wrote the opinion in Hawke, while Justice Van Devanter wrote Dillon. But it is interesting to note that as support for the statement above quoted in Dillon, Van Devanter cited Hawke (among other decisions). It is hardly likely that Justice Van Devanter would use a citation to support his statement that did not agree with that statement. It is also highly unlikely that where the Court's decision itself concerned the meaning of the text of the Constitution, Justice Van Devanter would have ignored such a fundamental difference in interpretation.

The only conclusion that is possible is that Justice Day chose to write an abbreviated version of Article V, as Hawke primarily concerned the subject of ratification, and convention applications were almost a footnote in the matter. In the case of Dillon, Justice Van Devanter chose to examine the proposal method in more depth and with more accuracy. Proof of this is self-evident: Justice Day used a single sentence to describe the amendment process; Justice Van Devanter used an entire paragraph.

Any further doubt as to the true meaning of the constitutional phrase was removed in United States v. Sprague, 282 U.S. 716 (1931) written by Justice Roberts. Justice Day was no longer on the Court, but Justice Van Devanter was. Justice Roberts, writing for the Court said:

"The United States asserts that article 5 is clear in statement and in meaning, contains no ambiguity, and calls for no resort to rules of construction. A mere reading demonstrates that this is true. It provides two methods of proposing amendments. Congress may propose them by a vote of two-thirds of both houses; or, on the application of the legislatures of two-thirds of the States, must call a convention to propose them." (emphasis added).

- 1 thus initiative and general elections also are defeated by Hawke as they too
- 2 are not derived from the federal Constitution and would, under the reasoning
- 3 proposed in Hawke, 1035 be as unconstitutional as a referendum. If the Court
- 4 holds that the federal Constitution does not recognize the referendum as
- 5 constitutional, it can be stated with equal conviction that the Constitution
- 6 equally does not recognize initiative or general election in the amendatory
- 7 procedure unless first approved by Congress. $^{1036}$
- 8 The problem with this reasoning arises when focusing on a convention to
- 9 propose amendments. In Hawke, the Court assumed elected bodies would reflect
- 10 "the will of the people." $^{1037}$  But if, like ratification, the convention to
- 11 propose amendments is an instrument "derived from the federal
- 12 constitution,  $r^{1038}$  then how can the people act as they are denied the use of
- 13 election in order to express their collective will? The Founding Fathers made
- 14 it clear Congress was to have no discretion in the matter. 1039 The Court,
- 15 through this decision, has made it clear the people cannot act.
- 16 What if, for example, a state legislature appoints delegates rather
- 17 than, as the Hawke decision assumes, holds elections in order to have the will

 $<sup>^{1035}</sup>$  See supra text accompanying note 1032.

<sup>1036</sup> See infra text accompanying notes 1110-1122.

&quot;The method of ratification is left to the choice of Congress. Both method of ratification, by Legislatures or conventions, call for action by deliberative assemblages representative of the people, which it was assumed would voice the will of the people." Hawke v. Smith, 495 U.S. 221 (1920) (emphasis added).

&quot;It is true that the power to legislate in the enactment of the laws of a state is revived from the people of the state. But the power to ratify a proposed amendment to the federal constitution has its source in the federal Constitution. The act of ratification by the state derives its authority from the federal Constitution to which the state and the people have alike assented." Id.

<sup>1039</sup> See supra text accompanying notes 497-509.

- 1 of the people expressed? What if these delegates prior to their appointment
- 2 simply come to the legislature and pay for their appointments? What if the
- 3 people of the state violently disagree with these appointments? Has not Hawke
- 4 removed the right of the people to compel their legislature to hold elections
- 5 of convention delegates and defeat such appointments? As the federal
- 6 convention to propose amendments is derived from the federal Constitution,
- 7 does not Hawke make such appointments legal? Indeed, as only the state
- 8 legislatures are mentioned in Article V, and no elections are specified
- 9 therein, how can it be any other way? 1040
- The brutal fact is that Hawke was wrongly decided. The matter can only
- 11 be resolved by accepting that the amendatory process, as it relates to the
- 12 convention and—in this case—ratification is a combination of federal and
- 13 state authorities, both of which must be employed to express the people's
- 14 transcendent right to alter or abolish. Form cannot be allowed to outweigh
- 15 substance in this matter. 1041 If the people create an election result that
- 16 counters a vote of the legislature, then it is the legislature that must
- 17 succumb to the will of the people. While it is conceded that if Congress effect their safety and happiness."

&lt;sup>1040</sup> It is noteworthy how the Court finds objection to the participation of the people in the amendatory process of the Constitution, while illustriously touting them as the source of all power (See supra text accompanying note 1021.) yet seems to have no problem in supporting the subjugation of the elected state legislatures and their power of ratification in this same process by the actions of a clearly politically motivated Congress. See infra text accompanying notes 1053-1066.

<sup>1041</sup> As Madison observed in FEDERALIST No. 40:

&quot;They [The Constitutional Convention delegates] must have reflected, that in all great changes of established governments, forms ought to give way to substance, that a rigid adherence in such cases to the former, would render nominal and nugatory the transcendent and precious right of the people to 'abolish or alter their governments as to them shall seem most likely to

1 chooses the method of ratification requiring a vote of the legislatures, it

2 must be the legislature that expresses; this choice of Congress cannot be used

3 to exclude the people from the process if that state so chooses. It can only

4 mean the official, final position of the state in the matter must ultimately

5 be expressed by that legislature; how the decision is arrived at is the sole

6 business of the state. Therefore, if the people of a state wish an election to resolve a federal Constitution amendatory question, they have a right to do

8 so.

7

13

16

17

18 20 21

22

23

24

25 26

9 The conclusion of Hawke is obvious: it does not enlarge congressional

10 power in the amendatory process; it simply removes the people from the process

11 unless Congress elects to include them. While ominous, there is still no

12 reckless language that Congress could use as a basis to veto the Constitution;

Congress has merely been given the power to negate the will of the people, the 14 sovereign source of the Constitution's authority.

15 Rhode Island: This suit, for the most part, merely summed up earlier suits. It restated Hawke and Missouri Pacific and added nothing that might be construed as granting Congress veto power. It did not provide reasons for its conclusions which was criticized in the decision itself where Associate

19 Justice McKenna said:

"The court in applying it [the Eighteenth Amendment] has dismissed certain of the bills, reversed the decree in one, and affirmed the decree in four others... I am, however, at a loss how or to what extent to express the grounds for this action. The court declares, conclusions only, without giving any reasons for them. The instance may be wise--establishing a precedent now, hereafter wisely to be imitated. It will undoubtedly decrease the literature of the court, if it does not increase its lucidity." 1042

_

 $<sup>^{1042}</sup>$  State of Rhode Island v. Palmer, 253 U.S. 350 (1920).

There is nothing in Rhode Island granting veto power to Congress. While 1 perhaps brevity is confusing in this case, it does not confer upon Congress 2 enlargement of its constitutional powers or imply permission to go outside 3 4 them. 5 Dillon: In that suit, the Court said: 6 "That the Constitution contains no express provision on the subject is 7 not in itself controlling; for with the Constitution, as with a statute or other written instrument, what is reasonably implied is as much a part of it 8 9 as what is expressed. An examination of article 5 discloses that it is 10 intended to invest Congress with a wide range of power in proposing amendments. Passing a provision long since expired, it subjects this power to 11 only two restrictions: one that the proposal shall have the approval of two-12 thirds of both houses, and the other excluding any amendment which will 13 14 deprive any state, without its consent, of its equal suffrage in the Senate."1043 15 16 Here, for the first time, the Court removed itself from its previously 17 uniform position that "the language is plain and admits no doubt in its interpretation."1044 In other words, the Court had held previously that Article 18 19 V contained no implied provisions, that everything in the amendatory procedure 20 was expressed. As of Dillon, however, the Court held that Congress is by implication endowed with a "wide range" of unspecified powers limited only by two incidental provisions of Article V, neither of which contains much substance. Despite this, while this decision may provide some support for congressional sovereignty, there is no explicit language in the decision as $^{1043}$  Dillon v. Gloss, 256 U.S. 368 (1921).  $^{1044}$  Hawke v. Smith, 495 U.S. 221 (1920).

21

22

23

24

25 such.

BRIEF IN SUPPORT OF CONVENTION GENERAL BRIEF ARGUMENTS PAGE 443

Leser: The Leser decision 1045 restated several other decisions in regard 1 2 to the 19th Amendment. There can be no interpretation of congressional sovereignty as Congress is not even mentioned once in the decision. 3 4 Sprague: The Court held: 5 "The United States asserts Article 5 is clear in statement and in meaning, contains no ambiguity, and calls for no resort to rules of 6 construction. A mere reading demonstrates that this is true. $^{\prime\prime}$ <sup>1046</sup> 7 8 The Court then added: 9 "The Constitution was written to be understood by the voters; its words and phrases were used in her normal and ordinary and distinguished from 10 11 technical meaning; where the intention is clear there is no reason for construction and no excuse for interpolation or addition. $^{\prime\prime}$  <sup>1047</sup> 12 13 The suit concerned the concept that the subject of a proposed amendment 14 dictates by which method ratification must be conducted. The Court rejected 15 the idea saying: "...[The appellees] urge we ought to insert into it a limitation on the 16 discretion conferred on the Congress, so that it will read, 'as the one or the 17 18 other mode of ratification may be proposed by the Congress, as may be 19 appropriate in view of the purpose of the proposed amendment.' This can not be done."1048 20 21 Here again, Congress is supported in its discretionary role regarding 22 choice of ratification method, but the Court grants nothing more that can be 23 construed as support for congressional sovereignty. 24 Chambers: In this suit, the Court actually removed power from Congress 25 stating: 26 "The Congress, however, is powerless to expand or extend its 27 constitutional authority. The Congress, while it could propose, could not adopt the constitutional amendment or vary the terms or effect of the 28 29 amendment when adopted. The National Prohibition Act was not repealed by act 30 of Congress, but was rendered inoperative, so far as authority to enact its provisions was derived from the Eighteenth Amendment, by the repeal, not by the Congress but by the people, of that amendment."  $^{1049}$ 31 32

&lt;sup>1045</sup> Leser v. Garnett, 258 U.S. 130 (1922).

&lt;sup>1046</sup> United States v. Sprague, 282 U.S. 716 (1931).

&lt;sup>1047</sup> Id.

 $<sup>^{1048}</sup>$  Id. (emphasis added).

&lt;sup>1049</sup> United States v. Chambers, 291 U.S. 217 (1934).

"In the instant case, constitutional authority is lacking. Over the 2 matter here in controversy, power has not be granted but has been taken away. 3 The creator of the Congress has denied to it the authority it formerly 4 5 possessed, and this denial, be unqualified, necessarily defeats any legislative attempt to extend the authority." 1050 6 7 Finally, the Court concluded: 8 "The question is not one of public policy which the courts may be 9 considered free to declare, but of the continued efficacy of legislation in 10 the face of controlling action of the people, the source of the power to enact and maintain it... The principle involved is thus not archaic, but rather is 11 12 continuing and vital-that the people are free to withdraw the authority they have conferred and, when withdrawn, neither the Congress nor the courts can assume the right to continue to exercise it.  $^{\prime\prime}^{1051}$ 13 14 Certainly, "the Congress is powerless to expand..." 1052 provides no 15 comfort to those who would seek authority for congressional sovereignty. 16 17 18 19 20 Coleman: The "Final" Word? 21 22 2.3 The greatest boost to those seeking authority for congressional 24 sovereignty may have come with the latest suit to reach the Supreme Court on this matter, Coleman v. Miller,  $^{1053}$  a 1939 decision that has remained the final 25 26 word in the amendatory process for over sixty years. The suit involved an 27 attempt by Kansas state legislators to overturn a change in a ratification 28 vote by the Kansas legislature that first rejected a proposed amendment (that <sup>1050</sup> Id. <sup>1051</sup> Id.

BRIEF IN SUPPORT OF CONVENTION GENERAL BRIEF ARGUMENTS PAGE 445

<sup>1053</sup> Coleman v. Miller, 307 U.S. 433 (1939).

<sup>1052</sup> Id.

1

The Court added:

- 1 never received enough ratification votes to make it part of the Constitution),
- 2 then 13 years later, reversed itself and voted in favor of ratification. The
- 3 key point of this suit is that while the change in ratification may have
- 4 presented a ratification issue for Congress to address, Congress never did
- 5 address it because the states never provided the three-quarters affirmative
- 6 action required in the Constitution in order to compel the question before
- 7 Congress. Hence, the use of the political question doctrine set forth in
- 8 Coleman was premature as the Court decided on a political question issue
- 9 before the political body in guestion acted. 1054
- 10 In Coleman the Court approved of the right of Congress to overthrow
- 11 state legislatures should it (Congress) not agree with a ratification vote,
- 12 granted Congress "exclusive" control of the constitutional amendatory process,
- 13 removed itself from any ability to oversee or interfere with this control
- 14 saying that its opinions were nothing more than "advisory," and finally
- 15 intimated only Congress had the power to amend the Constitution.
- 16 The Court first acknowledged the "right" of Congress to overthrow state
- 17 legislatures for the expressed political purpose of altering ratification

BRIEF IN SUPPORT OF CONVENTION GENERAL BRIEF ARGUMENTS PAGE 446

&quot;It has been plausibly suggested the Court's lavish deference to Congress in Coleman may be connected with the "Court-packing" plan of 1937. The plan was President Franklin Roosevelt's response to the Court's invalidating piece after piece of the his New Deal legislation. Of the four concurring justices, three (Black, Frankfurter, and Douglas) were appointed by Roosevelt. Justice Roberts switched sides, becoming swing vote in cases upholding important New Deal acts. L. Baker, Back to Back: The Duel Between FDR and the Supreme Court (1967); Henkin, "Is There a 'Political Question' Doctrine?, 85 Yale Law Journal 597, 625 (1976); Millet, "The Supreme Court, Political Questions and Article V—A Case for Judicial Restraint," 23 Santa Clara Law Review 745, 756 (1983)" Caplan, Constitutional Brinksmanship: Amending the Constitution by National Convention (1988), footnote 55, p. 209.

votes on proposed amendments to whatever outcome Congress desired. The Court said:

2

4

5

6

7 8

9

10

11

12

13

14

15

16

17

18 19 20 21

22

23

24

25

26 27

28

29

30

31

33

34

35

36

37

"On July 9, 1868, the Congress adopted a resolution requesting the Secretary of State to communicate 'a list of States of the Union who legislatures have ratified the fourteenth article of amendment' and in Secretary Seward's report attention was called to the action of Ohio and New Jersey. On July 20th Secretary Seward issued a proclamation reciting the ratification by twenty-eight States, including North Carolina, South Carolina, Ohio and New Jersey, and stating that it appeared that Ohio and New Jersey had since passed resolutions withdrawing their consent and that 'it is deemed a matter of doubt and uncertainty whether such resolutions are not irregular, invalid and therefore ineffectual'. The Secretary certified that if the ratifying resolutions of Ohio and New Jersey were still in full force and effect, notwithstanding the attempted withdrawal, the amendment had become part of the Constitution. On the following day the Congress adopted a concurrent resolution which, reciting that three-fourths of the States having ratified (the list including North Carolina, South Carolina, Ohio and New Jersey) declared the Fourteenth Amendment to be a part of the Constitution and that it should be duly promulgated as such by the Secretary of State. Accordingly, Secretary Seward, on July 28th, issued his proclamation embracing the States mentioned in the Congressional resolution and adding Georgia.

"Thus the political departments of the Government dealt with the effect both of previous rejection and of attempted withdrawal and determined that both were ineffectual in the presence of an actual ratification. While there were special circumstances, because of the action of the Congress in relation to the governments of the rejecting States (North Carolina, South Carolina and Georgia) these circumstances were not recited in proclaiming ratification and the previous action taken in these States was set forth in the proclamation as actual previous rejections by the respective legislatures.

"We think that in accordance with this historic precedent the question of the efficacy of ratifications by state legislatures, in the light of previous rejection or attempted withdrawal, should be regarded as a political question pertaining to the political departments, with the ultimate authority in the Congress in the exercise of its control over the promulgation of the adoption of the amendment." 1055

Thus, with only a minor stipulation, 1056 the Court sanctioned the overthrow of state legislatures as an implied power of Congress in the $^{1055}$  Coleman v. Miller, 307 U.S. 433 (1939).(emphasis added).

BRIEF IN SUPPORT OF CONVENTION GENERAL BRIEF ARGUMENTS PAGE 447

Apparently the Court approved the overthrow of state legislatures by the Congress if that legislature expresses a ratification vote counter to whatever Congress determines is "politically correct." Coleman clearly vindicates this action if Congress does not mention in its ratification proclamation that it has, in fact, overthrown legislatures in order to change their ratification vote. Instead Coleman simply requires Congress merely acknowledge the previous recessions by those legislatures in question, but does not state under what circumstances the legislatures "changed" their collective minds. See supra text accompanying notes 849,917,1006; infra text accompanying notes 1077,1079,1089,1094,1188.

- 1 amendatory procedure of the United States Constitution. It is noteworthy that
- 2 nowhere in the decision did the Court limit this implied power to a single
- 3 instance or provide any support that such future actions would, in any way, be
- 4 disapproved by the Court.
- 5 The second decision by the Court was that Congress has exclusive control
- 6 over the amendatory process, and the Judiciary could make no ruling
- 7 interfering with Congress regarding it. In several places in the Coleman
  - decision, the Court upheld this concept saying:

"The Constitution grants Congress exclusive power to control submission of constitutional amendments. Final determination by Congress that ratification by three-fourths of the States has taken place 'is conclusive upon the courts.' In the exercise of that power, Congress, of course, is governed by the Constitution. However, whether submission, intervening procedure or Congressional determination of ratification conforms to the commands of the Constitution, call for decisions by the 'political department' of questions of a type which this Court has frequently designated 'political.' And decision of a 'political question' by the 'political department' to which the Constitution has committed it 'conclusively binds the judges, as well as all other officers, citizens, and subjects of the government.' Proclamation under authority of Congress that an amendment has been ratified will carry with it a solemn insurance by the Congress that ratification has taken place as the Constitution commands. Upon this assurance a proclaimed amendment must be accepted as a part of the Constitution, leaving to the judiciary its traditional authority of interpretation. To the extent that the Court's opinion in the present case even impliedly assumes a power to make judicial interpretation of the exclusive constitutional authority of Congress over submission and ratification of amendments, we are unable to agree." 1057

The Court also said:

"The Court here treats the amending process of the Constitution in some respects as subject to judicial construction, in others as subject to the final authority of the Congress. There is no disapproval of the conclusion arrived in Dillon v. Gloss, that the Constitution impliedly requires that a properly submitted amendment must die unless ratified within a 'reasonable time.' Nor does the Court now disapprove its prior assumption of power to make such a pronouncement. And it is not made clear that only Congress has constitutional power to determine if there is any such implication Article V of the Constitution. On the other hand, the Court's opinion declares that Congress has the exclusive power to decide the 'political questions' of whether a State whose legislature has once acted upon a proposed amendment may subsequently reverse its position, and whether, in the circumstances of such a case as this, an amendment is dead because an 'unreasonable' time has elapsed.

8

9

10

11 12

13

14

15

16

17

18 19 20 21

22

23 24

25

26

27

28

29

30

31

32 33

34

35

36

37

38 39

40

 $<sup>^{1057}</sup>$  Coleman v. Miller, 307 U.S. 433 (1939). (emphasis added).

Such division between the political and judicial branches of the government is made by Article V which grants power over the amending of the Constitution to Congress alone. Undivided control of that process has been given by the article exclusively and completely to Congress. The process itself is 'political' in its entirety, from submission until an amendment becomes part of the Constitution, and is not subject to judicial guidance, control or interference at any point.

"Since Congress has sole and complete control over the amending process, subject to not judicial review, the views of any court upon this process cannot be binding upon Congress, and insofar as Dillon v. Glass, supra, attempts judicially to impose a limitation upon the right of Congress to determine final adoption of an amendment, it should be disapproved. If Congressional determination that an amendment has been completed and becomes a part of the Constitution is final and removed from examination by the courts, as the Court's present opinion recognizes, surely the steps leading to that condition must be subject to the scrutiny, control and appraisal of none save the Congress, the body having exclusive power to make that final determination.

"Congress, possessing exclusive power over the amending process, cannot be bound by and is under not duty to accept the pronouncements upon that exclusive power by this Court or by the Kansas courts. Neither State nor Federal courts can review that power. Therefore, any judicial expression amounting to more than mere acknowledgment of exclusive Congressional power over the political process of amendment is a mere admonition to the Congress in the nature of an advisory opinion, given wholly without constitutional authority." 1058

- 27 As Congress is granted "exclusive 1059 power 1060 to control 1061" the
- 28 amendatory process for political ends and purposes, this language could be
- 29 interpreted by Congress as allowing it total control of the amendatory

б

"Appertaining to the subject alone, not including, admitting, or pertaining to any others. Sole. Shutting out; debarring from interference or participation; vested in one person alone. Apart from all others, without the admission of others to participation. People on Complaint of Samboy v. Sherman, 156 N.Y. S2d. 835, 837." BLACK'S LAW DICTIONARY, 6th ed., (1990). (emphasis added).

"The right, ability, authority, or faculty of doing something. Authority to do any act which the grantor might himself lawfully perform. Porter v. Household Finance Corp. Of Columbus, D.C. Ohio, 385 F.Supp. 336, 341." BLACK'S LAW DICTIONARY, 6th ed., (1990).

"To exercise restraining or directing influence over. To regulate; restrain; dominate; curb; to hold from action; overpower; counteract; govern." BLACK'S LAW DICTIONARY, 6th ed., (1990).

BRIEF IN SUPPORT OF CONVENTION GENERAL BRIEF ARGUMENTS PAGE 449

 $<sup>^{1058}</sup>$  Id. (emphasis added).

- procedure, as that is precisely what the language says. 1062 This is reckless
- language to warm the blood of any tyrant. 1063 2
- It is but a small step for an ambitious Congress (or members within it) 3
- 4 to assume that, having received judicial sanction to abolish state
- legislatures to alter ratification votes by the states, 1064 it has gained the 5
- 6 incidental power to entirely regulate and control the convention to propose
- amendments, 1065 the only constitutional body that might politically oppose it. 7
- 8 After all, if Congress can abolish state legislatures, it follows it can
- certainly ignore their applications expressing a desire to hold a convention
- 10 to propose amendments.
- 11 What better way to solve the problem, from a political point of view,
- than to simply ignore it and pretend it doesn't even exist? What better way to 12
- 13 solve the matter politically than to attach all sorts of unconstitutional pre-
- ${\tt conditions}^{1066}$  that can be altered at the whim of Congress so as to ensure a 14
- convention never occurs and thus totally thwart the states and the people and 15
- 16 their constitutionally guaranteed right to a convention?

&lt;sup>1062</sup> As the Court has ruled many times that the Constitution is to be interpreted in its plain meaning, it follows so must any Court decision be interpreted in its plain meaning. See supra text accompanying notes 551,784. "Arbitrary or despotic government; the severe and autocratic exercise of sovereign power, either vested constitutionally in one ruler, or usurped by him by breaking down the division and distribution of governmental powers." BLACK'S LAW DICTIONARY, 6th ed., (1990).

As James Madison observed:

&quot;The accumulation of all powers, legislative, executive, and judiciary, in the same hands, whether of one, a few, or many, and whether hereditary, self-appointed, or elective may justly be pronounced the very definition of tyranny." FEDERALIST No. 47, January, 1788.

See supra text accompanying notes 1055,1056,1058.

&lt;sup>1065</sup> See supra text accompanying notes 593-608; infra 1126.

&lt;sup>1066</sup> See supra text accompanying notes 614-831.

2

The Effect of Coleman

4

8

9

10

11

12

13

14

15

16

17

18 19

3

If Coleman is interpreted literally, and it would appear this is the only way it can be interpreted, 1067 then it grants carte blanche to Congress in the amendatory procedure.

Why then bother with the amendatory procedure at all? Clearly, if Congress wishes, it can define any question of amendment as "political" and therefore subject it to its exclusive control and regulation of which the Court can do no more than provide an advisory opinion that Congress is not even obligated to heed. Why not just allow Congress to rule by legislative fiat and eliminate ratification of amendments by the state legislatures or state conventions as Congress has the power to overturn such decisions

anyway? 1069

The entire matter can be distilled to a single question: shall Congress, under the doctrine of "political question", rule this nation, or shall the Constitution, under the doctrine of limited government, rule this nation? The two doctrines are mutually exclusive: 1070 Congress cannot be said to have

&lt;sup>1067</sup> This interpretation is based on taking the words of the Court in their plain and usual meaning, an interpretation the Court has used itself for interpreting the Constitution. See supra text accompanying notes 284,548,551,1062.

&lt;sup>1068</sup> See supra text accompanying note 1058.

See supra text accompanying note 917,1055.

The political question doctrine allows for an open-ended government bound by no rules except its own that it may, for whatever political reason, alter or abolish at any time. The doctrine of limited government holds that

1	exclusive	control	over	the	amendatory	process,	which	is	nothing	less	than
---	-----------	---------	------	-----	------------	----------	-------	----	---------	------	------

- 2 exclusive control of the sovereign right of the people to alter or abolish
- 3 their government, and still be said to be subject to the Constitution as it is
- 4 the right to alter or abolish which is sovereignty in this nation. 1071
- 5 If the doctrine of political question is unassailable as the Court has
- 6 indicated, 1072 then it is clear Congress must be sovereign and the people, the
- 7 original possessors of sovereignty, cannot be. 1073
- 8 Thus, under the doctrine of political question, Congress achieves
- 9 sovereignty and possesses the right, if not the duty, to protect itself from
- 10 destruction by regulating or otherwise ignoring the states (and thus, the
- 11 people) in both ratification and convention applications.

12

13

What's Wrong With This Picture?

14

- 15 First, this completely offends the basic core concept of the
- 16 Constitution: that government is the servant, not the master of the people.
- 17 Second, it directly violates several expressed provisions of the
- 18 Constitution. 1074 Third, the "sovereignty" of Congress is based on the government is established under the sovereign direction of the people and is granted certain limited powers by them, and that that government may not exceed or violate those powers except by consent of the people establishing that government.

"The departments of the government are legislative, executive, and judicial. They are coordinate in degree to the extent of the powers delegated to each of them. Each, in the exercise of its powers, is independent of the other, but all, rightfully done by either, is binding upon the others. The

 $<sup>^{1071}</sup>$  See supra text accompanying notes 921-1020.

&lt;sup>1072</sup> See supra text accompanying note 1058.

<sup>1073</sup> See supra text accompanying note 939.

<sup>1074</sup> The Court has discussed this matter at length, saying:

- 1 decisions of another branch of government which then leads to the conclusion
- 2 it is this branch that is sovereign, not Congress, if it assumed either branch
- 3 of government possesses sovereignty.

constitution is supreme over all of them, because the people who ratified it have made it so, consequently, any thing which may be done unauthorized by it is unlawful. But it is not only over the departments of the government that the constitution is supreme. It is so, to the extent of its delegated powers, over all who made themselves parties to it; States as well as persons, within whose concessions of sovereign powers yielded by the people of the States, when they accepted the constitution in their conventions. Nor does its supremacy end there. It is supreme over the people of the United States, aggregately and in their separate sovereignties, because they have excluded themselves from any direct or immediate agency in making amendments to it, and have directed that amendments should be made representatively for them, by the Congress of the United States, when two-thirds of both houses shall propose them; or where the legislatures of two-thirds of the several States shall call a convention for proposing amendments, which, in either case, become valid, to all intents and purposes, as a part of the constitution, when ratified by the legislatures of three fourths of the several States, or by conventions in three fourths of them, as one or the other mode of ratification may be proposed by Congress. The same article declares that no amendment, which might be made prior to the year 1808, should, in any manner, affect the first and fourth clauses in the ninth section of the first article, and that no State, without its consent, shall be deprived of its equal suffrage in the senate. The first being a temporary disability to amend, and the other two permanent and unalterable exceptions to the power of amendments.

"Now, whether such a supremacy of the constitution, with its limitations in the particulars just mentioned, and with the further restriction laid by the people upon themselves, and for themselves, as to the modes of amendment, be right or wrong politically, no one can deny that the constitution is supreme, as has been stated, and that the statement is in exact conformity with it.

"Further, the constitution is not only supreme in the sense we have said it was, for the people in the ratification of it have chosen to add that 'this constitution and the laws of the United States which shall be made in pursuance thereof, and all treaties made, or which shall be made, under the authority of the Untied States, shall be the supreme law of the land, and the judges in every State shall be bound thereby, any thing in the constitution or law of any state to the contrary notwithstanding.' And, in that connection, to make its supremacy more complete, impressive, and practical, that there should be no escape from its operation, and that is binding force upon the States and the members of Congress should be unmistakable, it is declared that 'the senators and representatives, before mentioned, and the members of the state legislatures, and all executive and judicial officers, both of the United States and of the several States, shall be bound by an oath or affirmation to support this constitution." Dodge v. Woolsey, 59 U.S. 331 (1855). (emphasis added).

1 So, how is this matter to be resolved? The rejection by laches of

2 convention applications and the abolition of states legislatures in order to

3 alter a ratification vote outcome apparently are two sides of the same coin in

4 the eyes of Congress; if it is accepted Congress can alter the ratification of

5 an amendment by abolishing state legislatures, it follows Congress can ignore

6 state applications for a convention to propose amendments.

7 Further, in all of this, there is remains the question of free will on

8 the part of the state legislatures. Do states, by whatever method of 9 ratification chosen, retain the right to reject a proposed amendment,  $^{1075}$  or is

10 ratification nothing more than an "expression of the assent of the state to a 11 proposed amendment,"1076 thus indicating the process is nothing more than an outmoded procedure that may be rejected by Congress at any time that body so 13 chooses?

12

15

16

14 It would appear Coleman's answer to this question is that the states do not possess free will and are subject to the exclusive political control of Congress. 1077 While it would seem, at first glance, that Coleman is the alpha 17 and omega of the matter, there are several problems with this conclusion.

&lt;sup>1075</sup> This concept of free will must be carefully stated. The states do possess the right of choice in ratification of an amendment and in the application for a convention. However, because of reasons discussed elsewhere in this suit, (see supra text accompanying notes 890-918) it is clear once a state makes a decision regarding ratification or convention, it cannot rescind that decision.

&lt;sup>1076</sup> Hawke v. Smith, 253 U.S. 221 (1920).

&lt;sup>1077</sup> Of course, it could be stated such congressional action is simply illegal and therefore entirely improper, irregular, invalid and ineffectual. However, if this position is taken in regard to the ratification of the 14th Amendment, it would bring into question the validity of that amendment, a question entirely outside the scope of this suit. In Coleman, the Supreme Court removed any doubt as to this question. Simply put, the amendment is valid. It follows, therefore, the methods (that incidentally were discussed at length in Coleman)

- 1 First, Congress itself, in its abolishing of state legislative
- 2 ratifications, was inconsistent and essentially held that states could and
- 3 could not recess ratification votes. 1078 In the north, Congress rejected
- 4 recessions by two states that had previously voted in favor of ratification,
- 5 saying they were invalid; in the south, where three states had originally
- 6 rejected the proposed amendment, the Congress abolished the legislatures of
- 7 the states, replaced them with political appointees of their own choosing,
- 8 then altered the original vote of the legislature thus allowing the recession
- 9 of a previous vote. Thus, the use of its power in this instance is
- 10 inconclusive.
- 11 Second, there is no expressed provision in the Constitution allowing
- 12 Congress to abolish states legislatures in order to alter ratification
- 13 votes. 1079 Therefore, the power to do so must an implied power. 1080 But implied with no objection raised by any Court member) employed by Congress to ratify the amendment must also be considered valid and constitutional and thus become part of Congress' incidental regulatory powers in the amendatory process. See supra text accompanying notes 849,917,1006,1053-1073,1079,1089, 1094,1239,1253-1259,1333. Clearly this power, thus far sanctioned by the Court, at the least, violates the Ninth Amendment. See supra text accompanying notes 88-119,1136-1147.

 $^{1078}$  See supra text accompanying note 917.

Any argument attempting to validate congressional abolition of state legislatures on the fact the three states involved were on the losing side in the Civil War is without merit despite the actions of Congress at the time.

Throughout the Civil War, the Union held the secession of the southern states to be illegal. Instead, President Abraham Lincoln maintained the states were in a state of rebellion and were always part of the Union. (It should be noted as proof of this position that the Union flew a national flag which contained 34 stars all through the Civil War, the total number of states, north and south, existing at that time.)

The problem with Lincoln's action in declaring the states in rebellion is the Constitution does not support his position.

First, the right of secession is implied under the terms of Article V ("...and no State, without its Consent, shall be deprived of its equal Suffrage in the Senate."). Thus, if a state does grant its consent to deprive itself of its equal suffrage, then it follows its representation in the national government may be terminated. Second, the Constitution holds that in a state of rebellion, only the writ of Habeas Corpus may be terminated. ("The privilege of the Writ of Habeas Corpus shall not be suspended, unless when in Cases of Rebellion or Invasion the public Safety may require it." U.S. CONST., art. I, § 2).

In any event, the Constitution requires that either the Executive or the Legislature of the state in question must apply to the United States for action before the United States can act to guarantee a republican form of government or deal with rebellion or invasion. ("The United States shall guarantee to every state in this Union, a Republican Form of Government, and shall protect each of them against Invasion; and on Application of the Legislature, or of the Executive (when the Legislature cannot be convened) against domestic violence." U.S. CONST., Art. IV, § 4).

There is no record of the southern state legislatures ever having requested the federal government to intervene as specified under the Constitution, no proof that these southern legislatures were ever unable to meet, no proof that any governor from the south requested such aid from the federal government, no proof there was any form of invasion (except by the Union forces themselves), and no proof that a government in the south changed its form from its already previously established republican form. Therefore, Lincoln's action in declaring the southern states in rebellion is a constitutionally questionable one.

Nor could Lincoln find any comfort in art. I § 9 §§ 3 which states: "No state shall, without the Consent of Congress, lay any Duty of Tonnage, keep Troops, or Ships of War in time of Peace, enter into any Agreement or Compact with another State, or with a foreign Power, or engage in War, unless actually invaded, or in such imminent Danger as will not admit of delay."

In the first place, Lincoln's own action of calling for troops made it clear he had determined the nation was not "in a time of Peace." Thus it was legal for the states to "keep Troops, or Ships of War..." Secondly, while it may true that the firing by Beauregard on Fort Sumter on April 12, 1861 may have made him guilty of destruction of federal property, illegal discharge of a weapon and even disturbing the peace, by no means can it be said this action began a war. An individual cannot declare war. It requires an act of a sovereign nation to do so, and the south despite all its rhetoric never declared war. In fact, Lincoln's actions in the matter only served to cause more states to secede from the Union.

So the question, is when did a sovereign power commit an act of war? The answer is clear. The Civil War actually began with the first battle between the two sides, usually called Bull Run or Manassas, fought on July 18, 1861. The key constitutional question is, where did this battle occur and why? It occurred when the sovereign Union forces crossed into the state of Virginia. Under the clear terms of the Constitution, if a state is invaded, it has the right to defend itself. Thus, there are no constitutional grounds by which Lincoln could attack the states.

The reason for this is abundantly clear: unless otherwise specified in the Constitution, the design of the Founding Fathers was that the states were to be supreme to the federal government. Thus, they were provided the ability to wage war, defend their territory, regulate the national government through a separate amendatory procedure and so forth. The conclusion is clear. The Founding Fathers never intended the Federal Government to possess the power to control the states beyond those limited powers granted it in the Constitution.

Lincoln's action in calling for 75,000 volunteers on April 15, 1861 on the basis of possee comitatus is also questionable. In the first place, posse comitatus deals with a sheriff pursuing and arresting felons. There is no mention of granting the "sheriff" the right to start a war and clearly this was Mr. Lincoln's intent for it would be far stretch of the imagination to assume the president required this many people to arrest Mr. Beauregard for his actions three days earlier.

True, the Court did find that "the Federal Government may call out the militia in case of civil war; its authority to suppress rebellion is found in power to suppress insurrections and to carry on war." Texas v. White, 74 U.S. 700 (1869). (For a more detailed discussion of Texas v. White, see infra text accompanying note 1080.) However, as the date of the case indicates the decision by the Court was reached eight year after Mr. Lincoln's actions and therefore while the ruling may carry affect today, it cannot be said to have merit in 1861.

In sum, while Mr. Lincoln's actions may have been politically valid, there is little support in the constitutional language allowing the president or the Congress to have used their wartime powers in the Civil War because they did not recognize the sovereignty of the South and without this, these were legally unavailable. There is no support in the Constitution allow the President of the United States the unilateral power to declare war. Further, as interpreted at the time, the power of the president was limited to arrest of felons. Thus, the only way the North could have constitutionally fought the Civil War was to have taken the position that the South had the right to secede from the Union, a position they chose not to take. As the Union did not take this position, it follows the South never seceded. The affect of this fact as it relates to the case at hand becomes clear in the aftermath of the Civil War.

Following the military victory by the northern states, Congress passed the Reconstruction Act which established how the former Confederate States would be readmitted to the Union. (Reconstruction Act of Mar. 2, 1867, c. 153, 14 Stat.  $428 \ 5$ ). The act stated (in part):

"That when the people of any one of the said rebel states shall have form a constitution of government in conformity with the Constitution of the United States in all respects, framed by the convention of delegates elected by the male citizens of said State, twenty-one years old and upward, of whatever race, color, or previous condition, who have been resident in said state for one year previous to the day of such election, except such as may be disfranchised for participation in the rebellion or for felony at common law, and when such constitution shall provide that the elective franchise shall be enjoyed by all such persons as have the qualifications herein stated for elective franchise shall be enjoyed by all such persons as have the qualifications herein stated for electors of delegates, and when such constitution shall be ratified by a majority of the persons voting on the question of ratification who are qualified as electors for delegates, and when such constitution shall have been submitted to Congress for examination and approval, and Congress shall have approved the same, and when said State, by a vote of its legislature elected under said constitution, shall have adopted the amendment to the Constitution of the United States, proposed by the Thirty-ninth Congress, and known as article fourteen, and when said article shall have become a part of the Constitution of the United States, said state shall be declared entitled to representation in Congress, and senators and representatives shall be admitted therefrom on their taking the oath prescribed by law, and then and thereafter preceding sections of this act shall be inoperative in said State..." (emphasis added).

Obviously, in the Reconstruction Act, Congress relied on its power under Article IV to form new states as the basis upon which it could act. ("New States may be admitted by the Congress into this Union; but no new State shall be formed or erected within the Jurisdiction of any other State; nor any State be formed by the Junction of two or more States, or Parts of States, with the Consent of the Legislatures of the States concerned as well as of the Congress." U.S. CONST., art IV, § 3 §§ 1). The problem is that the Constitution deals specifically with the admission of new states, not with the states that Congress and the President both contended were already in the Union, i.e., "old" states. Therefore, under the Constitution, the Union had no authority to do anything to affect states already in the union, unless such actions applied to all states past, present and future.

Congress conveniently ignored basic logic: if it held the southern states were part of the Union because they could not secede, the states could not be "readmitted" by the Reconstruction Act because as member states they were already admitted. Thus, the Reconstruction Act was meaningless in that it required admission of states to the Union that were already admitted.

Further, Congress "rigged" the ratification vote of the  $14^{\rm th}$  Amendment in requiring that amendment to be passed before the states could be admitted. Thus, if the northern states had not ratified the  $14^{\rm th}$  Amendment, by the terms of the Reconstruction Act, the southern states would not have been readmitted to the Union even if they had ratified the amendment.

In fact, the Constitution was violated by the admission of West Virginia, if the Union were consistent in its argument, that Virginia was still in the Union. ("New States may be admitted by the Congress into this Union; but no new States shall be formed or erected within the Jurisdiction of any other State; nor any State be formed by the Junction of two or more States, or Parts of States, without the consent of the Legislatures of the States concerned as well as of the Congress." U.S. Const., art. IV, § 3. emphasis added). Thus, if the Union was consistent in its argument, the fact that state was in "rebellion" did not remove its constitutional protection of removal of territory to form a new state without its consent. In fact, the hypocrisy of the Union position is best demonstrated by the West Virginia example: the Union obeyed the Constitution when it was convenient and no more.

There is another problem raised by Congress in the Reconstruction Act. Article V of the Constitution states, "...amendments...shall be valid...when ratified by the Legislatures of three fourths of the several states..." Clearly implied in this phrase of the Constitution is the fact that the ratifying states must be within the Union at the time of the ratification vote. The proof of this is that territories, protectorates and similar possessions of the United States cannot ratify constitutional amendments. Only members states can. Further, as the Constitution mandates a specific number of states must ratify in order for an amendment to pass, it is obvious the determination of which states are in the Union (and which are not) must be established if it is to be established whether the amendment received the proper number of ratification votes. The obviousness of this statement and the reason for it are clear: if this were not so, foreign states would be able to ratify amendments to our Constitution and thus the entire question of our sovereignty would be in doubt.

Yet, this is exactly what Congress permitted in the Reconstruction Act. To ratify an amendment, a state must already be in the Union. The Union maintained the confederate states were not in the Union by the fact Congress insisted through the enactment of the Reconstruction Act that the confederate states must be "readmitted." Therefore, the confederate states could not have ratified an amendment under any circumstances because they were not part of the Union. But the Congress permitted these non-union states to vote on ratification and to be included in the calculation of the total number of states required for ratification. (And it must be remembered Congress held that the states could only be "readmitted" if the amendment passed.) Thus, it established foreign states that are not part the Union may vote on ratification of amendments to the Constitution. The result: Congress created a question as to the sovereignty of the United States and gave credence to the idea that Britain could, under certain circumstances, reclaim the United States. See supra text accompanying note 1007.

But even if it is conceded that Congress had the power it claimed in the Reconstruction Act, that it could require new state constitutions and new legislatures to be created in states that it maintained were still part of the Union, the matter must terminate there for constitutional authority. Nowhere in the Constitution is Congress provided a legislative fiat to "arrange" the outcome of a ratification vote on a constitutional amendment. Clearly, a ratification vote by a state is a legal constitutional power and as such, any exercise thereof, affirmative or negative, can in no way be considered to be a form of rebellion, as the state is merely employing a legal, constitutional power. While the Congress certainly could request the states vote on the matter of the 14th Amendment, nowhere in the Constitution, either expressly or by implication, is there the slightest argument whereby Congress may fix the results of such a vote as was done by the Reconstruction Act. By permitting Congress the power to overthrow state legislatures, thus effecting the outcome of a ratification vote of a constitutional amendment, and by allowing that Congress could mandate a particular outcome of that ratification vote, a dangerous power was created: the ability to amend the Constitution by legislative fiat. See supra text accompanying notes 849,917,1006,1053-1073,1077; infra text accompanying notes 1089,1094,1188,1239,1333.

No doubt it will be argued Congress acted properly under its republican form of government guarantee. As pointed out earlier in this footnote, such guarantee can only be acted upon by the federal government if the states ask for the intervention. True, the Constitution guarantees "to every state in this Union a republican form of government..." U.S. CONST., art. IV, § 4; See also Luther v. Borden, 48 U.S. 1 (1849); Minor v. Happersett, 90 U.S. 163 (1875); Pacific States Telephone & Telegraph Co. v. Oregon, 223 U.S. 118 (1912). True, the Supreme Court has ruled Congress determines whether a republican form of government exists, but this determination is considered to have been made if the Congress admits a state's senators and representatives to Congress. (Id.) The Court did not say Congress' determination was to be based on whether a state approved of a particular constitutional amendment, nor did it allow that Congress could ignore the constitutional provision of the states first having to ask the Congress to intervene.

How does this relate to the convention to propose amendments? If Congress, by legislative fiat as it did with the Reconstruction Act, can determine the outcome of a ratification vote, can it not also determine the "outcome" of applications for a convention to propose amendments? Using the logic employed by the Congress when it assumed the power to overthrow the states, the answer must be no.

As no state's representatives or senators have been denied representation in Congress, and as this is the standard set by the Supreme Court that determined whether a state was in rebellion or was a non-republican form of government, it must be assumed all state governments are republican governments, i.e., a government subject to the will of the people that elected it, and that none of these states are in rebellion against the government of the United States.

This established, it follows these elected officials of these republican, non-rebellious states acted in accordance with the desires, wishes and intent of the people they represented when they filed applications for a convention to propose amendments. In other words they acted in a constitutionally legal manner, and by no stretch of the imagination can such actions be considered rebellion.

Thus, as Congress has not declared any state to be in rebellion, it has denied itself the right to use the powers it created in the Reconstruction Act, however constitutionally questionable they may be. In sum, Congress therefore has no right to "direct" or "adjust" the outcome of a ratification vote by the states or applications for a convention to propose amendments because these are lawful constitutional powers being used by states which are neither in a state of rebellion nor non-republican in their form of government.

Finally, any argument that the Reconstruction Act was self-destructing and only aimed at particular states offers no comfort. Clearly, a Congress so disposed, once the power has been established, can easily write a similar piece of legislation to affect any number or group of states it chooses.  $^{1080}$  Before any examination of Texas v. White, 74 U.S. 700 (1868) can begin, it must noted the issue before the Supreme Court was not sovereignty. It was about money. It was about whether or not White and others who had come into possession of what would be today termed bearer bonds were entitled to collect that money from the State of Texas. For reasons, most likely due to the recent devastation of the recent civil conflict, it was to the advantage of Texas not to pay the bonds as a payment of five million dollars at that time would have most certainly bankrupted the state plunging it into more political havoc than already existed. Therefore, it was the State of Texas which desired to have the Supreme Court considered a continual member of the union, i.e., a sovereign state, which had recently suffered some difficulties, rather than a state that had succeeded from the union. It was also the desire of the State of Texas to have the court's permission to void a contract in the form of bonds in spite of expressed constitutional language prohibiting such action by a state. It was therefore to the advantage of Texas not to bring up or point to any provision in the Constitution which might bolster its actions regarding succession.

As it not the purpose of this suit to debate the merits of Texas except as it relates to the issue at hand, the arguments regarding whether or not a state can void a contract despite expressed constitutional language forbidding the same, will be largely minimized though it should be noted a strong dissent from three of the justices on the Court (Justices Grier, Swayne, Miller) did not give the Court a pass.

As to the issue of succession, the Court conceded that "it is true that the State of Texas was not at the time of filing this bill, or is not now, one of the United States, we have no jurisdiction of this suit, and it is our duty to dismiss it." Thus it tacitly accepted that succession as a condition of a sovereign state could exist. The Court chose to then define what a state was. Significantly, the dissents of the justices used an entirely different definition.

The Court majority wrote:

"A state, in the ordinary sense of the Constitution, is a political community of free citizens, occupying a territory of defined boundaries, and organized under a government sanctioned and limited by a written constitution, and established by the consent of the governed. It is the union of such states, under a common constitution, which forms the distinct and greater political unit, which that Constitution, designates as the United States, and makes of the people and states which compose it once people and one country."

The Court then noted the Constitution seemed to use the same word, "state" in different senses saying:

"In the clauses which impose prohibitions upon the States in respect to the making of treaties, emitting of bills of credit, and laying duties of tonnage, and which guarantee to the States representation in the House of Representatives and in the Senate, are found some instances of this use in the Constitution. ...

"But it is also used in its geographical sense, as in the clauses which require that a representative in Congress shall be an inhabitant of the State in which he shall be chosen, and that the trial of crimes shall be held within the State where committed.

"And there are instances in which the principal sense of the word seems to be that primary one to which we have adverted, of a people or political community, as distinguished from a government. In this latter sense the word seems to be used in the clause which provides that the United States shall guarantee to every State in the Union a republican form of the government , and shall protect each of them against invasion.

"In this clause a plain distinction is made between a State and the government of a State."

The dissenting justices, lead by Justice Grier, strongly dissented on the Court's majority conclusion of the definition of a state. Justice Grief wrote:

"The original jurisdiction of this court can be invoked only by one of the United States. The Territories have no such right conferred on them by the Constitution, nor have the Indian tribes who are under the protection of the military authorities of the government.

"If I regard the truth of history for the last eight years, I cannot discover the State of Texas as one of these United States. I do not think it necessary to notice any of the very astute arguments which have been advanced by the learned counsel in this case, to find the definition of a State, when we have the subject treated in a clear and common sense manner by Chief Justice Marshall, in the case of Hepburn & Dundass v. Ellxey [6 U.S. 445 (1805)]. As the case is short, I hope to be excused for a full report of it, as stated and decided by the court. He says:

'The question is, whether the plaintiffs, as residents of the District of Columbia, can maintain an action in the Circuit Court of the United States for the District of Virginia. This depends on the act of Congress describing the jurisdiction of that court. The act gives jurisdiction to the Circuit Courts in cases between a citizen of the State in which the suit is brought, and a citizen of another State. To support the jurisdiction in this case, it must appear that Columbia is a State. On the part of the plaintiff, it has been urged that Columbia is a distinct political society, and is, therefore, a 'State' according to the definition of writers on general law. This is true; but as the act of Congress obviously uses the word 'State' in reference to that term as used in the Constitution, it becomes necessary to inquire whether Columbia is a State in the sense of that instrument. The result of that examination is a conviction that the members of the American Confederacy only are the States contemplated in the Constitution. The House of Representatives is to be composed of members chosen by the people of the several States, and each State shall have at least one representative. 'The Senate of the United States shall be composed of two senators from each State.' Each State shall appoint, for the election of the executive, a number of electors equal to its whole number of senators and representatives. These causes show that the word 'State' is used in the Constitution as designating a member of the Union, and excludes from the term the signification attached to it by writers on the law of nations.'

"Now we have here a clear and well-defined test by which we may arrive at a conclusion with regard to the question of fact now to be decided.

"Is Texas a State, now represented by members chosen by the people of that State and received on the floor of Congress? Has she two senators to represent her as a state in the senate of the United States? Has her voice been heard in the late election of President? Is she not now held and governed as a conquered province by military force?...

"It is true that no organized rebellion now exists there, and the courts of the United States now exercise jurisdiction over the people of that province. But this is no test of the State's being in the Union. Dacotah is no State, and yet the courts of the United States administer justice there as they do in Texas. The Indian tribes, who are governed by military force, cannot claim to be States of the Union. Wherein does the condition of Texas differ from theirs?"

The distinction between majority opinion and dissent is clear: the majority concerned itself with the form of a state government while those in dissent addressed whether or not a state could function in its required constitutional role, or in other words, carry out its assigned constitutional role; in short, form versus function.

Thus the dissent essentially asked: can a state be considered a state if it cannot function as a sovereign state? As the dissent pointed out, the fact a state has a government invoked upon it by military force or outside federal authority does not make it a state. Further, in the case of Texas, its "sovereignty" was shared with the State of Louisiana without consent by the citizens of either state. Thus, the "government of the state", a military district had, without consent of the involved states as required by the Constitution, combined territories into a single "state." As the Constitution forbids such combination, to be valid, the majority decision the Court of that day must agree that state governments may "share" sovereign power or that they may be combined by military force, but such actions somehow have no effect on the sovereign power and validity of the state. Obviously this is impossible. What the majority of the Court ignored was the Constitution not only affords obligations on the states but protections as well outside the republican form of government clause and there is nothing in the Constitution which holds that any clause may be voided or that a state may pick and choose which clauses shall effect it nor does the Constitution allow the national government any veto of any clause any state shall take advantage of. Thus, the answer is obvious regarding the Court's question: to be a state in the context of the Constitution, a state must satisfy both form and function. If it cannot satisfy both, it is clear a state cannot properly be to be a state in the union. Thus, both sides were correct as all parameters established by the Court must be satisfied.

Both majority and dissent ignored the vote of the people of Texas which instructed their legislature to withdraw from the United States. Instead the Court majority confined itself exclusively to "state" sovereignty stating:

"It is needless to discuss, at length, the question whether the right of a State to withdraw from the Union for any cause, regarded by herself as sufficient, is consistent with the Constitution of the United States."

The implication of this sentence is clear. The Court clearly assigns the right of alter or abolish to the state and not the people. This sentence served as prelude on which the Court based this opinion, the articles of confederation.

The Court said:

"The Union of the states never was a purely artificial and arbitrary relation. It began among the Colonies, and grew out of common origin, mutual sympathies, kindred principles, similar interests, and geographical relations. It was confirmed and strengthened by the necessities of war, and received definite form, and character, and sanction from the Articles of Confederation. By these the Union was solemnly declared to 'be perpetual.' And when these Articles were found to be inadequate to the exigencies of the country, the Constitution was ordained 'to form a more perfect Union.' It is difficult to convey the idea of indissoluble unity more clearly than by these words. What can be indissoluble if a perpetual Union, made more perfect, is not? ...

"The Constitution, in all its provisions, looks to an indestructible Union, composed of indestructible States...

"When, therefore, Texas became one of the United States, she entered into an indissoluble relation. All the obligations of perpetual union, and all the guaranties of republican government in the Union, attached at once to the State. The act which consummated her admission into the Union was something more than a compact; it was the incorporation of a new member into the political body. And it was final. The union between Texas and the other Sates was as complete, as perpetual, and as indissoluble as the union between the original states. There was no place for reconsideration, or revocation, except through revolution, or through consent of the States...

"Considered therefore as transactions under the Constitution, the ordinance of secession, adopted by the convention and ratified by a majority of the citizens of Texas, and all the actions of her legislature intended to give effect to that ordinance, were absolutely null. They were utterly without operation in law. The obligations of the State, as a member of the Union, and of every citizen of the State, as a citizen of the United States, remained perfect and unimpaired. It certainly follows that the State not cease to be a State, nor her citizens to be citizens of the Union. If this were otherwise, the State must have become foreign, and her citizens foreigners. The war must have ceased to be a war for the suppression of rebellion, and must have come a war for conquest and subjugation."

What was neatly ignored by the Court majority was:

a) the Articles of Confederation specifically named which states were in a "perpetual" union and did not mention Texas. This of course was because Texas was under the sovereign control of Mexico at the time of the adoption of the articles.

b)the articles defined this "perpetual" union as "enter[ing] into a firm league of friendship with each other…" (Articles of Confederation,  $\S$  3. see also  $\S$  4: "The best to secure and perpetuate mutual friendship and intercourse among the people of the different States…"

Hence the Court's reliance on a perpetual union of states simply is not backed by the words of the Articles of Confederation, nor does the well known history of the articles during the time they were in effect bear out the concept that the states viewed themselves as a "perpetual" union.

As to the Court's discussion that if Texas were not a state, its citizens were foreigners and the war fought would be for "conquest and subjugation" it has been pointed out previously that neither side declared war, that to declare war requires the act of a sovereign state or nation outside the nation on which war is declared as otherwise it is defined as rebellion and that the Constitution mandates the national government cannot act in cases of rebellion unless requested to do so by the state legislature or governor. It bears repeating no such requests were made and that none of the southern states invaded the Union until the Union had first invaded them with an army. In all therefore, while such niceties of term are from this historic perspective no more than observation, it is clear the actions of the Union, by the Court's own definition, were action of conquest and subjugation."

The Court also ignored the fact the Constitution was not ordained by the states, but by the people using their right of alter or abolish. Indeed the actions of Texas mirrored precisely the actions of the colonies with the identical response by a superior sovereign power. If the Court were to hold the action of alter or abolish by the people is void in the one example of Texas, it follows it is equally obligation to question the identical procedure in the establishment of the United States.

As noted in McCulloch v. Maryland, 17 U.S. 316 (1819):

"The government proceeds directly from the people; is 'ordained and established' in the name of the people; and is declared to be ordained, 'n order to form a more perfect union, establish justice, ensure domestic tranquility, and secure the blessings of liberty to themselves and to their posterity.' The assent of the States, in their sovereign capacity, is implied in calling a convention, and thus submitting that instrument to the people. But the people were at perfect liberty to accept or reject it; and their act was final. It required not the affirmance, and could not be negatived, by the State governments."

The only possible interpretation is that Texas overturned McCulloch as to this fundamental point: that the states were sovereign, not the people and that it was the states that established the Constitution, not the people in spite of the expressed language to the contrary.

All of this of course, is based on the Court's reliance on the Articles of Confederation. Both <code>McCulloch</code> and <code>Texas</code> refer to their action of sovereignty as "final" which at the least implies there was no further action required nor permitted in the matter. It is impossible in the question of sovereignty for both to be "final." Thus, one must fall. The question then evolves into the validity of the Articles of Confederation after the adoption of the Constitution which describes itself as "supreme law of the land." As there has been no contradiction by the Court then the Articles of Confederation still apply and must be viewed as having full force and effect of law in this nation as a term of government which means the Constitution is not supreme law as there is then another law of the land of equal supremacy or b0 the Constitution has an amendment which must cause great alteration in its interpretation.

If the Constitution is to viewed as supreme law, then the Articles of Confederation cannot be considered to be in effect or have force of law. The court cannot bounce back to the articles whenever it pleases, plucking a phrase here and there to bolster its argument then leaving the rest of the document in the dust bin. Either the Articles of Confederation are valid and still in force and the Constitution, having been created after them, is subservient to them, or at least amended by them, or they are not valid and the Constitution is unaffected except where the Founders chose to put the language of the articles into the Constitution. Either the Constitution is supreme law of the land or it is not. Either the states are the ultimate sovereign power as called for in the articles or they are not. In the Constitution, it is the people who are sovereign; in the articles it is the states. Both cannot be; one must be subservient to the other. However, there is one unifying theme uniting both documents: in neither is the national government supreme.

The Court ultimately must choose which to follow, the articles or the Constitution or create a legal bridge of some sort so as to bring the articles in as part of the Constitution in which case it must at the minimum negate the  $10^{\rm th}$  Amendment as passed and fortify it with the word "expressly." Such a change cannot be taken lightly as the effect of this change alone, not to mention a multitude of others contained within the articles would serve to wipe out much of today's taken for granted federal power including that of the Court itself. In any event whether one asserts the Articles of Confederation or the Constitution, the sovereign power of the states or the sovereign power of the people, the issue is clear as amendatory process: in both is an amendatory process absent any national government discretion or consent exists under both plans and must be obeyed by the national government thus permitting both the power to amend their form of government without national government approval.

Finally, and this point has been made before but is worth repeating here, Article V of the United States Constitution provides for a state to withdraw from the United States Senate with no more than its own consent. From this expressed state power, the step implying the states possess the right of succession in total is so small as to be termed obvious. Thus the contention of the Court that "[t]he Constitution, in all its provisions, looks to an indestructible Union, composed of indestructible States..." (emphasis added) is not entirely correct as at least one provision, ignored by the Court suggests a dissolvable Union achievable by no more than the action of an individual state. However as the Court didn't address this issue in Texas, the answer to this specific question remains unresolved to this day.

Even without the expressed language of Article V, there is little comfort in the decision which might be used to justify congressional regulation or veto of state applications for a convention to propose amendments. Two quotes from the majority settles the issue.

The Court wrote:

"But the perpetuity and indissolubility of the Union, by no means implies the loss of distinct and individual existence, or of the right of self-government by the States. Under the Articles of Confederation each State retained its sovereignty, freedom, and independence, an every power, jurisdiction, and right not expressly delegated to the United states. Under the Constitution, though the powers of the States were much restricted, still, all powers not delegated to the United States nor prohibited to the States, are reserved to the States respectively, or to the people. ...

"And we think that the principle sanctioned by it [the organization of opposing governments in a state] may be applied, with even more propriety, to the case of a State deprived of all rightful government, by revolutionary violence; though necessarily limited to cases where the rightful government is thus subverted, or in imminent danger of being overthrown by an opposing government, set up by force within the State."

It can be concluded therefore the Court felt congressional overthrow of state legislatures was warranted but only extreme conditions and certainly did not sanction such overthrow as a result of constitutionally sanctioned state actions such as applying for a convention to propose amendments.

- 1 powers in the Constitution are the judicial creation of the Supreme Court. 1081
- 2 The Constitution does not expressly use the term "implied powers" anywhere
- 3 within it; it has required Supreme Court rulings in order to establish this
- 4 part of the Constitution. It follows if such power is implied and such powers
- 5 are defined exclusively by judicial interpretation and decision, then such
- 6 powers may and can be reviewed by the Court and, at the discretion of that
- 7 branch of government, withdrawn if found appropriate. Therefore, the Court's
- 8 determination that it can only serve in an advisory capacity regarding the
- 9 amendatory process<sup>1082</sup> must be considered ineffectual.<sup>1083</sup> Thus, the Court is &quot;Among the enumerated powers, we do not find that of establishing a bank, or creating a corporation. But there is no phrase in the instrument which, like the articles of confederation, excludes incidental or implied powers; and which requires that everything granted shall be expressly and minutely described. ... A constitution, to contain an accurate detail of all the subdivisions of which its great powers will admit, and all of the means by which they may be carried into execution, would partake the prolixity of a legal code, and could scarcely be embraced by the human mind. It would probably never be understood by the public. Its nature, therefore, requires, that only its great outlines should be marked, the important objects designated, and the minor ingredients which compose those objects be deduced from the nature of the objects themselves." McCulloch v. Maryland, 17 U.S. 316 (1819).

<sup>1082</sup> Coleman v. Miller, 307 U.S. 433 (1939).

as effectual. Thus, this same action serves to reject the Court's position that its rulings are advisory only. If Congress relies on a Court decision as the basis on which it claims to have the power to do something, in this case control the entire amendatory procedure, then that decision cannot be said to be advisory. "ADVISORY. Counseling, suggesting, or advising, but not imperative or conclusive."; ADVISORY OPINION. "Such may be rendered by a court at the request of the government or an interested party indicating how the court would rule on a matter should adversary litigation develop. An advisory opinion is thus an interpretation of the law without binding effect. While the International Court of Justice and some state courts will render advisory opinions the federal courts will not; their jurisdiction being restricted to cases or controversies." BLACK'S LAW DICTIONARY, 6th Ed. (1990). (emphasis added). See U.S. CONST., art. III, § 2 §§ 1; "The judicial Power shall extend to all Cases...to Controversies to which the United States shall be a Party..."

The conclusion is obvious. As Coleman was clearly a case under Supreme Court jurisdiction, and the Constitution prescribes that the Court's

- 1 obligated to maintain jurisdiction in the matter because it is only by its
- 2 interpretative authority (i.e., assumption of sovereign power) that the power
- 3 to exclusively control the amendatory process 1084 continues to exist. Just as
- 4 clearly, therefore, the Court is empowered to modify or clarify this broad
- 5 power it created so as to bring it into conformity with other constitutional
- 6 provisions that suits such as this may bring to the Court's attention.
- 7 As stated in Hawke:
- 8 "The language of the article is plain, and admits of no doubt in its interpretation. It is not the function of courts or legislative bodies,
- 10 national or state, to alter the method which the Constitution has fixed." $^{1085}$
- 11 The essential question of the brief, however, is not whether it is the
- 12 function of the Court (or the legislative bodies) "to alter the method which
- 13 Constitution has fixed" for amending the Constitution, but whether it is the
- 14 function of the courts to enforce what the Constitution has fixed. And if the
- 15 Constitution has "fixed" a method, can Congress be granted such extraordinary,
- 16 unlimited implied powers as are expressed in Coleman, or is the plain language
- 17 of Article V plain enough that it leaves no doubt as to its meaning?
- 18 If, as Coleman maintains, the Court has no judicial review of the
- 19 amendment process and that it is the exclusive domain of Congress, would it
- 20 therefore sit mute under the Coleman doctrine if Congress enacted radical
- 21 changes to the amendatory ratification process, or if Congress simply failed
- 22 to follow its provisions when it found such compliance politically or jurisdiction can only extend to "cases and controversies" and thus cannot be advisory, it follows its ruling cannot be advisory.

1085 Hawke v. Smith, 253 U.S. 221 (1920).

BRIEF IN SUPPORT OF CONVENTION GENERAL BRIEF ARGUMENTS PAGE 467

<sup>1084</sup> Coleman v. Miller, 307 U.S. 433 (1939).

- 1 otherwise inconvenient, such has been proposed for a convention in the Hatch
- 2 bill and other similar bills? 1086
- 3 Would the Court, for example, in the ratification process, restrained by
- 4 Coleman, watch Congress extended its power of statutory control beyond the
- 5 constitutional point of choice between the two modes of ratification, 1087 that
- 6 of state legislature or state convention?
- 7 Would the Court, stayed by Coleman, allow Congress unlimited latitude in
- 8 the selection of legislators who would then vote on whether to ratify a
- 9 proposed amendment?
- 10 Would the Court, fettered by Coleman, sit idly by while Congress
- 11 inserted its own officers to supervise the legislatures during the
- 12 ratification process?
- 13 Would the Court, tied by Coleman, allow Congress to determine the makeup
- 14 of the delegates attending a state ratifying convention and allow Congress to
- 15 set the agenda, pick its own officers to run it and install other similar
- 16 restraints?
- 17 Would the Court, bound by Coleman, allow Congress to legislate by what
- 18 terms and manner congressionally approved subjects would be discussed in a
- 19 legislature or a ratifying convention in regards to a proposed ratification?
- 20 Would the Court, gagged by Coleman, allow Congress to regulate the
- 21 voting procedures of the states on ratification either within the legislature
- 22 or at a convention, allow Congress to refuse to recognize a state ratification

<sup>1087</sup> U.S. CONST., art. V.

<sup>1086</sup> See supra text accompanying notes 596-607

1 vote on a proposed amendment unless Congress agreed with that vote, and allow

2 Congress the authority to veto that ratification vote should it not agree with

3 its outcome by overthrowing the legislatures and replacing the elected

4 representatives with persons of its own choosing?

Surely, today, the answer to these questions must be a resounding no. 1088

If this refusal by the Court in allowing exclusive congressional control

7 of the ratification process is true, how can it be successfully argued the

8 proposal process of a convention to propose amendments can be so regulated

9 when, at this stage, the embryonic stage in the creation of an amendment or amendments, the most vigorous and independent debate must be preserved if that amendment or amendments are to receive the severe and public criticism needed in order to ensure the change sought to the Constitution is desired by the 13 people and not merely an expression of the political whims of Congress?

14 In Coleman, the Court had the opportunity, if not the obligation, to specify the limits of such broad phrases as "exclusive and complete control" of the amendatory process. It choose not to, leaving in its wake confused

17 "dicta" 1089 that only served as a basis for the unconstitutional actions of 18 Congress in not calling for a convention.

10

11

12

15

16

However, the most recent decision of the Court in the amendatory process, Coleman, supported just this sort of sweeping power by Congress. See supra text accompanying notes 849,917,1006,1056,1077. It is perhaps the most ironic of situations that the Supreme Court, when presented with the question in 1872, found that Congress did not have such powers. See infra text accompany note 1252. It was only in Coleman that such powers were "discovered."

1089 "Dicta. Opinions of a judge which do not embody the resolution or determination of the court. Expression in court's opinion which go beyond the facts before court and therefore are individual views of author of opinion and not binding in subsequent cases as legal precedent. State ex re. Foster v. Naftalin, 246 Minn. 181, 74 N.W.2d 249." BLACK'S LAW DICTIONARY, 6th ed., (1990).

"Dictum. The word is general used as an abbreviated form of obiter dictum, 'a remark by the way;' that is, an observation or remark made by a judge in pronouncing an opinion upon a cause, concerning some rule, principle, or application of law, or the solution of a question suggested by the case at bar, but not necessarily involved in the case or essential to its determination; any way of illustration, argument, analogy, or suggestion. Statements and comments in an opinion concerning some rule of law or legal proposition not necessarily involved or essential to determination of the case in hand are obiter dicta, and lack the force of an adjudication. Wheeler v. Wilkin, 98 Colo. 568, 58 P.2d 1223, 1226." Id.

However, it is unlikely, given the judicial structure provided in the Constitution that the [t]he judicial power of the United States shall be vested in one Supreme Court..." id. § 1, and that the "judicial power shall extend to all case, in law and equity, arising under this Constitution..." (U.S. CONST., art III, § 2, §§1), that dicta can exist at the Supreme Court level. The Supreme Court is the final authority in the judicial power of the United States and thus renders the final and ultimate decision on any legal matter before it. Therefore, any opinion (or part thereof) must be considered the final word in such matters and thus cannot be said to be dicta unless such expression is made in dissenting opinions, which in this case instant was not.

See also 16 Ops. Of the Office of Legal Coun., 102, 125 (1992) (prelim. pr.) The report opined the Coleman precedent was not binding and that the  $14^{\rm th}$  Amendment action by Congress was an "aberration". The memorandum argued that the Coleman opinion by Chief Justice Hughes was for only a plurality of the Court and, moreover, was dictum since it addressed an issue not before the Court.

There are several problems with this position of the government. In the first place, concurrence of justices is a common practice in the Court. It has never been seriously suggested than an opinion of the Court is invalid or dictum simply because different justices arrive at the same conclusion for different reasons. Instead, the concurrences are simply considered part of the majority opinion.

Second, the report addressed the opinion of Chief Justice Hughes and did not discuss the opinion of Justices Black et al. in which this conclusion was the heart of their argument, not merely a sidebar.

Third, the subject discussed, the power of Congress to reject or accept ratification votes of the states and under what terms, was central to the issue in that the Court used the actions of Congress in the ratification of the  $14^{\rm th}$  Amendment as justification for its "political question" doctrine. Indeed, it was the sole evidence used by the Court in this regard.

Finally, the government's opinion that Congress' actions regarding the ratification of the  $14^{\rm th}$  Amendment were nothing more than an "aberration" simply do not hold water in light of the congressional laches regarding the convention to propose amendments. Congress is expected to follow the Constitution which means at the least, obeying its clearly written, easily understood, expressed provisions. Perhaps one "Oops, we goofed in not obeying the amendatory process" by Congress could be excused in this matter, but certainly not two (not calling a convention when the states have applied) and most especially three (ignoring Section 2 of the  $14^{\rm th}$  Amendment calling for reduction in representation in Congress if voting rights are denied at the state level). See infra text accompanying notes 1245-1309.

As the Court observed in several decisions, the meaning of the words in the Constitution should be construed so as to effect their intent, not defeat it. See In re State Tonnage Tax Cases, 79 U.S. 204 (1870); "Where there are

1 Simply put, unless the Constitution specifically provides the power for

2 Congress to do so, Congress cannot use its statutory powers to wander about

- 3 the Constitution changing its provisions to suit that body's whims. 1090 To do
- 4 otherwise would destroy the very essence of the document, that of prescribed,
- 5 limited powers for all branches of government, thus preserving the freedom of
- 6 all citizens who might otherwise suffer were one branch or another to exceed
- 7 such limits. In the case of the convention to propose amendments or the
- 8 ratification process, the Constitution does not grant that power to Congress
- 9 and neither should the courts under any circumstances.
- 10 As the Office of Legal Council of the Department of Justice has argued,
- 11 Article V gives Congress no role other than to propose amendments and to
- 12 specify the mode of ratification; 1091 no mention is made in the Constitution of
- 13 allowing Congress the power to overthrow state legislatures in order to change
- 14 ratification, or regulating the convention to propose amendments as part of
- 15 its amendatory repertoire.

several possible meanings of the words of the constitution, that meaning which will defeat rather than effectuate the constitutional purpose cannot rightly be preferred."; U.S. v. Classic, 313 U.S. 299 (1941); "Constitutional provision would be given a reasonable interpretation and would be held to express the intention of its framers." Woodson v. Murdock 89 U.S. 351 (1874); "A constitutional provision should not be construed so as to defeat its evident purpose, but rather so as to give it effective operation and suppress the mischief at which it was aimed." Jarrolt v. Moberly, 103 U.S. 580 (1880). See supra text accompanying notes 849,917,1006,1053-1073,1077,1079; infra text accompanying notes 1094,1188,1239,1333.

See supra text accompanying note 550.

<sup>1091 16</sup> Ops. Of the Office of Legal Coun. 102, 121-126 (1992).

- 1 Through its laches, 1092 Congress has sought to deny to the convention
- 2 that which itself so jealously defends, the right of free debate and
- 3 independent action, as guaranteed to it in the Constitution. 1093
- 4 The amendatory process must be read as a specific, narrow procedure
- 5 prescribed by unambiguous language clearly reflecting the intent of the
- 6 Founding Fathers which must be as immune from politics as possible. While
- 7 debate over a specific amendment proposal certainly involves political
- 8 considerations, politics must not be allowed to spill over into the amendatory
- 9 procedure and corrupt it. 1094
- 10 The Supreme Court has held that the power to choose the mode of
- 11 ratification is entirely up to Congress; 1095 however, nothing in that ruling

<sup>1092</sup> See supra text accompanying notes 595-608,611.

&quot;The senators and representatives shall...be privileged from arrest...and for any speech or debate in either house, they shall not be questioned in any other place." U.S. CONST., art. I,  $\S$  6  $\S\S$  1.

During the ratification of the 14th Amendment, Congress certainly could be accused of extending political considerations into the amendatory process by the removal of three state legislatures whose votes against the then proposed amendment would have prevented its ratification. Because of this action, Congress is now "stuck" with the power to overthrow legislatures in a ratification vote. This power was upheld in Coleman v. Miller, 307 U.S. 433, (1939). See supra text accompanying notes 849,917,1006,1053-1073,1077,1079, 1089; infra text accompanying notes 1188,1239,1333.

This said, it is obvious that this incidental amendatory power provides Congress with all the power necessary to deal with any eventuality a convention to propose amendments might pose, thus rendering any pre-condition, such as "same subject", "contemporaneousness", etc., superfluous and extraneous. By simply overthrowing the state legislatures to arrive at whatever ratification vote the Congress deems "politically correct", Congress can neutralize any proposed amendment of the convention to propose amendments. Thus, under the constitutional provision of "necessary and proper," if it is held that such a standard does apply to Congress, then Congress has no right to any other power, as this power of overthrow of the state legislatures provides all that is necessary and proper in the matter. See supra text accompanying notes 620-668.

<sup>1095</sup> United States v. Sprague, 282 U.S. 716 (1931).

However, both Hawke and Sprague were rendered previous to Coleman. Therefore, it is conceded that under the provisions of Coleman that Congress does have the power to overturn state legislatures. However, it is not conceded congressional control of the amendatory process extends to the

- granted Congress a veto in this respect. 1096 In ratification, Congress merely
- chooses the method of ratification, 1097 either by the state legislatures or by 2
- state conventions. 1098 After that, it is up to the states to proceed. The 3
- 4 constitutional authority therefore passes from the national government to the
- states and becomes an individual state matter. The same principal must apply 5
- to a convention: Congress calls, 1099 and after that it is up to the states to 6
- 7 proceed.
- 8 The Court did not even mention the convention method of amending the
- 9 Constitution in Coleman. Thus, the proposition that "Congress has sole and
- complete control over the amending process..." 1100 does not automatically 10
- 11 relate to the convention. Clearly such a proposition as manifested by the
- Court was clearly was not the intention of the Founding Fathers when they 12
- wrote Article V. 1101 The dangers of such a doctrine allow a "runaway" Congress 13
- that far outweighs any "dangers" posed by a convention. Any relevancy to the 14
- 15 convention to propose amendments must therefore rest in the Court statement convention, as this was not specifically discussed in the decision. Further, the comments of the Court cast doubt as to whether or not another body, such as the convention, does not also possess power equal to that of Congress' amendatory proposal power, but certainly not including the power to overthrow state legislatures should the convention disagree with ratification votes. That power belongs to Congress exclusively. See supra text accompanying notes

&quot;Under the United States Constitution, article 5, providing for the ratification of propose amendments by the Legislatures of three-fourths of the states or by conventions in three-fourths thereof, as one or the other mode may be proposed by Congress, the power of determining the method of ratification is conferred upon Congress, and is limited to the two methods <code>specified."</code> Hawke v. Smith, 253 U.S. 221 (1920)(emphasis added).  $^{1097}$  U.S. CONST., art. V.

&lt;sup>1098</sup> Id.

 $<sup>^{1099}</sup>$  See supra text accompanying notes 580-590.

 $<sup>^{1101}</sup>$  See supra text accompanying notes 325,339-340,345,356,363,389,398-400,403-405,414,435-437,506.

- 1 that: "it is not made clear that only Congress has constitutional power to
- 2 determine if there is any such implication in Article V of the
- 3 Constitution." 1102
- 4 If there is any implication in Article V, it is that the convention to
- 5 propose amendments method of amendment is in all respects equal to the
- 6 congressional method. 1103 If, as Coleman held, the amendatory procedure is
- 7 entirely political in nature and thus entirely free of judicial review, then
- 8 the convention to propose amendments must have the same political autonomy.
- 9 Therefore, under this interpretation of Coleman, the convention has the same
- 10 constitutional authority to propose amendments, absent congressional or
- 11 judicial control, as does Congress in proposing amendments absent convention
- 12 or judicial control. 1104
- 13 This conclusion of Coleman is disturbing and far reaching. The Court, in
- 14 granting such leeway to Congress substitutes political convenience for
- 15 constitutional doctrine. Such a grant must be denied to Congress and the
- 16 convention.

_

 $<sup>^{1102}</sup>$  See supra text accompanying note 1058.

&quot;...which, in either Case, shall be valid to all Intents and Purposes, as part of this Constitution..." U.S. CONST., art. V. The implication of this phrase of Article V can only lead to the conclusion that the power of the convention and of Congress must be considered equal. If the Court interprets this power as exclusively political rather than constitutional, it nevertheless must remain equal.

However, this suit takes issue with this entire line of reasoning regarding the autonomy of Congress from judicial review or constitutional limitation. This suit holds Article V, like all other portions of the Constitution, is subject to judicial review and interpretation. It holds that the convention is as limited by the Constitution as is Congress in the amendatory procedure. Finally, this suit holds what should be obvious: the amendatory procedure of the United States Constitution is a constitutional procedure, not a political maneuver.

- 1 If the pre-conditions of congressional regulation of a convention or the
- 2 amendatory process are justified to "fill in the details" in order to prevent
- 3 a "runaway" convention as laid out in the Hatch bill,  $^{1105}$  then it follows that
- 4 Congress has similar powers in order to prevent a "runaway" ratification by
- 5 the legislatures. If Congress can regulate to the point of making a proposed
- 6 amendment subject to its approval before it is submitted to the states and
- 7 vetoing ratification results it does not choose to accept by removing the
- 8 offending state legislatures from power,  $^{1107}$  has not Congress assumed
- 9 sovereignty, as it is by congressional consent alone that the manner and
- 10 method of the amendatory process proceeds under the banner of being nothing
- 11 more than a "political question"? 1108

<sup>1105</sup> See supra text accompanying notes 596-608.

&lt;sup>1106</sup> Id.

 $^{\rm 1107}$  See supra text accompanying note 917.

As Congress possesses the incidental regulatory power of removing state legislatures and replacing them should a ratification vote counter congressional political desires, it may be argued that Congress has been sovereign for over 130 years.

However, this sovereign power is based on Congress acting, i.e., committing a physical act. In the case of the removal of the three state legislatures and the replacement of their members, Congress acted in that it physically removed the legislators duly elected by the people of the states involved and replaced them with members of Congress' liking. Congress could not simply ignore the rejection of ratification of the 14th Amendment by the three states, it had to act in order to counter or negate their effect. This clearly is the minimal standard set by Congress in the exercise of this incidental amendatory power if it is to be used by Congress in the area of convention applications—that Congress must actually use it. Congress must actually remove of one or more state legislatures duly elected by the voters of their respective states. Congress must implant a new legislature. Congress must compel that legislature to vote to alter or abolish such applications for a convention to propose amendments as Congress deems politically expedient or convenient.

Additionally, this incidental amendatory power completely satisfies the constitutional standard of "necessary and proper" as it supplies all power required in order for Congress to counteract any perceived convention threat, real or imagined. Thus, Congress requires no other power in the matter, such as judging applications as to timeliness or same subject, as the power to

1	Thus the decision facing the Court is plain: either to firmly remove the
2	reckless language of Coleman and place Congress in its proper constitutional
3	role in the amendatory process, or to accept finally that Congress is
4	sovereign.
5
6
7	The Infinite Well
8
9	The Founding Fathers visualized the right to alter or abolish, i.e., the
10	sovereignty of the people, as an infinite well from which the people dispense
11	power to government. No matter how much power they assign to government, the
12	well remains eternally theirs, thus enabling them to alter the government by
13	removing power such as they did with the 21st Amendment, limiting power as power to government. No matter how much power they assign to government, the well remains eternally theirs, thus enabling them to alter the government by removing power such as they did with the 21st Amendment, limiting power as they did with the 11th Amendment, or extending power as they did with the 14th Amendment. While the people have established procedures codifying their right to alter or abolish into a prescribed, formal arrangement set out in Article V and have provided for the courts to enforce such procedures, they still retain the transcendent right which neither the courts nor Congress can remove from them except by their expressed consent. 1109 By whatever terms the people overthrow state legislatures in the amendatory process supplies all power Congress requires. However, as Congress has not removed any state legislatures in order to thwart the calling of a convention to propose amendments, it must be presumed Congress favors a convention to propose amendments as it has not used its constitutional and lawful incidental amendatory power to prevent one. Id.

It is illogical to maintain that the power the courts have so expressly denied Congress, the right to remove rights granted by treaty, could be then removed by a simple court order. Obviously, in determining that Congress is

(Footnote Continued Next Page)

14

15

16

17

18

19

- 1 establish, the government shall be bound. It may sip from the cup, but may
- 2 never drink from the well.
- 3 Can the ideal of a right be greater than the mechanism that expresses
- 4 that right? As the mechanism is regulated, is not the right itself
- 5 compromised? Can it be successfully held that a right exists if there is no
- 6 means by which to exercise it? The emphatic answer is no. The mechanism of the
- 7 right and the right itself are inseparable. In the case of the right to alter
- 8 or abolish, the people require a mechanism that must be separate and
- 9 independent of any previous limitations the people have thus far laid out in
- 10 the Constitution in order to express this basic right. Similarly, the
- 11 mechanism must be free of any interference from the government the people
- 12 intend to regulate. Obviously, the mechanism must be available to all and must
- 13 be able in some fashion to express the common consent of the people. The only
- 14 mechanism fitting this description is a vote. If the right is transcendent, so
- 15 must be the mechanism. Thus, to whatever extent any court decision finds that
- 16 such actions are unconstitutional, it must be the court decision that gives
- 17 way, not the right the people to alter or abolish.
- 18 What is unconstitutional?

19

20 21

22

23

24

25 26

27

- "That which is contrary to or in conflict with a constitution. The opposite of 'constitutional' Norton v. Shelby County, 118 U.S. 425, 6 S.Ct. 1121, 30 L.Ed. 178.
- This word is used in two different senses. One, which may be called the English sense, is that the legislation conflicts with some recognized general principle. This is no more than to say that it is unwise, or is based upon a wrong or unsound principle, or conflicts with a generally accepted policy. The other, which may be called the American sense, is that the legislation conflicts with some provision of our written Constitution, which is beyond the denied this power, the Court determined that all branches of government are denied the same power. See supra text accompanying note 954.

- power of a legislative body to change. U.S. v. American Brewing Co., D.C. Pa.,
- 2 1 F.2d. 1001, 1002." 1110
- 3 In other words, "unconstitutional" is the determination that something
- 4 is in basic conflict with the Constitution either in its expressed provisions
- 5 or with the spirit of the Constitution as envisioned by the Founding
- 6 Fathers. 1111
- 7 As the court is limited by the Constitution to deciding cases,
- 8 controversies and suits arising  $under^{1112}$  the Constitution, it follows the
- 9 Court does not have the right or authority to issue rulings limiting or
- 10 affecting the supreme sovereign power to alter or abolish. Where the people by
- 11 means of constitutional edict have already dispatched power, the Court can
- 12 certainly speak and enforce, but where no such edict exists the Court must
- 13 remain silent and withdraw. So it is with Coleman. The Court cannot assign
- 14 exclusive control of the amendatory process, dicta or otherwise, to Congress
- 15 as it is clear this was neither the intent of the Founders nor the text of the
- 16 Constitution. The Court is obligated to say so in plain text, leaving no doubt
- 17 that Congress is limited, confined and subject to the will of the people,
- 18 rather than the people subject to the whims of Congress.

<sup>1110</sup> BLACK'S LAW DICTIONARY, 6th Ed. (1990).

<sup>1111</sup> A fundamental question must be posed as nothing is expressed in Article V prohibiting citizen participation in the amendatory process by use of the vote. Would the Founding Fathers, if the question were put to them, hold that the use of a vote in the amendatory process would violate the principles of government they so carefully labored to lay out in the Constitution, i.e., that it would violate the spirit of the document?

We think not.

&quot;The judicial Power shall extend to all Cases, in Law and Equity, arising under this Constitution..." U.S. CONST., art. III,  $\S$  2 (emphasis added).

&quot;Under. Sometimes used in its literal sense of below in position, beneath, but more frequently in its secondary meaning of 'inferior' or 'subordinate.' Also according to; as, 'under the testimony.'" BLACK'S LAW DICTIONARY 6th ed. (1990).

2 The 21st Amendment "Problem"

3

4 The Hawke decision presents an even more fundamental challenge to the

- 5 right of the people to alter or abolish their government. It denies the right
- 6 to use a vote to do so, the single mechanism the people possess to peacefully
- 7 express their desire in such matters. In Hawke the Court ruled that in the
- 8 ratification of the 18th Amendment, the legislative decision for ratification
- 9 could not be reviewed by referendum.
- 10 The Court said in part:

"It is not the function of courts or legislative bodies national or state, to alter the method of amendment which the Constitution has fixed. The act of the state derives its authority from the federal constitution to which the state and people have alike assented... A state has no authority to provide for the submission to a referendum under the state Constitution of the ratification of a proposed amendment to the federal Constitution, as is 16 ratification of a proposed amendment to the federal Constitution, as 17 attempted by the amendment of 1918 to the Constitution of Ohio." $^{1113}$

18 Since Hawke, at least one member of the Supreme Court, sitting as

19 circuit judge, has upheld state court decisions that used state grounds to 20 deny initiatives that would have directed the state legislatures to apply for 21 a convention to propose amendments. Despite the view of one author that this

22 precludes the use of initiatives in this matter, the facts of the suits

23 involved do not support this. 1114

<sup>1113</sup> Hawke v. Smith, 495 U.S. 221 (1920); see also Leser v. Garnett, 258 U.S 130 (1922); "The ratification of a proposed amendment to the United States Constitution by the legislators of a state is a federal function derived from the federal Constitution, and transcends any limitations sought to be imposed by the people of a state."

by the people of a state."

1114 "California and Montana, whose legislatures had refused to pass applications [for a balanced budget amendment], saw unsuccessful attempts to place on their ballots popular referenda directing the legislatures to submit applications. Justice Rehnquist let stand decisions by the respective state Supreme Courts that the referenda contravened state constitutional provisions

- There is a basic problem with Hawke that was never more forcefully
- 2 demonstrated than with the ratification of the 21st Amendment. Here the
- 3 ratification of a proposed amendment was by state ratification conventions,
- 4 not by state legislatures. In order for the election of delegates to the
- 5 federal ratification conventions to occur, state constitutional authority,
- 6 executed by state legislative actions, had to be employed. 1115 A number of

as well as article V, which contemplated legislatures acting independently of external restrictions." Caplan, Constitutional Brinksmanship: Amending the Constitution by National Convention, (1988), p.84.

A closer examination of the two court cases, Uhler v. AFL-CIO, 468 U.S. 1310 (1984) and Montanans For A Balanced Budget Committee v. Harper, 469 U.S. 1301 (1984) reveals that Justice Rehnquist primarily relied on the fact that the California Supreme Court determined the initiatives submitted were invalid based on state constitutional grounds. (Montanans For A Balanced Budget et al. simply referred to the decision reached in Uhler v. AFL-CIO.)

In Uhler, Justice Rehnquist said:

"The California court undertook to decide two clearly federal questions relating to the meaning of the word 'Legislatures' in the above clause [referring to Article V of the U.S. Constitution]: (1) whether that word encompasses the voters of a State who have power to enact laws by initiative, and (2) whether it includes a legislature not acting as an independent body, but forced to act by exercise of the initiative power. The court answered each of these questions in the negative, concluding that the word 'Legislatures' means the State's lawmaking body of elected representatives, acting independently of restrictions imposed by state law. These federal questions are important and by no means settled: however, because the California court went on to hold the proposed initiative invalid on independent state-law grounds, I am satisfied that a majority of this Court would conclude that there is an adequate and independent state ground for the California court's decision.

"After a detailed analysis of California law and a discussion of the treatment of similar questions by other state courts, the Supreme Court of California decided that important portions of the proposed initiative were not 'statutes,' as that term is used in the California Constitution, but were 'resolutions,' and were therefore not a proper subject of the initiative process under the California Constitution.... We have long held that we will not review state-court decisions such as this, largely for the reason that decisions on the federal questions in such cases would amount to no more that advisory opinions." (emphasis added).

Congress elected to provide no leadership regarding rules for state ratification conventions in the ratification of the 21st Amendment, thus leaving the entire matter in state hands. See A CONSTITUTIONAL CONVENTION: THREAT OR CHALLENGE (1981) (Edel), p. 97. Thus the states had no choice but to use their own authority, based on their own constitutions and laws to carry out the federally mandated action.

- 1 issues had to be dealt with using state authority to accomplish the required
- 2 vote on ratification. The states used laws created by the state legislatures,
- 3 and thus state authority, to handle the counting, printing and distribution of
- 4 ballots, the establishment of polling locations, the monitoring of elections,
- 5 and the establishment of the number of delegates and place and time of the
- 6 ratifying convention. In other words, the matter could not be accomplished
- 7 without state constitutional authority. Hawke states the ratification is not
- 8 based on state constitutional authority but on federal constitutional
- 9 authority, yet there is no expressed provision in the Constitution regarding
- 10 such elections except for allowing Congress to establish a uniform time for
- 11 federal elections. 1116 Indeed, Hawke, which was in effect before the 21st
- 12 Amendment, clearly states the amendatory procedure rests solely in the federal
- 13 Constitution and not the state constitutions.
- 14 Was this ratification vote therefore unconstitutional because it
- 15 violated Hawke and used state authority? No. Why? Because the actions of the
- 16 states were, in one way or another, previous to the final ratification action
- 17 required under the Constitution. The state authority served as a framework
- 18 that the individual states used to reach a final decision on the ratification over elections, though strictly speaking the article only empowers Congress to regulate the election of its own members and not convention delegates either to a convention to propose amendments or to a state ratification convention. Therefore this provision would be a doubtful source of authority for Congress to act to regulate in this manner. See infra text accompanying notes 1338,1453.

&quot;The Times, places and Manner hold elections for senators and representatives shall be prescribed in each state by the Legislature thereof; but the Congress may at any time by Law make or alter such regulations, except as to the places of choosing Senators." U.S. CONST., art. I, § 4 §§ 1.

- 1 of the amendment. A public vote before a state legislature votes on
- 2 ratification is merely another form of framework and therefore can be no less
- 3 legal than the ratification vote of the 21st Amendment. By use of a vote, the
- 4 state legislatures gather input from the sovereign source. The core concept of
- 5 representative government holds that government represents the views of the
- 6 people the representatives were elected to represent. 1117
- 7 If ratification is an approbation of elected state representatives who
- 8 are to reflect the will of the people in the matter, how can those state
- 9 representatives determine what is the will of the people if they have no

 $<sup>^{1117}</sup>$  "In America the people appoint the legislative and the executive power and furnish the jurors who punish all infractions of the laws. The institutions are democratic, not only in their principle, but in all their consequences; and the people elect their representatives directly, and for the most part annually, in order to ensure their dependence. The people are therefore the real directing power; and although the form of government is representative, it is evident that the opinions, the prejudices, the interests, and even the passions of the people are hindered by no permanent obstacles from exercising a perpetual influence on the daily conduct of affairs. In the United States the majority governs in the name of the people, as is the case in all countries in which the people are supreme. This majority is principally composed of peaceable citizens, who, either by inclination or by interest, sincerely wish the welfare of their country. But they are surrounded by the incessant agitation of parties, who attempt to gain their cooperation and support." Alexis de Tocqueville, DEMOCRACY IN AMERICA (1835). (emphasis added).

&quot;There is no position which depends on clearer principles, than that every act of a delegated authority, contrary to the tenor of the commission under which it is exercised, is void. No legislative act therefore contrary to the constitution can be valid. To deny this would be affirm that the deputy is greater than his principal; that the servant is above his master; that the representatives of the people are superior to the people themselves; that men acting by virtue of powers may do not only what their powers do not authorize, but what they forbid.

&quot;If it be said that the legislative body are themselves the constitutional judges of their own powers, and that the construction they put on them is conclusive upon the other departments, it may be answered, that this cannot be the natural presumption, where it is not to be collected from any particular provisions in the constitution. It is not otherwise to be supposed that the constitution could intend to enable the representatives of the people to substitute their will to that of their constituents." THE FEDERALIST, No. 78, Alexander Hamilton, April 4, 1788. (emphasis added).

1 authority to place the matter before them in order to find out? The

2 proposition that indirect political elections for officeholders will suffice

3 to replace direct elections on the specific matter is weak at best. It is

4 quite possible a candidate for legislative office may be elected without the

5 subject matter of a particular proposed amendment ever being discussed once

6 during the election. Hence, the idea of the legislator knowing the will of the 7 people without benefit of a vote on the issue is essentially vaporous. Opinion

8 polls may reflect the mood and disposition of the people, but opinion polls

9 are not elections, and legislatures purporting to know the will of the people

10 based solely on opinion polls run the risk of great condemnation when

11 elections are held, not to mention just being plain wrong in their assumptions. Clearly, those states that would have the question posed directly to the people before acting on a ratification question demonstrate the greatest obedience to the concepts of democratic government.

The Court's pronouncement in Hawke that referendums may not be used to review a legislative ratification vote in no way conflicts with the proposition expressed in this suit that such elections and initiatives are 18 legal as means to compel state action or express the opinion of the people in regard to ratification and application matters if such a vote is made previous to a vote by the state legislature and may even be binding upon the 21 legislature if that legislature so chooses, either by terms expressed in its

22 state constitution or by legislative act. That the legislature, under that

-

12

13

14

16

17

19

20

 $<sup>^{1118}\</sup> See\ supra$  text accompanying note 1113.

- 1 method of ratification prescribed in Article V of the Constitution, must have
- 2 final say in the matter, i.e., the official position of the state must be as a
- 3 result of a vote taken from that source, is not disputed; as to how that state
- 4 legislature reaches that decision is clearly a state matter. 1119
- 5 The only conclusion that may be drawn from Hawke and Coleman is the
- 6 Court meant for Congress to be the "owner" of the Constitution exclusive from
- 7 any input of the people. The Court's reckless language unconstitutionally
- 8 removed the sovereignty of the people from the Constitution. While the Court
- 9 may state the people have sovereignty 1120 and all power flows from them and so
- 10 on and so forth, if in reality the Court states the people possess
- 11 sovereignty, then denies any reasonable means for the people to employ that
- 12 sovereignty in the decision-making process of amending their Constitution,
- 13 which is to say, removes the people from controlling the Constitution, as the
- 14 amendments are designed to control the scope, direction, effect and limits of &lt;sup>1119</sup> In Hawke v Smith, 253 U.S 221 (1920), the Court clearly based its decision on the concept that "representative assemblies would reflect the will of the people." How can it be held that a state legislature that is in no way bound to heed the people in ratification or application matters reflects the will of the people better than an a specific initiative on the subject, a vote that would reflect the will of the people and compel the legislature to act in that reflective manner?

Article V only provides that Congress choose one of two methods of ratification, that Congress may propose amendments, that if the legislatures apply in sufficient number it must call a convention to propose amendments, and nothing more. Nothing in the Constitution states how the state legislatures must arrive at their decision in such matters as ratification. Thus the legislatures are free to enact, if they so choose, binding initiatives on such questions provided the legislature still performs the actual recording of the vote so as to satisfy the Constitution.

1120 "The Constitution of the United States was established not by the states in their sovereign capacities, but by the people of the United States." Martin v. Hunter's Lessee, 14 U.S. 304 (1816); "Under the constitution sovereignty in the United States resides in the people." Kennett v. Chambers, 55 U.S. 38 (1852).

- 1 that document, it can only be concluded that the sovereignty of the people has
- 2 ceased to exist, and the authority of the Constitution thus must be based on
- 3 some concept of law other than the alleged sovereignty of the people.
- 4 If the people are not permitted to express their support or opposition
- 5 to a proposed amendment in such a way as to be considered a free collective
- 6 expression of popular will, then popular sovereignty, i.e., the will of the
- 7 people, becomes questionable. As legislatures are free to arrive at a decision
- 8 entirely independent of the people they represent, and as legislators are
- 9 permitted to ignore such an expression of popular will by considering it "non-
- 10 binding", as per Hawke and other decisions, 1121 then popular sovereignty
- 11 becomes even more questionable. Considering this, do the people have any
- 12 sovereignty? Has not the Court fulfilled Colonel Mason's worst fear? 1122

&quot;The Supreme Court of Nevada said with respect to the statute that it 'does not concern a binding referendum, nor does it impose a limitation upon the legislature. As already noted, the legislature may vote for or against ratification, or refrain from voting on ratification at all, without regard to the advisory vote. The recommendation of the voters is advisory only.'

&quot;Under these circumstances, applicants' reliance upon this Court's decisions in Leser v. Garnett, 258 U.S. 130 (1922) and Hawke v. Smith, 253 U.S. 221 (1920) is obviously misplaced. Both seem to me to stand for the proposition that the two methods for state ratification of proposed constitutional amendments set forth in Art. V of the United States Constitution are exclusive: Ratification must be the legislatures of three-fourths of the states or by convention in three-fourths of the States...

&quot;Under the Nevada statute in question, ratification will still depend on the vote of the Nevada Legislature, as provided by Congress and by Art. V. I would be most disinclined to read either Hawke, supra, or Leser, supra, or Art. V as ruling out communication between the members of the legislature and their constituents. If each member of the Nevada Legislature is free to obtain the views of constituents in the legislative district which he represents, I can see no constitutional obstacle to a nonbinding, advisory referendum of this sort." Kimble v. Swackhamer, 439 U.S. 1385 (1978). (emphasis added). (Opinion of Justice Rehnquist, Circuit Justice).

1122 "The plan now to be formed will certainly be defective, as the

The plan now to be formed will certainly be defective, as the confederation has been found on trial to be. Amendments therefore will be necessary, at it will be better to provide for them, in an easy, regular and Constitutional way than to trust to chance and violence. It would be improper to require the consent of the Natl. Legislature, because they may abuse their

2

The Limited Powers of the Court

3

- 4 There is no question that the Court possesses the right to declare
- 5 actions (or laches) of Congress, the Executive or even the Court itself
- 6 unconstitutional. That this power is by implication, i.e., derived from
- 7 judicial determination rather than expressed constitutional edict, is well
- 8 known. 1123 It follows, however, that such implied power must invariably yield
- 9 to expressed provisions in the Constitution. 1124
- 10 Based on the Supreme Court cases discussed, 1125 it appears the Court has
- 11 held two positions that clearly reject the transcendent right of the people to power, and refuse their consent on that very account. The opportunity for such an abuse, may be the fault of the Constitution calling for amendmt." See supratext accompanying notes 362,363.

<sup>1123</sup> Marbury v. Madison, 5 U.S. 137 (1803).

1124 Clearly, in a limited constitutional system, implied powers "found" in a constitution must be derived from expressed provisions of the Constitution. As the Constitution is an expression of the sovereign will of the people, it follows that any interpretation derived from that document must be subservient to the expressed provisions of the Constitution. See supra text accompanying note 1117.

In constitutional law, one is committed to a certain logic. The use of inductive logic is excluded. One cannot have a situation, start from that point and work backwards to construe the expressed language of the Constitution to fit that situation, altering the clear meaning and intent of the words, as needed to the point of even ignoring them entirely. Fortunately, even judicial activists are forced to begin at the beginning, starting with the Constitution and its words then attempting to bend them, however stiffly, to fit the mold they wish to form.

Thus, while it is conceded that implied powers have as much force in law as expressed provisions of the Constitution once such implications are "discovered", that is not the point here. The point is that such implications must be derived from expressed language of the Constitution, and in this sense, therefore, it is supreme to implied provisions as these cannot exist unless the express language creating them exists in a logical, judicially defensible way. Simply put, there must a grant of expressed power in the general sense before there can be an implication in the specific sense.

1125 See supra text accompanying notes 1029-1108.

- 1 alter or abolish their government and thus lend comfort to a Congress wishing,
- 2 for strictly political reasons, 1126 not to call a convention. It has ruled that

"Since the amendment has by definition lost in Congress by the time thirty-four applications arrive, sufficient votes for a period longer than six or seven years would probably be lacking, unless as simple majority in each house favored the amendment sufficiently to extend the deadline in hopes of eventually reaching the two-thirds necessary to carry the amendment itself, or of obtaining the convention demanded in the applications...

"With guidelines for validity and deadlines for effectiveness established, and with at least one application found defective or stale, pressure would shift back to the states whose petitions were rejected, and the cycle would resume. The applying states would by no means automatically resubmit corrected applications, since the legislatures in the early states would have had major changes in personnel, and might have voted on the applications originally with little realization or their possible impact."

The same author added:

"Congress in modern times has by and large maintained that a convention cannot be limited. This view, however sincerely arrived at, happens also to be useful in dissuading states from submitting applications, thereby leaving Congress in exclusive control of the amendment process. For the same reason Congress, especially the liberal establishment concentrated for the last thirty years in the House of Representatives, has an interest in leaving the route undefined. Don Edwards, chair of a House Judiciary subcommittee finds 'no assurance' that a national convention 'could not be a runaway,' and opposes a procedures bill on the ground that it would aid the drive for a convention: 'Anything that encourages this sort of utilization of Article V is unwise.' The more obscure the process, the easier it is for Congress to discourage pressure by rejecting applications on technical grounds—a phenomenon that has been aptly called the 'politics of uncertainty.'

"For this reason Congress has never established a procedure for receiving and verifying applications, never promulgated guidelines for applications or for the convention itself. Congress could have done so long ago, Justice Scalia has said, by amending article V if necessary. 'But the Congress is not about to do that. It likes the existing confusion, because that deters resort to the convention process. It does not want amending power to be anywhere but in its own hands.'" Caplan, Constitutional Brinksmanship: Amending the Constitution by National Convention (1988), p.114, 161-162. (emphasis added). See supra text accompanying notes 1063-1065.

&lt;sup>1126</sup> There is no question that Congress has failed to act for political reasons alone. As one author observed in discussing the proposed Balanced Budget Amendment:

&quot;...Congress would give the states a certain amount of time to revise applications. The parties could then adjust strategy, the states deciding if they wanted to continue pressing for an amendment, and if so whether from Congress or a convention; Congress examining the applications to see how many could be repelled. A major altercation would be like to occur regarding the length of time applications stay effective, since a faction in Congress might favor the amendment and advocate a long period to include as many applications as possible...

- 1 votes of the people cannot be part of the federal amendatory process  $^{1127}$  and
- 2 that Congress has exclusive and unbridled control of that amendatory
- 3 process. 1128 Combined, these decisions appear to render any concept of "the
- 4 right of the people to alter or abolish" "nugatory and void." 1130 But is
- 5 this so? Can the Supreme Court negate the transcendent right of the people to
- 6 alter or abolish?
- 7 The simple answer to this question is no. 1131
- 8 If the people attempt to void the prescribed methods of amendment as
- 9 established in the Constitution, the Court is obligated and clearly possesses
- 10 the power to intercede and prevent such aberrations of the Constitution as the
- 11 cited cases demonstrate. In each case, however, there is a commonality, and it
- 12 is the commonality of these cases that is paramount, not their specific issue.
- 13 In each suit, an attempt was made to circumvent the clearly defined
- 14 method of amendment. Each suit asked the Court to judicially "write in"
- 15 provisions in Article V that were not expressed, in other words, to change the

BRIEF IN SUPPORT OF CONVENTION GENERAL BRIEF ARGUMENTS PAGE 488

<sup>1127</sup> Hawke v. Smith, 495 U.S. 221 (1920); State of Rhode Island v. Palmer, 253
U.S. 350 (1920); Leser v. Garnet, 258 U.S. 130 (1922); Uhler v. AFL-CIO, 468
U.S. 1310 (1984).

<sup>1128</sup> Coleman v. Miller, 307 U.S. 433 (1939).

Declaration of Independence (1776).

<sup>1130</sup> FEDERALIST No. 40. See supra text accompanying note 1659.

Indeed, in one of its earliest cases, the Supreme Court made it abundantly clear the right of the people to alter or abolish was supreme even to their constitutional powers, a statement not refuted by any of the cited cases.

The Court said:

&quot;The people limit and restrain the power of the legislature, acting under a delegated authority; but they impose no restraint on themselves. They could have said by an amendment to the constitution, that no judicial authority should be exercised, in any case, under the United States; and, if they had said so, could a court be held, or a judge proceed, on any judicial business, past or future, from the moment of adopting the amendment? On general ground, then, it was in the power of the people to annihilate the whole..." Hollingsworth v. Virginia, 3 U.S. 378 (1798).

- 1 methods and procedures laid out for amending the Constitution so as fulfill
- 2 some narrow political ambition even though those who had proposed and ratified
- 3 a particular amendment had followed the amendatory procedure in Article V. The
- 4 Court properly refused and thus established the constitutional principal that
- 5 where the amendatory procedure is followed, the courts cannot be used to
- 6 overturn it.
- 7 Conversely, the Court established that if the amendatory procedure is
- 8 complied with, the courts are obligated to enforce it. Therefore, where the
- 9 people have properly followed the amendatory process of the Constitution by
- 10 acting through their state legislatures, and have thus submitted applications
- 11 as prescribed by the Constitution in the proper number so as to amount to two-
- 12 thirds or more of the several states, thus satisfying the sole requirement
- 13 placed upon them by the Constitution in order to compel the calling of a
- 14 convention to propose amendments, then neither the courts nor the Congress may
- 15 stand in their way.
- 16 The power of the Court is therefore severely limited to that of
- 17 enforcement of Article V, as the constitutional requirements to compel a
- 18 convention to propose amendments have been satisfied. Hawke, Coleman, et al.,
- 19 and the powers therein granted by the Court to Congress cannot be employed to
- 20 thwart a convention to propose amendments. The Court's job is to enforce the
- 21 Constitution, not further the selfish ambitions of politicians. Therefore it
- 22 is obligatory on the Court to enforce the Constitution and declare the laches
- 23 of Congress unconstitutional and, if necessary, void those parts of Hawke and
- 24 Coleman that are in conflict with this fact.

1 One issue remains that must be resolved before the Court may act. The

2 issue is the transcendent nature of the right to alter or abolish. If the

- 3 right is transcendent, i.e., above the Constitution, and the courts are
- 4 limited to deciding cases arising only under the Constitution,  $^{1132}$  then a
- 5 dilemma arises. How can the courts act in any constitutional capacity to
- 6 protect or otherwise enforce a right which, by definition of those who created
- 7 it, is transcendent, or supreme, to the document which must be employed to
- 8 bring about such enforcement and protection? If the Constitution must be used
- 9 in order to protect or enforce this right, doesn't this mean this
- 10 "transcendent" right is not transcendent at all but subservient to the
- 11 Constitution, and therefore no such "right" exists supreme to the
- 12 Constitution, that in fact it was not created by the Treaty of Paris and
- 13 therefore is not protected under the interpretations cited in this suit which
- 14 would hold such rights immune from congressional interference? 1133
- 15 If this is so, then surely those governmental bodies created in the
- 16 Constitution, such as Congress, must be supreme to the right to alter or
- 17 abolish. Under its implied legislative powers, 1134 can Congress therefore not
- 18 define, regulate, subjugate or even abolish this right, and does this not in

BRIEF IN SUPPORT OF CONVENTION GENERAL BRIEF ARGUMENTS PAGE 490

&quot;The judicial Power shall extend to all Cases, in Law and Equity, arising under this Constitution, the Laws of the United States, and Treaties made, or which shall be made..." U.S. CONST., art. III,  $\S$  2  $\S\S$  1.

 $<sup>^{1133}</sup>$  See supra text accompanying notes 950-956.  $^{1134}$  "To make all Laws which shall be necessary and proper for carrying into Execution the foregoing Powers, and all other Powers vested by this Constitution in the Government of the United States, or in any Department or Officer thereof." U.S. CONST., art. I § 8, §§ 18.

1	turn mean that Congress is indeed sovereign and the right of the people to
2	alter or abolish is, in reality, no more than just well-penned rhetoric?
3	To answer this question, this suit must turn away from Article V, on
4	which it has been focused, and turn to other parts of the Constitution, most
5	notably the amendments.
6
7
8	THE CONVENTION AND THE AMENDMENTS
9
10	INTRODUCTION
11
12	There are three amendments to the United States Constitution that have
13	direct bearing on a convention to propose amendments. The first two
14	amendments, the $9^{\text{th}}$ and $10^{\text{th}}$ , serve to strengthen the case that Congress cannot
15	ignore the Constitution and therefore must call a convention to propose
16	amendments. Further, the $9^{\text{th}}$ Amendment firmly establishes the right to alter
17	or abolish as a constitutional right and not well-penned rhetoric. The $14^{ m th}$
18	Amendment serves to answer all of the organizational objections that opponent
19	have raised regarding a convention to propose amendments, objections that
20	essentially echoed the questions raised by Madison at the original
21	Constitutional Convention. 1135

&quot;Mr. Madison did not see why Congress would not be as much bound to propose amendments applied for by two-thirds of the States as to call a Convention on the like application. He saw no objection however against providing for a Convention for the purpose of amendments, except only that difficulties might arise as to the form, the quorum &c. which in

1 2 3 THE NINTH AMENDMENT 4 The  $9^{\text{th}}$  Amendment to the Constitution consists of a single sentence 5 6 which states: 7 "The enumeration in the Constitution, of certain rights, shall not be construed to deny or disparage others retained by the people." 1136 8 9 The meaning of the 9th Amendment is straightforward and best described 10 by its author, James Madison, who said: "It has been objected also against a bill of rights, that, by 11 12 enumerating particular exceptions to the grant of power, it would disparage 13 those rights which were not placed in that enumeration; and it might follow by 14 implication, that those rights which were not singled out, were intended to be 15 assigned into the hands of the General Government, and were consequently 16 insecure. This is one of the most plausible arguments I have ever heard urged 17 against the admission of a bill of rights into this system; but, I conceive, 18 that it may be quarded against. I have attempted it, as gentlemen may see by 19 turning to the last clause of the fourth resolution [the Ninth Amendment]." I Annals of Congress 439 (Gales and Seaton ed. 1834).  $11\overline{3}$ 20 Madison's intent is quite clear: 1138 the sole purpose of the amendment is 21 22 to protect from government infringement or obstruction those rights of the Constitutional regulations ought to be as much as possible avoided." See supra text accompanying note 438.

people not expressly enumerated in the first eight amendments to the Constitution or otherwise specified elsewhere in that document. The 9th

23

24

<sup>1136</sup> U.S. CONST., 9th Amend.

&lt;sup>1137</sup> Griswold v. Connecticut, 381 U.S. 479 (1965).

<sup>1138</sup> The term "particular exceptions to the grant of power" is an important and often overlooked term in this passage. Clearly, it demonstrates Madison's belief that a bill of rights limited the rights of the people, not expanded them. This is not surprising as it was Madison who had referred to the "transcendent and precious right of the people to 'abolish or alter their government as to them shall seem most likely to effect their safety and happiness'" in FEDERALIST No. 40 in January, 1788, no more than a year earlier. Logically, a transcendent power is limited if it is enumerated for the very reason expressed by Madison in his comments that the rest of the power might fall away or be considered powers of the government.

- 1 Amendment is the Constitution's necessary and proper clause for the protection
- 2 of the individual rights of the people.
- 3 Despite its apparent broad scope, however, the amendment has been little
- 4 used by the courts with the exception of Griswold and  $Roe\ v.\ Wade.^{1139}$  In
- 5 Griswold, Justice Goldberg expounded two principals regarding the 9th
- 6 Amendment. He established:
  - 1. The purpose of the amendment is to protect "basic and fundamental rights" not enumerated in the Constitution;
  - 2. The words of the 9th Amendment are not mere rhetoric and that it "cannot be presumed that any clause in the constitution is intended to be without effect" Marbury v. Madison, 1 Cranch 137, 174 [1803]. In interpreting the Constitution, "real effect should be given to all the words it uses." Myers v. United States, 272 U.S. 52 [1926]." 1140

14 As Justice Goldberg phrased it:

"In sum the Ninth Amendment simply lends strong support to the view that the 'liberty' protected by the Fifth and Fourteenth Amendments from infringement by the Federal Government or the States is not restricted to rights specifically mentioned in the first eight amendments. United Public Workers v. Mitchell, 330 U.S. 75 [1947]."

And how does the Court determine what is a basic and fundamental right

21 of the people?

7

8 9 10

11

12

13

15

16 17

18 19

20

22

23

24 25

26

27

28

29 30

31

32

33

"In determining which rights are fundamental, judges are not left at large to decide case in light of their personal and private notions. Rather, they must look to the 'traditions and [collective] conscience of our people' to determine whether a principle is 'so rooted [there] ... as to be ranked as fundamental' Snyder v. Massachusetts, 291 U.S. 97, 105 [1934]. The inquiry is whether a right involved 'is of such a character that it cannot be denied without violating those 'fundamental principles of liberty and justice which lie at the base of all our civil and political institutions'"... Powell v. Alabama 287 U.S. 45, 67 [1932]. 'Liberty' also 'grains content from the emanations of ... specific [constitutional] guarantees' and 'from experience with the requirements of a free society.' Poe v. Ullman, 367 U.S. 497, 517 [1961] (dissenting opinion of Mr. Justice Douglas)."

34 These questions are critical to the argument. Is the right of the people

35 to alter or abolish their government so rooted in the traditions and

1

&lt;sup>1139</sup> 410 U.S. 307 (1975).

 $<sup>^{1140}</sup>$  Griswold v. Connecticut, 381 U.S. 479 (1965).

&lt;sup>1141</sup> Id.

&lt;sup>1142</sup> Id.

- 1 collective conscience of the American people as to be ranked as a fundamental
- 2 and basic right? Is this right of such a character that it cannot be denied
- 3 without violating the fundamental principals of liberty and justice that lie
- 4 at the base of all our civil and political institutions? If so, should not
- 5 this right receive protection from government obstruction under the rubrics of
- 6 the 9th Amendment?
- 7 The answer is obvious. This right is the fundamental principal of
- 8 liberty and justice in our nation. Many of the more frequently referred to
- 9 rights, such as freedom of speech, freedom of peaceful assemblage and
- 10 petition, due process, presumption of innocence at trial, freedom of the press
- 11 but to name a few, are merely freedoms and rights that have branched out from
- 12 this root American right. Each branch has the power to alter or even abolish
- 13 parts of government or decisions rendered by it. Collectively and
- 14 individually, they form the very heart, soul and mind of the American system
- of liberty and justice. 1143 These branches draw sustenance from the root that
- 16 feeds them. What happens to a tree if the root is cut out? How can rights that
- 17 affect the government be preserved if the right to effect the changes on
- 18 government is not?

_

&lt;sup>1143</sup> A careful examination of the Declaration of Independence shows that most, if not all, of the complaints against the British government in that document became rights guaranteed in the Bill of Rights or served as the basis for limiting government somewhere else in the Constitution. The most fundamental of these rights expressed in the Declaration of Independence was the right of the people to alter or abolish their government, for without securing this right, none of the other rights could be achieved.

1 True, the phrase, "right of the people to alter or abolish" does not

2 appear anywhere in the Constitution. 1144 But if there is a phrase in that

- 3 document that defines that right, that describes the fundamental belief of the
- 4 American people that their government is created to serve the people that
- 5 created it, not the other way around, it is "We, the People...do ordain and
- 6 establish this Constitution." 1145
- 7 Clearly, the exercise of the right to alter or abolish by the people,
- 8 when they have followed prescribed constitutional methods, must receive  $9^{\text{th}}$
- 9 Amendment protection if for no other reason than to guarantee all other rights
- 10 in the Constitution are protected. Where Congress, either by laches or act,
- 11 for political or other reasons, attempts to deny this right, such laches or
- 12 act must be removed. In this specific case, the laches by Congress to call a
- 13 convention to propose amendments clearly denies the people their right to
- 14 alter or abolish and thus violates Article V of the Constitution as well as
- 15 the 9th Amendment.
- 16 There can be no support for Congress possessing implied legislative
- 17 powers to regulate, subjugate or abolish this right. A weak argument would
- 18 propose that if this so-called "transcendent" right must suffer constitutional &lt;sup>1144</sup> The right to alter or abolish, however, is not without constitutional support. Through the implied powers of the Treaty of Paris, (see supra text accompanying notes 944-1020) and the treaty clause of the Constitution (U.S. CONST., art. VI § 2 "This Constitution and the Laws of the United States which shall be made in Pursuance thereof; and all Treaties made, or which shall be made, under the Authority of the United States, shall be the supreme Law of the Land..." (emphasis added), it becomes law of the land.  $^{1145}$  U.S. CONST., Preamble.

- 1 protection in order to exist, it therefore cannot be transcendent and thus is
- 2 subject to congressional regulation.
- 3 This misses the heart of the matter entirely. History has repeatedly
- 4 shown the very nature of government, however benevolently established, (and
- 5 this was clearly understood by the Founding Fathers) will, left unchecked, or
- 6 more frequently, unguarded, invariably choose to expand itself and its powers
- 7 at the expense of the liberties of the citizens it was established to protect.
- 8 Few in history have ever demanded a tyranny as a preferred form of government.
- 9 Rather tyranny evolved, like a cancer, targeting first the very checks
- 10 designed to hold it at bay. So it is with the convention to propose
- 11 amendments, a fundamental check in our system of government. It is no surprise
- 12 that Congress has thwarted it. This body is neither disposed to share power
- 13 nor yield it up gracefully. 1146
- 14 It is not inconsistent, therefore, that a right claimed to be
- 15 transcendent by the Founding Fathers suffers constitutional protection in
- 16 order to effectuate it. The pragmatics of law and the realities of
- 17 congressional actions 1147 leave no other choice in the matter if this
- 18 fundamental right is to be preserved. The 9th Amendment was specifically
- 19 placed in the Constitution by the Founding Fathers in order to deal with such
- 20 contingencies to preserve the rights of the people that were not enumerated
- 21 but nevertheless were and are as sacred and precious as those named in the
- 22 Constitution.

See supra text accompanying note 1126.

&lt;sup>1147</sup> See supra text accompanying notes 593-613.

1	To deny $9^{\text{th}}$ Amendment protection to this right, thus affirming that
2	Congress may refuse to call a convention to propose amendments when the proper
3	number of states has applied as they now have done, operating under the
4	authority of the people exercising their right to alter or abolish, is to do
5	nothing less than feed a great amount of fertilizer to the cancerous weed of
6	tyranny and violate the very spirit and principal of the Constitution.
7
8
9	THE TENTH AMENDMENT
10
11 12 13 14	The $10^{\rm th}$ Amendment to the Constitution states: "The powers not delegated to the United States by the Constitution, nor prohibited by it to the states, are reserved to the states respectively, or to the people." $^{1148}$
15	Few proponents of ultra vires congressional regulation of the convention
16	have addressed the primary issue raised by this single sentence of the 17	Constitution: whether the convention to propose amendments is a "power" of the
18	United States (i.e., Congress) or is a "power" of the states or of the people.
19	The importance of this question cannot be over-stressed. If the convention to
20	propose amendments is a power of the federal government, then regulation by
21	the government may be proper. 1149 But if the convention to propose amendments
22	is a state power, then congressional regulation is prohibited. And if it is a power of the people, then neither the federal nor the state governments may regulate it. The problem at first appears a complex one as the Congress and

23

24

U.S. CONST., 10th Amend.

However, many questions must be answered before such a conclusion could be reached. See supra text accompanying notes 524-831.

- the states apparently "share" in the authority of calling a convention to 1
- propose amendments. Is this actually so? 2
- It is the transcendent right of the people to alter or abolish their 3
- government. 1150 It is the constitutional power of the states, acting on behalf 4
- 5 of the people, to apply for a convention to propose amendments. 1151 The two
- 6 powers are neither mutually exclusive nor in conflict with one another. As
- noted in  ${\it Hawke}$ ,  $^{1152}$  in the amendatory process the state legislatures serve as 7
- 8 representative bodies to express the will of the people, thus becoming the
- mechanism<sup>1153</sup> whereby the people exercise their right to alter or abolish. 9
- 10 Thus, the constitutionally protected right to alter or  $abolish^{1154}$  becomes a
- 11 constitutional mechanism by which the people's desire to alter or abolish
- their form of government is implemented. Logically, if the right to alter or 12
- 13 abolish is constitutionally protected, so must be the mechanism that
- effectuates that right. 14
- The right in this suit is the right of the people to alter or abolish. 15
- 16 While the states certainly are part of the amendatory process, because the
- 17 purpose of the convention is to alter the Constitution by amendment, it
- 18 follows the convention to propose amendments is ultimately a power of the
- 19 people even though the power is derived from a provision found in the federal
- Constitution. As indicated by the words of the  $10^{th}$  Amendment, not all 20

 $<sup>^{1150}</sup>$  See supra text accompanying notes 1136-1147.

<sup>1151</sup> See supra text accompanying note 2.

&lt;sup>1152</sup> See supra text accompanying notes 1031-1041.

However, this mechanism is transitory in nature. See supra text accompanying notes 907-920.

See supra text accompanying note 1150.

- 1 language contained in the Constitution was intended for the exclusive benefit
- 2 of the federal government as a means to expand its powers; much of the
- 3 language in the document is designed to accomplish the exact opposite. 1155

"As every schoolchild learns, our Constitution establishes a system of dual sovereignty between the states and the Federal Government. This court also has recognized this fundamental principle. In Taffin v. Levitt, 493 U.S. 455, 458 (1990), '[w]e beg[a]n with the axiom that, under our federal system, the States possess sovereignty concurrent with that of the Federal Government, subject only to limitations imposed by the Supremacy Clause.' Over 120 years ago, the Court described the constitutional scheme of dual sovereigns:

"'"[T]he people of each State compose a State, having its own government, and endowed with all the functions essential to separate and independent existence."..."[W]ithout the States in union, there could be no such political body as the United States." Not only, therefore, can there be no loss of separate and independent autonomy to the States, through their union under the Constitution, but it may be not unreasonably said that the preservation of the States, and the maintenance of their governments, are as much within the design and care of the Constitution as the preservation of the Union and the maintenance of the National government. The Constitution, in all its provisions, looks to an indestructible Union, composed of indestructible States.' Texas v. White, 7 Wall, 700, 725 (1869), quoting Lane County v. Oregon, 7 Wall. 71, 76 (1869).

"The Constitution created a Federal Government of limited powers. 'The powers not delegated to the United States by the Constitution, nor prohibited by it to the States, are reserved to the States respectively, or to the people.' U.S. CONST.,  $10^{\rm th}$  Amend. The States thus retain substantial sovereign authority under our constitutional system...

"Just as the separation and independence of the coordinate Branches of the Federal Government serve to prevent the accumulation of excessive power in any one Branch, a healthy balance of power between the States and Federal Government will reduce the risk of tyranny and abuse from either front. Alexander Hamilton explained to the people of New York, perhaps optimistically, that the new federalist system would suppress completely 'the attempts of the government to establish a tyranny':

"'[I]n a confederacy the people, without exaggeration, may be said to be entirely the masters of their own fate. Power being almost always the rival of power, the general government will at all times stand ready to check usurpations of the state governments, and these will have the same disposition towards the general government. The people, by throwing themselves into either scale, will infallibly make it preponderate. If their rights are invaded by either, they can make use of their other as the instrument of redress.' The FEDERALIST No 28, pp. 180-181 (C. Rossiter ed. 1961)...

"One fairly can dispute whether our federalist system has been quite as successful in checking government abuse as Hamilton promised, but there is no doubt about the design. If this 'double security' is to be effective, there must be a proper balance between the states and the Federal Government. These twin powers will act as mutual restraints only if both are credible. In the tension between federal and state power lies the promise of liberty.

 $<sup>^{1155}</sup>$  As noted by the Supreme Court in Gregory v. Ashcroft, 501 U.S. 452 (1991) when it said:

- 1 Thus, it is not a question of editorial locution, but use of power that is
- 2 fundamental in the matter. Who is empowered to use this proposal provision in
- 3 the Constitution? Certainly it is not Congress; that body has a separate
- 4 amendatory proposal power in the Constitution. 1156 It would seem by process of
- 5 elimination, the convention to propose amendments is a state power that the
- 6 clear language of the Constitution demonstrates is equal in all respects to
- 7 that of the congressional method of amendment, 1157 but this term, "state
- 8 power", as the Court has observed, must be applied carefully. 1158 While the

"The Federal Government holds a decided advantage in delicate balance: the Supremacy Clause. U.S. CONST., Art. VI. As long as it is acting within the powers granted it under the Constitution, Congress may impose its will on the states. Congress may legislate in areas traditionally regulated by the States. This is an extraordinary power in a federalist system. It is a power that we must assume Congress does not exercise lightly." (emphasis added).

It should be noted the Court did not mention or even intimate congressional interference in the amendatory process as it clearly limited congressional interference to legislative matters. As the Court said in an earlier case:

"The [Tenth] Amendment expressly declares the constitutional policy that Congress may not exercise power in a fashion that impairs the States' integrity or their ability to function effectively in a federal system." National League of Cities v. Usery, 426 U.S. 833 (1976). (emphasis added). 1156 U.S. CONST., art. V.

1157 U.S. CONST., art. V.; see supra text accompanying notes 506-513.
1158 "In discussing this question, the counsel for the state of Maryland have deemed it of some importance in the construction of the constitution, to consider that instrument not as emanating from the people, but as the act of sovereign and independent States. The powers of the general government, it has been said, are delegated by the states, who alone are truly sovereign; and must be exercised in subordination to the states, who alone possess supreme dominion.

"It would be difficult to sustain this proposition. The Convention which framed the constitution was indeed elected by the state legislatures. But the instrument, when it came from their hands, was a mere proposal, without obligation, or pretensions to it. It was reported to the then existing Congress of the United States, with a request that it might 'be submitted to a convention of delegates, chosen in each State by the people thereof, under the recommendation of its legislature, for their assent and ratification.' This mode of proceeding was adopted; and by the convention, by Congress, and by the states legislatures, the instrument was submitted to the people. They acted upon it in the only manner in which they can act safely, effectively, and wisely, on such a subject, by assembling in convention. It is true, they assembled in their several States---and where else should they have assembled?

- 1 states play an important part in the convention to propose amendments, the
- 2 actual power itself is a power of the people.
- 3 But what of the convention call? As it is Congress that must call,
- 4 doesn't this mean the convention to propose amendments is a federal power
- 5 subject to congressional regulation? Incontestably, the convention call is a
- 6 power delegated by the Constitution expressly to Congress, but with
- 7 exceptional limits. The convention call is a mandated imperative on Congress
- 8 leaving that body no discretion in the matter. 1159 When prohibited by lack of
- 9 state applications, Congress cannot issue a call; when authorized by a
- 10 sufficient number of applications, Congress must call. Thus, Congress can only
- 11 call a convention to propose amendments when compelled to do so by the states'
- 12 action. In filing the applications with Congress, it clear only the states,
- 13 acting through their legislatures, may apply for a convention. Thus, in this

No political dreamer was ever wild enough to think of breaking down the lines which separate the States, and of compounding the American people into one common mass. Of consequence, when they act, they act in their States. But the measures they adopt do not, on that account, cease to be the measures of the people themselves, or become the means of the State governments.

"From these conventions the constitution derives its whole authority. The government proceeds directly from the people; is 'ordained and established' in the name of the people; and is declared to be ordained, 'in order to form a more perfect union, establish justice, ensure domestic tranquility, and secure the blessings of liberty to themselves and to their posterity.' The assent of the States, in their sovereign capacity, is implied in calling a convention, and thus submitting that instrument to the people. But the people were at perfect liberty to accept or reject it; and their act was final. It required not the affirmance, and could not be negatived, by the State governments. The constitution, when thus adopted, was of complete obligation, and bound the State sovereignties." McCulloch v. Maryland, 17 U.S. 316 (1819) (emphasis added).

Thus it is clear that while a convention to propose amendments is a "state power," that name is in fact a misnomer. The convention is actually an expression of the people's sovereignty. Therefore any "state power" must be viewed in the light of facilitating this sovereign expression as opposed to obstructing it. 1159 Td

1	limited	portion	of	the	convention	process,	the	matter	is	entirely	а	state
---	---------	---------	----	-----	------------	----------	-----	--------	----	----------	---	-------

- power, but as observed by the Court, a power presumed to be based on the will 2
- of the people. 1160 As Congress may only call when the states compel it, and 3
- cannot call unless permitted to do so by the states (through the action of 4
- 5 application), the convention call is actually a state power, and thus, under
- the terms of the  $10^{th}$  Amendment, is reserved to the states and therefore 6
- denied to Congress. 1161 However, once the states have acted to compel a 7
- convention, the matter passes from their purview and reverts to the people 8
- under their right to alter or abolish. 1162 Thus, the power is "reserved to the 9
- 10 states respectively, or to the people."

11

The Courts and the 10th Amendment 12

13

17

Throughout the history of the United States the 10th Amendment has been 14 15 used by those wishing to curtail the power of the federal government (usually expressed through acts of Congress) with varying degrees of success. The cases 16 have generally dealt with acts of Congress related to the commerce

<sup>1160</sup> See Hawke v. Smith, 253 U.S. 221 (1920). See supra text accompanying notes 25,272,1037,1119.

 $<sup>^{1161}</sup>$  Id. Even though the  $10^{\mathrm{th}}$  Amendment had not yet been written, it is clear the Founding Fathers were very concerned about preventing Congress from exclusively controlling the amendatory process and therefore intended the states have a separate proposal power. See supra text accompanying notes 435-437.

See supra text accompanying notes 921-1009;1136-1147.

- clause 1163 and perceived intrusions of this power into areas thought to be under
- 2 exclusive state sovereign authority.
- The courts have interpreted the meaning of the 10th Amendment 3
- differently throughout the years. Beginning with McCulloch, 1164 the Court said: 4
- "[T]he states have no power, by taxation or otherwise, to retard, 5
- impede, burden, or in any manner control the operations of the constitutional 6
- laws enacted by Congress to carry into execution the powers vested in the 7
- general government." 1165 8
- 9 Chief Justice John Marshall, author of the McCulloch decision, a few
- 10 years later expanded his pro-federal government expansionist interpretation of
- 11 the 10th Amendment when he wrote:
- 12 "Powerful and ingenious minds, taking as postulates, that the powers expressly granted to the government of the Union are to be contracted...into 13
- 14 the narrowest possible compass, and that the original powers of the States are
- 15 retained, if any possible construction will retain them, may...explain away
- 16 the constitution...and leave it a magnificent structure indeed, to look at, but totally unfit for use." 1166 17
- In the ensuing years, the Court reversed itself on the  $10^{th}$  Amendment. 18
- 19 Justice Owen J. Roberts wrote in 1936:
  - "From the accepted doctrine that the United States is a government of delegated powers, it follows that those not expressly granted or reasonably to be implied from such as are conferred, are reserved to the states or to the people. To forestall any suggestion to the contrary, the Tenth Amendment was adopted. The same proposition, otherwise states, is that powers not granted are prohibited." 1167
- 26 But within a few years of Butler, the Court reversed itself again
- 27 saying:

20

21 22

23

24 25

28

29

30

31

32

33 34

"Our conclusion is unaffected by the Tenth Amendment... The amendment states but a truism that all is retained which has not been surrendered. There is nothing in the history of its adoption to suggest that it was more than declaratory of the relationship between national and state governments as it had been established by the Constitution before the amendment or that its purpose was other than to allay fears that the new national government might seek to exercise powers not granted, and that the states might not be able to

 $<sup>^{1163}</sup>$  "To regulate Commerce with foreign Nations, and among the several States, and with the Indian Tribes; "U.S. CONST., art. I, §7, §§ 3.

<sup>1164</sup> McCulloch v. Maryland, 17 U.S. 316 (1819).

<sup>1166</sup> Gibbons v. Ogden, 22 U.S. 1 (1824).

&lt;sup>1167</sup> United States v. Butler, 297 U.S. 1 (1936).

exercise fully their reserved powers... From the beginning and for many years the amendment has been construed as not depriving the national government of authority to resort to all means for the exercise of a granted power which are appropriate and plainly adapted to the permitted end." 1168

5 From this decidedly nationalistic view, the pendulum of Court opinion

- 6 has swung back and forth in recent years with the position of the Court on the
- 7 issue many times decided by a single vote. 1169 In Garcia, the Court recognized
- 8 the sovereignty of the states and rejected the "truism" argument of Butler
- 9 saying:

10

11

12 13

14

15

16

17 18

19 20 21

23

24

25

26

27 28

29 30 "We therefore now reject, as unsound in principle and unworkable in practice, a rule of state immunity and federal regulation that turns on a judicial appraisal of whether a particular government function is 'integral' or 'traditional.' Any such rule leads to inconsistent results at the same time that it disserves principles of democratic self-governance, and it breeds inconsistency precisely because it is divorced from those principles. If there are to be limits on the Federal Government's power to interfere with state functions—as undoubtedly there are—we must look elsewhere to find them. We accordingly return to the underlying issue that confronted this Court in National League of Cities—the manner in which the Constitution insulates States from the reach of Congress' power under the Commerce Clause." 1170

The Court then held the matter was best solved as a "political question"

22 saying:

"Of course, we continue to recognize that the states occupy a special and specific position in our constitutional system and that the scope of Congress' authority under the Commerce Clause must reflect that position. But the principal and basic limit on the federal commerce power is that inherent in all Congressional action—the built—in restraints that our system provides through state participation in federal governmental action. The political process ensures that laws that unduly burden the States will not be promulgated." 1171

BRIEF IN SUPPORT OF CONVENTION GENERAL BRIEF ARGUMENTS PAGE 504

 $<sup>^{1168}</sup>$  United States v. Darby Lumber Co., 312 U.S. 100 (1941).

<sup>1169</sup> As exemplified by the favorable vote of Justice Blackmun in National League of Cities v. Usery, 426 U.S. 833 (1976) and his turnaround in Garcia v. San Antonio Metropolitan Transit Authority, 469 U.S. 528 (1985). In Garcia, Justice Blackmun wrote the National League of Cities test for "integral operations in areas of traditional governmental functions" had proven "both impractical and doctrinally barren," and that the Court in 1976 had "tried to repair what did not need repair."

Garcia v. San Antonio Metropolitan Transit Authority, 469 U.S. 528 (1985). Id.

- 1 However, in the most recent suits, the concept of "political question"
- 2 seems to have been rejected by the Court. 1172 In New York, 1173 the Court found
- 3 the Constitution does not give Congress authority to require states to
- 4 regulate, 1174 no matter how powerful the federal interest involved. 1175 Rather,
- 5 the Constitution gives Congress authority to regulate matters directly, 1176 to

&lt;sup>1172</sup> As to Congress, it is clear that insofar as the convention to propose amendments, it does not hold the states in "a special and specific position in [the] constitutional system," nor does it recognize that "the built-in restraints that our system provides through state participation in federal governmental action." In fact, it is clear that Congress wishes no "interference" in the area of amendatory power. See supra text accompanying notes 1126.

 $<sup>^{1173}</sup>$  New York v. United States, 505 U.S. 144 (1992).

 $<sup>^{1174}</sup>$  "While Congress has substantial powers to govern the Nation directly, including in areas of intimate concern to the States, the Constitution has never been understood to confer upon Congress the ability to require the States to govern according to Congress' instructions. See Coyle v. Smith, 221 U.S. 559, 31 S.Ct.688, 689, 55 L.Ed. 853 (1911). The Court has been explicit about this distinction. 'Both the states and the United States existed before the Constitution. The people, though that instrument, established a more perfect union by substituting a national government, acting, with ample power, directly upon the citizens, instead of the Confederate government, which acted with powers, greatly restricted, only upon the States.' Lane County v. Oregon, 7 Wall, at 76. The Court has made the same point with more rhetorical flourish, although perhaps with less precision, on a number of occasions. In Chief Justice Chase's much-quoted words, 'the preservation of the States, and the maintenance of their governments, are as much within the design and care of the Constitution as the preservation of the Union and the maintenance of the National government. The Constitution, in all its provisions, looks to an indestructible Union, composed of indestructible States.' Texas v. White, 7 Wall 700 (1869)." Id. (emphasis added).

&quot;No matter how powerful the federal interest involved, the Constitution simply does not give Congress the authority to require the States to regulate." Id.

&quot;The Convention generated a great number of proposals for the structure of the new Government, but two quickly took center states. Under the Virginia Plan, as first introduced by Edmund Randolph, Congress would exercise legislative authority directly upon individuals, without employing the states as intermediaries. 1 Records of the Federal Convention of 1787, p.21 (M. Farrand, ed.1911). Under the New Jersey Plan, as first introduced by William Paterson, Congress would continue to require the approval of the states before legislating, as it had under the Articles of Confederation. 1 id., at 243-244. These two plans underwent various revisions as the Convention progress, but they remained the two primary options discussed by the delegates... In the end, the Convention opted for a Constitution in which Congress would exercise its legislative authority directly over individuals rather than over States... This choice was made clear to the subsequent state ratifying conventions... In

- 1 preempt contrary state regulation, 1177 or in some circumstances regulate
- 2 individuals directly. 1178 Further it found that consent by state officials to
- 3 an act of Congress does not preclude the determination that such an act of
- 4 Congress unconstitutionally infringes on state sovereignty, and therefore such
- 5 "consent" is unconstitutional. The Court found where Congress exceeds its
- 6 authority relative to the states, departure from the constitutional plan providing for a stronger central government, therefore, the Framers explicitly chose a Constitution that confers upon Congress the power to regulate individuals, not States." Id.

 $^{1177}$  "As we have seen, the court has consistently respected this choice. We have always understood that even where the Congress has the authority under the Constitution to pass laws requiring or prohibiting certain acts, it lacks the power directly to compel the States to require or prohibit those acts. E.g., FERC v. Mississippi, 456 U.S. 762-766, 102 S.Ct., at 2138-2141; Hodel v. Virginia Surface Mining & Reclamation Assn., Inc., 452 U.S., at 288-289, 101 S.Ct., at 2366; Lane County v. Oregon, 7 Wall., at 76. The allocation of power contained in the Commerce Clause, for example, authorizes Congress to regulate interstate commerce directly; it does not authorize Congress to regulate state governments' regulation of interstate commerce... In sum, the cases relied upon by the United States hold only that federal law is enforceable in state courts and that federal courts may in proper circumstances order state officials to comply with federal law, propositions that by no means imply any authority on the part of Congress to mandate state regulation." Id. 1178 These cases involve no more than an application of the Supremacy Clause's provision that federal law 'shall be the supreme Law of the Land,' enforceable in every state. More to the point, all involve congressional regulation of individuals, not congressional requirements that States regulate. Federal statutes enforceable in state courts do, in a sense, direct state judges to enforce them, but this sort of federal "direction" of state judges is mandated by the text of the Supremacy Clause. No comparable constitutional provision authorizes Congress to command state legislatures to legislate." Id. (emphasis added).

It is not beyond reasonable implication to assume if the Court finds that Congress cannot compel state legislatures to legislate regulation desired by Congress, that such prohibition would include higher legislative standards such as civil, criminal and amendatory law. However, it is conceded this prohibition was not explicitly stated by the Court and therefore exceptions may exist. (See infra text accompanying note 1188). Thus, such proposals in the Hatch Bill, (see supra text accompanying notes 596-607) such as regulating the number of delegates to a convention (Id.) cannot be set by congressional command.

While the Court found Congress does have the power to regulate individuals, this is no help in a convention to propose amendments as individuals (citizens) would also be exempt from congressional regulation under  $9^{\rm th}$  Amendment protections. See supra text accompanying notes 88-119,1150.

- 1 cannot be ratified by "consent" of state officials, as the Constitution does
- 2 not protect sovereignty of states for the benefit of the states or state
- 3 governments as abstract political entities or even for the benefit of public
- 4 officials governing states, but rather the Constitution divides authority
- 5 between federal and state governments for protection of individuals. 1179

"The answer follows from an understanding of the fundamental purpose served by our Government's federal structure. The Constitution does not protect the sovereignty of States for the benefit of the States or state governments as abstract political entities, or even for the benefit of the public officials governing the States. To the contrary, the Constitution divides authority between federal and state governments for the protection of individuals. State sovereignty is not just an end in itself: 'Rather, federalism secures to citizens the liberties that derive from the diffusion of sovereign power.' Coleman v. Thompson, 501 U.S. 722, 759, 111 S.Ct. 2546, 2570, 115 L.Ed.2d. 640 (1991) (Blackmun, J. dissenting). 'Just as the separation and independence of the coordinate branches of the Federal Government serves to prevent the accumulation of excessive power in any one branch, a healthy balance of power between the States and Federal Government will reduce the risk of tyranny and abuse from either front.' Gregory v. Ashcroft, 501 U.S., at 458, 111 S.Ct., at 2400 (1991). See The FEDERALIST No. 51, p.323 (C. Rossiter ed. 1961).

"Where Congress exceeds its authority relative to the States, therefore, the departure from the constitutional plan cannot be ratified by the 'consent' of state officials. An analogy to the separation of powers among the branches of the Federal Government clarifies this point. The Constitution's division of power among the three branches is violated where one branch invades the territory of another, whether or not the encroached-upon branch approves the encroachment. In Buckley v. Valeo, 424 U.S. 1, 118-137, 96 S.Ct.612, 682-691, 46 L.Ed. 2d 659 (1976), for instance, the Court held that Congress had infringed the President's appointment power, despite the fact that the President himself had manifested his consent to the statute that caused the infringement by signing it into law. See National League of Cities v. Usery, 426 U.S., at 842, n.12, 96 S.Ct., at 2469 n.12. In INS v. Chadha, 462 U.S. 919, 944-959, 103 S.Ct. 2764, 2780-2788, 77 L.Ed.2d.317 (1983), we held that the legislative veto violated the constitutional requirement that legislation be presented the President, despite Presidents' approval of hundred of statutes containing a legislative veto provision. See id., at 944-945, 103 S.Ct., at 2781. The constitutional authority of Congress cannot be expanded by the 'consent' of the governmental unit whose domain is thereby narrowed, whether that unit is the Executive Branch or the States." New York v. United States, 505 U.S. 144 (1992).

<sup>1179 &</sup>quot;Respondents note that the Act embodies a bargain among the sited and unsited States, a compromise to which New York was a willing participant and from which New York has reaped much benefit. Respondents then pose what appears at first to be a troubling question: How can a federal statute be found an unconstitutional infringement of state sovereignty when state officials consented to the statute's enactment?

In the latest suit involving the  $10^{th}$  Amendment, the Court went even further saying:

2

3

4 5

6

7

8 9

10

11

12

"We held in New York that Congress cannot compel the States to enact or enforce a federal regulatory program. Today we hold that Congress cannot circumvent that prohibition by conscripting the State's officers directly. The Federal Government may neither issue directives requiring the States to address particular problems, nor command the States' officers, or those of their political subdivisions, to administer or enforce a federal regulatory program. It matters not whether policy making is involved, and no case by case weighing of the burdens or benefits is necessary, such commands are fundamentally incompatible with our constitutional system of dual sovereignty." 1180

13 Thus, the Court ruled Congress may not use its legislative powers to compel the states to regulate on congressional demand, 1181 nor may Congress 14 15 circumvent that prohibition by conscripting state officials directly in order 16 to bring about the same end. As delegates to a convention to propose amendments are not federal officials, 1182 this ruling presents grave doubt as 17 to whether legislative proposals such as the Hatch Bill 1183 could ever be 18 considered constitutional in that (1) acts of Congress greatly narrow state 19 authority, 1184 (2) congressional regulation of a convention to propose 20 21 amendments clearly intrudes into a constitutional area reserved for the states,  $^{1185}$  and (3) the Hatch Bill and other such legislative proposals  $^{1186}$  seek 22 23 to circumvent the prohibition against compelling the states to regulate by

<sup>1180</sup> Printz v. United States, 521 U.S. 98 (1997).

 $<sup>^{1181}</sup>$  In a more recent decision, the Court has even removed Congress's ability to regulate the states under the Commerce Clause holding that they cannot be sued except under provisions of the  $14^{\rm th}$  Amendment. See infra text accompanying note 1208.  $^{1182}$  Delegates are citizens of the United States, however. Thus, as with all

 $<sup>^{1182}</sup>$  Delegates are citizens of the United States, however. Thus, as with all citizens, they receive constitutional protection guaranteed under the Constitution. See infra text generally,  $14^{\rm th}$  Amendment p.515.

&lt;sup>1183</sup> See supra text accompanying notes 596-608.

See supra text accompanying note 1179.

See supra text accompanying notes 1157-1161.

See supra text accompanying notes 593-595.

- 1 congressional edict<sup>1187</sup> by "conscripting" state officials to carry out a
- 2 federal regulatory program, in this case, the regulation of the convention to
- 3 propose amendments. 1188

4

5 The States, the 10th Amendment and the Convention

б

- 7 Together, New York and Printz make it clear Congress is prohibited under
- 8 the terms of the 10th Amendment from using its regulatory powers to compel the
- 9 states to act under congressional direction. 1189 Thus, congressional control of
- 10 the convention to propose amendments through such legislation as the Hatch

 $<sup>^{1187}</sup>$  New York v. U.S., 505 U.S. 144 (1992).

<sup>1188</sup> However, neither of these decisions affects the incidental regulatory power of Congress to overthrow state legislatures in their ratification votes and "fix" their votes so as to be "politically correct". The reason of course is that in the overthrow of the state legislatures, Congress actually replaces the legislative members with persons acceptable to Congress who in turn carry out congressional directives. The separation between federal and state thus is eliminated. As the case addressed the regulatory powers of Congress in its legislative not amendatory capacity, Coleman must still hold in that area. Therefore, this incidental regulatory power of Congress remains intact. See supra text accompanying notes 849,917,1006,1056,1079,1089,1094.

that Congress may not use the federal courts to abrogate the sovereign immunity of the states (Seminole Tribe of Florida v. Florida, 517 U.S. 44 (1996) nor may Congress employ the state courts to abrogate the sovereign immunity of a state (Alden v. Maine, 119 S.Ct. 1138 (1999). These cases specifically dealt with sovereign immunity as interpreted under the 11th Amendment, that federal infringement into state sovereignty is prohibited unless expressed powers granted to Congress in the Constitution allow for such infringement. See infra text accompanying note 1208.

It is not a major step to propose that the rulings would also apply in prohibiting Congress from infringing on the states' sovereignty in the amendatory procedure as this is merely another part of the Constitution where the same principle must apply if the states' sovereignty (and the people's right to alter or abolish) is to be preserved. If it is not to be preserved, then Coleman is the ruling authority. See supra text accompanying note 1188.

- Bill is unconstitutional as Congress has no power to regulate the
- 2 convention, 1190 the states, 1191 or the delegates to the convention. 1192
- Having dispensed with the effect of these rulings on Congress, the 3
- question then becomes what effect do they have on the states? For example, how 4
- 5 do New York and Printz affect the political intent of the applications 1193 that
- has altered over the years, and does this change in intent by the states have 6
- 7 any constitutional validity that affects the convention applications submitted
- 8 by the states? What effect, for example, do these two rulings have on
- recession of applications by the states?
- 10 To begin with, the rulings mean that state officers, in this case the
- 11 state legislatures, may not use applications for a convention to propose
- 12 amendments as political protests in an attempt to register "support" for a
- 13 proposed constitutional amendment with the political "understanding" that
- Congress will not actually call a convention. 1194 The intent of the 14
- Constitution is clear: applications by the states shall cause a convention to 15
- 16 be held, and Congress shall have no discretion in calling one once the states

<sup>1190</sup> See supra text accompanying notes 1157-1161.

<sup>1191</sup> See supra text accompanying note 1174.

&quot;The Constitution does not protect the sovereignty of States for the benefit of the States or state governments as abstract political entities, or even for the benefit of the public officials governing the States. To the contrary, the Constitution divides authority between federal and state governments for the protection of individuals." (emphasis added). See supra text accompanying note 1179.

<sup>1193 &</sup>quot;Until the twentieth century, convention applications were submitted by the states or encouraged by Congress out of actual demand for a convention. As the great conventions of the eighteenth century faded from national consciousness, the procedure evolved into a 'protest clause' to goad or scare Congress itself to act on a desired amendment." Caplan, Constitutional Brinksmanship: Amending the Constitution by National Convention, (1988), p.61. 1194 See supra text accompanying note 1179.

- 1 have applied. 1195 An application, therefore, is an application, and Congress is
- 2 mandated to deal with it, regardless of political motive, identically, 1196 as a

"The constitutional authority of Congress cannot be expanded by the 'consent' of the governmental unit whose domain is thereby narrowed, whether that unit is the Executive Branch or the States." New York v. United States, 505 U.S. 144 (1992).

The Court was even more explicit in an earlier case when it said:
 "If the Federal Constitution is our guide, a person who might to wish to 'alter' our form of government may not be cast into the outer darkness. For the Constitution prescribes the method of 'alteration' by the amending process in Article V; and while the procedure for amending it is restricted, there is no restraint on the kind of amendment that may be offered. Moreover, the First Amendment, which protects a controversial as well as a conventional dialogue (Terminiello v. Chicago, 337 U.S. 1), is as applicable to the States as it is to the Federal Government; and it extends to petitions for redress of grievances (Edwards v. South Carolina, 372 U.S. 229, 235) as well to advocacy and debate." Whitehill v. Elkins, 389 U.S. 54 (1967) (emphasis added).

In Edwards the Court said:

"'[A] function of free speech under our system of government is to invite dispute. It may indeed best serve its high purpose when it induces a condition of unrest, creates dissatisfaction with conditions as they are, or even stirs people to anger. Speech is often provocative and challenging. It may strike at prejudices and preconceptions and have profound unsettling effects as it presses for acceptance of an idea. That is why freedom of speech...is... protected against censorship or punishment, unless shown likely to produce a clear and present danger of a serious substantive evil that rise far above public inconvenience, annoyance, or unrest... There is no room under our Constitution for a more restrictive view. For the alternative would lead to standardization of idea either by legislatures, courts, or dominant political or community groups.' Terminiello v. Chicago, 337 U.S. 1, 4-5...

"As Chief Justice Hughes wrote in Stromberg v. California, 'The maintenance of the opportunity for free political discussion to the end that government may be responsive to the will of the people and that changes may be obtained by lawful means, an opportunity essential to the security of the Republic, is a fundamental principle of our constitutional system. A statute which upon its face, and as authoritatively construed, is so vague and indefinite as to permit the punishment of the fair use of this opportunity is repugnant to the guaranty of liberty contained in the Fourteenth

&lt;sup>1195</sup> See supra text accompanying notes 435-437;508-513.

<sup>1196</sup> For Congress to do otherwise would violate the 14th Amendment's equal protection clause and the 10th Amendment protection to the states. Congress would thus "favor" some applications of the states while "disfavoring" others solely for political reasons (assuming it wanted a convention to propose amendments at all, which it has clearly demonstrated it does not). The states, wishing to win "favor" would thus be pressured to submit only "favorable" applications. This obviously would greatly limit the states' authority as it would establish congressional determination over the applications instead of a numeric count total as intended by the Founding Fathers (see supra text accompanying note 513). The Court has made it clear this kind of limitation on the states is unconstitutional saying:

- 1 constitutional procedure, not a political straw vote of the states. Anything
- 2 contrary to this constitutional command must therefore be unconstitutional. 1197
- 3 The constitutional structure makes no other conclusion possible. 1198 Thus any
- 4 "consent" by state officials to a political limitation on constitutional
- 5 applications serves to destroy the constitutional intent of the applications--
- 6 that of compelling Congress to call a convention. This "consent" clearly
- 7 narrows both the states' power to apply for a convention and Congress' power
- 8 to call one. Therefore, it violates the constitutional structure. Thus, such
- 9 "consents" are unconstitutional.
- 10 Likewise, recessions of applications by the states is equally
- 11 unconstitutional. They constitute a form of "consent" by state officers to an
- 12 unconstitutional act of Congress. An application recession presents Congress
- 13 the opportunity to shirk its mandated duty of calling a convention. The
- 14 Founding Fathers intended Congress should have no discretion in calling a Amendment...'" Edwards v. South Carolina, 372 U.S. 229 (1963). (emphasis added).

&quot;Congress...shall call a convention...upon the application...of the state legislatures." U.S. CONST., art. V. "...the Supremacy Clause makes federal law paramount over the contrary positions of state officials; the power of federal courts to enforce federal law thus presupposes some authority to order state officials to comply." New York v. United States, 505 U.S. 144 (1992).

The federal law, in this case, the Constitution itself, is plain: if the states apply, Congress shall call a convention. Political agreements, however altruistic, cannot stand in the way of this supreme command of the Constitution.

&quot;The Framers explicitly chose a Constitution that confers upon Congress the power to regulate individuals, not States.'" New York v. United States, 505 U.S., at 166; 'The great innovation of this design was that our citizens would have two political capacities, one state and one federal, each protected from incursion by the other——a legal system unprecedented in form and design, establishing two orders of government, each with its own direct relations, its own privity, its own set of mutual rights and obligations to the people who sustain it and are governed by it.' U.S. Term Limits, Inc. v. Thornton, 514 U.S. 779, 831 (1995)." Printz v. United States, 521 U.S. 98 (1997). (emphasis added).

- 1 convention upon the proper number of applications by the states. 1199 A
- 2 recession of applications thus conflicts with the basic intent of the
- 3 application and of the Constitution, compelling a convention to occur. 1200 Any
- 4 "consent" to the destruction of this constitutional intent of the applications
- 5 on the part of state officers by their recessing applications clearly narrows
- 6 the states' power to hold a convention as well as congressional power to call
- 7 one and thus violates the constitutional structure. 1201 Therefore, convention
- 8 application recessions are unconstitutional.
- 9 Finally, as Congress is restricted by the 10th Amendment to a limited,
- 10 minuscule call, which in fact is nothing more than an expression of reserved
- 11 state power, any pre-conditions Congress may attempt to attach to the calling
- 12 of a convention, such as contemporaneousness, same subject, etc., are
- 13 unconstitutional as the  $10^{th}$  Amendment makes the convention to propose
- 14 amendments a state power (but one which is transitory, i.e., once the states
- 15 have applied in sufficient number to compel a call, the power passes to the
- 16 people under their right to alter or abolish) and thus prohibits any
- 17 congressional interference; any pre-conditions by Congress are therefore
- 18 unconstitutional. 1202
- 19 By the same reasoning, any pre-conditions the states attempt to impose
- 20 on convention applications are in violation of the 10th Amendment as they
- 21 would (1) preclude or prevent Congress from carrying out its mandated duty to

<sup>1199</sup> See supra text accompanying notes 508-513.

See supra text accompanying notes 851-920.

&lt;sup>1201</sup> See supra text accompanying note 1196.

&lt;sup>1202</sup> See supra text accompanying notes 614-831.

1 call a convention, 1203 (2) serve as a veto on the applications by the other

2 sovereign states, 1204 and (3) serve to narrow the states' power to hold a

3 convention as well as congressional power to call one and thus violate the 4 constitutional structure. 1205 Therefore, such political "protest clause[s]"

5 must be considered ineffectual and unconstitutional where they conflict with

6 the supreme constitutional purpose of the application, that of compelling

7 Congress to call a convention.

8

9 Summation

power, it has no authority to do so.

10

16

17

18

19

The convention to propose amendments is a state power<sup>1206</sup> not subject to congressional regulation, nor to any "consent" by state officials that would preclude or prevent its calling by Congress where otherwise Congress is mandated to do so. It is clear Congress may attach no pre-conditions to the applications by the states because under the 10th Amendment's division of

In sum, if the states apply, Congress must call, and *neither Congress*nor the states may constitutionally prevent a convention (except by the states not applying for one in the first place which at present is not the case), 1207

 $<sup>^{1203}</sup>$  U.S. CONST., art. V; see supra text accompanying notes 2,435-437,508-513.  $^{1204}$  See supra text accompanying notes 842-850,909-916.

&lt;sup>1205</sup> See supra text accompanying note 1196.

 $<sup>^{1206}</sup>$  A power, however, transitory in nature. See supra text accompanying notes 907-920,1153,1155,1158,1179,1192.

&lt;sup>1207</sup> See infra

TABLE 1-STATE APPLICATIONS FOR A CONVENTION, p.661; TABLE 2-STATES APPLYING FOR A CONVENTION, p.673.

1	least of all for any convenient, short term, self-interested political
2	reasons. The states and Congress have as much constitutional right to refuse
3	to call a convention or attempt to thwart it by playing games with the
4	applications as they do to refuse to hold an election mandated by either state
5	or federal constitutions. Both actions are part of the transcendent power of
6	the people to alter or abolish their government, and refusal by either federal
7	or state government to comply is equally unconstitutional and therefore may
8	not be permitted by the Court.
9
10
11	THE FOURTEENTH AMENDMENT
12
13	Introduction
14
15	Until now discussion of the convention to propose amendments in this
16	suit has centered on what might be termed "original documentation", i.e., the
17	words actually written by the Founding Fathers, such as the Declaration of
18	Independence, the original Constitution, the Federalist Papers and the Bill of
19	Rights. However, the Constitution is a progressive document, designed by the 20	Founding Fathers to be altered to meet the changing needs of the nation. Any discussion of the convention to propose amendments and its mandated effect, if any, on the convention to propose amendments.

congressional call is incomplete without examining the post-Founding Fathers amendments, primarily Section 1 of the  $14^{\rm th}$  Amendment, to determine their 21

22

23

24

- 1 Clearly the 14th Amendment altered the relationship between the federal
- 2 government and the states, restructuring that relationship so as to generally
- 3 favor the federal government over the previously stronger state
- 4 governments. Does this change in relationship favor Congress, skirting its
- 5 Article V requirement of calling a convention when the states apply, or does
- 6 the  $14^{\rm th}$  Amendment strengthen the proposition that Congress is mandated to

The Court said:

"The inquiry into whether Congress has the power to abrogate unilaterally the States' immunity from suit is narrowly focused on a single question: Was the Act in question passed pursuant to a constitutional provision granting Congress such power? This Court has found authority to abrogate under only two constitutional provisions: the Fourteenth Amendment, see, e.g., Fitzpartric v. Bitzer, 427 U.S. 445, 96 S.Ct. 2666, 49 L.Ed.2d 614 and, a plurality opinion, the Interstate Commerce Clause, Pennsylvania v. Union Gas Co., 491 U.S. 1, 109 S.Ct. 2273, 105 L.Ed.2d.1. The Union Gas plurality found that Congress' power to abrogate came from the States' session of their sovereignty when they gave Congress plenary power to regulate commerce. Under the rationale of Union Gas, the Indian Commerce Clause is indistinguishable from the Interstate Commerce Clause.

"However, in the five years since it was decided, Union Gas has proven to be a solitary departure from established law. Reconsidering that decision, none of the policies underlying stare decisis require this Court's continuing adherence to its holding. The decision has been of questionable precedential value, largely because a majority of the Court expressly disagreed with the plurality's 'rationale. Moreover, the deeply fractured decision has created confusion among the lower courts that have sought to understand and apply it. The plurality's rationale also deviated sharply from the Court's established federalism jurisprudence and essentially eviscerated the court's decision in Hans, since the plurality's conclusion—that Congress could under Article I expand the scope of the federal court's Article III jurisdiction contradicted the fundamental notion that Article III sets forth the exclusive catalog of permissible federal-court jurisdiction. Thus, Union Gas was wrongly decided and is overruled." Seminole Tribe of Florida v. Florida et al., 517 U.S. 44 (1996). (emphasis added).

Thus, the Court now holds that only through the  $14^{\rm th}$  Amendment may state immunity be abrogated and then only in "pursuant to a constitutional provision granting Congress such power."

 $<sup>^{1208}</sup>$  The importance of the  $14^{\rm th}$  Amendment in the question of the convention to propose amendments cannot be understated. Recently, the Supreme Court ruled it is only through the  $14^{\rm th}$  Amendment that Congress possesses the power to abrogate state immunity from federal suit. If Congress can abrogate the states' immunity to apply for a convention to propose amendments either through legislation or federal suit, therefore, it must be based on the  $14^{\rm th}$  Amendment provisions.

- 1 call a convention to propose amendments? $^{
  m 1209}$  Does the  $14^{
  m th}$  Amendment provide
- 2 answers to other questions surrounding a convention to propose amendments such
- 3 as those raised by Madison at the original Constitutional Convention? 1210

4

5

Immunity and Privilege Clause

6

8

9

10

11

12

13 14

15

16

17

18 19

20

7 Section 1 of the 14th Amendment states:

"All persons born or naturalized in the United States, and subject to the jurisdiction thereof, are citizens of the United States and of the state wherein they reside. No state shall make or enforce any law which shall abridge the privileges or immunities of citizens of the United States; nor shall any state deprive any person of life, liberty, or property, without due process of law; nor deny to any person within its jurisdiction the equal protection of the laws." 1211

Key in this section of the amendment is the phrase "the privileges or immunities of citizens of the United States..." The amendment clearly states two citzenships are possessed by all persons born or naturalized in the United States who are subject to its jurisdiction: citizenship in the United States (a national or federal citizenship) and citizenship in the state wherein the person resides. 1212

&lt;sup>1209</sup> See supra text accompanying notes 497-514.

See supra text accompanying note 438.

U.S. CONST., 14th Amend., § 1.

<sup>1212</sup> It could argued this amendment redefined the sovereignty of the United States in that it modified Art. IV,  $\S2$ ,  $\S\S$  1 of the original Constitution ("The Citizens of each State shall be entitled to all Privileges and Immunities of Citizens in the several States.") which clearly did not recognize national or federal citizenship, only state citizenship. However this argument runs afoul of Art. I,  $\S2$ ,  $\S\S$  2 and Art. I,  $\S$  3,  $\S\S$  3 which calls for members of Congress to be "citizens of the United States" in order to qualify for office that was written at the same time and does recognize such federal citizenship. The relationship between these two citzenships is what was altered by the  $14^{\text{th}}$  Amendment. Thus, the  $14^{\text{th}}$  Amendment merely restated what the Founding Fathers had already recognized. See supra text accompanying notes 925,926;infra text accompanying notes 1214,1215.

1 The amendment also states "no state may abridge the privileges or

2 immunities of citizens of the United States..." Deviously, by simple

3 deduction, citizenship in the United States encompasses certain immunities and

4 privileges that do not exist as immunities and privileges of citizenship in an

5 individual state. 1214 This is self-evident, otherwise there would be no purpose

6 in the amendment distinguishing between two forms of citizenship. Put another

7 way, citizenship in the United States must provide additional immunities and

8 privileges of citizenship not found in state citizenship. 1215 The question then

9 is what is the difference between individual state immunities and privileges

10 and national immunities and privileges?

11 While the courts have occasionally expressed certain implied immunities

12 and privileges, 1216 a strict construction of the Constitution defines only one

13 difference between the immunities and privileges of state citizenship and the 14 immunities and privileges of citizens of the United States. Citizens of the

 $<sup>^{1213}</sup>$  U.S. CONST.,  $14^{\rm th}$  Amend., § 1.

&quot;The next observation is...that the distinction between citizenship of the United States and citizenship of a State is clearly recognized and established. Not only may a man be a citizen of the United States without being a citizen of a State, but an important element is necessary to convert the former into the latter. He must reside within the State to make him a citizen of it, but it is only necessary that he should be born or naturalized in the United States to be a citizen of the Union. It is quite clear, then, that there is a citizenship of the United States, and a citizenship of a State, which are distinct from each other, and which depend upon different characteristics or circumstances in the individual." Slaughterhouse Cases, 83 U.S. 36 (1872).

&quot;Of the privileges and immunities of the citizen of the United States, and of the privileges and immunities of the citizen of the State...we wish to state here that it is only the former which are placed by this clause ['No State shall make or enforce any law which shall abridge the privileges or immunities of citizens of the United States,'  $14^{\rm th}$  Amend., § 1] under the protection of the Federal Constitution, and that the latter, whatever they may be, are not intended to have any additional protection by this paragraph of the amendment." Id.

&lt;sup>1216</sup> Id.; see also Twining v. New Jersey, 211 U.S. 78 (1908).

- United States enjoy the right to be elected members of Congress 1217 and to hold
- the offices of President or Vice President. 1218 2
- As one of the conditions of eligibility for federal office, the 3
- 4 Constitution mandates that members of Congress must be citizens of the United
- ${\tt States}^{1219}$  "...chosen...by the people of the several states." The 5
- Constitution grants special powers to citizens holding federal elected
- office 1221 that are withheld from the general citizenry. 1222 By virtue of the 7
- 8 Constitution these elected citizens have been granted a special privilege: the
- right to make certain decisions affecting all citizens of the United
- 10 States. 1223 These rights include the right to enact statutory legislation 1224
- and the right to propose amendments to the Constitution. 1225 The Constitution 11
- also grants this privilege of amendment proposal to delegates to a convention 12
- to propose amendments. 1226 The special powers of these citizens are clearly a 13

 $<sup>^{1217}</sup>$  "No Person shall be a Representative who shall not have attained the Age of twenty five Years, and been seven Years a Citizen of the United States..." U.S. CONST., art. I, §2 §§ 2; "No Person shall be a Senator who shall not have attained the Age of thirty Years, and been nine Years a Citizen of the United States..." U.S. CONST., art. I, § 3 §§ 3(emphasis added).

 $<sup>^{1218}</sup>$  "No person except a natural born Citizen, or a Citizen of the United States, at the time of the Adoption of this Constitution, shall be eligible to the Office of President..." U.S. CONST., art. I, § 1, §§ 5. (emphasis added). 1219 U.S. CONST., art. I, § 2, §§ 3; U.S. CONST., art. I, § 3, §§ 3; see supra text accompanying notes 1217,1218.

 $<sup>^{1220}</sup>$  U.S. CONST., art. I, § 2, §§ 1;  $17^{th}$  Amend. § 1.

&lt;sup>1221</sup> See generally U.S. CONST., art. I, art. II, art. V.

<sup>1222</sup> For example, Congress is allowed to print and coin money in the name of the United States. (U.S. CONST., art I, § 8, §§ 5) While there have been some exceptions, if any general citizen attempts to exercise this power, it is a crime. Thus, there is a separation of powers between the sovereign citizen and the government. The citizen licenses some of his sovereign power to the government in this case and therefore can no longer exercise that power. See supra text accompanying notes 1136-1147.

<sup>1223</sup> U.S. CONST., art. I, § 1.

 $^{\rm 1224}$  U.S. CONST., art. I, § 8.

 $^{\rm 1225}$  U.S. CONST., art. V.

&lt;sup>1226</sup> Id.

- 1 privilege granted only to these particular citizens of the United States. 1227
- 2 While any citizen may be granted such powers, it is only through election that
- 3 the powers in question are granted. 1228 Thus, citizens so elected constitute a
- 4 particular class of citizenry. 1229
- 5 But this privilege, granted through election, does not remove or replace
- 6 the general right of the people to alter or abolish. Instead, it is a form of
- 7 the right to alter or abolish, transitory in nature, like the transitory power
- 8 of state legislatures to apply for a convention to propose amendments. This
- 9 specific privilege granted to this specific class of elected citizens is the

BRIEF IN SUPPORT OF CONVENTION GENERAL BRIEF ARGUMENTS PAGE 520

&quot;Privilege. A particular and peculiar benefit or advantage enjoyed by a person, company, or class, beyond the common advantages of other citizens. An exceptional or extraordinary power or exemption. A peculiar right, advantage, exemption, power, franchise, or immunity held by a person or class, not generally possessed by others." BLACK'S LAW DICTIONARY 6th Ed. (1990).

The word "privilege" is also defined as:

&quot;1) a right, immunity, benefit or advantage granted to some person, group or persons, or class not enjoyed by others and sometime detrimental to them; 2) a basic civil right, guaranteed by a government; as the privilege of equality for all." WEBSTER'S NEW TWENTIETH CENTURY DICTIONARY, UNABRIDGED, 2nd Ed., cc. 1984.

 $<sup>^{1228}</sup>$  For this reason, only citizens who are elected to the position (unless there be a vacancy which shall be filled as prescribed under art. I, § 4) can possess these powers. Thus, as with all members of Congress, any delegate to a convention must be elected. This constitutional edict precludes any state government or legislature from appointing any delegates, thus circumventing the will of the people.

&quot;Class. A group of persons, things, qualities, or activities having common characteristics or attributes. In re Kanawha Val. Bank, 144 W.Va. 346, 109 S.E.2d. 649, 670." BLACK'S LAW DICTIONARY 6th Ed. (1990).(emphasis added).

While it is certainly true that "[T]he significance of constitutional provisions [are] vital, not formal, and [are] to be gathered not simply by taking the words in the dictionary but by considering their origin and the line of their growth..." (Ullmann v. United States, 350 U.S. 422 (1956)), nevertheless at the minimum, the meaning and intent of the words in the Constitution must have at least the effect of their definition. While it is conceded the words in the Constitution, through judicial interpretation, may assume a greater role in meaning than that assigned ordinary dictionary definition, this does not eliminate the minimum standard of definition. Thus, where the minimum standard of the meaning of the words in the Constitution (i.e., basic definition) is sufficient to accomplish the matter, this minimum standard cannot be rejected or ignored. See supra text accompanying notes 574; infra text 1651.

- 1 ability to write the actual language of a proposed constitutional amendment.
- 2 Upon proposal, this special grant of power terminates until it is used again
- 3 in the proposal of another amendment. It is during this transitory period that
- 4 the privilege applies, however, and thus the terms and conditions of the  $14^{\rm th}$
- 5 Amendment must also apply.
- As with "application", 1230 in its use of "privilege", the Constitution
- 7 does not distinguish between "a right, immunity, benefit or advantage granted
- 8 to some person, group or persons, or class not enjoyed by others," and "a
- 9 basic civil right, guaranteed by a government; as the privilege of equality
- 10 for all." 1231 The 14th Amendment merely requires "the equal protection of the
- 11 laws." 1232 Therefore, a privilege granted under the Constitution may only
- 12 affect a portion of the citizenry of the United States and yet be entirely
- 13 constitutional. 1233 The 14th Amendment also requires that all citizens shall
- 14 receive "equal protection of the laws" for such privileges, 1234 i.e., all

 $<sup>^{1230}</sup>$  See infra text accompanying notes 1533-1544.

&lt;sup>1231</sup> See supra text accompanying note 1227.

<sup>1232</sup> U.S. CONST., 14th Amend., § 1.

&lt;sup>1233</sup> See infra text accompanying note 1234,1236.

&quot;The constitutional guarantee of 'equal protection of the laws' means that no person or class of persons shall be denied the same protection of the laws which is enjoyed by other persons or other classes in like circumstances in their lives, liberty, property, and in their pursuit of happiness. People v. Jacobs, 27 Cal, App. 3d 246, 103 Cal. Rptr. 536, 543; 14th Amend., U.S. Const. Doctrine simply means that similarly situated persons must receive similar treatment under the law. Dorsey v. Solomon, D.C. Md., 435 F.Supp. 725, 733." BLACK'S LAW DICTIONARY, 6th Ed. (1990). (emphasis added). See infra text accompanying note 1236.

The amendment states that state laws may not abridge the privileges or immunities of citizens of the United States. Clearly, these immunities and privileges must derive from protections found in the Constitution itself. As the federal government is bound to uphold the Constitution, ("The Senators and Representatives before mentioned, and the Members of the several State Legislatures, and all executive and judicial Officers, both of the United States and of the several States, shall be bound by Oath or Affirmation, to support this Constitution..." (U.S. CONST., art. VI § 3)) it is clear the

- citizens in such a group or class shall be affected equally, and any other
- citizen entering into that group or class shall receive the same and equal 2
- privilege. 1235 Further, the 14th Amendment mandates that all citizens in any
- class shall be equally affected by the law as any other member of that
- class. 1236 5

federal government is as equally bound to provide "equal protection" under its laws as are the states.

The opposing position would be an absurdity: that the federal government could require the states to administer all laws equitably for all citizens while simultaneously defaulting in the equitable administration of federal laws. Such action by the federal government would defeat the entire purpose of the amendment. How could the states be expected to equitably administer their laws so as not to deny privileges and immunities of national citizenship guaranteed to citizens if a state was forced to choose between several "versions" of equality caused by discriminatory practices of the federal government? <sup>1235</sup> Id.

"If...we take into view the general objects and purposes of the Fourteenth Amendment, we shall find...these are to extend United States citizenship to all natives and naturalized person, and to prohibit the States from abridging their privileges or immunities, and from depriving any person of life, liberty or property without due process of law, and from denying to any person within their jurisdiction the equal protection of the laws. It contemplates persons and classes of persons... For, as before said, it has respect to persons and classes of persons. It means that no persons or class of persons shall be denied the same protection of the laws which is enjoyed by other persons or other classes in the same place and under like circumstances." Missouri v. Lewis 101 U.S. 22 (1879) (emphasis added).

"The fourteenth amendment, in declaring that no state 'shall deprive any person of life, liberty, or property without due process of law, nor deny to any person within its jurisdiction the equal protection of the laws' undoubtedly intended not only that there should be no arbitrary deprivation of life or liberty, or arbitrary spoliation of property, but that equal protection and security should be given to all under like circumstances in the enjoyment of their personal and civil rights; that all persons should be equally entitled to pursue their happiness, and acquire and enjoy property; that they should have like access to the courts of the country for the protection of their persons and property, and the prevention and redress of wrongs, and the enforcement of contracts; that no impediment should be interposed to the pursuits of any one, except as applied to the same pursuits by others under like circumstances; that no greater burdens should be laid upon one than are laid upon one than are laid upon others in the same calling and condition; and that in the administration of criminal justice no different or higher punishment should be imposed upon one than such as is prescribed to all for like offenses... Class legislation, discriminating against some and favoring others, is prohibited; but legislation which, in carrying out a public purpose, is limited in is application, if within the sphere of its

- 1 As the  $14^{th}$  Amendment requires that all members of a particular class
- 2 receive equal protection under the law, it is obvious that any constitutional
- 3 standard applying to one portion of a class must apply equally to all members
- 4 of that class. Although the Constitution does not expressly state that
- 5 convention delegates must be United States citizens, in order to benefit from
- 6 the privileges granted them by the Constitution it becomes clear that such
- 7 delegates must also meet the same qualifications imposed on the rest of the
- 8 class, i.e., Congress. Thus convention delegates must be citizens of the
- 9 United States in order to qualify for election, as well as meeting any other
- 10 qualification standards the Constitution imposes on members of Congress. 1237 operation it affects alike all persons similarly situated, is not within the amendment. In the execution of admitted powers unnecessary proceedings are often required which are cumbersome, dilatory, and expensive; yet, if no discrimination against any one be made, and no substantial right be impaired by them, they are not obnoxious to any constitutional objection." Barbier v. Connolly, 113 U.S. 27 (1884) (emphasis added).

"The fourteenth amendment to the constitution of the United States does not prohibit legislation which is limited either in the object to which it is directed, or by the territory within which it is to operate. It merely requires that all persons subjected to such legislation shall be treated alike, under like circumstances and conditions, both in the privileges conferred and in the liabilities imposed. As we said in Barbier v. Connolly, speaking of the fourteenth amendment: 'Class legislation, discriminating against some and favoring others, is prohibited; but legislation which, in carrying out a public purpose, is limited in its application, if within the sphere of its operation it affects alike all persons similarly situated, is not within the amendment.'" Hayes v. State of Missouri, 120 U.S. 68 (1887). (emphasis added). See also Marchant v. Pennsylvania R. Co., 153 U.S. 380 (1894) summarizing and restating Missouri v. Lewis, Hayes v. Missouri and Barbier v. Connolly.

1237 The qualifications for the House of Representatives and the United States Senate are different. Besides citizenship (seven years for a member of the House of Representatives, nine years for the Senate) the Constitution establishes minimum ages (twenty-five years for the House of Representatives, thirty years for the Senate) and that the candidate "be an Inhabitant of that State for which he shall be chosen." U.S. CONST., art. I.

These requirements, which the Supreme Court has held are the only requirements citizens need to satisfy in order to occupy a seat in Congress, (see generally Powell v. McCormack, 395 U.S. 486 (1969)) must therefore, under the terms of the  $14^{\rm th}$  Amendment, be the same requirements for convention

- 1 The 14th Amendment guarantees that no law promulgated either by the
- 2 United States or the several states shall abridge the privileges or immunities
- 3 of citizens of the United States unless it is equally applied, i.e., that the
- 4 law in question, whether constitutional or statuary in nature, shall be
- 5 equally applied to all citizens so affected by the law. 1238 This fact produces
- 6 one conclusion. The power of Congress can be neither more nor less than that
- 7 of the convention to propose amendments insofar as the amendatory power is
- 8 concerned. 1239 Thus, any privilege or immunity granted by the Constitution to
- 9 members of Congress or claimed by that body in its amendatory role must be
- 10 granted equally to the convention delegates. Hence, any incidental powers
- 11 related to this amendatory role must be equal for both proposing bodies.
- 12 As nothing in the Constitution allows Congress to revoke or regulate
- 13 these rights, 1240 clearly any regulation of the convention to propose delegates. As there are two standards in the Constitution, it is clear the qualifications for convention delegate must be the least stringent as set forth by the Constitution. In other words, whatever is the minimum standard the Constitution establishes to be a member of Congress, that standard must be the one to apply for convention delegates.

If it is concluded otherwise, i.e., that convention delegates are not subject to 14th Amendment protection, then the result would be the establishment of special qualification standards, (obviously set by Congress with obvious political motives behind them) which Powell clearly ruled as unconstitutional. Hence, the qualifications for convention delegate must be the same as that of a member of the United States House of Representatives: twenty-five years of age, a citizen of the United States for at least seven years and who, at the time of election, is an inhabitant of that State for which he or she is chosen. See supra text accompanying note 1217,1218.

1238 U.S. CONST., 14th Amend.; See supra text accompanying notes 1234,1236.

1239 This, of course, does not include Congress' incidental regulatory power to overthrow the state legislatures by military force and replace them with members of their own political choosing as this part of Congress' power involves ratification which the convention to propose amendments has no part. See supra text accompanying notes 849,917,1006,1056,1079,1094; infra text accompanying note 1333.

1240 Except by "due process of law." (U.S. CONST., 14th Amend., § 1) In this $^{1240}$  Except by "due process of law." (U.S. CONST.,  $14^{\rm th}$  Amend., § 1) In this instance, however, as the law involved is the Constitution itself, due process would have to be a constitutional amendment.

- 1 amendments by Congress requires that such legislative regulations be equally
- 2 binding on Congress as the convention with equal force and effect.
- No doubt it will be argued that the "implied" powers of the  $call^{1241}$
- 4 create a one-way street in this matter with Congress being able to regulate
- 5 the convention to propose amendments unfettered by the provisions of the  $14^{\rm th}$
- 6 Amendment. This argument misses the point entirely. It presumes to place
- 7 legislative fiat above constitutional law. The Constitution is straightforward
- 8 in the matter: citizens in a particular class must be treated equally under
- 9 the law. Therefore, the issue is not that Congress may legislate, but that
- 10 Congress seeks to deny equality under the law, denying part of a class of
- 11 citizens privileges that Congress, as part of that same class, seeks to retain
- 12 exclusively for itself. 1242

(Footnote Continued Next Page)

BRIEF IN SUPPORT OF CONVENTION GENERAL BRIEF ARGUMENTS PAGE 525

As to whether there is, or ever was, intended to be such implied power, the clear answer is no. The entire concept of implied power is based on the assumption that "Such [powers] as are necessary to make available and carry into effect those powers which are expressly granted or conferred, and which must therefore be presumed to have been within the intention of the constitutional or legislative grant." (BLACK'S LAW DICTIONARY 6th Ed. 1990). (emphasis added).

The key here is intention. Clearly, if there were no intention by the Founding Fathers that such implied powers should be found in the constitutional language, then there is no presumption of such implied power because it was never intended.

In the case of the convention to propose amendments, the language of the Founding Fathers is clear, precise and unambiguous. Congress shall have "no discretion in the matter." (See supra text accompanying notes 497-514). As implied powers clearly create discretion for whomever possesses them, in this case, Congress, and as it is obvious the Founding Fathers meant there should be no such discretion, the language of the Constitution does not grant implied powers to Congress in this instance.

Further, the use of such power must leap several other constitutional problems. See supra text accompanying notes 547-920.

Those who have opposed a convention to propose amendments, generally

<sup>1242</sup> Those who have opposed a convention to propose amendments, generally members of Congress, have used any argument they could to prevent this mandated constitutional procedure, all in the name of "protecting" or "defending" the Constitution.

The Supreme Court has responded to this concept distinctly, saying:

1 No legislative act may usurp the Constitution, and therefore any act of

2 legislation may only be legal if it adds to the amendatory powers of Congress

3 and the convention to propose amendments equally, or equally detracts from

4 these powers. 1243

5 If Congress maintains it can regulate what subject matter will be

6 discussed by the convention to propose amendments, it follows the convention

7 to propose amendments can regulate what subject matter Congress discusses. If

8 Congress proposes it can veto amendments proposed by the convention to propose

9 amendments, the convention to propose amendments must be able to veto a

10 congressional proposal. If Congress maintains that two-thirds of the states

11 must agree on one subject for an amendment before it may even be discussed at 12 a convention to propose amendments, it means two-thirds of each house of 13 Congress must agree to a single subject before it may be discussed in that

14 body, which essentially means two-thirds of the membership of Congress must

15 submit the same proposal in Congress before discussion on that subject may

16 begin in Congress. 1244

&quot;Beneficent aims however great or well directed can never serve in lieu of constitutional power." Carter v. Carter Coal Co., 298 U.S. 238 (1936).

1243 See supra text accompanying notes 560-831.

And, as with the convention, as supporters of "single subject" maintain, this two-thirds threshold for discussion is separate of the vote by Congress to actually submit the measure to the states for ratification. In other words, Congress would merely, by the first two-thirds vote, agree to discuss the matter; then would come the actual vote on the proposed amendment. Thus, the matter would have to be twice passed by Congress (two votes in each house of Congress) in order to be a valid amendment proposal, whereas Article V clearly only specifies a single vote by Congress to validate any amendment proposal. Obviously, this is a constitutional conflict, but this suit will leave the resolution of such a quandary to the supporters of "same subject". After all, it is their constitutional interpretation that would require both Congress and the convention to do everything twice, whereas the Founding Fathers were quite content to only require the matter be resolved once.

1	In summation, the two proposal bodies, Congress and the convention to
2	propose amendments, comprised of citizens of the United States, form a class
3	of citizens who are empowered with the privilege to propose amendments to the
4	Constitution. The Constitution mandates all members of a class must have equal
5	protection under the law, i.e., that no member or members of the class may
6	receive preferential treatment or have any privilege or immunity that class
7	enjoys abridged. Thus, all constitutional qualifications for office must
8	equally apply to both bodies. Further, all powers claimed by Congress to
9	regulate the convention to propose amendments must equally apply to Congress,
10	and regulation on Congress must also apply to the convention.
11
12	The Apportionment Argument of Senator Tydings
13
14	Some in Congress have argued that because the states were
15	malapportioned, the applications from these states for a convention to propose amendments may be ignored by the Congress. 1245 The question of malapportionment

(Footnote Continued Next Page)

16

 $<sup>^{1245}</sup>$  In 1967, during a debate on the convention, Democratic Senator Millard Tydings of Maryland presented his argument as to why Congress could reject convention applications by the states:

&quot;His first point of attack was on the states' petitions, most of which he declared were invalid because they had been submitted by legislatures that, as the Supreme Court had found, were malapportioned and therefore illegally constituted. Acknowledging that a 'malapportioned legislature may be competent, pending the reapportionment, to pass legislation generally,' Tydings insisted that 'such a legislature has no competence to initiate amendments to the Constitution to make legal its illegality.' As evidence that the Supreme Court was not alone in calling the states to account for unconstitutional apportionment systems, he cited cases in Georgia and Utah in which lower courts had agreed that it was improper for a malapportioned legislature to propose amendments, either to the state constitution or the Constitution of the United States, particularly when the subject was legislative reapportionment.

- 1 raises several constitutional issues, many of which are outside the scope of
- 2 this suit and will therefore only be briefly examined. However, not all the
- 3 constitutional issues involving malapportionment are without some bearing on
- 4 the issue of a convention to propose amendments, and these will be examined
- 5 more closely.

8

9

10

- 6 Summed up, Senator Tydings' arguments were:
- 7 1. Congress has the right to review applications;
  - 2. Congress may reject applications because the legislature submitting them is malapportioned: "A legislature has no competence to initiate amendments to the Constitution to make legal its illegality." 1246
- 11 The senator's last argument can be disposed of by the simple observation
- 12 that legislatures, both federal and state, have on numerous occasions made
- 13 that which was legal, illegal and that which was illegal, legal. Such examples
- 14 include homosexuality, drinking, gambling and labor laws to name a few that

&quot;(1). Tydings called the senate's attention to a footnote in one court's opinion that observed:

&quot;'It is interesting to note the speed by which the last State legislature memorialized Congress to call a constitutional convention to provide for reapportionment "on factors other than population..." compared to the Legislature's hesitancy to properly reapportion under the mandate of this court.'

&quot;(2). Tydings charged that of the 29 state legislatures that had petitioned for an amendment to overturn the reapportionment decision, '23 were unconstitutionally apportioned at the time the petition was approved, 13 of those 23 legislatures were under court orders to reapportion, and litigation was pending in the other 10.' The petitions, he said, 'were passed in haste, without the measured deliberativeness which should accompany the weighty responsibility of proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States...' Tydings pointed out the reapportionment of the legislatures was welcomed by the majority of the citizens of the country, but was most unpopular among the malapportioned state legislatures. It was the latter, he observed, who were challenging the court's ruling. His conclusion was that the petitions received from legislatures that the court had found malapportioned were invalid, and Congress entitled to ignore them."

A CONSTITUTIONAL CONVENTION: THREAT OR CHALLENGE (1981) (Edel), p. 88-89. Footnotes in the Edel text are as follows:

<sup>(1).</sup> The cases cited were Fortson v. Toombs, initially heard by a three-judge federal court and later reviewed by the Supreme Court, 379 U.S. 621 (1965), and Petuskey v. Rampton, 243 F. Supp. 365 (1965).

<sup>(2).</sup> CR [Congressional Record], vol. 133, p.10, 102.  $^{1246}\ Id.$

- 1 over the years have undergone a change in status either from legal to illegal
- 2 status or vice versa. Therefore it is clear a legislature can change the
- 3 legality of a particular subject. As to whether a legislature "has no
- 4 competence to initiate amendments to the Constitution to make legal its
- 5 illegality", the Supreme Court has addressed this issue when the cases cited
- 6 by Senator Tydings reached them and made it clear that such power does exist
- 7 in the legislative process, thus refuting the senator's supposition. 1247

"As to the provision forbidding submission to the electorate of a legislatively proposed new state constitution, I can find nothing in the Fourteenth Amendment, elsewhere in the Constitution, or in any decision of this Court which requires a State to initiate complete or partial constitutional change only by some method in which every voice in the voting population is given an opportunity to express itself. Can there be the slightest constitutional doubt that a State may lodge the power to initiate constitutional changes in any select body it pleases, such as a committee of the legislature, a group of constitutional lawyers, or even a 'malapportioned' legislature—particularly one whose composition was considered, prior to this Court's reapportionment pronouncements of June 15, 1964, to be entirely and solely a matter of state concern?

"Similarly as to the provision of the lower court's original decree limiting the functions of the 1965 legislature, it seems scarcely open to serious doubt that so long as the federal courts allow this Georgia legislature to sit, it must be regarded as the de facto legislature of the State, possessing the full panoply of legislative powers accorded by Georgia law." Fortson v. Toombs, 379 U.S. 621 (1965). (emphasis added).

In another case, the Court said:

"If the Federal Constitution is our guide, a person who might wish to "alter" our form of government may not be cast into the outer darkness. For the Constitution prescribes the method of 'alteration' by the amending process in Article V, and while the procedure for amending it is restricted, there is no restraint on the kind of amendment that may be offered." Whitehill v. Elkins, 389 U.S. 54 (1967) (emphasis added).

And as noted in Hawke v. Smith, 253 U.S. 221 (1920), the Court said:

"The only question really for determination is: What did the framers of the Constitution mean in requiring ratification by 'legislature'? That was not a term of uncertain meaning when incorporated into the Constitution. What it meant when adopted it still means for the purpose of interpretation. A Legislature was then the representative body which made the laws of the people... It is true that the power to legislate in the enactment of the laws of a state is derived from the people of the state. But the power to ratify a proposed amendment to the federal Constitution has its source in the federal Constitution. The act of ratification by the state derives its authority from

 $<sup>^{1247}</sup>$  In 1965 the Court said:

1

2

- 3 Having disposed of two of Senator Tydings' arguments, the question then
- 4 is did the passage of the  $14^{\rm th}$  Amendment by Congress (including the methods by
- 5 which the amendment was ratified) modify the intent and meaning of Article V
- 6 as it relates to the calling of a convention to propose amendments,
- 7 essentially voiding the clear intent of the Founding Fathers which was that
- 8 Congress was to have no discretion in the matter? 1248
- 9 Clearly, there is no expressed language in the 14th Amendment granting
- 10 Congress the power to reject state applications for a convention to propose
- 11 amendments, 1249 nor does the amendment grant any new power to Congress in the the federal Constitution to which the state and its people have alike assented." (emphasis added).

Taken together these rulings make it clear that a legislature, (through a convention to propose amendments or by actions taken by members of Congress) may propose any amendment of any subject; such power of ratification and convention are derived from authority of the federal Constitution and are thus not affected by malapportionment of state legislatures.

1248 See supra text accompanying notes 497-514.

The courts are of no help to the Congress. While the Constitution does grant the Court the right to decide "all cases...arising under this Constitution." (U.S. CONST., art. III, § 2, §§ 1), the Constitution does not grant the courts the power to decide on the transcendent issue of amendment by using court decisions to "throw out" applications by the states. This would be as much a violation of state application rights as congressional actions in the matter. See supra text accompanying note 284,909,1208.

Second, the issue of ex post facto arises. While a court order can affect decisions of a legislature declared malapportioned, the fact is that ex post facto would prevent the order from taking effect retroactively and, once the legislature was in compliance with the court order, any new applications would be "correct". See supra text accompanying notes 744-756; infra text accompanying notes 1302-1305,1553.

Finally, as it is a right (i.e., the right to alter or abolish) involved, it is clear that such a right cannot be removed by the subsequent actions of a legislature or a court. See supra text accompanying notes 954,1136-1147.

1 ratification procedure. Indeed, as noted by the courts at the time, the primary purpose of the 13th, 14th and 15th Amendments:

2

3 4

5

6 7

8

"...on the most casual examination of the language of these amendments, no one can fail to be impressed with the one pervading purpose found in them all, lying at the foundation of each, and without which none of them would have been even suggested, we mean the freedom of the slave race, the security and firm establishment of that freedom, and the protection of the newly-made freeman and citizen from the oppressions of those who had formerly exercised unlimited dominion over him."  $^{1250}$

While the "freedom of the slave race" and the "establishment of security for that freedom" is a noble cause, by no stretch of the imagination can the 12 granting of freedom to a particular race be translated into a power to overthrow, without amendment, the amendatory procedure of the Constitution. 1251

14 Nowhere in the language of the courts of that day is there any discussion or 15 even allusion to such a power or that such a power was ever contemplated or 16 even implied. Indeed, the discussion of the Court in Slaughterhouse indicates

17 the exact opposite. 1252 Thus, from an expressed point of view, it is clear

 $<sup>^{1250}</sup>$  Slaughterhouse Cases, 83 U.S. 36 (1872).

&lt;sup>1251</sup> See supra text accompanying note 1208.

&quot;Was it the purpose of the fourteenth amendment that by the simple declaration that no State should make or enforce any law which shall abridge the privileges and immunities of citizens of the United States, to transfer the security and protection of all the civil rights which we have mentioned, from the States to the federal government? And where it is declared that Congress shall have the power to enforce that article, was it intended to bring within the power of Congress the entire domain of civil rights heretofore belong exclusively to the States?

&quot;All this and more must follow, if the proposition of the plaintiffs in error be sound. For not only are these rights subject to the control of Congress whenever in its discretion any of them are supposed to be abridged by State legislation, but that body may also pass laws in advance, limiting and restricting the exercise of legislative power by the States, in their most ordinary and usual functions, as in its judgment it may think proper on all such subjects. And still further, such a construction followed by the reversal of the judgments of the Supreme Court of Louisiana in these cases, would constitute this court a perpetual censor upon all legislation of the States, on the civil rights of their own citizens, with authority to nullify such as it did not approve as consistent with those rights, as they existed at the time of the adoption of this amendment. The argument we admit is not always the most conclusive which is drawn from the consequences urged against the adoption of a particular construction of an instrument. But when, as in the

- 1 Congress derived no additional powers in its amendatory role as a result of
- 2 the passage of the 14th Amendment.
- 3 How then did the Court reach its conclusions in Coleman? Or, more
- 4 specifically, what language in the Constitution did the Supreme Court use to
- 5 arrive at its ruling? 1253 Bluntly, the Court used no language found in the
- 6 Constitution. Rather, it relied on the actions of Congress under the
- 7 Reconstruction Act. 1254 In this piece of legislation, Congress assumed the
- 8 power by legislative fiat to dictate how a state legislature would vote on the
- 9 ratification of a proposed amendment to the Constitution. 1255 Thus, it was this
- 10 legislative power asserted by Congress, not constitutional language 1256 that case before us, these consequences are so serious, so far-reaching and pervading, so great a departure from the structure and spirit of our institutions, when the effect is to fetter and degrade the State governments by subjecting them to the control of Congress, in the exercise of powers heretofore universally conceded to them of the most ordinary and fundamental character, when in fact it radically changes the whole theory of the relations of the state and Federal governments to each other and of both these governments to the people; the argument has a force that is irresistible, in the absence of language which expresses such a purpose too clearly to admit of doubt.

"We are convinced that no such results were intended by the Congress which proposed these amendments, nor by the legislatures of the States which ratified them." Id. See supra text accompanying note 1236.

 $^{1253}$  See supra text accompanying notes 1053-1108.

See supra text accompanying note 1077.

<sup>1255</sup> Id.

While this point will be pursued no further in this suit, it is interesting to note that in so deciding, the Court used legislative language to define constitutional limit rather than using constitutional intent to define legislative limit. Thus, the Court completely reversed its usual procedure in arriving at its decision.

Clearly this brings into grave doubt the finding of Chief Justice John Marshall who said:

"It cannot be presumed that any clause in the constitution is intended to be without effect; and, therefore, such a construction is inadmissible, unless the words require it."

In the same decision, Marshall also said:

"The constitution is either a superior, paramount law, unchangeable by ordinary means, or it is on a level with ordinary legislative acts, and, like other acts, is alterable when the legislature shall please to alter it.

- 1 was the basis for support by the Supreme Court in Coleman. 1257 Thus the Court
- 2 assumed a political rather than constitutional stance when it wrote
- 3 Coleman. 1258 Therefore any validity of the argument by Senator Tydings that the
- 4 Congress has the constitutional authority to effect state ratification votes
- 5 or a convention to propose amendments is based, not on the language of the
- 6 Constitution, nor on the history or language of the 14th Amendment, but on the
- 7 legislative language of the Reconstruction Act, the intent of which was
- 8 questioned by the Supreme Court at the time. 1259

9

10 Reynolds v. Sims---The Dissent of Justice Harlan

11

- 12 The final point of Senator Tydings' argument, that Congress may reject
- 13 applications by state legislatures because they are malapportioned, brings

&quot;If the former part of the alternative be true, then a legislative act contrary to the constitution is not law; if the latter part be true, then written constitutions are absurd attempts, on the art of the people, to limit a power in its own nature illimitable." Marbury v. Madison, 5 U.S. 137 (1803).

Hence, should the Court choose to reaffirm its ruling in Coleman, it will affect more than just this provision of the Constitution. The Court will establish that any legislative language by Congress is supreme to the Constitution, and it must be constitutional language which must yield, not legislative fiat. The effect of this will have far reaching consequences long after this case is settled.

&lt;sup>1257</sup> See supra text accompanying notes 1053-1108.

The Court may have justified its support using constitutional arguments, though a careful reading of the decision shows few were presented. In fact, those supporting Congress' incidental regulatory power primarily used the actions of Congress and the 14th Amendment as justification for their position. Certainly no expressed, specific constitutional language was quoted to justify the congressional action, nor did the Court refer to Slaughterhouse or quote Marshall in its findings. See supra text accompanying notes 1252,1256. Thus the Court assumed a political position rather than a constitutional one.

&lt;sup>1259</sup> See supra text accompanying note 1252.

- 1 into focus a much overlooked problem in the Constitution. Senator Tydings'
- 2 comments obviously were based on a series of 1962 through 1965 Supreme Court
- 3 rulings establishing that the federal courts could regulate the apportionment
- 4 of state legislatures. 1260 Essentially, the Court, relying on the doctrine of
- 5 the equal protection clause 1261 of the 14th Amendment, 1262 overruled all
- 6 arguments of apportionment previously used by the states except population as
- 7 the basis on which representatives could be apportioned using the "one man,
- 8 one vote" principle. 1263

<sup>1260</sup> See Baker v. Carr, 369 U.S. 186 (1962); Gray v. Sanders, 372 U.S. 368
(1963); Reynolds v. Sims, 377 U.S. 533 (1964); WMCA, Inc. v. Lomenzo, 377 U.S.
633 (1964); Maryland Committee v. Tawes, 377 U.S. 656 (1964); Davis v. Mann, 377 U.S. 678 (1964); Roman v. Sincock, 377 U.S. 695 (1964); Lucas v. Colorado
General Assembly, 377 U.S. 713 (1964); Wesberry v. Sanders, 376 U.S. 1 (1964);
Fortson v. Toombs, 379 U.S. 621 (1965).

&quot;...nor shall any State deprive any person of life, liberty, or property, without due process of law: nor deny to any person within its jurisdiction the equal protection of the laws."  $14^{\rm th}$  Amend., § 1. (emphasis added).

&quot;And our decision in Wesberry was of course grounded in that language of the Constitution which prescribes that members of the Federal House of Representatives are to be chosen 'by the People,' while attacks on state legislative apportionment schemes, such as that involved in the instant cases, are principally based on the Equal Protection Clause of the Fourteenth Amendment. Nevertheless, Wesberry clearly established that the fundamental principle of representative government in this county is one of equal representation for equal numbers of people, without regard to race, sex, economic status, or place of residence within a State." Reynolds v. Sims, 377 U.S. 533 (1964). (emphasis added).

Clearly this ruling by the Court confirms a much earlier finding by the Supreme Court which said:

&quot;In this case, the discrimination complained of is exercised against him and other citizens, who are as justly entitled to protection from wrongful discrimination, and to the full protection of their constitutional right of equality before all the courts of the State as if they were of African descent. If not, that amendment which sought to establish equality before the law establishes inequality, by giving preference to the rights of the colored race, and affording them superior protection.

&quot;The weight of authority and sound reason seem to establish, that while the immediate object sought by the adoption of the amendment was protection of the negro, its provisions extend and inure to the common benefit of all."

Missouri v. Lewis, 101 U.S. 22 (1879).

&quot;[O]nce the class of voters is chosen and their qualifications specified, we see no constitutional way by which equality of voting power may be evaded... The conception of political equality from the Declaration of

- 1 The exclusive use of the equal protection clause was objected to by
- 2 Associate Justice Harlan who said that reliance on the equal protection clause
- 3 did not provide authorization for the Court to act as it did. 1264 Justice
- 4 Harlan then attacked the Court's "failure to address itself at all to the
- 5 Fourteenth Amendment as a whole". 1265 Justice Harlan then discussed previous

Independence, to Lincoln's Gettysburg Address, to the Fifteenth, Seventeenth, and Nineteenth Amendments can mean only one thing—one person, one vote." Gray v. Sanders, 372 U.S. 368 (1963).  $^{1264}$  "Today's holding is that the Equal Protection Clause of the Fourteenth Amendment requires every State to structure its legislature so that all the members of each house represent substantially the same number of people; other facts may be given play only to the extent that they do not significantly encroach on this basic 'population' principle. Whatever may be thought of this holding as a piece of political ideology---and even on that score the political history and practices of this country from its earliest beginnings leave wide room for debate (see the dissenting opinion of Frankfurter, J., in Bake v. Carr, 369 U.S. 186, 266, 301-323)--- I think it demonstrable that the Fourteenth Amendment does not impose this political tenet on the States or authorize this Court to do so." Reynolds v. Sims, 377 U.S. 533 (1964). 1265 The Court's constitutional discussion, found in its opinion in the Alabama cases (Nos. 23, 27, 41, ante. p. 533) and more particularly at pages 561-568 thereof, is remarkable (as, indeed, is that found in the separate opinions of my Brothers Steward and Clark, ante. pp. 588, 587) for its failure to address itself at all to the Fourteenth Amendment as a whole or to the legislative history of the Amendment pertinent to the matter at hand. Stripped of aphorism, the Court's argument boils down to the assertion that appellees' right to vote has been invidiously 'debased' or 'diluted' by systems of apportionment which entitle them to vote for fewer legislators than other voters, an assertion which tied to the Equal Protection Clause only the constitutionally frail tautology that 'equal' means 'equal.'

"Had the Court paused to probe more deeply into the matter, it would have found that the Equal Protection Clause was never intended to inhibit the States from choosing any democratic method they please for the apportionment of their legislatures. This is shown by the language of the Fourteenth Amendment taken as a whole, by the understanding of those who proposed and ratified it, and by the political practices of the States at the time of the Amendment was adopted. It is confirmed by numerous state and Congressional actions since the adoption of the Fourteenth Amendment, and by the common understanding of the Amendment as evidenced by subsequent constitutional amendments and decisions of this Court before Baker v. Carr, supra, made an abrupt break with the past in 1962.

"The failure of the Court to consider any of these matters cannot be excused or explained by any concept of 'developing' constitutionalism. It is meaningless to speak of constitutional 'development' when both the language and history of the controlling provisions of the Constitution are wholly ignored. Since it can, I think, be shown beyond doubt that state legislative apportionments, as such, are wholly free of constitutional limitations, save

1 suits recently decided by the Supreme Court demonstrating that they were not

2 inconsistent with his conclusions. 1266

3

5 6 7

8

9

10

11

12

13

14

15

16

17

18

19 20 Justice Harlan then quoted the 14th Amendment:

"Representatives shall be apportioned among the several States according to their respective numbers, counting the whole number of persons in each State excluding Indians not taxed. But when the right to vote at any election for the choice of electors for President and Vice President of the United States, Representatives in Congress, the Executive and Judicial officers of a States, or the members of the Legislature thereof, is denied to any of the male inhabitants of such State, being twenty-one years of age, and citizens of the United States, or in any way abridged, except for participation in rebellion, or other crime, the basis of representation therein shall be reduced in the proportion which the number of such male citizens shall bear to the whole number of male citizens twenty-one years of age in such State."

Justice Harlan then commented:

"Whatever one might take to be the application to these cases of the Equal Protection Clause if it stood alone, I am unable to understand the Court's utter disregard of the second section which expressly recognizes the states' power to deny 'or in any way' abridge the right of their inhabitants to vote for 'the members of the [State] Legislature,' and its express such as may be imposed by the Republican Form of Government Clause (U.S. CONST., Art. IV, 4), the Court's action now bringing them within the purview of the Fourteenth Amendment amounts to nothing less than an exercise of the amending power by this court." Id.

<sup>1266</sup> "Before proceeding to my argument it should be observed that nothing done in Barker v. Carr, supra, or in the two cases that followed in its wake, Gray v. Sanders and Wesberry v. Sanders, supra, from which the Court quotes at some length, forecloses the conclusion which I reach.

"Baker decided only that claims such as those made here are within the competence of the federal courts to adjudicate. Although the court stated as its conclusion that the allegations of a denial of equal protection presented 'a justiciable constitutional cause of actions,' 369 U.S., at 237, it is evident from the Court's opinion that is was concerned all but exclusively with justifiability and give no serious attention to the question whether the Equal Protection Clause touches state legislative apportionments. Neither the opinion of the Court nor any of the concurring opinions considered the relevant text of the Fourteenth Amendment or any of the historical materials bearing on that question. None of the materials were briefed or otherwise brought to the Court's attention.

"In the Gray case the Court expressly laid aside the applicability to state legislative apportionments of the 'one person, one vote' theory there found to require the striking down of the Georgia county unit system...

"In Wesberry, involving Congressional districting, the decision rested on Art. I, 2, of the Constitution. The Court expressly did not reach the arguments put forward concerning the Equal Protection Clause. See 376 U.S., at 8, note 10.

"Thus it seems abundantly clear that the Court is entirely free to deal with the cases presently before it in light of materials now called to its attention for the first time." Id. (emphasis added).  $^{1267} \text{ U.S. CONST.}, \ 14 \text{th Amend.}, \ \S \ 2.$

- provision of a remedy for such denial or abridgment. The comprehensive scope of the second section and its particular reference to the state legislatures preclude the suggestion that first section was intended to have the result reached by the court today. If indeed the words of the Fourteenth Amendment speak for themselves, as the majority's disregard of history seems to imply, they speak as clearly as may be against the construction which the majority puts on them." 1268
- 8 Justice Harlan then discussed the history of the proposal of the  $14^{\rm th}$
- 9 Amendment, the record of the debates in Congress surrounding the amendment and
- 10 its ratification history. 1269 The justice then discussed post-ratification
- 11 history and other factors 1270 related to Section 2 including court cases the 1269 Justice Harlan concluded:

"It is incredible that Congress would have exacted ratification of the Fourteenth Amendment as the price of readmission [to the Union by the succeeding states], would have studied the State Constitutions for compliance with the Amendment, and would then have disregarded violations of it.

"The facts recited above show beyond any possible doubt:

- 1. that Congress, with full awareness of and attention to the possibility that the States would not afford full equality in voting rights to all their citizens, nevertheless deliberately chose not to interfere with the States' plenary power in this regard when it proposed the Fourteenth Amendment;
- that Congress did not include in he Fourteenth Amendment restrictions on the States' power to control voting rights because it believed that if such restrictions were included, the Amendment would not be adopted; and
- 3. that at least a substantial majority, if not all, of the states which ratified the Fourteenth Amendment did not consider that in so doing, they were accepting limitations on their freedom, never before questioned, to regulate voting rights as they chose.

"Even if one were to accept the majority's belief that it is proper entirely to disregard the unmistakable implications of the second section of the Amendment in construing the first section, one is confounded by its disregard of all this history. There is here none of the difficulty which may attend the application of basic principles to situations not contemplated or understood when the principles were framed. The problems which concern the Court now were problems when the amendment was adopted. By the deliberate choice of those responsible for the Amendment, it left those problems untouched." Id.

"In the present we can go still further. If the constitutional amendment was the only means by which all men, and later, women, could be guaranteed their right to vote at all, even for federal officers, how can it be that the far less obvious right to a particular kind of apportionment of state legislatures—a right to which is opposed a far more plausible conflicting interest of the state than the interest which opposes the general right of vote—can be conferred by judicial construction of the Fourteenth Amendment? Yet, unless one takes the highly implausible view that the Fourteenth

 $<sup>^{1268}</sup>$  Reynolds v. Sims, 377 U.S. 533 (1964).(emphasis added).

- 1 justice maintained were overturned by the current court decisions. 1271 After
- 2 reviewing each case involved, Justice Harlan finished his dissent with a
- 3 chillingly accurate prediction. 1272

Amendment controls methods of apportionment but leaves the right to vote itself unprotected, the conclusion is inescapable that the Court has, for purposes of these cases, relegated the Fifteenth and Nineteenth Amendments to the same limbo of constitutional anachronisms to which the second section of the Fourteenth Amendment has been assigned." Id.

"Mention should be made finally of the decisions of the Court which are disregarded or, more accurately, silently overruled today. Minor v. Happersett, supra, in which the Court held that the Fourteenth Amendment did not confer the right to vote on anyone, has already been noted." Id.

Justice Harlan then cited the following cases as being overturned by the court: Colegrove v. Barrett, 330 U.S. 804; Remmey v. Smith, 102 F. Supp. 708 (D.C. E. D. Pa.); Kidd v. McCanless, 200 Tenn. 273, 292 S. W. 2d 40 (denied under 352 U.S. 920); Radford v. Gary, 145 F. Supp. 541 (D.C. W. D. Okla.) (denied under 352 U.S. 99).

Justice Harlan said:

"The Court's elaboration of its new 'constitutional' doctrine indicates how far—and how unwisely—it has strayed from the appropriate bounds of its authority. The consequence of today's decision is that in all but the handful of States which may already satisfy the new requirements the local District Court or, it may be, the state courts, are given blanket authority and the constitutional duty to supervise apportionment of the state Legislatures. It is difficult to imagine a more intolerable and inappropriate interference by the judiciary with the independent legislatures of the States." Id.

1272 "With these cases the Court approaches the end of the third round set in motion by the complaint filed in Baker v. Carr. What is done today deepens my conviction that judicial entry into this realm is profoundly ill—advised and constitutionally impermissible. As I have said before, Wesberry v. Sanders, supra, at 48, I believe that the vitality of our political system, on which in the last analysis all else depends, is weakened by reliance on the judiciary for political reform, in time a complacent body politic may result.

"These decisions also cut deeply into the fabric of our federalism. What must follow from them may eventually appear to be the product of state legislatures. Nevertheless, no thinking person can fail to recognize that the aftermath of these cases, however desirable it may be thought in itself, will have been achieved at the cost of a radical alteration in the relationship between the States and the Federal Government, more particularly the Federal Judiciary. Only one who has an overbearing impatience with the federal system and its political processes will believe that that cost was not too high or was inevitable.

"Finally these decisions give support to a current mistaken view of the Constitution and the constitutional function of this Court. This view, in a nutshell, is that every major social ill in this country can find its cure in some constitutional 'principle,' and that this Court should 'take the lead' in promoting reform when other branches of government fail to act. The Constitution is not a panacea for every blot upon the public welfare, nor should this Court, ordained as a judicial body, be thought of as a general haven for reform movements. The Constitution is an instrument of government fundamental to which is the premise that in a diffusion of governmental

2

- 3 The simple point of section 2 of the 14th Amendment is that if a state
- 4 denies voters the right to vote in either state or federal elections, then its
- 5 federal representation is reduced. 1273 The fact is the Court, like Congress, is
- 6 bound to enforce the Constitution; neither has the luxury or the authority to
- 7 pick and choose what sections will be enforced and what sections will be authority lies the greatest promise that this Nation will realize liberty for all its citizens. This Court, limited in function in accordance with that premise, does not serve its high purpose when it exceeds its authority, even to satisfy justified impatience with the slow workings of the political process. For when, in the name of constitutional interpretation, the Court adds something to the Constitution that was deliberately excluded from it, the Court in reality substitutes its views for what should be so for the amending process." Id. (emphasis added).

At first glance, by the use of this last quote, this suit has supplied a position by a member of the Supreme Court that aids in defeating its position in the calling of a convention to propose amendments. Nothing could be farther from the truth. Obviously, Justice Harlan was referring in his remarks to the Court using questionable constitutional decisions to further political agendas that have been frustrated by the speed and direction of the political process. In this, he was entirely correct.

The convention to propose amendments is a mandated constitutional process. This constitutional procedure has been obstructed by political agendas. There is nothing wrong with a political agenda for a particular amendment proposal, but that agenda cannot be allowed to contaminate the Constitution which is exactly what Justice Harlan said was happening in Baker v. Carr. Because the convention is mandated by the Constitution and has been illegally obstructed by those with a political agenda and because this is clearly unconstitutional, it is entirely correct and totally within the proper authority of the Court to see that this provision of the Constitution is enforced and such agendas refuted where they conflict with mandated constitutional procedure.

 $^{1273}$  It is interesting that while the Court in Reynolds relied on the equal protection clause of the 14th Amendment as the basis of its determination that only population could be used as the basis of apportionment, only in section 2 of the 14th Amendment is this expressed. Not even Justice Harlan noted this fact. Thus the Court's finding is clearly based on this provision of the Constitution. In order to reach its conclusion based on its interpretive reasoning, the Court even had to ignore its own conclusion regarding Section 2 of the 14th Amendment.

The Court said:

"Article 1, 2, 4, 5 and Amendment XIV, 2 relate only to congressional elections and obviously do not govern apportionment of state legislatures." Baker v. Carr, 369 U.S. 186 (1962).

- 1 ignored, especially when the Court attempts to use implied reasoning to
- 2 outweigh or overrule expressed provisions of the Constitution. If the
- 3 Constitution mandates, as it does in section 2, that the denial of voting
- 4 rights by a state shall result in federal reapportionment of that state's
- 5 congressional delegation, reducing its number, then that is what is required
- 6 and must, at the minimum, occur. 1274
- 7 Under the terms of the Constitution, the Supreme Court's judicial power
- 8 "shall extend to all cases...arising under this Constitution." 1275 Implicit in
- 9 that constitutional power is the concept that there must be a controversy for
- 10 the Court to decide, i.e., that there must be a dispute involving at least two
- 11 of points of view, one of which the Court must favor. However, when the
- 12 Constitution mandates an action, the legitimate question must be posed: how
- 13 can the Court find in any other way where such action is mandated and supra text accompanying note 238.

1275 U.S. CONST., art. III, § 2, §§ 1.

 $<sup>^{1274}</sup>$  A careful reading of Section 2 of the  $14^{
m th}$  Amendment which states in part that "But when the right to vote at any election for the choice of electors for President and Vice President of the United States, Representatives in Congress, the Executive and Judicial officers of a States, or the members of the Legislature thereof, is denied to any of the male inhabitants of such State, being twenty-one years of age, and citizens of the United States, or in any way abridged...." (emphasis added) poses an interesting question for the Court. As Congress has been required to call a convention to propose amendments since at least 1911, (see infra TABLE 2-STATES APPLYING FOR A CONVENTION, p.673) and this involves citizens using their voting franchise, it can argued that the right to vote at any election has been abridged. As Congress has refused to call a convention and thus hold elections for convention delegates and such refusal has been complete and total for all citizens of all states, under the terms of Section 2 of the 14th Amendment the validity of all elections for all congressional representatives is in doubt as by the terms of the amendment, all representation must be reduced by the proportion of those who have been discriminated against, which in this case, is every voting citizen in the United States. The Court has addressed this matter regarding Congress denying the right of vote and offers no support for congressional obstruction. See

- 1 expressed as essentially there is no controversy? The answer is clear: it
- 2 cannot. The Constitution, as supreme law of the land, allows no controversy
- 3 where its provisions are understandable, unambiguous and mandatory. It then is
- 4 left to the Court merely to serve as a method of enforcement for this
- 5 constitutional standard as would be expected of all branches of government,
- 6 that they would, to whatever extent is their constitutional power, "support,
- 7 defend and enforce" the Constitution.
- 8 Would there be any "controversy," for example, over the declaration by a
- 9 member of Congress or the President that he or she intended to remain in
- 10 office past his constitutional term without reaffirmation by election? Would
- 11 there be any "controversy" if a president declared himself reelected despite
- 12 not receiving a favorable vote in the Electoral Collage? Obviously not. Where
- 13 the Constitution is unambiguous in intent, its intent must be unambiguously
- 14 obeyed, and the Court is obligated not to "interpret" or even to entertain
- 15 "controversy," but to enforce the Constitution as it is expressed. 1276
- 16 The meaning and language of Section 2 is unambiguous and clear. It
- 17 commands a single action, that of reducing federal representation in the House
- 18 of Representatives of any state that denies or in any way abridges the right
- 19 to vote in any federal or state election. 1277 It employs the word "shall" which &quot;Where the text of the constitution is clear and distinct, no restriction on its plain and obvious import should be admitted unless the inference is irresistible." Martin v. Hunter's Lessee, 14 U.S. 304 (1816); "Where there are several possible meanings of the words of the constitution, that meaning which will defeat rather than effectuate the constitutional purpose cannot rightly be preferred." U.S. v. Classic, 313 U.S. 299 (1941); see supra text accompanying note 551.

&lt;sup>1277</sup> See supra text accompanying note 1267.

- 1 leaves no discretion either upon Congress or the courts. 1278 The section
- 2 provides no other pre-conditions to be satisfied except that the right to vote
- 3 has somehow been abridged or denied; 1279 other constitutional standards, such
- 4 as equal protection, may certainly be employed to determine this has
- 5 occurred, 1280 but no other part of the Constitution prevents or obstructs the
- 6 Section 2 command. Thus, there can be only one conclusion regarding Section 2
- 7 of the  $14^{\mathrm{th}}$  Amendment: Congress is malapportioned because the mandated
- 8 reduction of federal representation as required by the Constitution upon the
- 9 discovery by the Court of state denial of voting rights has never been carried
- 10 out.
- 11 There is no evidence in Reynolds that any appellees or appellants or
- 12 justices involved in the case, other than Justice Harlan, even raised the
- 13 matter of section 2 and its enforcement. 1281 That is, neither the appellees nor
- 14 appellants requested that section 2 be enforced; instead the cases clearly
- 15 focused on resolving state inequities only, without regard to federal
- 16 consequences. Clearly speculation as to the reasoning of plaintiffs for not
- 17 requesting such action by the Court in these cases is outside the scope of
- 18 this suit and will not be pursued. The simple fact is the matter was not
- 19 brought up by anyone except Justice Harlan. This fact, however, does not
- 20 relieve the Court of enforcing the Constitution and its expressed provisions.
- 21 Where the Constitution mandates a specific remedy, no other may be considered.

-

 $<sup>^{1278}\ \</sup>textit{See supra}$  text accompanying note 860.

<sup>1279</sup> See supra text accompanying note 1267.

See Reynolds v. Sims, 377 U.S. 533 (1964); see supra text accompanying note 1260.

<sup>1281</sup> See supra text accompanying note 1266.

By the same token, a central point was overlooked by Justice Harlan in

2 his dissent but not by the Court majority: while the Constitution clearly

3 mandates a punishment for states that deny or abridge voting rights by

4 reduction of federal representation, it is also clear that under the doctrine

5 of the equal protection clause, this denial or abridgment of voting rights

6 must be terminated because this denial or abridgment of voting rights by the states is a violation of the doctrine of the equal protection clause.

8 The Court, having determined there was denial of voting rights by the 9 states, under the doctrine of equal protection, is not prevented by the 10 Constitution, indeed, is commanded by the provisions of Section 1 of the  $14^{\rm th}$

11 Amendment, to remedy the situation within the states by ordering that under 12 that clause, reapportionment of the states occurs, thus restoring voting

13 rights to the people. But the matter cannot not rest there: the Constitution

14 then demands that once having made this determination, congressional reduction of representation must occur. The Court cannot give Congress a "pass" on this

16 matter. 1282

15

7

<sup>1282</sup> Opponents of this conclusion will naturally cite Saunders v. Wilkins, 152 F.2d 235 (1945) where the Court dismissed a suit involving the state of Virginia. In the suit, the plaintiff, Saunders brought an action against the Secretary of State of the Commonwealth of Virginia for damages for the secretary's refusal to certify the name of the plaintiff as a candidate for the office of Congressman-at-large on the theory that apportionment acts of Congress and a redistricting act of Virginia failed to take into account the affect of a poll tax which allegedly disenfranchised some sixty percent of the voters of the state. The plaintiff cited specifically Section 2 of the 14th Amendment as the basis of his contention that Virginia was malapportioned. The Fourth Circuit Court of Appeals ruled that reapportionment was

&quot;political, rather than judicial" and consequently the suit was dismissed.

There is no comfort is this case as it was clearly overturned by Davis v. Mann, 377 U.S. 678 (1964), one of the six cases brought to the Court regarding reapportionment of the state legislatures. The case was, of course, from Virginia. In this case, as with Reynolds, the Court held it had jurisdiction in the matter. Thus, Saunders was overturned and with these

- It is an axiom of constitutional law that every act, at its minimum
- 2 inquiry, is either constitutional or unconstitutional; there is no semi-
- 3 constitutional. 1283 The expressed words in the Constitution are its minimum
- 4 standard that allow no further reduction in effect. 1284 From this standard decisions the matter clearly was removed from the political question doctrine and placed by the Court's own actions into the realm of the judiciary.

Surprisingly, Justice Harlan did not refer to Saunders in his argument in Reynolds. A careful reading of Saunders clearly shows the 1964 Supreme Court overturned this decision, thus affirming the plaintiff's case which called for the use of section 2 of the 14th Amendment to reapportion Congress.

Nor is there any help in using Department of Commerce v. Montana, 503 U.S. 442 (1992). While the Court addressed the issue of Congress being able to "freeze" representation in the House of Representatives at 435 members, the Court did not address the reduction of representatives as a result of malapportionment. Essentially, what has not been addressed by the Court is that Section 2 of the  $14^{\rm th}$  Amendment negated the 30,000 population per representative requirement of the United States Constitution thus allowing for representation to be based on a much higher figure per representative. (U.S. CONST., art. I, §2, §§ 3, "The number of representatives shall not exceed one for every thirty thousand...")

"That the people have an original right to establish, for their future government, such principles as, in their opinion, shall most conduce to their own happiness, is the basis on which the whole American fabric has been erected... This original and supreme will organized the government, and assigns to different departments their respective powers. It may either stop here, or establish certain limits not to be transcended by those departments. The government of the United States is of the latter description. The powers of the legislature are defined and limited; and that those limits may not be mistaken, or forgotten, the constitution is written... It is a proposition too plain to be contested, that the constitution controls any legislative act repugnant to it; or that the legislature may alter the constitution by an ordinary act. Between these alternatives there is no middle ground." Marbury v. Madison, 5 U.S. 137 (1803). (emphasis added).

1284 "It cannot be presumed that any clause in the constitution is intended to

"It cannot be presumed that any clause in the constitution is intended to be without effect." Marbury v. Madison, 5 U.S. 137 (1803); "Where provision in United States Constitution is unambiguous and its meaning is entirely free from doubt, the intention of the framers of the constitution cannot be inquired into, and the Supreme Court is bound to give the provision full operation, whatever might be the views entertained of its expediency." Ogden v. Saunders, 23 U.S. 213 (1827); "Court may not construe Constitution so as to defeat its obvious ends when another construction, equally accordant with the words and sense thereof, will enforce and protect them." Prigg v. Commonwealth of Pennsylvania, 41 U.S. 539 (1842); "A constitutional provision should not be construed so as to defeat its evident purpose, but rather so as to give it effective operation and suppress the mischief at which it was aimed." Jarrolt v. Moberly, 103 U.S. 580 (1880); "Where intention of words and phrases used in Constitution is clear, there is no room for construction and no excuse for interpolation." United States v. Sprague, 282 U.S. 716 (1931); "In expounding

- 1 emanates all implications of these words; but these implications in no way
- 2 relieve that minimum standard of performance by those affected by it. 1285 Thus,
- 3 whatever is expressed in the Constitution must at the minimum be accomplished
- 4 together with any reasonable and proper implication of those words. Federal
- 5 reapportionment of Congress is based on clear, unambiguous constitutional
- 6 language requiring no interpretation. The courts cannot ignore such
- 7 language. 1286 Thus, if the number of representatives permitted to each state in
- 8 Congress is not in compliance with a provision of the Constitution, that
- 9 representation must be unconstitutional. 1287
- The Constitution sets no timetable for congressional reapportionment,
- 11 save the imperative "shall" 1288 and the less definite "when." 1289 Thus, it is the Constitution, every word must have its due force and appropriate meaning." Wright v. United States, 302 U.S. 583 (1938).

&quot;That which is implied in a constitution is as effectual as what is expressed." The Township of Pine Grove v. Talcott, 86 U.S. 666 (1874); "With the Constitution, as with a statute or other written instrument, what is reasonably implied is as much a part thereof as what is expressed." Dillon v. Gloss, 256 U.S. 368 (1921).

&lt;sup>1286</sup> See supra text accompanying note 1284.

Of course Congress can get around the apportionment issue by declaring itself not bound by the Constitution, thus establishing itself as a tyranny. Or Congress can declare it is malapportioned, thus establishing itself as unconstitutional. This, of course, does not preclude other branches of the Federal government from reaching the same conclusion and acting on it.

By openly professing it has ignored the clear language of Section 2 of the 14th Amendment, Congress could chalk up two major accomplishments. First, it would bring into doubt the validity of every law passed by Congress since the ratification of the 14th Amendment. Second, it might well establish Congress as the last bastion of institutional racism in America. After all, it is abundantly clear that the prime purpose of the authors of the 13th, 14th and 15th Amendments was to deal with racism. By refusing to obey constitutional language written by Congress itself, that branch must face the painful possibility of being classed among the institutionally racist. Or Congress can ignore both issues, thus establishing itself not merely as a tyranny, but a racist and unconstitutional tyranny at that. As this suit is not actually concerned with the 14th Amendment's language on apportionment, it will leave this matter to the wisdom of members of Congress.

1288 See supra text accompanying note 853,856,860.

- 1 proper for the Court to wait a period of time before ordering such action.
- 2 However, after some thirty years, any further delay would seem beyond the
- 3 pale.
- 4 Several questions are raised by the fact that Congress is
- 5 malapportioned. Most notably is the legitimacy of any congressional act passed
- 6 since June 15, 1964<sup>1290</sup> as any act voted on in Congress was done by
- 7 representatives not authorized by the Constitution to do so. $^{1291}$  Then there is
- 8 the issue that the terms "when" and "upon" could be argued to mean that any
- 9 act of Congress involving representatives of a state that denied voting rights
- 10 was invalid from the time the actual denial took place regardless of when the
- 11 Court decision occurred. 1292 Certainly the question is significant because for
- 12 an act of Congress to be constitutional, it must be in compliance with the
- 13 entire Constitution. 1293

&lt;sup>1290</sup> The date Reynolds was decided. See Reynolds v. Sims, 377 U.S. 533 (1964). <sup>1291</sup> Just as impeachment is a term of office for both judiciary and presidency, constitutional apportionment is a term of office for Congress. In each case, the Constitution, beside the other expressed terms of age, citizenship and so forth, sets as a condition of the office, or term, the fact that the officeholder may be removed.

While not specifically addressed in Powell v. McCormack, 395 U.S. 486 (1969), it is clear Congress "is limited to the standing qualifications prescribed in the Constitution." One of these standing qualifications in the Constitution is section 2 of the  $14^{\rm th}$  Amendment which prescribes a reduction of representation for a state based on certain actions by that state. Congress may not ignore this anymore than it may ignore any other textual specification in the Constitution regarding holding office.

&lt;sup>1292</sup> In some cases, this might affect acts of Congress extending back as far as 1901. See Reynolds v. Sims, 377 U.S. 533 (1964). However, there is substantial evidence the Court would not rule so drastically. See infra text accompanying note 1308.

&quot;The government of the United States can claim no powers which are not granted to it by the Constitution." Martin v. Hunter's Lessee, 14 U.S. 304 (1816); "Under provision of Constitution declaring that constitution and laws of the United States which shall be made in pursuance thereof shall be the supreme law of the land, there can be no law inconsistent with the fundamental law, and no enactment not in pursuance of authority conferred by it can create obligations or confer rights." Hepburn v. Griswold, 75 U.S. 603 (1869); "The

1

2

What's Good for the Goose...

4

13

17

5 However, the purpose of this suit is not to argue the issue of

6 congressional reapportionment as mandated by the Constitution except as that

7 issue may affect the calling of a convention to propose amendments. Therefore,

8 the issue of federal reapportionment or malapportionment will not be probed

9 further except in this particular light.

10 What is the effect of Reynolds et al. on the convention to propose

11 amendments? To answer this question, one obvious fact must be established: the 12 states, having gone through court ordered reapportionment, are in all respects constitutional while the Congress, having yet to be apportioned after the 14 Court having determined the states were malapportioned, is

15 unconstitutional. 1294

16 The first point is the destruction of an obvious conclusion that would serve to defeat the calling of the convention to propose amendments. The 18 argument would be that if Congress is not properly apportioned, any concept of 19 basing convention representation, i.e., the number of delegates in each state

20 delegation sent to a convention to propose amendments, on the state's constitution is the supreme law of the land and no act of Congress is of any validity which does not rest on the authority conferred by that instrument." United States v. Germaine, 99 U.S. 508 (1878); "Every act of Congress must find in the Constitution some warrant for its passage." United States v. Harris, 106 U.S. 629 (1882).

<sup>1294</sup> If the axiom expressed by Marshall is to be complied with, no other conclusion is possible. See supra text accompanying note 1283.

BRIEF IN SUPPORT OF CONVENTION GENERAL BRIEF ARGUMENTS PAGE 547

- 1 congressional representation 295 is inherently flawed, as Congress itself is
- 2 not properly apportioned. Thus, the convention to propose amendments cannot be
- 3 constitutional as Congress is not, and therefore it cannot be held until
- 4 Congress becomes constitutional. 1296
- 5 This argument is erroneous. Despite the fact the states are
- 6 malapportioned, this fact, which has since been corrected by the Court, does
- 7 not negate the authority of their state legislatures. 1297 This point
- 8 established, it then follows that all constitutional powers, federal and
- 9 state, were at all times available to the state legislatures. One of these
- 10 powers, "derived from the federal constitution" is the power to apply for a
- 11 convention to propose amendments. Thus, reapportionment had no effect on
- 12 the states' authority to apply for a convention to propose amendments. 1299 The

&lt;sup>1295</sup> See infra text accompanying notes 1424-1430,1440-1480.

<sup>1296</sup> If this argument is accepted, it presents at least two problems. First, it offers a tremendous political opportunity to those opposed to a convention by simply delaying the reapportionment of Congress ad infinitum. But it is the constitutional dangers that are more important. By assuming Congress is the pacesetter of the Constitution, it is assumed erroneously that Congress in some manner must still control the convention. This was not intended by the Founding Fathers. See supra text accompanying notes 505-514.

The fact is, the effect of congressional malapportionment on the selection of delegates is nil. See infra text accompanying notes 1481-1485.  $^{1297}$  "[I]t seems scarcely open to serious doubt that so long as the federal courts allow this Georgia Legislature to sit, it must be regarded as the de facto legislature of the State, possessing the full panoply of legislative powers accorded by Georgia law." Fortson v. Toombs, 379 U.S. 621 (1965).  $^{1298}$  "It is true that the power to legislate in the enactment of the laws of a state is derived from the people of the state. But the power to ratify a proposed amendment to the federal Constitution has its source in the federal Constitution. The act of ratification by the state derives its authority from the federal Constitution to which the state and its people have alike assented." Hawke v. Smith, 253 U.S. 231 (1920).

&lt;sup>1299</sup> Senator Tydings, of course, completely ignored the obvious implications of Hawke and Fortson. Together, they defeat the final prong of his argument. See supra text accompanying note 1245.

- 1 effect of this conclusion is clear: all applications by the states are valid
- 2 regardless of their apportionment.
- 3 The central point of Senator Tydings' argument, that malapportionment by
- 4 the states negates convention applications while the states are
- 5 malapportioned, has ironically the effect of removing obstacles to the calling
- 6 of the convention to propose amendments. If it is accepted that
- 7 malapportionment has an effect on state applications, then clearly it can only
- 8 affect those applications that were filed while the states were
- 9 malapportioned. The cases before the Supreme Court cite a span of abuses
- 10 ranging from approximately 1910 to 1964. 300 Obviously, any applications made
- 11 by the states before or after this period of time must be considered valid as
- 12 there is no malapportionment in the state legislatures. In the case of the
- 13 pre-1910 era, malapportionment had yet to occur; in the post-1964 era, due to
- 14 Court ordered reapportionment, the states were no longer malapportioned; thus
- 15 their applications are unquestionably and incontestably valid and legal.
- Between these two eras exists a more than sufficient number of
- 17 applications by a sufficient number of states to compel the calling of a
- 18 convention irrespective of any argument used to prevent it. 1301 Ironically,
- 19 using Senator Tydings' argument, removing the so-called "illegal" applications
- 20 still leaves at least two same subject amendments, balanced budget and tax

TABLE 6-SAME SUBJECT APPLICATIONS, PART I, p.681;

TABLE 6-SAME SUBJECT APPLICATIONS, PART II, p.682;

TABLE 9-SAME SUBJECT APPLICATIONS INCLUDING CAPLAN, PART I, p.689;

TABLE 9-SAME SUBJECT APPLICATIONS INCLUDING CAPLAN, PART II, p.690.

BRIEF IN SUPPORT OF CONVENTION GENERAL BRIEF ARGUMENTS PAGE 549

<sup>1300</sup> See supra text accompanying note 1260.

 $<sup>^{1301}</sup>$  See infra

- limited taxation; 1302 both of these amendments are clearly contemporaneous in 1
- 2 nature. 1303 Therefore, if one prescribes to these unconstitutional pseudo pre-
- conditions as the basis upon which to call a convention to propose amendments, 3
- they have been met. If one does not prescribe to these unconstitutional pseudo 4
- 5 pre-conditions and accepts only a numeric total as being the basis on which a
- 6 convention is called, it too has been met. Thus, the pseudo pre-conditions
- 7 established by opponents of a convention to propose amendments may be
- 8 satisfied by using an argument of an opponent of the calling of a convention,
- 9 an argument designed to block the calling of a convention to propose
- 10 amendments but which in fact facilitates rather than obstructs a convention
- 11 call.
- However, the fact that Senator Tydings' argument does satisfy the 12
- 13 unconstitutional pseudo pre-conditions of the opponents of the calling of a
- convention to propose amendments does not lend credence or weight to these 14
- unconstitutional arguments. 1304 Rather, it demonstrates the fallacy of these 15

 $<sup>^{1302}</sup>$  Applications made before 1910 that effect the calling of a convention to propose amendments are applications by the states for general conventions. They, of course, are added to any "same subject" applications, provided the applications come from different states. Of course, proper interpretation of the Article V provision makes any subject mentioned in the application irrelevant as only the numeric count total of applying states matters. See supra text accompanying notes 532,541; infra

TABLE 6-SAME SUBJECT APPLICATIONS, PART I, p.681; TABLE 6-SAME SUBJECT APPLICATIONS, PART II, p.682.

 $<sup>^{1304}</sup>$  "[T]he particular phraseology of the constitution of the United States confirms and strengthens the principle, supposed to be essential to all written constitutions, that a law repugnant to the constitution is void..." Marbury v. Madison, 5 U.S. 137 (1803).

If this axiom applies to all laws, it certainly must apply to any politically motivated pseudo pre-conditions that have no support of any law. The fact must be stated bluntly: despite all the rhetoric used by opponents to a convention, not one of their arguments has ever become law.

1 arguments by exposing the complete disregard of the Constitution by those who

2 would "defend" it. These "defenders" would "save" the Constitution by ignoring

3 its provisions. If the Constitution is to have meaning and purpose, it must be

4 obeyed. If it is not obeyed, it can have no meaning or purpose. Thus, those

5 who would disobey its provisions in the name of "defending" it actually seek

6 to destroy it. The Constitution is forthright: when the proper number of 7 states apply, the Congress shall call a convention and has no discretion in

8 the matter. 1305

9

10

The Effect of Section 2 on the Convention Call

11

16

20

12 Convention opponents will quickly latch onto the apparently obvious

13 argument to defeat the call: as Congress is malapportioned and therefore

14 unconstitutional, Congress cannot issue a convention call because such call

15 issued from an unconstitutional body cannot be constitutional. 1306 Thus,

Congress will first have to reapportion itself (after an investigation

17 conducted by Congress) by first determining whether Section 2 of the  $14^{\rm th}$

18 Amendment actually affects Congress and which states if any are affected.

19 Congressional "investigation" lags on until public interest dies away at which time a report is issued saying no state is affected and representation need

21 not be altered. As to the convention call, the original reason for the issued

.

 $<sup>^{1305}</sup>$  See supra text accompanying notes 2,497-514.

<sup>1306</sup> See supra text accompanying note 1245.

- 1 being raised, it is quietly ignored, and convention call is never issued
- 2 despite the constitutional mandate.
- 3 There are two fallacies with this "obvious" argument. First, the
- 4 argument ignores the intent of the Founding Fathers regarding the calling of
- 5 the convention and the role of Congress in it. Second, despite
- 6 malapportionment, the argument presumes the legislature cannot legislate if it
- 7 is malapportioned; in fact the powers of a legislature still exist.
- 8 As to the first fallacy: simply put, the malapportionment of Congress
- 9 does not affect the convention call because the call is mandated upon Congress
- 10 by the Constitution. In other words, the vote is automatic and absolute, the
- 11 poll and its result having already been performed by the Founding Fathers in
- 12 the language of Article  $V^{1307}$  which establishes all of Congress in favor with
- 13 no dissent. Therefore, no actual "vote" of Congress is required as it is the
- 14 body in whole which is commanded by the Constitution; the command is effective
- 15 and conclusive upon the Congress regardless of its numbers. Thus, the
- 16 distribution of congressional representatives among the states is irrelevant
- 17 to the matter of a convention call.
- 18 As to the second fallacy, that being malapportioned prevents Congress
- 19 from calling, the Supreme Court addressed this issue in an analogous ruling
- 20 concerning the states and malapportionment. The Court determined that:
  - (1) No state (and presumably Congress) is required "to initiate complete or partial constitutional change only by some method in which every voice in the voting population is given an opportunity to express itself";
  - (2) "[I]t seems scarcely open to serious doubt that so long as the federal courts allow this...[1]egislature to sit, (and presumably

21

22 23

24

25

26

 $<sup>^{1307}</sup>$  See supra text accompanying note 2,497-514.

Congress) it must be regarded as the de facto legislature of the State, possessing the full panoply of legislative powers accorded by... law." 1308

4 Thus, there is no solace in the malapportionment argument for those

- 5 wishing to use it as an excuse for Congress not to call a convention as
- 6 required by the Constitution. Of course, should Congress vote to regulate the
- 7 convention, that is an entirely different matter. Here, Congress,
- 8 malapportioned and thus unconstitutional, would be forced to take a vote on
- 9 the matter. Consequently, its malapportionment comes into the legislative
- 10 equation together with question of its legality. A malapportioned,
- 11 unconstitutional Congress would be attempting to regulate or obstruct the
- 12 constitutional and legally apportioned states in their pursuit of a
- 13 constitutional right for them and their citizens. This, in addition to the
- 14 incidental regulatory power of Congress to control the ratification vote of
- 15 the states in a constitutional amendment, 1309 might conceivably cause negative
- 16 political reaction among the people. They might object to Congress assuming
- 17 the powers of a tyrant for its own political and self-serving ends--
- 18 specifically maintaining power.

BRIEF IN SUPPORT OF CONVENTION GENERAL BRIEF ARGUMENTS PAGE 553

&lt;sup>1308</sup> Fortson v. Toombs, 379 U.S. 621 (1965). (parentheses added). It is hardly a stretch to assume that a Court that found a state legislature was in fact "de facto" and therefore possessed all legislative powers would not accord the same determination regarding Congress.

However, this assumption is not without risk. In the case of the states, the Court relied on interpretation of the Constitution to arrive at its decision. In the case of Congress, however, it would have to deal directly with expressed language that it might find difficult to refute given that the Court has held an issue is either constitutional or unconstitutional. This may explain why the Court did not mention Congress in this particular ruling but instead dealt only with the states. See supra text accompanying notes 1247,1297.

&lt;sup>1309</sup> See supra text accompanying notes 849,917,1006,1056,1077,1079,1089, 1094,1188.

Congress to "fill in the details". Despite fears that this situation would

17

 $<sup>^{1310}</sup>$  Congress has sole discretion as to which method of ratification will be employed: ratification by state legislatures or by state constitutional conventions. (U.S. CONST., art. V). Congress is limited to these two forms of ratification.

&quot;Under U.S. Constitution, article 5, providing for the ratification of proposed amendments by the Legislatures of three-fourths of the states or by conventions in three-fourths thereof, as one or the other mode may be proposed by Congress, the power of determining the method of ratification is conferred upon Congress, and is limited to the two methods specified." Hawke v. Smith, 253 U.S. 221 (1920).

&quot;Where there are several possible meanings of the words of the constitution, that meaning which will defeat rather than effectuate the constitutional purpose cannot rightly be preferred." United States v. Classic, 313 U.S. 299 (1941).

&lt;sup>1312</sup> See supra text accompanying notes 547-831.

- 1 lead to a "runaway" convention, 1313 fears which have been usually raised as
- 2 objections to a particular amendment proposal,  $^{1314}$  this is not an
- 3 insurmountable problem requiring unconstitutional interference from Congress.
- 4 Rather, a single constitutional interpretation clarifies and resolves the
- 5 issue without breaking the intent or spirit of the Constitution.
- 6 Having already established the equal protection clause of the  $14^{\rm th}$
- 7 Amendment applies to both convention delegates and members of Congress, it is
- 8 a small step to acknowledge that the same clause equally applies to the
- 9 convention corpus as to Congress. 1315 Well settled procedural and structural
- 10 constitutional clauses that serve to establish the internal powers of Congress
- 11 are sufficient in scope and time-tested reliability to allow the convention to
- 12 regulate itself using these same clauses to "fill in the details."
- 13 If the Court adopts the general principle that these constitutional
- 14 clauses that regulate Congress' general internal makeup and establish its

BRIEF IN SUPPORT OF CONVENTION GENERAL BRIEF ARGUMENTS PAGE 555

 $^{\rm 1313}$  See supra text accompanying notes 790-813.

&lt;sup>1314</sup> See supra text accompanying notes 409,555-558,595-612.

This interpretation is clearly implied in the language of Article V. The article calls for amendments either by Congress or by convention to "be valid to all intents and purposes..." (U.S. CONST., art. V). Clearly, the procedures by which an amendment proposal is arrived at must be as equally valid whether made by Congress or convention. It is the same reasoning that the 14th Amendment itself is valid, that the procedures used to ratify it were themselves valid and constitutional. See supra text accompanying notes 849,917,1006,1056,1079,1094.

The  $14^{\rm th}$  Amendment's requirement of "equal protection under the law" clearly mandates these procedures must be equal under the law, in this case, the Constitution itself which is the "supreme law of the land." (U.S. CONST., art. VI, § 2) (emphasis added).

However, unlike the convention, congressional procedures are specified by clauses in the Constitution. These general procedures allow the Congress to "fill in the details" for itself without further constitutional authority. So it must also be for the convention. Therefore, to fulfill the standards of the  $14^{\rm th}$  Amendment and Article V, those specified constitutional provisions that affect Congress must apply equally to the convention to propose amendments.

- 1 general, non-legislative powers apply equally to the convention to propose
- 2 amendments, then the answer is simple. Using the 14th Amendment's doctrine of
- 3 equal protection in this manner allows the Court to answer the questions
- 4 regarding the formation, composition and general internal powers of the
- 5 convention without imposing itself unduly in the matter; thus a separation of
- 6 powers conflict is avoided. $^{1316}$  The doctrine of equal protection thus disposes
- 7 of many legal thorns raised by convention critics and even answers Madison's
- 8 concerns. 1317
- 9 These internal powers include both expressed powers of Congress, such as
- 10 appointing its own officers, 1318 and reasonable implied powers, such as the
- 11 right to hire staff or the right to conduct hearings for the purpose of
- 12 gathering information and input on proposed amendments. Equally important, any
- 13 general constitutional restrictions or protections on Congress also apply to a
- 14 convention to propose amendments. 1319

&lt;sup>1316</sup> By the same token, however, any questions raised regarding internal powers of the convention that might find their way to the courts in separate actions can be addressed by the Court expeditiously by use of well established case law. This allows for a convention to exist well within the law without facing endless legal hurdles in order to accomplish its constitutional mission.

<sup>1317</sup> See supra text accompanying note 409.

&lt;sup>1318</sup> U.S. CONST., art. I, § 2, §§ 5.

&lt;sup>1319</sup> Suppose, however, the Court were to reject this argument and leave the convention to propose amendments to fend for itself. What would occur? The answer is obvious. There would follow perhaps hundreds of lawsuits, both federal and state, dealing with various "unanswered" questions surrounding the convention. The motivations behind these suits certainly would be the political aim of achieving some advantage in support of a proposed amendment.

How would the courts resolve these lawsuits, i.e., where will the courts look for guidance? The answer would be already established case law dealing with analogous questions in relation to the constitutional clause in question. The question then becomes, from which governmental body has such case law evolved? The answer, of course, is Congress, the result of weighing actions of Congress against the interpretation of constitutional intent. Thus, the Court would apply the principle of the  $14^{\rm th}$  Amendment advocated in this suit not in a de facto manner, but in a piecemeal fashion. Is it not a wiser, more concise and sounder policy to merely state the matter for all time in the original

1
2
3
4
5	The Freedom of Debate Issue
6
7	Without question the most important procedural clause in the
8	Constitution is the freedom of speech and debate clause. 1320 This
9	constitutional guarantee permits a representative body elected by the people
10	to perform its work without the threat of external interference and case and declare the effect so as to avoid the fears so eloquently, if erroneously, advocated by the opponents of the convention to propose amendments? The logic of the equal protection argument becomes self-evident when the alternative is examined: endless court cases, confusion and chaos against the background of a mandated constitutional action. In this situation, it should be the job of the Court to clarify, not piece together, the constitutional picture.

censorship. 1321 Certainly a constitutional protection so necessary for the

"They shall in all cases, except treason, felony and breach of the peace, be privileged from arrest during their attendance at the session of their respective houses, and in going to and return from the same; and for any speech or debate in their house, they shall not be questioned in any other place." U.S. CONST., art. I, § 6, §§ 1. (emphasis added).

1321 This clause represents "the culmination of a long struggle for parliamentary supremacy. Behind these simple phrases lies a history of parliamentary supremacy. Behind these simple phrases lies a history of conflict between the commons and the Tudor and Stuart monarchs during which successive monarchs utilized the criminal and civil law to suppress and intimidate critical legislators. Since the Glorious Revolution in Britain, and throughout United States history, the privilege has been recognized as an important protection of the independence and integrity of the legislature." United States v. Johnson, 383 U.S. 169 (1966).

"In the American governmental structure the clause serves the additional function of reinforcing the separation of powers so deliberately established by the Founders." Id.

The Court also noted:

11

"The immunities of the speech or debate clause were not written into the Constitution simply for the personal or private benefit of Members of Congress, but to protect the integrity of the legislative process by insuring

(Footnote Continued Next Page)

BRIEF IN SUPPORT OF CONVENTION GENERAL BRIEF ARGUMENTS PAGE 557

- 1 protection of the legislative process must equally apply to the protection of
- 2 the amendatory process. 1322 Using the 14th Amendment doctrine of equal
- 3 protection, 1323 extending this constitutional protection to the convention is a
- 4 simple process of deductive logic 1324 and case law. 1325 Such protection, of
- 5 course, includes any limitations imposed by the clause. 1326

the independence of individual legislators." United States v. Brewster, 408 U.S. 501 (1972); see also Kilbourn v. Thompson, 103 U.S. 168 (1881).

1322 While the function of the legislative process differs between ordinary legislation and amendatory proposals, and the Constitution thus mandates different standards for passage of an amendatory proposal as opposed to a legislative proposal, nevertheless the operative actions of the legislature (or convention) are the same in both cases. In both cases, members hold hearings, conduct debates and ultimately vote on the proposal in question. There can be little support for the notion that just because a proposal before the Congress happens to be amendatory in nature, it is removed from the protection of the speech and debate clause of the Constitution.

"The heart of the clause is speech or debate in either House, and insofar as the clause is construed to reach other matters, they must be an integral part of the deliberative and communicative processes by which Members participate in committee and House proceedings with respect to the consideration and passage or rejection of proposed legislation or with respect to other matters which the Constitution places within the jurisdiction of either house." Gravel v. United States, 408 U.S. 606 (1972). (emphasis added). <sup>1323</sup> See supra text accompanying notes 1310-1319.

<sup>1324</sup> If it is held that the Congress and the convention to propose amendments shall receive equal protection "under the law," then it follows that any such protections afforded Congress, such as the speech and debate clause, must equally extend to the convention if the doctrine of equal protection is to be obeyed.

The protection of this clause is not limited to words spoken only in debate. "Committee reports, resolutions and the act of voting are equally covered, as are 'things generally done in a session of the House by one of its members in relation to the business before it.'" Powell v. McCormack, 395 U.S. 486 (1969), quoting Kilbourn v. Thompson, 103 U.S. 168 (1881). Thus, so long as legislators are "acting in the sphere of legitimate legislative activity," they are "protected not only from the consequence of litigation's result but also from the burden of defending themselves." Tenney v. Brandhove, 341 U.S. 367 (1951); Dombrowski v. Eastland, 387 U.S. 82 (1967); Powell v. McCormack, 395 U.S. 486 (1969); Eastland v. United States Servicemen's Fund, 421 U.S. 491 (1975).

however the term "legislative activity" does have limits. The Court has held that the portion of the clause holding members "privileged from arrest" (see supra text accompanying note 1320) is practically obsolete. The privilege applies only to arrests in civil suits, which were still common in the United states at the time the Constitution was adopted. (see Long v. Ansell, 293 U.S. 76 (1934)). It does not apply to service of process in either civil (Id.) or criminal cases (see United States v. Cooper, 4 U.S. 341 (1800). Nor does it apply to arrest in any criminal case. The phrase "treason, felony or breach of the peace" has been interpreted to withdraw all criminal offenses from the operation of the privilege. (See Williamson v. United States, 207 U.S. 425 (1908)).

The clause provides immunity for members in the area of inquiry, such as, for example, committee hearings.(see Kilbourn v. Thompson, 103 U.S. 168 (1881); Eastland v. United States Servicemen's Fund, 421 U.S. 491 (1975); Dombrowski v. Eastland, 387 U.S. 82 (1967)). However, the clause was held not to defeat a suit seeking to enjoin the public dissemination of legislative materials outside the halls of Congress. (see Doe v. McMillan, 412 U.S. 306 (1973). Public dissemination of materials outside the halls of Congress is not protected, the Court held, because it is unnecessary to the performance of official legislative actions.

Members who make defamatory remarks outside the legislative body through press releases or newsletters are not protected by the clause. See Hutchinson v. Proxmire, 441 U.S. 111 (1979). The Court affirms the clause protects more than speech or debate in either House, but in order for the other matters to be covered, "they must be an integral part of the deliberative and communicative processes by which Members participate in committee and House proceedings with respect to the consideration and passage or reject of proposed legislation or with consideration and passage or rejection of proposed legislation or with respect to other matters which the Constitution places within the jurisdiction of either House." (quoting Gravel v. United States, 408 U.S. 606 (1972). The Court distinguished between the more important "informing" function of Congress, i.e., its efforts to inform itself in order to exercise its legislative powers, and the less important "informing" function of acquainting the public about its activities. The latter function the Court did not find an integral part of the legislative process. (See also Doe v. McMillan, 412 U.S. 306 (1973)). Press releases and newsletters are "[v]aluable and desirable" in "inform[ing] the public and other Members" but neither are essential to the deliberations of the legislative body nor part of the deliberative process. (See Hutchinson v. Proxmire, 443 U.S. 111 (1979).

The Court discussed the various "informing" functions of Congress in such cases as Watkins v. United States, 354 U.S. 178 (1957); United States v. Rumely, 345 U.S. 41 (1953) and Russell v. United States, 369 U.S. 749 (1962) (dissent of Justice Douglas).

The Court has also discussed the application of general criminal statues as they apply to members. In United States v. Johnson, 383 U.S. 169 (1966) the Court held that a speech given on the floor of Congress, in so far as authorship, motivation and content, was protected by the clause. In the specific case, a member of Congress was charged with conspiracy to divert a governmental inquiry into alleged wrongdoing by accepting a bribe to make a speech of the floor of the House of Representatives. The speech was charged as part of the conspiracy and extensive evidence concerning it was introduced at a trial. The examination into the context of the speech was foreclosed by the Court.

Finally, the Court has addressed the issue of the member taking bribes. In upholding the validity of an indictment of a member, which charged that he accepted a bribe to be "influenced in his performance of official acts in respect to his action, vote and decision" on legislation, the Court drew a distinction between a prosecution that caused an inquiry into legislative acts or the motivation for performance of such acts, and a prosecution for taking or agreeing to take money for a promise to act in a certain way. The former is

- Clearly the speech and debate clause grants to Congress and the
- 2 convention the right to discuss what it desires and to vote on those matters
- 3 as it pleases without outside interference. 1327 Congressional legislative
- 4 proposals, such as the Hatch Bill, 1328 are clearly repugnant to the speech and
- 5 debate clause as intended by the Founding Fathers, 1329 despite language
- 6 contained in some proposals "guaranteeing" such protection. 1330 A question proscribed, the latter is not. "Taking a bribe is, obviously, no part of the legislative process or function; it is not a legislative act. It is not, by any conceivable interpretation, an act performed as a part of or even incidental to the role of a legislator . . . Nor is inquiry into a legislative act or the motivation for a legislative act necessary to a prosecution under this statute or this indictment. When a bribe is taken, it does not matter whether the promise for which the bribe was given was for the performance of a legislative act as here or, as in Johnson, for use of a Congressman's influence with the Executive Branch." United States v. Brewster, 408 U.S. 501 (1972). In other words, it is the fact of having taken a bribe, not the act the bribe is intended to influence, which is the subject of the prosecution, and the speech or debate clause interposes no obstacle to this type of prosecution. (See also United States v. Helstoski, 442 U.S. 447 (1979)). The Court also held the speech or debate clause does not extend privilege to allow for a member to violate an otherwise valid criminal law in preparing for or implementing legislative acts. (See Gravel v. United States, 408 U.S. 606 (1972).

These last two findings of the Court are particularly significant for the convention to propose amendments due to its unique election situation. Unlike Congress, where members may seek re-election, there is no similar situation for convention delegates. Upon the end of the convention, their terms end with no re-election possible. Therefore, unlike members of Congress, there can be no legal on-going re-election fund for delegates. Hence, any money received (outside of legal compensation) by any delegate must construed as a bribe.

Further, as the Court observed, accepting money in agreement to "act in a certain way" is illegal, and the delegate could face criminal charges. Thus, any campaign money from individuals or groups of a particular amendment persuasion could face prosecution in that they would obviously be seeking to have a delegate (or state delegation) vote in a certain way on an amendment, a violation of law.

Hence, this interpretation preventing "big money" from influencing the vote on amendments by "supporting" delegates will help maintain the "cleanliness" of the convention.

- $^{\rm 1327}$  See supra text accompanying notes 700-717,1322,1325.
- 1328 See supra text accompanying note 596.
- See supra text accompanying note 607.
- $^{1330}$  See S. 119, S. 2812, H.R. 3373, 98th Cong., 2nd Sess. Despite the guarantee language, all three bills only permitted a same subject limited convention with Congress having the power to determine what that same subject was,

- 1 should be answered by those in favor of censoring debate in a convention:
- 2 would the 1787 Constitutional Convention have produced the Constitution in its
- 3 present form if Congress or the states had been able to peer over its shoulder
- 4 at each moment of debate, limiting the subjects discussed, and able to veto
- 5 the results at any time? 1331
- 6 The Constitution provides each House of Congress can "determine the
- 7 Rules of its Proceedings." 1332 While each House of Congress may enact
- 8 legislation effecting its own procedures regarding its amendatory powers, this
- 9 constitutional clause does not give Congress the power to extend statutory
- 10 control over the convention; it clearly allows only for each House of Congress
- 11 to regulate itself. Indeed, the Constitution doesn't even allow either House
- 12 of Congress to regulate the other house, let alone state or even imply
- 13 Congress has the power to regulate the convention's proceedings. 1333 As no such permitted Congress not to issue a convention call if it found state applications did not concern the same subject, limited the time the applications by the states for such a convention were effective, limited the debate in the convention to the subject approved by the Congress, limited the time the convention could be in session, and allowed Congress to disapprove any amendment different from those authorized by its convention call not to be transmitted to the states for ratification.

A single example is sufficient to demonstrate the point. Suppose, for example, the states had stopped all debate on the amending of the convention on August 7, 1787. See supra text accompanying notes 401,402. At that time, the amendatory process did not require ratification by the states, nor was Congress authorized to offer any amendments. Thus, amendments could have been made and approved by a body of delegates of any political persuasion without any ability of either the states or the federal government to prevent it. This truly would have been a "runaway" convention. Thanks to later changes (and the debate that went with it) this threat was eliminated by the Founding Fathers. See supra text accompanying notes 403-458.

1332 U.S. CONST., art. I, § 5, §§ 2.

of Congress to regulate the convention are inextricably tied together, not by the Constitution, but by the actions of Congress. The "necessary and proper" clause is of no help in this matter. See supra text accompanying note 656. There are many legislative "problems" connected with Congress regulating the convention, and thus the use of ordinary legislative authority offers no

1 constitutional authority exists, it is clear Congress cannot statutorily barge

2 in and start legislating simply because it feels like it. The fact that the

3 convention must operate under the same general constitutional provisions as

4 Congress does not give Congress the constitutional right to impose its will on

5 the convention any more than it provides that the convention could pass

6 binding regulations affecting the conduct of Congress in its constitutional

7 business. The fundamental rule of law of the Constitution is that the 8 Congress, like the other branches of government, can only employ the powers

9 granted it by the Constitution; this is no less true in the relationship of 10 Congress to the convention.

11

12

Other Internal Powers of the Convention Created by the Constitution

13

16

Once it is firmly established that the convention to propose amendments

15 and the Congress both derive their authority equally from the Constitution, and must be equally protected under the provisions of that document, then it

17 is a simple matter to examine the Constitution for other provisions that

18 either grant authority or limit both Congress and the convention to propose solution. See supra text accompanying notes 546-831. This leaves Congress one choice as the source of its authority: it may exercise its "incidental" regulatory power acquired during the passage of the 14th Amendment and legislatively declare its opposition to the calling of a convention, i.e., Congress declares openly it will not follow the specifications of the United States Constitution. See supra text accompanying notes 849,917,1006,1056,1079,1094,1239. By doing this, of course, Congress completes its assumption of sovereignty from the people. See supra text accompanying notes 921-1134.

1	amendments. Taken as a whole, these provisions allow the convention to propos
2	amendments to operate within a well developed constitutional framework.
3
4
5
6
7
8	Election Provisions
	Election Plovisions
9
10	The constitutional clauses regarding the election of congressional
11	representatives are quite specific. Such provisions are equally specific for
12	the election of convention delegates. In sum, substituting the term
13	"delegates" where appropriate in lieu of constitutional language dealing with
14	members of Congress, the following specific provisions regarding delegates
15	apply.
16 17 18 19	<ol> <li>The delegate must be a citizen of the United States; 1334</li> <li>The delegate must be an inhabitant of that state in which the delegate is chosen; 1335</li> </ol>
20 21 22	3. The delegate shall be chosen by the people of the several states whose electors in each State shall have the qualifications requisite for elector of the most numbers branch of the state legislature; 1336

 $^{1334}$  U.S. CONST., art. I, § 2, §§ 2; see supra text accompanying notes 1212–1226.

<sup>1335</sup> U.S. CONST., art. I, § 2, §§ 2. Any proposal of "at-large" delegates (i.e., delegates representing special interests, regions or causes or delegates from United States territories) is clearly defeated by this clause of the Constitution in the convention. However, like Congress, non voting delegates from the various territories could attend the convention.

1336 U.S. CONST., art. I, § 2, §§ 1; As any vote taken at the convention must be on a state by state basis, rather than by individual delegate basis, (See infra text accompanying notes 1418-1480) the question then becomes whether delegates must represent the entire state or can be elected from portions of

- 4. The delegate shall meet the minimum standards of qualification of office as specified in the Constitution;  $^{1337}$
- 5. The delegate shall have the times, places and manner of holding elections be prescribed in each state by the legislature; but the Congress may at any time by law make or alter such regulations. 1338

it. If strict constitutional construction is observed and the doctrine of equal protection accordingly applied, it is clear that the delegate must meet the minimum standards of qualification of office of a representative, rather than a senator, (see supra text accompanying notes 1217,1218,1237; infra,1337) and that one of those qualifications must be the number of population (and hence the partition of a state) that representative represents. In this case, the Constitution specifies the population represented "shall not exceed one [representative] for every thirty thousand" (U.S. CONST., art. I, §2 §§ 3). Thus, the delegate must represent a portion of population but also represents the state. See supra text accompanying note 493,1418-1510.

The Court has made it clear that such a principle already extends to congressional districting, and thus, under the doctrine of equal protection, would extend to convention delegates. As the Court said:

"Equal representation for equal numbers of people is a principle designed to prevent debasement of voting power and diminution of access to elected representatives. Toleration of even small deviations detracts from these purposes. Therefore, the command of Art. I, 2, that States create Congressional districts which provide equal representation for equal numbers of people permits only the limited population variances which are unavoidable despite a good-faith effort to achieve absolute equality..." Kirkpatrick v. Preisler, 394 U.S. 526 (1969).

<sup>1337</sup> U.S. CONST., art. I, § 2, §§ 2. The constitutional standards for a delegate must be the same as those established by the Constitution for the delegate's amendatory counterpart in Congress, that is a member of the House of Representatives. See supra text accompanying note 1237.

"The Times, Places and Manner of hold Elections for Senators and Representatives shall be prescribed in each State by the Legislature thereof; but the Congress may at any time by Law make or alter such Regulations, except as to the Places of choosing Senators." U.S. CONST., art. I, § 4, §§ 1.

The Constitution clearly mandates that state legislatures regulate the election of members of Congress unless Congress prescribes a law that effects these regulations. Certainly, therefore, Congress can make such laws or alter such regulations the states may create provided such regulations are uniform (i.e., they apply equally to both the election of members of Congress and to convention delegates) and are not punitive or discriminatory in nature, i.e., acts of Congress do not attempt to regulate the convention itself but instead are aimed at preserving the integrity of the election process without attempting to influence the outcome of the election.

Clearly, Congress may not use this power to attempt to block the calling of a convention to propose amendments by passing legislation that in some way obstructs the election of delegates. The times, places and manner of holding elections may be regulated by Congress. The implication is clear: these powers clearly only deal with facilitating elections, not obstructing them.

Congress should have little need to regulate in this area. Already in effect is a sizable measure of legislation passed by Congress to regulate federal elections. These include a law requiring election in the House of Representatives by district (81 Stat. 581, 2 U.S.C.A. § 2c), and the specification of a single day in all states for election of representatives. (17 Stat. 28 (1872)), 2 U.S.C.A. § 7.

- 3 Of equal importance in the operation of the convention to propose
- 4 amendments is its internal powers. Congress, as exemplified in the Hatch

Congress also has enacted in 1957, 1960, 1964, 1965, 1968, 1970, 1975, 1980 and 1982, legislation to protect the right to vote in all elections, federal, state, and local, through the assignment of federal registrars and poll watchers, suspension of literacy and other tests, and the broad proscription of intimidation and reprisal, whether with or without state action, which deal quite adequately with protecting the integrity of elections. (See P.L. 85-315, Part IV, § 131, 71 Stat. 634, 637 (1957); P.L. 86-449, Title II, § 301, Title VI, 601, 74 Stat. 86, 88, 90 (1960); P.L. 88-352, Title I, § 101, 78 Stat. 241 (1964); P.L. 89-110, 79 Stat. 437 (1965); P.L. 90-284, Title I, § 101, 82 Stat. 73 (1968); P.L. 91-285, 84 Stat. 314 (1970); P.L. 94-73, 89 Stat. 400 (1975); P.L. 97-205, 96 Stat. 131 (1982). Most of these statutes are codified in 42 U.S.C.A. § 1971 et. seq. The penal statutes are in 18 U.S.C.A. § 241-245.).

Also Congress has, beginning in 1907, passed several laws regulating the contribution of money in federal elections. (34 Stat. 864 (1907), now a part of 18 U.S. C. § 610). Congress has also passed legislation regarding campaign contributions and other expenditures in federal elections, and other acts have provided other similar regulations, such as the Hatch Act (5 U.S.C.A. § 7324-7327). (See also 43 Stat. 1070, 2 U.S.C.A. § 241-256. Comprehensive regulation is now provided by the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971, 86 Stat. 3, and the federal Election Campaign Act Amendments of 1974, 88 Stat. 1263, as amended, 90 Stat. 475, found in titles 2, 5, 18 and 26 of the U.S. Code. See also Buckley v. Valeo, 424 U.S. 1 (1976)).

Through several court decisions, congressional regulations to protect the integrity of the vote itself have been defined. The Supreme Court has held the right to vote for members of Congress is derived from the Constitution, (see United States v. Classic, 313 U.S. 299 (1941) and that Congress therefore may legislate to protect the integrity of this right. Congress may protect the right of suffrage against both official and private abridgment. (Buckley v. Valeo, 424 U.S. 1 (1976). Where a primary election is an integral part of the procedure of choice, where it might well be in the selection of delegates, the right to vote in the primary election is subject to congressional protection. (See United States v. Classic, id.). This right includes the opportunity to cast a ballot and have it counted honestly, freedom from personal violence and voter intimidation, protections against a failure to count ballots lawfully cast and protection against the dilution of their value by the stuffing of the ballot box with fraudulent ballots. (See United States v. Mosley, 238 U.S. 383 (1915); United States v. Saylor, 322 U.S. 385 (1944); Ex parte Yarbrough, 110 U.S. 651 (1884).

Congress has, of course, established sanctions for violations of these laws. Obviously, under the doctrine of equal protection, such sanctions would apply to violators in connection with the election of convention delegates as equally as it applies to election of members of Congress. (See Ex parte Siebold, 100 U.S. 371 (1880); Ex parte Clarke, 100 U.S. 399 (1880); United States v. Gale, 109 U.S. 65 (1883); In re Coy, 127 U.S. 731 (1888).

- 1 Bill<sup>1339</sup> and other similar proposed pieces of legislation, <sup>1340</sup> would have all
- 2 such powers regulated by Congress, granting no independent internal powers to
- 3 the convention.
- 4 Allowing Congress such broad latitude in regulating internal powers
- 5 makes no more constitutional sense than allowing the President of the United
- 6 States to establish the internal working rules of the Senate or permitting the
- 7 House of Representatives to establish all rules of court proceedings. The
- 8 violation of separation of powers is obvious, and the dangers thereto attached
- 9 equally obvious. Can it therefore be argued that allowing Congress to regulate
- 10 the internal powers of the convention to propose amendments, a
- 11 constitutionally separate body of power, is any less dangerous and any less
- 12 destructive of the separation of powers doctrine? 1341

&lt;sup>1339</sup> See supra text 596-608.

See S. 1272, APPENDIX C---1973 REPORT OF THE ABA SPECIAL CONSTITUTIONAL CONVENTION STUDY COMMITTEE, Appendix A, p.46.

&lt;sup>1341</sup> It is clear from the writings of the Founding Fathers that wholesale assumption of power by one branch of the government over another was never intended.

As stated by Madison in FEDERALIST No. 47:

&quot;One of the principal objections inculcated by the more respectable adversaries to the Constitution, is its supposed violation of the political maxim, that the legislative, executive, and judiciary departments ought to be separate and distinct... No political truth is certainly of greater intrinsic value, or is stamped with the authority of more enlightened patrons of liberty, than that on which the objection is founded. The accumulation of all powers, legislative, executive, and judiciary, in the same hands, whether of one, a few, or many, and whether hereditary, self-appointed, or elective, may justly be pronounced the very definition of tyranny. Were the federal Constitution, therefore, really chargeable with the accumulation of power, or with a mixture of powers, having a dangerous tendency to such an accumulation, no further arguments would be necessary to inspire a universal reprobation of the system... [W]here the whole power of one department is exercised by the same hands which possess the whole power of another department, the fundamental principles of a free constitution are subverted." (emphasis added).

True, Madison conceded in FEDERALIST No. 47 that the separate branches of government could have "partial agency in" another branch of government. However, his examples are extremely telling. All of them relate to the product

- Based on the doctrine of equal protection, the following congressional
- 2 powers granted by the Constitution must be accorded to the convention. Without
- 3 these powers, neither Congress nor the convention could do its work. Beside
- 4 permitting the internal structuring of the organization, these rules
- 5 simultaneously insure the independence of the body by insulating it from
- 6 outside interference by other branches of government that might otherwise use
- 7 the remiss to "fill in the details." Thus, the following become manifest.
  - 1. The convention must have the right to choose its officers; 1342 of a branch of the government and not to the process by which that branch of government goes about achieving that product. In the case of the convention to propose amendments, it is the states with their ratification power that act to check the power of the convention.

As Madison wrote:

8

"The magistrate in whom the whole executive power resides cannot of himself make a law, though he can put a negative on every law; nor administer justice in person, though he has the appointment of those who do administer it. The judges can exercise no executive prerogative, though they are shoots from the executive stock; nor any legislative function, though they may be advised with by the legislative councils. The entire legislature can perform no judiciary act, though by the joint act of two of its branches the judges may be removed from their offices, and though one of its branches is possessed of the judicial power in the last resort. The entire legislature, again, can exercise no prerogative, though one of its branches constitutes the supreme executive magistracy, and another, on the impeachment of a third, can try and condemn all the subordinate officers in the executive department."

In the case of the convention to propose amendments, Congress would control the process of the convention, not to mention its product—an amendatory proposal—by establishing a veto of that amendment. (See supra text accompanying note 607). This clearly is an attempt by Congress to "possess the whole power of another department" and, as observed by Madison, is nothing more than "tyranny".

 $^{1342}$  U.S. CONST., art. I, § 2, §§ 5; U.S. CONST., art. I, § 3, §§ 5. The desire of Congress to insert its own officers to preside over the convention to propose amendments (See supra text accompanying note 603) is politically obvious and dangerous. While no court case regarding this clause of the Constitution can be cited, to permit such action by Congress invites control of the convention. True, the Hatch Act (Id.) calls only for congressional leaders to preside until permanent leaders are chosen, but it should be noted it will be congressional leaders who will preside over this selection. It will be congressional leaders who will appoint the committee members who compose the rules under which the permanent leaders will be chosen. These opportunities allow for congressional influence at the very basic and formative level of the convention, influence that, once established, would hard for the convention to purge. The Court cannot permit such influence and violation of separation of powers if a more viable alternative exists which,

- 2. The convention must be the judge of the elections, returns and qualifications of its members;  $^{\rm 1343}$ of course, in this instance, it does--allowing the convention to choose its own officers.

<sup>1343</sup> U.S. CONST., art. I, § 5, §§ 2. The convention, like each house of Congress, must have the power to judge its own elections for the identical reasons Congress has the authority—to guard against election fraud, to settle contested elections, and to investigate charges of undue influence on an election. In short, the purpose of the power is to ensure elections are fair, open and honestly reflect the will of the people. This responsibility cannot be denied to the convention in order to further the political ends of Congress. Undue influence, from whatever source, is still undue influence.

In order to carry out this power, the convention will, like the Houses of Congress, act as a judicial tribunal, with like power to compel attendance of witnesses. In the exercise of its discretion, it may issue a warrant for the arrest of a witness to procure his testimony, without previous subpoena, if there is good reason to believe that otherwise such witness would not be forthcoming. (See Barry v. United States ex rel. Cunningham, 279 U.S. 597 (1929)). It may punish perjury committed in testifying before a notary public upon a contested election. (See In re Loney, 134 U.S. 372 (1890)). This power to judge elections will extend to an investigation of expenditures made to influence nominations at a primary election. (See Newberry v. United States, 256 U.S. 232 (1921)). Refusal by the convention to permit a person presenting credentials in due form to take the oath of office does not oust the jurisdiction of the convention to inquire into the legality of the election, nor does such refusal unlawfully deprive a state that elected such a person of its equal suffrage in the convention. (See Barry v. United States ex rel. Cunningham, 279 U.S. 597 (1929)).

 $^{1344}$  U.S. CONST., art. I, § 5, §§ 1. In United States v. Ballin, 144 U.S. 1, (1892), the Court said:

"The constitution provides that 'a majority of each [house] shall constitute a quorum to do business.' In other words, when a majority are present the house is in a position to do business. Its capacity to transact business is then established, created by the mere presence of a majority, and does not depend upon the disposition or assent or action of any single member or fraction of the majority present. All that the constitution requires is the presence of a majority, and when that majority are present the power of the houses arises.

"But how shall the presence of a majority be determined? The constitution has prescribed no method of making this determination, and it is therefore within the competency of the house to prescribe any method which shall be reasonably certain to ascertain the fact."

In the case of the convention to propose amendments, the matter of what constitutes a "majority of members present" must be carefully considered. The question is whether the majority of members present is an actual majority of the delegates, or the states the delegates represent or some combination of both. In other words, is the power of the majority vested in the individual delegates or in the delegations at large? The Court answered this question in Ballin saying:

"[T]he general rule of all parliamentary bodies is that when a quorum is present, the act of a majority of the quorum is the act of the body. This has been the rule for all time, except so far as in any given case the terms of the organic act under which the body assembled have prescribed specific limitations... The two houses of Congress are legislative bodies representing large constituencies. Power is not vested in any one individual, but in the aggregate of the numbers who compose the body, and its act is not the action of any separate member or number of members, but the action of the body as a whole..."

Thus, as with Congress, the power of the convention to conduct its business cannot be based on individual delegates, but on the body as a whole. In the convention to propose amendments, therefore, quorum is based on the delegations at large, i.e., the states rather than individual delegates. (U.S. CONST., art. V; see infra text accompanying notes 1505-1510). Therefore, in the convention to propose amendments, if a majority of states is present, the convention must be said to have a quorum and thus have the constitutional power to conduct its business.

Thus, using the doctrine of equal protection, limited as described above, it becomes clear that a majority of states shall constitute a quorum to do business, but a smaller number of states may adjourn from day to day and may be authorized to compel the attendance of absent members (or states) in such manner and under such penalties as the convention may provide.

However, having established that a quorum is ultimately based on the states rather than the individual delegate does not mean that a tiny minority of strategically placed, ambitious delegates could sneak through amendatory proposals. The matter is more complex due to the fact the delegates represent two distinct sovereignties and that within each state delegation this second sovereignty must be respected. See infra text accompanying notes 1418-1510.

These standards of quorum provide constitutional assurance that political obstructions such as walk-outs or filibusters that might otherwise paralyze the convention by eliminating its quorum will ultimately not succeed. Thus, they allow the convention to complete its assigned constitutional business.

<sup>1345</sup> U.S. CONST., art. I, § 5, §§ 2. Just as with the Houses of Congress in the exercise of their constitutional power to determine their rules of proceedings, the convention to propose amendments may not "ignore constitutional restraints or violate fundamental rights and there should be a reasonable relation between the mode or method of proceeding established by the rule and the result which is sought to be attained. But within these limitations all matter of method are open to the determination of the house... The power to make rules is not one which once exercised is exhausted. It is a continuous power, always subject to be exercised by the house, and, within the limitations suggested, absolute and beyond the challenge of any other body or tribunal." United States v. Ballin, 144 U.S. 1 (1892).

The rule of the Court is clear in this matter. So long as the convention abides by the fundamental rights laid down in the Constitution and does not violate other constitutional restraints with its rules, it may create whatever rules it deems appropriate, and such power to make such rules, within these constitutional limitations, are "absolute and beyond the challenge of any other body", including Congress. As the doctrine of equal protection applies in this matter, the convention to propose amendments should, of course, be guided by such decisions as United States v. Smith, 286 U.S. 6 (1932); Christoffel v. United States, 338 U.S. 84 (1949); Powell v. McCormack, 395 U.S. 486 (1969).

However, it is beyond the scope of this suit to itemize each rule of Congress together with any related court decisions, nor is such a laborious  ${\cal C}$

(Footnote Continued Next Page)

BRIEF IN SUPPORT OF CONVENTION GENERAL BRIEF ARGUMENTS PAGE 569

- 5. The convention must be able to punish its members for disorderly behavior, and with the concurrence of two-thirds, expel a delegate; 1346
- 6. The convention must keep a journal of its proceedings, and publish the same, excepting such parts as may in the convention's judgment require secrecy, and the yeas and nays of the states on any questions must, upon the desires of one-fifth of those present, be entered in the journal;  $^{1347}$ task required. Merely establishing the judicial standard as stated in Ballin is sufficient, leaving to further court action, if required, any specific details of rules that might arise. It is fairly certain, however, that such court action will be rare, if needed at all, due to the fact the convention's rules will, for the most part, be much simpler in scope. Unlike Congress whose rules are in place to deal with a wide range of legislative as well constitutional duties, such as impeachment, the convention's rules will be dedicated to the achievement of a single purpose within a relatively short period of time, i.e., the passage of amendment proposals, and will thus not need the breadth of rule-making required by Congress.

<sup>1346</sup> U.S. CONST., art. I, § 5, §§ 2. As with any parliamentary body, that body must have the right to maintain order within itself. This necessarily implies the right of that body to discipline members who violate the rules of that body and, if need be, expel members for extraordinary offenses. This is no less true for the convention to propose amendments. Even if the Supreme Court had not ruled in this matter, which it has, the need for the convention to possess such powers as expulsion, censure and reprimand are self-evident in any orderly society.

As with Congress, the convention, through its internal rules, can make it an offense for delegates to receive compensation for services from government departments or even private interests, i.e., where the convention is considering amendments that affect that department or interest. (See Burton v. United States, 202 U.S. 344 (1906)). While it is true the convention cannot by its rules make such actions by delegates a criminal offense, as the convention lacks legislative authority, clearly the convention does possess the power, as does Congress, to reprimand or even expel a member for such conduct.

As the Court has noted:

"[T]he right to expel extends to all cases where the offense is such as in the judgment of the Senate is inconsistent with the trust and duty of a member." (See In re Chapman, 166 U.S. 661 (1897)).

While this specific case dealt with the Senate of the United States, clearly such power would also be afforded to the House of Representatives, and by the doctrine of equal protection, to the convention to propose amendments.

However, this power of expulsion extends only to delegates and not to the entire state delegation. Clearly, as with its membership in the United States Senate, a state delegation cannot be removed from the convention without its own consent. (U.S. CONST., art. V). Therefore, should a convention delegate suffer expulsion, the state retains the right to install a replacement for that delegate as it does for Congress. (U.S. CONST., art. I, § 4; "When vacancies happen in the Representation from any State, the Executive Authority thereof shall issue Writs of Election to fill such vacancies." <sup>1347</sup> U.S. CONST., art. I, § 5, §§ 3. The specific reason the convention to propose amendments must maintain a journal of its proceedings is identical to why Congress must do so. "[T]o ensure publicity to the proceedings of the legislature, and a correspondent responsibility of the members to their respective constituents." (See Field v. Clark, 143 U.S. 649 (1892)).

The primary purpose of the convention to propose amendments is to serve as part of the constitutional system whereby the people can peacefully redress such grievances of government as they may have. As such, it is mandatory the convention, as with all parts of the government, be open and public in its actions, debates and decisions except in such rare and unusual circumstances that secrecy may be required. Despite the clear need of the 1787 Constitutional Convention requiring secrecy in order to complete its work, such is not the case for a modern convention whose purpose is not to create a new form of government but to process amendatory proposals. These amendatory issues are already public knowledge, and therefore to hide them in secrecy is at the minimum illogical, and at the maximum, political suicide. It is highly unlikely that the fact an amendment proposal coming from the convention was created in secret would escape the comment of that amendment's critics, and it is likely the suspicion over it would defeat that amendment. Thus it is difficult to justify any action of the convention to propose amendments being hidden from the people. Indeed, the ideal convention to propose amendments would be the exact opposite: an fully interactive convention to propose amendments between delegates and citizens at each step of the process so as to truly be an exercise in democracy. (See infra text accompanying notes 1403-1417).

A careful examination of the Constitution shows it is a grand checklist designed to deal with the issues raised in the Declaration of Independence and to solve the political weaknesses created by the Articles of Confederation. One of the often overlooked strengths of the 1787 Constitutional Convention was the careful preparation of the issues facing the country at the state level. This preparation resulted in several plans of action to solve these issues, such as the Virginia Plan. (See supra text accompanying notes 325-326,343-346,354-356,386,419). These citizen-sponsored plans enabled the Convention delegates to have a true sense of the needs of the people for whom they were attempting to create a government. Thus, citizen input was important not only for the purpose of ascertaining the needs of the citizens but also to serve as a base of political support for the later passage of the Constitution. If the citizens had not been involved from the very beginning of the process, it is likely the Constitution would never had come into being. Thus, the Court, within the perimeters of representative government and constitutional restraints, should encourage the participation of the people in the process of the convention to propose amendments, not discourage it.

The right of the people to redress their grievances as set forth in the First Amendment, ("Congress shall make no law respecting...the right of the people to peaceable to assemble, and to petition the Government for a redress of grievances." U.S. CONST., 1st Amend.) can trace its roots from the Magna Carta through a series of Acts of Parliament to the English Bill of Rights of 1689 which asserted the right of the subjects to petition the King and "all commitments and prosecutions for such petitioning to be illegal" Vol. 12 ENCYCLOPEDIA OF THE SOCIAL SCIENCES, p. 98 (1934).

Historically, therefore, the right of petition is the primary right, the right peaceably to assemble a subordinate and instrumental right, as if the First Amendment read: "the right of the people peaceably to assemble" in order to "petition the government." (United States v. Cruikshank, 92 U.S. 542 (1876)).

Today, however, the right of peaceable assembly is, in the language of the Court, "cognate to those of free speech and free press and is equally fundamental..." [I]t is one that cannot be denied without violating those fundamental principles of liberty and justice which lie at the base of all civil and political institutions--principles which the Fourteenth Amendment embodies in the general terms of its dues process clause... The holding of meetings for peaceable political action cannot be proscribed. Those who assist in the conduct of such meetings cannot be branded as criminals on that score. The question...is not as to the auspices under which the meeting is held but as to its purposes; not as to the relation of the speakers, but whether their utterances transcend the bounds of the freedom of speech which the constitution protects." (De Jonge v. Oregon, 299 U.S. 353 (1937); see also Herndon v. Lowry, 301 U.S. 242 (1937)). It is highly unlikely the Court would find citizens peaceably assembling to urge amendments to the Constitution be passed or defeated and to lend peaceable support to that point of view would "transcend the bounds of the freedom of speech which the Constitution protects."

Further, over the years, the right of petition has expanded. It is no longer confined to demands for "a redress of grievances," in any accurate meaning of these words, but comprehends demands for an exercise by the government of its powers in furtherance of the interest and prosperity of the petitioners and of their views on politically contentious matters. (See Eastern R.R. Presidents Conference v. Noerr Motor Freight, 365 U.S. 127 (1961)). The right extends to the "approach of citizens or groups of them to administrative agencies (which are both creatures of the legislature, and arms of the executive) and to courts, the third branch of Government. Certainly the right to petition extends to all departments of the Government. The right of access to the courts is indeed but one aspect of the right of petition." (See California Motor Transport Co. v. Trucking Unlimited, 404 U.S. 508 (1972). See also NAACP v. Claiborne Hardware Co., 458 U.S. 886 (1982); Missouri v. NOW, 620 F.2d 1301 (8th Cir.), cert. Denied 449 U.S. 842 (1980).

While never specifically mentioned in any court case, it is a reasonable inference that any court decisions which extend the right of redress to "all branches of the Government" must extend the same right to a convention to propose amendments.

As summed up by the Court:

"The right of the people peaceably to assemble for the purpose of petitioning Congress for a redress of grievances, or for anything else connected with the powers or the duties of the National Government, is an attribute of national citizenship, and, as such, under the protection of, and guaranteed by, the United States. The very idea of a government, republican in form, implies a right on the part of its citizens to meet peaceably for consultation in respect to public affairs and to petition for a redress of grievances." (United States v. Cruikshank, 92 U.S. 542 (1876)).

1348 No legal brief, however detailed, can specify every power and authority needed by the convention to propose amendments. Fortunately, there is no need for such a laborious task. The proper interpretation of the "necessary and proper" clause of the Constitution makes such effort unnecessary. Just as with Congress, the "necessary and proper" clause, using the doctrine of equal protection can, within the constitutional limits imposed on the convention to propose amendments, (specifically its limited power to propose amendments) function as equally well as it does for Congress as it will for the convention.

As described earlier, (See supra text accompanying notes 620-668) the fact the convention may avail itself of the power of the "necessary and proper" clause in order to carry out its constitutional business does not

2.

5

6 7

8

4 As with members of Congress, certain immunities and privileges, as well as prohibitions, are attached to convention delegates.

1. No person holding any office under the United States or the several states shall be a delegate to the convention to propose amendments during his continuance in office.  $^{1349}$ permit Congress to use it to impose its will on the convention. The "necessary and proper" clause's purpose is to allow elasticity in the powers of Congress, not to grant it the power to wander about the Constitution imposing its legislative will as it sees politically fit.

1349 The Constitution states that:

"No Senator or Representative shall, during the time for which he was elected, be appointed to any civil office under the authority of the United States, which shall have been created, or the emoluments whereof shall have been increased during such time and no person holding any office under the United States, shall be a member of either House during his continuance in Office." U.S. CONST., art. I, § 6, §§ 2.

"The Constitution has provided some important guards against the danger of executive influence upon the legislative body: it declares that 'No senator or representative shall during the time for which he was elected, be appointed to any civil office under the United States, which shall have been created, or the emoluments whereof shall have been increased, during such time; and no person, holding any office under the United States, shall be a member of either house during his continuance in office.'" THE FEDERALIST No. 76, (A. Hamilton) (April 1, 1788) (emphasis in original).

As observed by Hamilton, while the intent of this provision in the Constitution was to guard against excessive executive encroachment through appointment of the legislative, it is equally clear it functions as well against encroachments by the judiciary into the legislative or encroachments of the legislative into the executive. Employing the doctrine of equal protection, it also serves to guard against individual encroachments by politically motivated members of Congress. (See supra text accompanying notes 593-613). It also serves to prevent excessive encroachment of state politicians who might otherwise be tempted to appoint themselves convention delegates while remaining in their respective state offices under the obviously political assumption that the mere fact of their election somehow qualifies them to modify the Constitution without specific license from their electors.

There can be little doubt about this interpretation of the effect of this clause. As the supremacy clause of the Constitution (U.S. CONST., art. VI, § 2) assures all state constitutions are subservient to the federal Constitution, it follows that all state offices and political subsections thereof, such as county and municipal offices, are subservient to the federal Constitution where any conflict between state and federal might exist. (See McCulloch v. Maryland, 17 U.S. 316 (1819): "This great principle is, that the constitution and the laws made in pursuance thereof are supreme; that they

- 2. In all cases except treason, felony and breach of the peace, a delegate must be privileged from arrest during his attendance at the convention, and in going to and returning from the same; and for any speech or debate in the convention, he shall not be questioned in any other place. 1350
- 3. The term of office for a convention delegate shall be limited to the duration of the convention to propose amendments, and all privileges, immunities and protections therein attached shall cease at the conclusion of the convention.  $^{\rm 1351}$ control the constitution and laws of the respective States, and cannot be controlled by them.").

It is well established the federal amendatory power is "derived from the federal constitution." (See Hawke v. Smith, 253 U.S. 221 (1920). Clearly, therefore, the convention to propose amendments is under the authority of the United States Constitution. As such, the position of convention delegate must be considered an office as no other means of description is provided in the Constitution. Thus, under the doctrine of equal protection, the office of convention delegate must be accorded the same general immunities, privileges and protections as any other federal office. (See infra text accompanying note 1350). One of these protections in the Constitution (U.S. CONST., art. I, § 6 §§ 2) is the protection from influence by preventing an officeholder in one federal branch to occupy that office while simultaneously occupying another office in another branch of government, and this protection must equally apply in force of law to the office of convention delegate.

Further, under the doctrine of equal protection, this immunity of office extends to the states. Thus, no state officeholder or any officeholder in any subsection thereof can hold that office while simultaneously holding the office of convention delegate.

There is yet another issue in this matter—sovereignty. As the people are the source of sovereignty in the United States, and it is a clear principle that the government of the United States is a limited government, granted only those powers the people choose to endow, it follows the government is a subject of the sovereignty of the people, just as in England during the time of the Revolution, the people were subjects to the sovereignty of the King.

As such, those officials who compose the government of the United States must be considered subjects to the people. Thus, as subjects, they cannot possess the full powers of citizens. The sovereign power of the citizens to alter or abolish is clearly to allow citizens to alter or abolish their government, not the reverse. If government officials are permitted to be convention delegates while still retaining governmental office, it permits the reverse situation and offers a situation whereby the government could assume the right to alter or abolish exclusive of the citizens. This subverts the right entirely. For this reason, government officials must be excluded from convention while they remain active members of the government(s) the right to alter or abolish is intended to modify.

1350 See supra text accompanying notes 1320-1333.

U.S. CONST., art. I, § 6, §§ 1; The constitutional protections afforded convention delegates can only exist "during their attendance at the session and in going to and returning from the same..." The convention's single power under the Constitution is to propose amendments to the Constitution and forward those proposals to Congress which in turn determines which method of ratification the proposal shall suffer. (U.S. CONST., art. V). Clearly, once the convention has finished proposing amendments, it has no other constitutional authority to exist and must therefore adjourn sine die. Thus,

The States' Responsibility In Preparing for the Convention

2

11

12

13

14

16

17

18 19

1

3 The doctrine of equal protection solves most of the thorny issues

4 surrounding a convention to propose amendments and resolves most of the 5 unconstitutional pre-conditions raised by opponents to a convention.

6 Nevertheless, not every issue can be addressed in a single brief, nor every

7 question answered by means of a federal court. Thus, the application of the 8 doctrine of equal protection can only go so far.

9 For some advocates who prefer opinion polls to elections, the current

10 vogue is to use the courts to fix every social issue. When engaged by them in such fashion, the courts are subverted. Courts are not social engineers; their purpose is to clarify the Constitution and other legal issues and compel compliance with them. Thus, for the courts to address the convention to propose amendments as if it were a political panacea, micromanaging it with 15 court orders is as erroneous as permitting Congress to do it. However fashionable, such political correctness cannot become the dogma of the convention to propose amendments. While there is no doubt the Court can find

Congress' refusal to call a convention to propose amendments unconstitutional, the fact remains the Court has no more authority under the Constitution to 20 affect the content of the convention than Congress or the states.

the term of office of the convention delegates is limited to that of the length of the convention itself. The convention cannot reconvene once it has finished its proposal business until the states resubmit applications for a new convention.

1 Certainly, the Court has the authority under the Constitution to define

2 what the Founding Fathers intended regarding the convention. It has the right

3 to define, insofar as it has so addressed similar questions facing

4 congressional power and authority, those phrases and clauses in the 5 Constitution that define the organizational concepts of the bodies involved.

6 But this is as far as the Court can be permitted to go. The defining of an

7 organizational concept does not give the Court the right to tell the

8 convention what it can or cannot do with that power of organization. Were it

9 otherwise, all that would be accomplished would be substituting one master for 10 another. The convention to propose amendments would still be a slave to the 11 other branches of the federal government, and this clearly was not the intent of the Founding Fathers. Thus, a Court ruling should accomplish so much; no

13 order should bind the convention in a straitjacket of microscopic court rulings. As Congress is prohibited by the Constitution from involving itself beyond a minuscule clerical role, the Court is obligated to give wide latitude to the convention to deal with the remaining issues.

12

14

15

16

18 19

20

While it is acknowledged that leaving some organizational matters to the convention may provide access to those who would attempt to use the convention to propose amendments for their own short-sighted political agenda, this nevertheless is a risk that must be accepted. The processes of the American

21 democratic system have no guarantee of success. It must be left, well or ill,

22 to the political honesty and goodwill of the people in the various states, 1352

However, political honesty and goodwill is not all that may be relied on. As the convention is a creation of the federal Constitution, the Court has

1	calling or	n their	patriotism	to	place	this	grave	constitutional	authority	and
---	------------	---------	------------	----	-------	------	-------	----------------	-----------	-----

- 2 responsibility above the petty politics of the moment, thus to provide a fair,
- 3 open, public and unbiased convention, where issues prevail over petty
- 4 ambition, where national solution outweighs personal gain, where America can
- 5 see one of its finest hours.

6

7

8 THE MONEY TRAP

9

One of the major paradoxes of the convention to propose amendments

- 11 facing the states, Congress and the Court is the pragmatic question of who is
- 12 constitutionally permitted to finance the convention to propose amendments,
- 13 which entity is constitutionally responsible for financing the convention, and
- 14 to what extent it can be financed.
- 15 The Supreme Court has on several occasions ruled that the Constitution
- 16 must be construed so as to ensure its provisions are carried out. 1353 It is a
- 17 self-evident truth that all clauses of the Constitution must be obeyed; no
- 18 clause is greater in effect than another. Any action cannot be constitutional
- 19 if one clause of the Constitution is interpreted to violate another clause of made it clear that individual states cannot regulate federal constitutional powers. (See supra text accompanying notes 915,1349). The Court has correctly stated the Constitution is supreme to any state law. (U.S. CONST., art. VI, § 2). Further, in the matter of the convention to propose amendments, the states exhaust their power once they have applied for a convention. (See supra text accompanying notes 890-920). Thus the states must be viewed as merely a collective incubator in which the convention is organized, fulfilling the same ratification of the Constitution.  $^{1353}$  See supra text accompanying notes 548,551,572,1062,1256,1283.

role executed during the time the federal government was organized after

- 1 the Constitution or if the action satisfies one constitutional clause but
- 2 violates another. Thus, any solution to a constitutional question must satisfy
- 3 the entire Constitution, not only part of it.
- 4 The Congressional Appropriation Alternative

5

- 6 This constitutional truth lies at the bottom of the paradox regarding
- 7 the financing of the convention to propose amendments. The Founders'
- 8 intentions were clear: the convention to propose amendments was to be called
- 9 by Congress upon the proper number of applications from the states, Congress
- 10 would have no discretion in the matter, and Congress could in no way establish
- 11 pseudo-conditions for the states to fulfill before allowing a convention
- 12 occur. 1354 Thus, the Founding Fathers intended that the applications be purely
- 13 numeric, i.e., a simple numeric count of the states would satisfy the
- 14 constitutional requirement. 1355
- 15 It is also an equally unquestionable truth, uncontested by this suit,
- 16 that Congress (together with the assent of the president) is clearly in
- 17 control of the appropriations of the federal government. There can be no doubt
- 18 of this especially in the light of the fact that the Founding Fathers set
- 19 forth this fact in at least three separate clauses of the Constitution. First,
- 20 the Founding Fathers made clear only Congress may pass a law (with the

.

 $<sup>^{1354}</sup>$  See supra text accompanying notes 497-514.

See supra text accompanying notes 497-514; 660-699.

- participation of the president). Beside bills which are intended to become
- laws, the Founding Fathers also specified what other acts of Congress (outside 2
- of the convention call) may be passed by Congress. 1357 These powers thus firmly 3
- established, the Constitution then clearly and unequivocally spells out how 4
- and by what method money may be paid out from the United States Treasury. As 5
- 6 the matter can only be acted upon "in consequence of law," and only Congress
- 7 (together with the assent of the president) can create necessary law, it
- follows only Congress has the power to appropriate money from the Treasury. 1358 8
- Further, when Congress directs a specific sum be paid to a certain person,
- 10 neither the Secretary of the Treasury nor any court has discretion to
- determine whether the person is entitled to receive it. 1359 Finally, the Court 11
- has determined that no officer of the federal government is authorized to pay 12
- 13 a debt due from the United States, whether reduced to judgment or not, without
- an appropriation for that purpose, 1360 nor may a government employee, by 14
- erroneous advice to a claimant, bind the United States through equitable 15

 $<sup>^{1356}</sup>$  "Every Bill which shall passed the House of Representatives and the Senate, shall, before it become a law, be presented to the President of the United States." U.S. CONST., Art. I, § 7, §§ 2.

&quot;Every Order, Resolution, or Vote to Which the Concurrence of the Senate and House of Representatives may be necessary (except on a question of adjournment) shall be presented to the President of the United States..." U.S. CONST., art. I, § 7, §§ 3.

<sup>1358</sup> No money shall be drawn from the treasury, but in Consequence of Appropriations made by Law." U.S. CONST., art. I, § 9, §§ 7.

The Supreme Court has ruled this clause is a limitation upon the power of the Executive Department and does not restrict Congress in appropriating moneys in the Treasury. See Knote v. United States, 95 U.S. 149 (1877); Cincinnati Soap Co. v. United States, 301 U.S. 308 (1937).

United States v. Price, 116 U.S. 43 (1885); United States v. Realty Company, 163 U.S. 427 (1896); Allen v. Smith, 173 U.S. 389 (1899). <sup>1360</sup> Reeside v. Walker, 52 U.S. 272 (1851).

1 estoppel principles to pay a claim for which an appropriation has not be

2 made. 1361

10

19

3 Therefore the Constitution mandates no monies may be drawn from the 4 Treasury except as appropriated by law; Congress has the sole power to make

5 that law and the unlimited discretionary power to set any terms it deems

6 appropriate for the expenditure of that money. Thus, by merely setting such

7 terms and conditions for the appropriation as it wishes, it can accomplish by

8 legislative appropriation what the Founding Fathers clearly did not intend,

9 the discretionary control of the convention to propose amendments. 1362 Congress could even prescribe the identical controls as are found in the Hatch Bill 1363

11 and thus, through appropriation, circumvent not only the Founding Fathers and 12 the Constitution but also sovereignty of the states and the people. Article V

13 of the United States Constitution clearly intends Congress shall have no

14 discretion in calling a convention to propose amendments; clauses in Article I

15 give Congress full discretion in the matter through the use of appropriations.

16 Thus, the conflict. The Constitution allows no discretion on the part of 17 Congress in calling a convention to propose amendments but allows full

18 discretion on the part of Congress in financing it. In other words, Congress can control a convention by appropriation rather than legislation and be 20 within the Constitution.

<sup>1361</sup> OPM v. Richmond, 496 U.S. 414 (1990).

1

&lt;sup>1362</sup> See supra text accompanying notes 497-514.

&lt;sup>1363</sup> See supra text accompanying notes 595-612.

The paradox does not end here. The Supreme Court has made it abundantly 1 clear the President of the United States is to have no part in the amendatory 2 process of the Constitution. 1364 Yet for Congress to exercise its appropriation 3 power, the president must be involved in the process. 1365 With that involvement 4 5 comes the power of the president to veto or otherwise politically affect the 6 amendatory process, a power the Court specifically has said the president does not possess. $^{1366}$  Can there be any doubt there is no difference between a 7 8 president possessing veto power over a proposed amendment and possessing veto 9 power over a convention appropriation? Either power effectively accomplishes 10 the same goal: mandating the approval of the Executive before the amendatory 11 process can proceed. 12 Without this Executive involvement Congress cannot employ its 13 appropriation power. Therefore, for Congress to involve itself financially, it must be allowed that either the president can involve himself in the 14 amendatory process through the appropriation process, or that Congress can, 15 16 for the purposes of appropriation to the convention only, be allowed to ignore 17 sending an appropriation bill to the president for his assent as required by

There is a third paradox that may be caused by Congress itself. Based on its history regarding the calling of the convention, it is entirely possible Congress may exercise one of its less frequently used discretions and simply the Constitution. Thus, there is a second paradox within the first paradox.

<sup>1364</sup> See supra text accompanying notes 565-566.

_

18 19 20

21

&lt;sup>1365</sup> See supra text accompanying notes 1356-1357.

&lt;sup>1366</sup> See supra text accompanying notes 565-571.

- 1 refuse to finance the convention at all. Based on the above cited cases, 1367 it
- 2 is clear the Court has little power to affect such a decision by Congress.
- 3 Thus, Congress can essentially veto any Court order compelling a convention be
- 4 called by Congress by simply refusing to provide the money necessary for a
- 5 convention while simultaneously issuing the required call, thus avoiding any
- 6 reprisals by the Court, provided it is assumed that Congress must furnish the
- 7 necessary funds for the convention to operate.
- 8 However, this assumption is a fallacy. Nothing in the Constitution,
- 9 either by expression or implication, commands Congress to fund a convention to
- 10 propose amendments. Indeed, given the Founding Fathers intended "no
- 11 discretion" on the part of Congress in the matter and the paradoxes involved
- 12 if congressional appropriation powers are involved in the amendatory process,
- 13 it is logical to conclude Congress was never intended, nor should it be
- 14 empowered, to expand its power beyond its minuscule clerical roll provided in
- 15 the Constitution.
- The Supreme Court has ruled constitutional clauses cannot be ignored
- 17 whenever their consequence becomes inconvenient; therefore the effect of
- 18 Article V cannot be ignored simply because it is convenient or politically
- 19 expedient to do so. 1368 Simply because there is a method whereby Congress can
- 20 exercise full discretion regarding the control of the convention to propose
- 21 amendments does not mean Congress is constitutionally allowed to use this

&lt;sup>1367</sup> See supra text accompanying notes 1358-1361.

&quot;In expounding the Constitution, every word must have its due force and appropriate meaning." Wright v. United States, 281 U.S. 276 (1938).

1 discretion. It must be remembered at all times that the Constitution is an

2 instrument designed primarily to limit national governmental power, not expand

3 it.

4 Therefore, beyond the constitutional arguments described above

5 preventing such discretion by Congress, 1369 the plain fact is there are other

6 methods available to fund the convention. Therefore, it cannot be successfully

7 argued that because Congress does have discretionary powers in appropriations,

8 such discretion must be automatically applied to the convention. As there is a

9 clear constitutional conflict that if ignored allows Congress the ability to veto the Article V mandate if federal appropriations are permitted, the simple answer to this constitutional paradox is Congress cannot constitutionally fund the convention. Funding, to whatever level is required, must be acquired 13 elsewhere.

14

10

11

12

The Court Appropriation Alternative

16

18

15

17 Of course, those who would attempt to use the courts as a tool of social engineering will immediately see the advantage of simply handing the 19 appropriation function to the Court itself. By the merest wave of a court

20 order, the Judiciary would simply regulate Congress and the appropriation

21 process at the same time, cultivating those shoots the Court feels most

22 appropriate and pruning the offending barbs sure to be offered by Congress.

<sup>1369</sup> See supra text accompanying notes 1362-1367.

1	Ignoring for the moment the above cited cases 1370 in which the Supreme
2	Court has declared that the Court is not in the appropriations business, it
3	should come as no surprise that the Court has ruled on this matter when it
4 5 6	<pre>said:</pre>
7	Thus, while it may be politically expedient and even financially sound
8	in principle that a single source of funding for the convention be acquired,
9	the constitutional fact is it cannot be the federal government that provides
10	such funds. Neither can such funding be obtained through the federal courts.
11	Beyond any other argument, there is the residual corruption that will remain
12	if such a reckless course is followed. Millions, if not billions, in federal
13	appropriations could be re-deployed by court order, even after having been
14	directed by a legislative process open to public scrutiny. 1372 To re-deploy the
15	money, no matter how good the reason, would be to open a Pandora's Box of
16	avarice.
17	Hence, the use of any court decree to appropriate funds for the
18	convention, however altruistic such a decree would at first seem to be, is as
19	unconstitutional and dangerous as having Congress attend to the matter itself
20

21

22

The Convention Appropriation Alternative

See supra text accompanying notes 1359-1361.

Carter v. Carter Coal Co., 298 U.S. 238 (1936).

"...and a regular Statement and Account of the Receipts and Expenditures". of all public Money shall be published from time to time." U.S. CONST., art. I, § 9 §§ 7.

- 2 The Supreme Court has made it clear the provisions of the Constitution
- 3 are to be interpreted so as to effectuate their intent, not obstruct it. 1373
- 4 These provisions, of course, are designed to regulate the various obligations
- 5 of government, either by direct expressed term or by implied interpretation,
- 6 in a specific pattern of operation. It follows this principle must apply to
- 7 legislative powers.
- 8 Therefore, if legislative powers must be interpreted as to effectuate
- 9 the intent of the Constitution, not obstruct it, it follows, perhaps, that if
- 10 the Congress of the United States is constitutionally unable to use its powers
- 11 to effectuate a constitutional provision, and the judiciary is powerless to
- 12 effectuate the mandate, yet still the Constitution commands the provision must
- 13 be carried out, and that another governmental body must assume that
- 14 responsibility. The apparently logical choice would be for the Court to direct
- 15 the convention to propose amendments to assume such powers as are required to
- 16 effectuate the constitutional provisions.
- 17 In this instance, as the matter involves appropriations, the essence of
- 18 the matter is, shall the convention, by its own exclusive actions, have the
- 19 power to appropriate such funds from the national treasury or the state

<sup>1373 &</sup>quot;Court may not construe Constitution so as to defeat its obvious ends when another construction, equally accordant with the words and sense thereof, will enforce and protect them." Prigg v. Com. of Pa., 41 U.S. 539 (1842); "A constitutional provision should not be constructed so as to defeat its evident purpose, but rather so as to give it effective operation and suppress the mischief at which it was aimed." Jarrolt v. Moberly, 103 U.S. 580 (1880); "When there are several possible meanings of the words of the constitution, that meaning which will defeat rather than effectuate the constitutional purpose cannot rightly be preferred." United States v. Classic, 313 U.S. 299 (1938).

1 treasuries as are required for the convention to carry out its assigned

2 constitutional duty? Clearly, it has been recognized for some time that the convention, in concept, must have certain powers to carry out its duties.

"The general rule is undoubtedly this:—as Conventions are commonly numbers assemblies, containing, in most cases, the same number of members as the State legislatures, they are possessed of such powers as are requisite to secure their own comfort, to protect and preserve their dignity and efficiency, and to insure orderly procedure in their business. For the attainment of these ends, they are not without the authority possessed by agents in general, and, in my judgment, they are possessed of no other or greater. Thus, they must have a suitable hall, adequately warmed and lighted; and, though the Acts calling them were silent on the point, they would unquestionably have power to engage one, and to pledge the faith of the state for the rental thereof."

However, the financing of a convention involves more than just pledging the "faith" of the United States or the individual states. It would involve the convention pledging the credit of the United States or the individual states. There is no getting around this point: meeting halls cost money to rent, staff members cost money to hire, security costs money to procure, printing costs money; in short, a convention held in the usual physical sense requires large sums of money. This money cannot be created out of thin air; it must come from some already established financial source, a source that most certainly will, as one its provisions for providing the necessary funds, demand a voice in how those funds are expended.

Beyond this cold financial fact are the obvious dangers inherent to the idea of allowing the convention to propose amendments to assume power over federal funds, even for the explicit limited purpose of providing only for its

 $<sup>^{1374}</sup>$  CONSTITUTIONAL CONVENTIONS: Their Nature, Powers and Limitations (Hoar) (1917), quoting CONSTITUTIONAL CONVENTIONS (Jameson) (1887), pp. 172-173.  $^{1375}$  "A convention may undoubtedly incur expense for its legitimate needs. We have already seen that a convention can pledge the faith of the State for the expense of hiring a hall. But it is a far cry from pledging the faith of the State to pledging the credit of the State." Id. (emphasis in original).

1	own needs. The Constitution clearly assigns certain powers to certain
2	government functions. It does not allow these powers to be shuffled like a
3	deck of cards in order to obtain the best "hand" for whatever is politically
4	expedient. Basically, the Founding Fathers dealt the cards over two hundred
5	years ago to this nation; it is up to us if we wish to stay in the game to
6	play the cards dealt and not try to deal a new hand from the bottom of the
7	desk. This fact is no less true in the Founders' plan regarding the
8	expenditure of public funds. It is just as absurd to maintain that this
9	carefully thought out plan should be overturned by giving the convention the
10	power to run rampant through the federal funding process as it is to give
11	Congress the power to run rampant through the convention amendatory process.
12	Both invasions of the separation of powers threaten to result in the
13	destruction of the Constitution.
14	Thus, the convention appropriation alternative is unworkable; it
15	violates the separation of powers doctrine established in the Constitution.
16
17	The Convention Credit Card Alternative
18
19	If the convention cannot directly appropriate the funds necessary, can
20	it not pledge the faith of the United States for the necessary monies and
21	expect Congress (or some other monetary source) to have that body come up with
22	the funds after the convention concludes? This way, the above cited constitutional conflicts 1376 are apparently avoided. Congress is granted no 1

2 opportunity to regulate the convention because no monies are actually expended until after the convention concludes. 3

6

7

10

12

15

16

17

18 19

20

4 While some court cases involving this issue shed some light on the

5 matter, the main objection to this method of funding lies in the world of practical, pragmatic politics. There is no reason to assume that a hostile

Congress would be inclined to hand over funds for an already concluded

8 convention just because "it the right thing to do." The only difference

9 between the above method of appropriation and the credit card method is that the convention would have the power to acquire funds before the event, thus 11 allowing at least some public discussion. The credit card method would allow unlimited appropriation by proxy thus dumping an unpredictable debt on the 13 federal government with no public input whatsoever.

14 Unlike the convention's main work, that of proposing amendments, which is only advisory in nature with no effect of law until ratified by the states, the appropriation of funds, however, which either must be expended before the conclusion of the convention or used to pay debts accrued by the convention previous to funds being acquired, is not required by the Constitution to be reviewed by the states. Hence, there is no check and balance system common to almost every other action in the Constitution to prevent possible monetary 21 abuses by convention delegates.

 $^{1376}$  See supra text accompanying notes 1370-1375.

1 This matter is not without analogous case law. Following the Civil War,

2 a number of controversies arose out of attempts by Congress to restrict the

- 3 payment of the claims of persons who had aided the rebellion but had
- 4 thereafter received a pardon from the President. In one of these cases, the
- 5 Court declared it was within the competence of the Congress to declare that
- 6 the amount due to persons thus pardoned should not be paid out of the Treasury
- 7 and that no general appropriations should extend to their claims. 1377
- 8 The analogy, of course, is not that the convention to propose amendments
- 9 constitutes any form of rebellion. Rather, the fact that one branch of
- 10 government has taken an constitutional action does not obligate another branch
- 11 to act. As the Court said:

12

13 14

15

16

17

18

- "[A]lthough before the joint resolution was passed the claimant had received from the president a pardon 'for all offenses committed by him arising from participation, direct or implied, in the Rebellion,' the pardon did not authorize the payment of the claim, nor did the joint resolution take away anything which the pardon had conferred; and that it was entirely within the competency of congress to declare that the claims mentioned in the joint resolution should not be paid until the further order of congress." 1378
- 19 Clearly these two Court rulings establish that Congress is not bound to 20 grant appropriations after the fact except as Congress shall determine, and

<sup>21</sup> the actions of another branch of government, in this case a pardon by the

<sup>1377 &</sup>quot;If the joint resolution had said nothing on the subject of a pardon, no pardon could have had the effect to authorize the payment out of a general appropriation of a debt which a law of congress had said should not be paid out of it. The pardon cannot have such effect ascribed to it merely because the joint resolution says that it shall not have such effect. It was entirely within the competency of congress to declare that the claims mentioned in the joint resolution should not be paid till the further order of congress. It is now within its competency to declare that they may be paid, in like means as...should not apply to payments to be made out of a general appropriation made by that act to pay mail contractors for mail service performed in certain states in 1859, 1860, and 1861, and before they 'respectively engaged in war against the United States.'" Hart v. United States, 118 U.S. 62 (1886).

1	D '1 '	-					~				m1.
1	President,	do	not	quarantee	or	compel	Congress	to	appropriate	monev.	Thus,	11

- 2 the convention is held and the convention, without previous approval from
- 3 Congress, attempts to extend the credit of the United States in order to pay
- 4 for convention costs, Congress has every right to refuse such an obligation.
- 5 Thus, for both constitutional as well as political reasons, the convention
- 6 "credit card" is an unworkable proposition. While the convention may be
- 7 federal in nature, it is certainly not federal in financing.

8

9

The State Appropriation Alternative

10

- Another alternative for funding the convention to propose amendments is, of course, to involve the states in the matter. This can be accomplished in
- 13 either of two ways: voluntary funding by each state or federally ordered
- 14 funding.
- 15 The logic of the states financing the convention to propose amendments
- 16 is seemingly inexorable. Even though its powers are derived from a federal
- 17 document, ultimately the convention to propose amendments is a state, rather
- 18 than a federal, proposition. Beyond the congressional call, the federal
- 19 government has nothing to do with a convention to propose amendments until it
- 20 returns with proposed amendments. At this stage of events, Congress determines
- 21 which mode of ratification will be used to submit the amendments to the
- 22 states. Basically, the federal government's involvement is best described as
- 23 being used only when, during this process, there arises a need for a
- 24 synchronized action involving the cooperative efforts of the states, the
- 25 trigger of which the Founding Fathers could not justify assigning to the

- 1 states. Therefore, they gave this limited matter to Congress but clearly
- 2 removed all discretion from the Congress otherwise. Thus, because the Founding
- 3 Fathers did not address the matter in the Constitution, despite the admonition
- 4 of Madison, 1379 it can be concluded they did not intend further involvement by
- 5 the federal government. For the convention to succeed, the states were
- 6 intended to "fill in the details." Clearly this would involve, at the minimum,
- 7 the financing of the event in order for it to take place. Therefore, it should
- 8 be the responsibility of the states to deal with such financial matters as
- 9 they may arise. It is assumed in this scenario that absent unified federal
- 10 authority, the states must work out the matter of compensation among
- 11 themselves, establishing such payments for convention expenses as they may
- 12 individually or collectively see fit and appropriate. 1380
- 13 Despite the "inevitability" of this argument, it is far from a fait
- 14 accompli. Historic, political, and constitutional questions, which cannot be
- 15 ignored, place great barriers in front of this simplistic solution.
- 16 The first barrier to the states working together is historic. The major
- 17 reason the states created first the Articles of Confederation and later the
- 18 United States Constitution was their inability to work together without
- 19 quarreling among themselves. 1381 This inability to function together, absent a
- 20 federal system, was not left behind once the Constitution took effect.

<sup>1379</sup> See supra text accompanying note 438.

&lt;sup>1380</sup> In this matter of finance, certain legitimate expenses of a convention are of a general nature, i.e., expenses not incurred by any particular state delegation, but still must be sustained for the convention to function, such as security, staff and furniture.

<sup>1381</sup> See supra text accompanying notes 314-316.

- 1 Questions involving intergovernmental immunities, both federal versus state
- 2 and state versus state, have arisen over our entire history, the most notable
- 3 conflict being the Civil War.
- 4 In more peaceful disputes, the Supreme Court has decided several issues
- 5 relating to interstate compacts and their effect upon the states. The very
- 6 fact the Supreme Court is involved in deciding these issues demonstrates the
- 7 difficulty of the states working together even after they have reached
- 8 agreement on a matter. 1382
- 9 Putting aside the historic question, there remain the political and
- 10 constitutional issues. If the Court does determine it is the responsibility of
- 11 the states to finance the convention to propose amendments, it runs into the
- 12 same problem as with Congress--that of discretion. State or federal, the Court
- 13 is not in the appropriation business. Thus, the difficulty of establishing the

The Court said:

"But a compact is after all a legal document. Though the circumstances of its drafting are likely to assure great care and deliberation, all avoidance of disputes as to scope and meaning is not within human gift. Just as this Court has power to settle disputes between states where there is no compact, it must have final power to pass upon the meaning and validity of compacts. It requires no elaborate argument to reject the suggestion that an agreement solemnly entered into between States by those who alone have political authority to speak for a State can be unilaterally nullified, or given final meaning by an organ of one of the contracting States. A State cannot be its own ultimate judge in a controversy with a sister State. To determine the nature and scope of obligations as between States whether they arise through the legislative means of compact or the 'federal common law' governing interstate controversies (Hinderlider v. La Plata Co., 304 U.S. 92, 110), is the function and duty of the Supreme Court of the Nation."

&lt;sup>1382</sup> One example of such a dispute that relates greatly to the matter at hand is Dyer v. Sims, 341 U.S. 22 (1951) in which the state of West Virginia attempted to withdraw from a compact between itself and seven other states regarding control of pollution of the Ohio River. The Court found two significant points: the Court has final power to pass upon the meaning and validity of compacts between states, and an agreement entered into between states by those who alone have political authority to speak for a state cannot be nullified unilaterally or given final meaning by any organ of one of the contracting states.

1 terms and conditions by which a state provides financial support is

2 potentially multiplied by a factor of fifty with each state legislature able

3 to set whatever terms it feels is appropriate. To assume the political

4 opportunism of state legislatures is any less voracious than that of Congress

5 when presented the opportunity, is at best, folly. No doubt the ugly head of 6 political agenda will be thrust into the appropriation formula.

7 As to having the Court regulate the states through court order 8 compelling a unified appropriation, this "solution" has its own share of 9 problems. First, there is no precedent that the states must attend the 10 convention and hence, must support it financially. In 1787, Rhode Island sent 11 no delegates to that convention, yet still retained its sovereignty and gained equal powers with the other states under the new Constitution, such as the 12 13 ratification of proposed amendments. Despite the fact Rhode Island did not attend the 1787 Constitutional Convention, there is no evidence the Founding 14 15 Fathers felt they possessed the power to expel or exclude that colony from the 16 Republic. It is doubtful a court today would find otherwise. The fact a state 17 is sovereign provides an obvious if overlooked power: the right of the state 18 not to do something so long as it does not violate the United States 19 Constitution. Nothing in the Constitution demands a state attend a convention 20 just as there is no demand that a state must vote on the ratification of a 21 proposed amendment. Further, what recourse would a court have if a state chose 22 not to "chip in" to finance a convention? The seizure of state assets in order 23 to pay for the convention to propose amendments? Such a precedent would be devastating, if not entirely destructive of state sovereignty and separation of powers.

24

25

1 There is no help for the Court in the supremacy clause of the 2 Constitution. This clause only takes effect when state law is in conflict

3 with the Constitution, and there is no conflict in this case. The states

4 certainly possess, as does Congress, 1384 the unassailable right to determine

5 how they will spend their state tax dollars where such expenditure is not a

6 violation of rights or of constitutional law, and nothing in the Constitution

7 mandates or even implies the states, like Congress, must finance a convention

8 to propose amendments. Thus, there is some question whether the federal courts even have authority in this specific matter.

12

14

15

18

10 Finally, as indicated in Dyer, it is the federal courts that have final

11 say regarding "the meaning and validity of compacts". 1385 This would seem to negate any issues that have been raised concerning the supremacy clause or the 13 attendance of the states at a convention. However, the matter is not that simple. The Court has empowered itself properly to be the final judge of the "meaning and validity of compacts" but has not empowered itself to be the 16 final and ultimate negotiator or arbitrator of the formation of state

17 compacts. In this matter, the Constitution deals with these issues by granting approval of all such compacts to Congress. 1386 In other words, the Constitution

19 grants Congress discretion over all aspects of state compacts previous to

&quot;This Constitution, and the Laws of the United States which shall be made in Pursuance thereof; and all Treaties made, or which shall be made, under the Authority of the United States, shall be the supreme Law of the Land..." U.S. CONST., art. VI,  $\S$  2.

 $^{\rm 1384}$  See supra text accompanying notes 1358-1361.

&lt;sup>1385</sup> See supra text accompanying note 1382.

 $<sup>^{1386}</sup>$  No State shall, without the Consent of Congress...enter into any Agreement or Compact with another State..." U.S. CONST., art. I, § 10, §§ 3.

- 1 their effectuation. The matter of congressional discretion in regards to the
- 2 convention to propose amendments has been well discussed in this suit, and the
- 3 intent of the Founders remains the same: none. 1387 Therefore, having the states
- 4 finance the convention to propose amendments, as this would involve an
- 5 agreement  $^{1388}$  or compact  $^{1389}$  that under the terms of the Constitution grants
- 6 ultimate approval by Congress before such an agreement or compact can take
- 7 effect, 1390 is unconstitutional as it confers on Congress discretion in the

(Footnote Continued Next Page)

&lt;sup>1387</sup> See supra text accompanying note 497-514; 1358-1361.

&lt;sup>1388</sup> "A meeting of two or more minds; a coming together in opinion or determination; the coming together in accord of two minds on a given proposition. In law, a concord of understanding and intention between two or more parties with respect to the effect upon their relative rights and duties, of certain past or future facts or performances. The consent of two or more persons concurring respecting the transmission of some property, right, or benefits, with the view of contracting an obligation, a mutual obligation." BLACK'S LAW DICTIONARY 6th ed. (1990).

<sup>1389 &</sup>quot;An agreement or contract between persons, nations or states. Commonly applied to working agreements between and among states concerning matters of mutual concern. A contract between parties, which creates obligations and rights capable of being enforced, and contemplated as such between the parties, in their distinct and independent characters. A mutual consent of parties concerned respecting some property or right that is the object of the stipulation, or something that is to be done or forborne." BLACK'S LAW DICTIONARY 6th ed. (1990).

&lt;sup>1390</sup> It would have better if the Founding Fathers, in writing the Constitution, had considered the matter of financing future conventions in its provisions. Instead, the Founders left the matter up to the courts to resolve, and in this particular matter the Court has construed the meaning of the Compact Clause in such a manner as to leave room for debate on the matter.

In Virginia v. Tennessee, 148 U.S. 503 (1893), the Court discussed agreements and compacts between states and the meaning of the language of the clause. The Court said:

&quot;The terms 'agreement' or 'compact' taken by themselves, are sufficiently comprehensive to embrace all forms of stipulation, written or verbal, and relating to all kinds of subjects; to those to which the United States can have no possible objection or have any interest in interfering with, as well as to those which may tend to increase and build up the political influence of the contracting states, so as to encroach upon or impair the supremacy of the United States, or to interfere with their rightful management of particular subjects placed under their entire control.

&quot;There are many matters upon which different states may agree that can in no respect concern the United States... If then, the terms 'compact' or 'agreement' in the constitution do not apply to every possible compact or agreement between one state and another, for the validity of which the consent of congress must be obtained, to what compacts or agreements does the constitution apply? We can only reply by looking at the object of the constitutional provision and construing the terms 'agreement' and 'compact' by reference to it...

"Looking at the clause in which the terms 'compact' or 'agreement' appear, it is evident that the prohibition is directed to the formation of any combination tending to the increase of political power in the states, which may encroach upon or interfere with the just supremacy of the United States. Story, in his Commentaries, (section 1403,) referring to a previous part of the same section of the constitution in which the clause in question appears, observes that its language 'may be more plausibly interpreted from the terms used, "treaty, alliance, or confederation," and upon the ground that the sense of each is best known by its association ("noscitur a sociis") to apply to treaties of a political character; such as treaties of alliance for purposes of peace and war; and treaties of confederation, in which the parties are leagued for mutual government, political co-operation, and the exercise of political sovereignty, and treaties of cession of sovereignty, or conferring internal political jurisdiction, or external political dependence, or general commercial privileges; ' and that 'the latter clause, "compacts and agreement," might then very properly apply to such as regarded what might be deemed mere private rights of sovereignty; such as questions of boundary, interests in land situate in the territory of each other, and other internal regulations for the mutual comfort and convenience of states bordering on each other.' And he adds: 'In such cases the consent of congress may be properly required, in order to check any infringement of the rights of the national government; and, at the same time, a total prohibition to enter into any compact or agreement might be attended with permanent inconvenience or public mischief." (emphasis added).

In a more recent case, U.S. Steel Corp. v. Multistate Tax Commission, 434 U.S. 452 (1978), the Court affirmed the earlier Virginia decision but added several important stipulations that relate to the states financing a convention to propose amendments.

The Court said:

"We reaffirmed Mr. Justice Field's view that the 'application of the Compact Clause is limited agreements that are "directed to the formation of any combination tending to the increase of political power in the States, which may encroach upon or interfere with the just supremacy of the United States."' Id., at 369, quoting Virginia v. Tennessee, 148 U.S. at 519. This rule states the proper balance between federal and state power with respect to compacts and agreements among States...

"The Clause reaches both 'agreements' and 'compacts,' the formal as well as the informal. The relevant inquiry must be one of impact on our federal structure...

"Appellants further urge that the pertinent inquiry is one of potential, rather than actual, impact upon federal supremacy. We agree... [T]he test is whether the Compact enhances state power quoad the National Government. This pact does not purport to authorize the member States to exercise any powers they could not exercise in its absence." (emphasis added).

Clearly, these decisions, in so far as they relate to the financing of the convention to propose amendments, cast grave doubt on the ability of the states through any agreement or compact to finance the convention. There can be little doubt that through the convention the potential political power of the states will increase, and the present sovereignty of the United States Government will proportionately decrease. From a strictly political point of

(Footnote Continued Next Page)

1	calling	$\circ$ f	the	convention	tο	propose	amendments	hv	the	regulation	$\circ$ f	gtate

2 funds intended to finance the convention through its compact clause power. 1391

3

4 Summation

5

6 Despite their collective wisdom, the Founding Fathers created a paradox

- 7 in the Constitution regarding the convention to propose amendments: on the one
- 8 hand they quite properly forbid any discretion on the part of Congress
- 9 regarding the calling of a convention; on the other hand, they placed clauses
- 10 in the Constitution that collectively prevent either the states or Congress
- 11 (or both) from financing the convention so that it may occur.

view it is irrelevant whether even a single amendment emerges from this particular convention. What is significant is a shift of power from the National Government to the States as it relates to the amending of the Constitution. Equally clear is this particular agreement or compact would relate directly to political co-operation among the states and therefore by the Court's own definition would require approval by Congress. Given that the Congress has completely ignored the mandate of Article V, there is little doubt that presented the opportunity, Congress would never give its consent for a compact allowing the financing of the convention to propose amendments.

1391 However, in U.S. Steel, the Court quoted Holmes v. Jennison, 39 U.S. 540 (1840) as the basis to support its conclusion. In Jennison the Court said:

"Can it be supposed, that the constitutionality of the act depends on the mere form of the agreement? We think not. The Constitution looked to the essence and substance of things, and not to mere form. It would be but an evasion of the constitution to place the question upon the formality with which the agreement is made."

That said, can it not be argued that the convention to propose amendments is a constitutionally permissible compact between the states, and therefore would any compact required of the states for this purpose, however it may effect the political balance between the National Government and the States, be in fact constitutional? Unfortunately, nowhere did the Court see fit to discuss the effects of agreements and compacts as they related to a convention to propose amendments. Therefore, their current ruling prohibiting such political actions (outside the expressed, mandated convention itself) must be consider the "final" word. If the matter is to be modified, it must be up to the wisdom of the Court to do so without permitting other political actions by the states not related to a convention to occur. See supra text accompanying note 1353.

1 What then remains? A concession that Congress is in fact correct in its

2 laches because it doesn't matter whether they call or not. Why? Because even

- 3 if Congress desired to call a convention, it would issue the call under its
- 4 own terms and conditions. Why? Because either through its appropriation power
- 5 or its compact and agreement power, Congress would possess ultimate authority
- 6 on the financing of the convention. By way of this unanticipated
- 7 constitutional loophole, Congress would thus possess unlimited discretion on
- 8 the convention's call, mission and operation. This concession, of course,
- 9 would produce chaos. It would cause untold damage to the system of checks and
- 10 balances so carefully created by the Founders. An ambitious Congress in league
- 11 with a weak, lax or corrupt president could alter the Constitution in any
- 12 manner desired.
- 13 Is it possible to avoid this Armageddon scenario and still be
- 14 constitutional in financing the convention? The answer is yes. First, it must
- 15 be remembered the Constitution was designed to limit government, not the
- 16 people who created that government; 1392 thus, that which is not prohibited by
- 17 the Constitution to the people is permitted by it for the people. 1393 Second,

&quot;Under the constitution, sovereignty in the United States resides in the people." Kennett v. Chambers, 55 U.S. 38 (1852); "The Constitution is the fundamental law of the United States, and no department of government has any other powers than those thus delegated to it by the people." Hepburn v. Griswold, 75 U.S. 603 (1869); "The government of the United States is one of limited powers, and no department possess any authority not granted by Constitution." (Id.).

&quot;The powers not delegated to the United States by the Constitution, nor prohibited by it to the States, are reserved to the States respectively, or to the people." (U.S. CONST.,  $10^{\rm th}$  Amend.).

- 1 it is an axiom of constitutional law that provisions of the Constitution must
- 2 be construed so as to effectuate its provisions, not obstruct them. 1394
- 3 The people, as the ultimate sovereign authority in the United States,
- 4 have the transcendental power to alter or abolish their government. 1395 Clearly
- 5 implied in this right is the power of the people to employ whatever means are
- 6 necessary to accomplish this right. Thus, if by oversight, error or omission,
- 7 a form of government created by them fails to provide the means or conveyance
- 8 by which that created government can be used by the people to accomplish some
- 9 or all of the necessary changes without violating some term or condition that
- 10 established that government, then it follows because of the transcendent power
- 11 the people themselves possess, they can provide whatever means are required in
- 12 order to "fill in the details."
- 13 What details need to be "filled in" that would provide the financial
- 14 support necessary to effect a convention call from Congress without violating
- 15 the Constitution as interpreted by the Supreme Court? A quick reexamination of
- 16 what is involved in the convention call is therefore in order.
- 17 Simply put, the "call" is nothing more than the announcement by Congress
- of a meeting 1396 which in turn is no more than "[A]n assembly, a gathering of
- 19 people especially to discuss or decide on matters" and "a point of contact or
- 20 intersection; a junction." 1397

&quot;Where there are several possible meanings of the words of the constitution, that meaning which will defeat rather than effectuate the constitutional purpose cannot rightly be preferred." United States v. Classic, 313 U.S. 299 (1941).

 $<sup>^{1395}</sup>$  See supra text accompanying notes 1136-1147.

&lt;sup>1396</sup> See supra text accompanying notes 2,581.

<sup>1397</sup> See supra text accompanying note 582.

1 As it has been demonstrated that no other method of finance by federal

2 or state government is constitutionally permissible, it follows the resolution

- 3 of this matter must involve the discovery of a method whereby the cost of a
- 4 convention is equally distributed among those involved in the project, i.e.,
- 5 the delegates. As the delegates do not possess the power to tax,  $^{1398}$  i.e., the
- 6 power to redistribute the cost of the convention onto the people in general,
- 7 this method must be accomplished without undo financial burden to any
- 8 delegate.
- 9 This concern relates to the constitutional, rather than the financial.
- 10 It would be as unconstitutional to add, as a condition for being a convention
- 11 delegate, a term of wealth as it would be to add any other condition not
- 12 specified in the Constitution. 1399 Beyond the constitutional considerations,
- 13 however, is a necessary requirement to avoid the golden rule of political
- 14 agenda and money: "He that has the gold--rules." The alternative of permitting
- 15 a small number of wealthy delegates to finance the convention rather than
- 16 distributing the cost equally among all delegates invites these wealthy
- 17 "benefactor" delegates to use this special position of influence to regulate
- 18 the convention, or at the least, the fate of a particular amendment proposal.
- 19 For the sake of the ultimate goal of the convention, which must be to maintain
- 20 the confidence of the American people in its constitutional institutions, such &quot;The Congress shall have Power to lay and collect Taxes, Duties, Imports and Excises; to pay the Debts and provide for the common Defence and general Welfare of the United States." (U.S. CONST, art. I,  $\S 8$ ,  $\S \S 1$ ). (emphasis added). There is no room for doubt that the Founders intended only Congress to have the power to tax.

&lt;sup>1399</sup> See supra text accompanying notes 290,616,1235,1262,1315,1335.

1 political antics cannot be permitted and in this specific instance are

2 entirely unnecessary.

3 What is the purpose of a convention to propose amendments? It is a

4 forum, "a point of contact or intersection" where amendment or amendments may

5 be proposed, publicly discussed, altered, and as a result of this discussion,

6 assuming sufficient support for such matters, passed out of the convention to 7 face possible ratification by the states. All other matters to this forum are

8 extraneous or subservient. Thus, they can be removed without doing

9 constitutional damage to the convention's purpose. Such matters as security,

10 building, furniture--in short, all physical matters usually associated with a meeting, and most of its costs--are in this instance superfluous. The essence

12 of a convention is the free exchange of information and agreement among the participants on the eventual outcome of that information. Thus, all that is required for the delegates is the free exchange of information, not a physical 15 meeting among them.

11

13

14

17

18

19

The resolution of this financial dilemma thus devolves into finding a method whereby the delegates, by their own financial means, can support a convention without excluding any delegate of modest means, 1400 without relying on the financial wealth of some delegates, or relying upon government, state

20 or federal, for the needed funds. $^{1401}$

(Footnote Continued Next Page)

 $<sup>^{1400}</sup>$  The Court has made it clear that excluding a candidate from seeking office is unconstitutional. Nothing the Court has ever stated would lead to the conclusion that such protections would not extend to a convention delegate. See supra text accompanying note 131.  $^{1401}$  The fact the convention is strictly amendatory in nature, i.e., it does

The fact the convention is strictly amendatory in nature, i.e., it does not possess legislative authority, leads to an interesting difference between convention delegates and members of Congress. Because there is no source of

1	As there is no other alternative of funding that the Supreme Court has
2	not removed, and as the Supreme Court has further has ruled on numerous
3	occasions that the provisions of the Constitution must be construed so as to
4	effectuate them, the only logical conclusion regarding convention financing
5	is, as was so eloquently spoken by Sherlock Holmes, "[W]hen you have
6	eliminated all which is impossible, then whatever remains, however improbable
7	must be the truth." $^{1402}$
8
9	The "Virtual" Convention
10
11	One information system exists that satisfies the conditions of Court
12	decisions regarding the financing of a convention to propose amendments, yet
13	provides the simultaneous exchange of information necessary for the delegates
14	to conduct their essential business, i.e., the proposal, discussion,
15	alteration and forwarding of amendments to the states via Congress, which is 16	charged with the choice of ratification. This information system is the revenue that the convention can attach, i.e., tax, convention delegates will be forced to serve in a volunteer capacity. Members of Congress are paid for their services, and while some might argue convention delegates must be paid the same as members of Congress, the plain fact is that without a source of revenue, this is impossible. Congress, using its tax powers, does have sources of revenue by which to raise funds to pay its members; the convention does not and thus has no revenue from which to pay its delegates.
17	Internet. 1403

1402 "The Adventure of the Blanched Soldier" by Sir Arthur Conan Doyle.

"The Adventure of the Blanched Soldier" by Sir Arthur Conan Doyle.

1403 "The Internet is an international network of interconnected computers. It is the outgrowth of what began in 1969 as a military program called 'ARPANET,' which was designed to enable computers operated by the military, defense contractors, and universities conducting defense related research to communicate with one another by redundant channels even if some portions of the network were damaged in a war. While the ARPANET no longer exists, it provide an example for the development of a number civilian networks that, eventually linking with each other, now enable tens of millions of people to communicate with one another and to access vast amounts of information from around the world. The Internet is 'a unique and wholly new medium of worldwide human communication.'

(Footnote Continued Next Page)

"The Internet has experienced 'extraordinary growth.' The number of 'host' computers—those that store information and relay communications—increased from about 300 in 1981 to approximately 9,400,00 by the time of trial in 1996. Roughly 60% of these hosts are located in the United States. About 40 million people used the Internet at the time of trial, a number that is expected to mushroom by 200 million by 1999.

"Individuals can obtain access to the Internet from many different sources, generally hosts themselves or entities with a host affiliation. Most colleges and universities provide access for their students and faculty, many corporations provide their employees with access through an office network; many communities and local libraries provide free access; and an increasing number of storefront 'computer coffee shops' provide access for a small hourly fee. Several major national 'online services' such as America Online, CompuServe, the Microsoft Network, and Prodigy offer access to their own extensive proprietary networks as well as a link to the much larger resources of the Internet. These commercial online services had almost 12 million individual subscribers at the time of trial.

"Anyone with access to the Internet may take advantage of a wide variety of communication and information retrieval methods. These methods are constantly evolving and difficult to categorize precisely. But, as presently constituted, those most relevant to this case are electronic mail ('e mail'), 'chat rooms,' and the 'World Wide Web.' All of these methods can be used to transmit text; most can transmit sound, pictures, and moving video images. Taken together, these tools constitute a unique medium--known to its users as 'cyberspace'—located in no particular geographical location but available to anyone, anywhere in the world, with access to the Internet.

"E-mail enables an individual to send an electronic message-generally akin to a note or letter -- to another individual or to a group of addressees. The message is generally stored electronically, sometimes waiting for the recipient to check her 'mailbox' and sometimes making its receipt known through some type of prompt. A mail exploder is a sort of e-mail group. Subscribers can send messages to a common e-mail address, which then forwards the message to the group's other subscribers. Newsgroups also serve groups of regular participants, but these postings may be read by others as well. There are thousands of such groups, each serving to foster an exchange of information or opinion on a particular topic running the gamut from, say, the music of Wagner to Balkan politics to AIDS prevention to the Chicago Bulls. About 100,000 new messages are posted every day. In most newsgroups, postings are automatically purged at regular intervals. In addition to posting a message that can be read later, two or more individuals wishing to communicate more immediately can enter a chat room to engage in real time dialogue--in other words, by typing message to one another that appear almost immediately on the others' computer screens. The District Court found that at any given time 'tens of thousands of users are engaging in conversations on a huge range of subjects.' It is 'no exaggeration to conclude that the content on the Internet is as diverse as human thought.'

"The best known category of communication over the Internet is the World Wide Web, which allows users to search for and retrieve information stored in remote computers, as well as, in some cases, to communicate back to designated

(Footnote Continued Next Page)

- 1 Congress has no discretion in calling the convention to propose
- 2 amendments. 1404 In the call, Congress can only recommend a time and place for
- 3 the convention. $^{1405}$  As with the rest of the Constitution's clauses, the
- 4 convention call must comply with all provisions of the Constitution and
- 5 applicable Court decisions. 1406 The virtual convention, however improbable, is
- 6 the only alternative that satisfies all constitutional provisions and all
- 7 judicial decisions. It follows, therefore, any interpretation of what a
- 8 convention call entails must include the virtual convention as it is the only
- 9 alternative that fulfills both constitutional and judicial standards.

sites. In concrete terms, the Web consists of a vast number of documents stored in different computers all over the world. Some of these documents are simply files containing information. However, more elaborate documents, commonly known as Web 'pages,' are also prevalent. Each has its own address— 'rather like a telephone number.' Web pages frequently contain information and sometimes allow the viewer to communicate with the page's (or 'site's') author. They generally also contain 'links' to other documents created by that site's author or to other (generally) related sites. Typically, the links are either blue or underlined text--sometimes images.

"Navigating the Web is relatively straightforward. A user may either type the address of a known page or enter one or more keywords into a commercial 'search engine' in an effort to locate sites on a subject of interest. A particular Web page may contain the information sought by the 'surfer,' or, through its links, it may be an avenue to other documents located anywhere on the Internet. Users generally explore a given Web page, or move to another, by clicking a computer 'mouse' on one of the page's icons or links. Access to most Web pages is freely available, but some allow access only to the readers' viewpoint, to both a vast library including millions of readily available and indexed publications and a sprawling mall offering goods and services.

"From the publishers' point of view, it constitutes a vast platform from which to address and hear from a world wide audience of millions of readers, viewers, researchers, and buyers. Any person or organization with a computer connected to the Internet can 'publish' information. Publishers include government agencies, educational institutions, commercial entities, advocacy groups, and individuals. Publishers may either make their material available to the entire pool of Internet uses, or confine access to a selected group, such as those willing to pay for the privilege. 'No single organization controls any membership in the Web, nor is there any centralized point from which individual Web sites or services can be blocked from the Web.'" Reno v. ACLU, 521 U.S. 844 (1997). (footnotes omitted).

&lt;sup>1404</sup> See supra text accompanying note 497-514.

&lt;sup>1405</sup> See supra text accompanying notes 581-592.

&lt;sup>1406</sup> See supra text accompanying notes 287-288,524,1248,1276-1277,1293.

1 Opponents of a virtual convention or a convention to propose amendments

2 in general may attempt to use the weak argument that the Internet cannot be

3 used for a convention because it is not a "place." Therefore, as the call must

4 include "a time and place" 1407 and the Internet is not a "place," a convention

5 cannot take place on it.

14

15

6 The fallacy of this argument is the limited and physical conception of 7 the word "place." The intent of the Constitution is to permit the people to 8 hold a convention to propose amendments as a means of exercising their

9 transcendent right to alter or abolish their government as they see fit,

10 and this must be the overriding obligation. In any event, there is no help

11 here even from the dictionary as the word in question provides enough

12 "stretch" to encompass the matter regardless. 1409

Such acts as the Hatch Bill<sup>1410</sup> prove Congress' voracious appetite to dominate the people's right to alter or abolish by controlling the political association of the convention delegates. Whether in the virtual or physical world, this was not intended under our system of government. <sup>1411</sup> In numerous

17 decisions, the Court has defended this constitutionally protected right of 18 political association. 1412 Further, the Court has not only ruled against such

(Footnote Continued Next Page)

&lt;sup>1407</sup> See supra text accompanying notes 581-590.

<sup>1408</sup> See supra text accompanying notes 921-1009.

The word "place" has several definitions which upon examination refute the limited physical concept of the word. These include:

&quot;space; room."; "a particular area or locality"; "(a) part of space occupied by a person or thing." Certainly there can be no argument that the Internet is a "thing" and therefore occupies a "place".

<sup>1410</sup> See supra text accompanying notes 596-608.

<sup>1411</sup> See supra text accompanying note 497-514.

The Court has made it clear in such decisions as Kusper v. Pontikes, 414 U.S. 51 (1973):

- congressional avarice in the "physical" world, but also against such
- interference in the "virtual" world. 1413 2

16

23

24 25

26

27 28

29

30

31

- In Reno, the Court made it clear that congressional regulation of the 3
- 4 Internet would suffer stringent court review. The Court, quoting the lower
- 5 district court, affirmed the district court's decision, saying:

6 "Judge Dalzell's review of 'the special attributes of Internet 7 communication' disclosed by the evidence convinced him that the First 8 Amendment denies Congress the power to regulate the content of protected 9 speech on the Internet. His opinion explained at length why he believed the 10 Act would abridge significant protected speech, particularly by noncommercial 11 speakers, while '[p]erversely, commercial pornographers would remain relatively unaffected.' He construed our cases as requiring a 'medium 12 13 specific' approach to the analysis of the regulation of mass communication, and concluded that the Internet—as 'the most participatory form of mass 14 15 speech yet developed.'-is entitled to 'the highest protection from governmental intrusion." "1414

- 17 In Reno the Court prohibited regulation of the Internet by Congress even
- 18 for the limited purpose of regulating pornography. Thus, there can be no doubt
- that even though the Court did not directly address the question of regulating 19
- 20 peaceful political petition and voting, the Court would rule as forcefully
- against congressional control of the Internet should such regulation resemble 21
- 22 the Hatch Bill. The Court as much stated this in Reno when it said:

"Finally, unlike the conditions that prevailed when Congress first authorized regulation of the broadcast spectrum, the Internet can hardly be considered a 'scarce' expressive commodity. It provides relatively unlimited, low cost capacity for communications of all kinds. The Government estimates that '[a]s many as 40 million people use the Internet today, and that figure is expected to grow to 200 million by 1999.' This dynamic, multifaceted category of communication includes not only traditional print and new services, but also audio, video, and still images, as well as interactive, real time dialogue. Through the use of chat rooms, any person with a phone

&quot;[T]here can no longer be any doubt that freedom to associate with others for the common advancement of political beliefs and idea is a form of 'orderly group activity' protected by the First and Fourteenth Amendments..."

Ironically, the Court has been more generous in its interpretations regarding the association of individuals for political purposes than for the states associating for the same purpose. See supra text accompanying note line can become a town crier with a voice that resonates father than it could from any soapbox. Through the use of Web pages, mail exploders, and newsgroups, the same individual can become a pamphleteer. As the District Court found, 'the content on the Internet is as diverse as human thought.' We agree with its conclusion that our cases provide no basis for qualifying the level of First Amendment scrutiny that should be applied to this medium." 1415

&lt;sup>1413</sup> Reno v. ACLU, 521 U.S. 844 (1997).

 $<sup>^{1414}</sup>$  Id. (footnotes omitted).

The Court then added:

"The Government's position is equivalent to arguing that a statute could ban leaflets on certain subjects as long as individuals are free to publish books. In invalidating a number of laws that banned leafleting on the streets regardless of their content—we explained that 'one is not to have the exercise of his liberty of expression in appropriate places abridged on the plea that it may be exercised in some other place.' Schneider v. State (Town of Irvington), 308 U.S. 147 (1939)" 1416

Finally, the Court summarized its position, saying:

"The dramatic expansion of this new marketplace of ideas contradicts the factual basis of this contention. The record demonstrates that the growth of the Internet has been and continues to be phenomenal. As a matter of constitutional tradition, in the absence of evidence to the contrary, we presume the governmental regulation of the content of speech is more likely to interfere with the free exchange of ideas than encourage it. The interest in encouraging freedom of expression in a democratic society outweighs any theoretical but unproven benefit of censorship." 1417

Given these unequivocal statements of the Court, it is clear Congress, in issuing a convention call that includes a suggested time and place for the convention, cannot use its regulatory power to control the convention's web page, server or other electronic components necessary to be on the Internet simply because the event is online. The Court has made it clear that freedom of speech and political association for legitimate lawful political purposes are guaranteed freedoms for which the Constitution forbids congressional interference.

 $<sup>^{1415}</sup>$  Id. (footnotes omitted). (emphasis added).

Id. (emphasis added).

Id. (emphasis added).

- 1 The Internet offers several advantages for a convention to propose
- 2 amendments that are neither constitutional nor financial in nature, but taken
- 3 together provide major benefits.
- 4 These include:

2.3

5 1. Accuracy of record.

The Internet possesses instant accurate recording by the means of "backup". This offers delegates, observers and historians the ability to examine the convention record, literally minute by minute, if need be. Unlike the first Constitutional Convention, where the record is woefully lacking, totally accurate information is possible.

2. Issues rather than personality.

The Internet removes such physical obstacles to communication as sex, age, creed and race. It is the great leveler. As a result, people using the Internet are viewed primarily by their "message" rather than their "medium." As the novelty of the Internet and the convention pass and the delegates settle down to business, an advantage arises: the delegates will focus on the issues at hand, not individual personality traits. This will not only accelerate the convention as it will remove much extraneous material, but will also provide a sense of professionalism sadly lacking in the national legislature.

3. Full press coverage sans press agenda.

The partisan adversarial press that existed for most of the Republic's history disappeared after World War II to be replaced by a generically liberal and internationalist press owned by a very small number of large corporations. Since Watergate there has been little serious investigative journalism. Jefferson expected the free press to be the watchdog of the Republic, but today's Establishment Media functions more as a lapdog to those in power. Access to those in power and the government's regulatory role over radio and television together provide a reason for the corporate media to stay on the federal government's reservation.

Most Americans realize that their news is presented with a corporate and ideological bias reflected both by the owners of the media and those who work for them; many readers and viewers have learned to filter out the tons of ideology to get at the few ounces of genuine fact.

Once Congress does its duty and calls a convention to propose amendments, both the Left and the Right will mobilize to get the convention to pass amendments on their particular "wish lists". Due to unavoidable bias the Establishment Media will weigh in on the Left, bias its coverage of the convention's proceedings, and load the arguments in favor of amendments representative of that bias. A proceeding as critical as a convention to propose amendments requires fair and objective reporting if the people are to be armed with the facts necessary for them to arrive at intelligent decisions. The people cannot afford the sloppy and biased reporting provided by today's press, radio and television.

Fortunately, a convention held on the Internet eliminates these concerns. Unlike a convention held in a physical location, a convention held in cyberspace permits independent access to the facts without the media's filtering process. Any observer can obtain access to the facts and make up his own mind. Still, the media will have full freedom to cover the convention however it pleases. It just won't have the ability to obscure the truth.

4. Interactivity.

The major advantage the Internet offers to any convention is the aspect of interactive communication. Unlike all other media of communication (excluding direct speech between two individuals) which are one-way media, i.e., a communication that emanates from one source and spreads in a single direction of communication to many receiving points, the Internet is two-way medium. In the Internet, any point can be both receiver and sender virtually simultaneously to any or all other points in the entire Internet. Thus, the Internet offers not only one-to-one communication but multiple communication as well in two simultaneous directions.

Thus, the convention delegates will be able to communicate not only with each other but with their constituents as well, and these constituents will be able to interact with the delegates as decisions are made rather than after the fact as is common with such communication media as newspapers and television. Delegates will be able to present amendment proposals which can be edited by both delegates and citizens through comments and suggestions to both the delegates and the convention itself.

In addition, the convention can seek out information from the citizens in a manner never done before. The convention can ask for suggestions regarding amendments that citizens feel are needed and get the answer directly from the people in their own words so that no "interpretation" shall be required. In this way, the people will not only be able to elect but select by examining, editing and otherwise presenting matters of concern to them on an individual basis which in today's world of conceptual politics is impossible. Thus, the individual will be of importance, not the political concept.

Of course, the convention will still employ the more traditional methods of communications such as fax, telephone and mail. In this way, citizens who do not have Internet access still will be afforded full access to the convention. In addition, these traditional methods of communication can be digitized so as eventually end up in the same form as the electronic communication. The result will be that no matter how a citizen elects to communicate to the convention, his message will be heard equally.

Further, arguments for and against a position can be presented not only to the convention by delegate and citizen alike, but to all concerned so that an exchange of ideas and issues will ensue, presenting an unprecedented volume of material from which to select.

5. Stay at home delegates.

Because the Internet literally will come to the individual delegate, bringing the convention with it, rather than requiring the delegate to go to the convention, this presents a unique situation having no political equal in American history. Simply put, delegates will be able to remain in and with those people who elected them rather than be transported to some far distant location to conduct their business. Thus, not only will the delegates be able to gather input from all over the nation through the Internet, they will be able to remain in physical contact with those most important to them, the citizens who elected them to the convention, and will be able to gather information from them much more frequently than the common politician does today. The delegate will literally have the best of both worlds.

There is another equally important advantage to the delegates not usually considered. The Internet is essentially controlled by the receiver, i.e., the delegate. The delegate therefore is able to select when and under what conditions he will examine the information presented. This permits the delegate the ability to choose when he will "delegate." Thus, delegates can work at night, on the weekends, in the morning or, through use of laptop computers, take the convention with them wherever they wish requiring only a wire or wireless phone system to connect them. For those not so financially advantaged, the convention is as close as the nearest public library, school, or fire station.

This local control in turn allows the delegate to remain in his own lifestyle. There is no compelling reason for a delegate to give up his or her employment or uproot his or her family life. Thus, already established incomes and lifestyles can remain essentially unaffected or at least under the control of the individual delegate more than a physical convention offers. Because of the advantage to the delegates of maintaining income and lifestyle, in addition to the lower cost of being a delegate, the field of delegates will be more diverse as the costs involved are much lower. This diversity will include groups not usually heard from in American political life, but groups whose participation is both important and significant. Hence, the convention will be represented by delegates more "in tune" with America.

6. Keeping the convention honest.

There will be those who will attempt to influence the convention to propose amendments by other means than just sending e-mail to delegates. Bluntly put, these people are like files around a manure pile: impossible to get rid of, a pest to everyone. It is one thing to lobby and campaign in public for a particular amendment. It is quite another to attempt to purchase influence.

Nothing in the Internet itself can help or substitute for the honesty and integrity required of each delegate in this particular matter. That character will have to come from within, and one hopes the electorate will look for just this strength in the people it elects. The greatest point in favor of the virtual convention is that the delegates will remain close to those who elected them and thus will be subject to their scrutiny and review. And unlike members of Congress who have been able to rely on the short memories of the electorate and their own gifts for sandbagging their constituents, a complaint to the convention—and the public scrutiny that would follow—is literally only a click away.

2.3

CONVENTION VOTING PROCEEDURES BY THE STATES

ONE STATE, ONE VOTE

The most important principle of American citizenship is that citizens 1

- both are citizens of the United States and of the individual states in which 2
- they reside. 1418 Further, the Constitution demands that these citizens be equal 3
- in all states as well as in the nation as a whole. 1419 The reason for this 4
- elaborate duplication of citizenship is a question of sovereignty that the 5
- 6 Founders understood clearly.
- 7 In the Declaration of Independence, the Founding Fathers claimed that
- 8 the people had the right to "alter or abolish" the government and thus claimed
- sovereignty for themselves expressed through the states (and later the
- 10 national government created by the people in the Constitution). 1420
- 11 As the Founding Fathers claimed that the "people" were sovereign and
- made no disclaimers regarding this sovereignty, it must follow that 12
- sovereignty was to be applied equally to all citizens. 1421 If this is true, 13
- then it follows all citizens must be equal in sovereign power, otherwise those 14
- citizens who were not risked being subjugated by citizens with more sovereign 15

 $<sup>^{1418}</sup>$  "The Citizens of each State shall be entitled to all Privileges and Immunities of Citizens in the several States." U.S. CONST., Art. IV, § 2 §§ 1; "All person born or naturalized in the United States, and subject to the jurisdiction thereof, are citizens of the United States and of the State wherein they reside. No State shall make or enforce any law which shall abridge the privileges or immunities of citizens of the United States..." U.S. CONST., 14th Amend.

<sup>1419 &</sup>quot;...nor deny to any person within its jurisdiction the equal protection of the laws." U.S. CONST.,  $14^{\rm th}$  Amend.  $^{1420}$  "We, therefore, the Representatives of the united States of America, in General Congress, Assembled...do, in the Name, and by Authority of the good People of these Colonies, solemnly publish and declare, That these United Colonies are...Free and Independent States..." Declaration of Independence (1776). See supra text accompanying notes 921-1146;1209-1309.

The Founding Fathers committed themselves to this interpretation by the famous "all men are created, that they are endowed by their Creator with certain unalienable Rights..." Declaration of Independence, (1776).

- 1 power. If this occurred in large measure, the entire principle upon which the
- 2 country was founded would collapse.
- 3 As the Founders were creating a republican form of government, this
- 4 meant at the very least that citizen representatives chosen by the people to
- 5 represent them in the national government had to represent all citizens
- 6 equally. Therefore, a population quota was placed in the Constitution so as to
- 7 ensure all citizens were represented equally  $^{1422}$  and thus ensure the sovereign
- 8 powers of each citizen were equal in the national government. This was further
- 9 ensured by having each representative possess equal voting power in the
- 10 national government. 1423
- 11 However, there was a second sovereignty that the Founders could not
- 12 ignore: the states. Under the terms of the Treaty of Paris, either expressly
- or by implication, both the people and the states were granted sovereignty. 1424
- 14 The Founding Fathers made it clear in the Declaration of Independence that
- 15 governments were formed by the citizens who created them to carry out their
- 16 sovereign needs and that "the powers of the government were derived from the
- 17 consent of the governed." 1425 As the colonial/state governments had long

 $<sup>^{1422}</sup>$  "The Number of Representatives shall not exceed one for every thirty Thousand, but each State shall have at Least one Representative..." U.S. CONST., art. I  $\S$  2  $\S\S$  3.

 $<sup>^{1423}</sup>$  While there is no specific provision in the Constitution that specifies each representative shall have one vote, the Constitution does specify each Senator "shall have one vote." See U.S. CONST., art. I, §3 §§ 1 and  $17^{\rm th}$  Amendment. As there is no evidence this omission has ever resulted in any representative attempting to cast more than a single vote on any matter, it can be logically concluded after this period of time since the ratification of the Constitution that representatives, just as senators, have only one vote.  $^{1424}$  See supra text accompanying notes 921-1009.

&quot;That to secure these rights, Governments are instituted among Men, deriving their just powers from the consent of the governed..." Declaration of Independence, (1776).

- 1 existed in America, this line in the Declaration of Independence not only
- 2 served to transfer sovereignty from the King of England to the citizens of the
- 3 United States, but established the power of the people to determine which
- 4 sovereign powers would be transferred to the states, thus making the people
- 5 supreme in sovereignty. Therefore, to grant sovereignty to the people of the
- 6 United States completely in the Treaty of Paris, it was required, either
- 7 expressly or by implication, that both the sovereignty of the states and the
- 8 people be acknowledged, as some of the people's sovereignty had already been
- 9 transferred from the people to the states.
- 10 Thus, the Founders could not ignore the states in the Constitution, as
- 11 some of the sovereignty possessed by the people would have otherwise been
- 12 outside the scope, regulation and control of the Constitution had they done
- 13 so. 1426 As the Treaty of Paris was incorporated by the Constitution as "law of
- 14 the land,"1427 it follows the sovereignty transferred to the states from the
- 15 people became "law of the land." This accomplished, it follows that for the
- 16 people to be able to exercise their sovereign right to alter or abolish, it
- 17 must involve the states, as some of their sovereign power has been transferred
- 18 to this political body, a body that has been granted the sovereign power to
- 19 act independently within the constraints of the Constitution. As the entire $<sup>^{1426}</sup>$  Hence, the Founders incorporated the Supremacy Clause into the Constitution (U.S. CONST., art. VI, § 2) which effectively covered all state sovereignty granted by the people, regardless of its nature.

&quot;This Constitution, and the Laws of the United States which shall be made in Pursuance thereof; and all Treaties made, or which shall be made, under the Authority of the United States, shall be the supreme Law of the Land..." U.S. CONST., art. VI §2.

 $<sup>^{1428}</sup>$  This independence is demonstrated in Article IV and the Tenth Amendment but a careful reading of the Constitution shows it exists throughout most of the Constitution.

1 (	Constitution	rests	on	the	concept	of	the	right	of	the	people	to	"alter	or
-----	--------------	-------	----	-----	---------	----	-----	-------	----	-----	--------	----	--------	----

2 abolish," 1429 it follows the states must be involved in the alteration as they

3 were given some of the sovereign power necessary to accomplish this by the

4 people. 1430

5 Therefore, the Constitution commands that representation for the 6 sovereign citizens of the United States must be grounded on two factors:

7 population within each state, and state sovereignty, neither of which can be

8 ignored without usurping the sovereignty of the people. This edict is no less true for the convention to propose amendments: both population and states must be represented in order for the constitutional mandates of equal protection to 11 be satisfied.

12

9

10

13

14

15

16

17

18 As ours is a representative form of government representing the 19 sovereign power of the citizens, it follows this representation must therefore

One Vote, One Delegate

20 represent the two criteria of that representation. First, citizens elected to

<sup>1429</sup> See supra text accompanying note 521.

However, it must be remembered this sovereign power is transitory, i.e., the states are merely a step in the process, and once they have exercised that sovereign power in the matter, their power is exhausted. See supra text accompanying notes 907-920.

- a representative position in the national government are elected to represent
- a particular population segment or political entity or both. 431 Secondly, the 2
- constitutional authority of each elected representative must be equal to any 3
- other particular representative, otherwise the sovereignty of the particular 4
- population segment or political entity would be compromised to a greater 5
- 6 representative sovereign authority. When expressed through his vote, thus
- 7 exercising the opinion of those who elected him, the voting authority of that
- 8 representative is as equal in influence and consequence as any other
- representative.
- 10 Naturally, the political power of a particular representative may be
- 11 greater than another representative but not his constitutional authority. That
- authority is based on sovereignty, derived from the citizens who elect the 12
- representative. Under the equal protection clause of the 14th Amendment and 13
- the privileges and immunities clause of Article IV, 1433 no citizen can be more 14
- 15 sovereign than any other citizen, i.e., no citizen's sovereignty can be more
- 16 "weighted" than any other citizen's sovereignty.
- 17 A good example of this is to compare the sovereign voting power of a
- 18 wealthy citizen and a poor citizen. Which citizen has greater influence in the
- 19 election? Perhaps the wealthy man has spent millions supporting a particular
- 20 candidate or issue. Perhaps the poor man can only hand out a few handwritten

<sup>1431</sup> See infra text accompanying note 1494.

&quot;No State shall make or enforce any law which shall abridge the privileges or immunities of citizens of the United States..." U.S. CONST., 14th Amend. § 1. See supra text accompanying notes 1209-1244.

1433 "The Citizens of each State shall be entitled to all Privileges and Immunities of Citizens in the several States." U.S. CONST., art. IV § 2 §§ 1.

- 1 leaflets to a few individuals. Would it therefore be correct to say the
- 2 wealthy citizen has more influence in the vote? No. Because in the actual
- 3 vote, which is the expression of sovereign authority by the two citizens, they
- 4 are equal. Each possesses the same amount of constitutional authority. Their
- 5 sovereign power of the right to alter or abolish, when actually expressed
- 6 through a vote, is identical; so it must be with the representatives they
- 7 elect.
- 8 This equality of sovereign authority is no less true of the convention
- 9 delegates who are elected by their fellow citizens to represent their right to
- 10 alter or abolish by composing proposed amendments to the Constitution. How
- 11 much voting authority shall each delegate possess in the convention? The
- 12 obvious answer is of course that each delegate shall have one vote, and
- 13 usually this is where the matter ends in such congressional proposals as the
- 14 Hatch Bill. 1434 However, it is important to establish why this answer is
- 15 obvious as it explains other matters related to it.
- In the federal government, representatives, 1435 senators, 1436 judges 1437 and
- 17 even the president 1438 are limited to a single "vote" or expression of a
- 18 specific, designated sovereign authority granted them by the people regarding

&lt;sup>1434</sup> See supra text accompanying notes 596-608.

U.S. CONST., art. I, § 2 §§ 1. While it is not specified in the Constitution that a representative has only one vote, there is no reference anywhere in that document suggesting anything to the contrary.

<sup>1436</sup> U.S. CONST., art. I, § 3 §§ 1; See also U.S. CONST., 17th Amend.
1437 While no specific provision in the Constitution specifies that a group of justices in the court system, such as in the appellate or the Supreme Court level, are limited to a single vote on a given issue, the fact remains there is no record of it being otherwise. This matter, therefore, after over two hundred years of procedure, becomes essentially self-evident.

1438 The Constitution provides the President with only one yeth on a given

 $<sup>^{1438}</sup>$  The Constitution provides the President with only one veto on a given piece of legislation. U.S. CONST., art. I, § 7 §§ 3.

- 1 an issue. The reason for this is that the "vote" is an affirmative or negative
- 2 decision by the official casting that "vote." In our democratic system a
- 3 single vote of "no" from a single source is neither more nor less significant
- 4 than that single source voting ten times "no". The effect of the vote remains
- 5 the same. 1439 In a collective body such as Congress, that single affirmative or
- 6 negative "vote" by a particular official is then numerically summed to
- 7 represent the consensus of all members of that governmental body expressing
- 8 their granted sovereign power. This summation then becomes the "vote" of that
- 9 body.

1439 The Founding Fathers recognized this from the very beginning of our national history. Article V of the Articles of Confederation (1781) stated, "In determine question in the United States in Congress assembled, each State shall have one vote." Thus, at the time the 1787 Constitutional Convention was taking place, this concept was the law of the land. It would be absurd to maintain the Founding Fathers who used this one state/one vote concept at the Constitutional Convention of 1787 could be accused of intending another system of "count" for ratification or convention applications (See supra text accompanying notes 414-416,448.) as such a counting system would have been illegal under the Articles of Confederation. In order for such a system to be legal, therefore, it would have to have been specified in the new Constitution, which it was not. The Constitution granted limited, specified powers to the United States, and all other powers not specified were retained by the states.

"The powers not delegated to the United States by the Constitution, nor prohibited by it to the states, are reserved to the states respectively, or to the people." U.S. CONST.,  $10^{\rm th}$  Amendment.

Therefore, the old one state/one vote system specified in the Articles of Confederation, not altered or specified in the Constitution, had to be the Framers' intent as a basis to determine when a constitutional requirement took effect that involved a state decision. See supra text accompanying notes 506-521.

There are numerous examples of this one state/one vote concept in the Constitution. Article VII which established ratifying the Constitution clearly specified a numeric total in order for the Constitution to take effect. "The ratification of the conventions of nine states, shall be sufficient for the establishment of this Constitution between the states so ratifying the same." U.S. CONST., art. VII. This clause, together with the application procedure of Article V, effectively transferred the specific and limited provision of the Articles of Confederation granting each state one vote in such matters as are placed before them into the Constitution and thus makes such a provision valid and in force to this day.

1	Thus, to express its sovereign power, a delegate representing a specific
2	population or political entity requires no more than a single vote. Any voting
3	system contrived to give delegates more than a single vote would be required
4	under the doctrine of equal protection clause of the Constitution to give the
5	same number or "weight" of votes to each convention delegate. The effect of
6	the doctrine of equal protection would still be to give a delegate "one" vote,
7	because no matter the number of votes granted, the actual vote devolves to a
8	single vote by each delegate. Thus, for no other reason than concision, it is
9	logical to allow each delegate no more than a single vote.
10
11	The Equality of the States
12
13	The Constitution clearly involves the states in the amendatory process.

Members of Congress elected from the states have the power to propose amendments. State legislatures may apply for a convention to propose amendments that the national government is obligated to call if enough states apply. All ratification of proposed amendments is performed on a state-by-

18 state basis in one form or another. 1442

14

15

16

17

 $<sup>^{1440}</sup>$  "The Congress, whenever two thirds of both Houses shall deem it necessary, shall propose Amendments to this Constitution..." U.S. CONST., art. V.  $^{1441}$  "...on the Application of the Legislatures of two thirds of the several States, [the Congress] shall call a Convention for proposing Amendments..." Id.

&quot;[Amendments shall be valid] when ratified by the Legislatures of three fourths of the several States, or by Conventions in three fourths thereof..." Id.

- 1 The Constitution contemplates only states as the political subdivisions
- 2 of this nation. It does not imply or express the creation of special
- 3 "population districts" for amendatory purposes that cross established state
- 4 lines. The matter is self evident. Only the people, the branches of the
- 5 national government, the convention, and the states are specified in the
- 6 Constitution. No other political bodies are created by the document. In order
- 7 for such creations to exist they must be expressed in the Constitution. From
- 8 this expression could come implied powers, but as there is no such expression
- 9 in the Constitution, there can be no implied powers. 1443 Thus, any such
- 10 political divisions for the purpose of amendment other than by states is
- 11 unconstitutional.
- 12 Under our federal system of government which consists of a national
- 13 government and the individual sovereign states, each state is considered equal
- 14 in sovereign power and authority with its sister states regardless of when
- 15 that state was admitted to the Union. 1444

(Footnote Continued Next Page)

 $<sup>^{1443}</sup>$  "In construing the constitution of the United States as to the grant of powers to the United States and restrictions upon the states, the general rule adopted is that, where no exception is made in germs, none will be made by mere implication." State of Rhode Island v. Commonwealth of Massachusetts, 37 U.S. 657 (1838.)

&quot;That one of the original thirteen states could now be shorn of such powers by an act of Congress would not be for a moment entertained. The question, then, comes to this: Can a state be placed upon a plane of inequality with its sister states in the Union if the Congress chooses to impose conditions which so operate, at the time of its admission...

&quot;The position of counsel for the plaintiff in error is substantially this: That the power of congress to admit new states, and to determine whether or not its fundamental is republican in form, are political powers, and as such, uncontrollable by the courts. That Congress may, in the exercise of such power, impose terms and conditions upon the admission of the proposed new state, which, if accepted, will be obligatory, although they operate to deprive the state of powers which it would otherwise possess, and, therefore, not admitted upon 'an equal footing with the original states.'...

2

questions. 1445 Thus, in the ratification process, each state, either through

"But what is this power? It is not to admit political organizations which are less or greater, or different in dignity or power, from those political entities which constitute the Union. It is, as strongly put by counsel, a 'power to admit states.'...

"The definition of 'a state' is found in the powers possessed by the original states which adopted the Constitution—a definition emphasized by the terms employed in all subsequent acts of Congress admitting new states into the Union. The first two states admitted into the Union were the states of Vermont and Kentucky, one as of March 4, 1791, and the other as of June 1, 1792. No terms or conditions were exacted from either. Each act declares that the state is admitted 'as a new and entire member of the United States of America.' 1 Stat. at L. 191, 189, chps. 7, 4. Emphatic and significant as is the phrase admitted as 'an entire member' even stronger was the declaration upon the admission in 1796 of Tennessee [1 Stat. at L.491, chap. 47] as the third new state, it being declared to be 'one of the United States of America,' 'on an equal footing with the original states in all respects whatsoever,'- phraseology which has ever since been substantially followed in [all subsequent] admission acts...

"'This Union' was and is a union of states, equal in power, dignity, and authority, each competent to exert that residuum of sovereignty not delegated to the United States by the Constitution itself. To maintain otherwise would be to say that the Union, through the power of Congress to admit new states, might come to be a union of states unequal in power, as including states whose powers were restricted only by the Constitution, with others whose powers had been further restricted by an act of Congress accepted as a condition of admission. Thus it would result, first, that the powers of Congress would not be defined by the Constitution alone, but in respect to new states, enlarged or restricted by the conditions imposed upon new states by its own legislation admitting them into the Union; and, second, that such new states might not exercise all of the powers which had not been delegated by the Constitution, but only such as had not been further bargained away as conditions of admission. ...

"And all constitutional laws are binding on the people in the new states and the old ones, whether they consent to be bound by them or not. Every constitutional act of Congress is passed by the will of the people of the United States, expressed through their representatives, on the subject-matter of the enactment; and when so passed it becomes the supreme law of the land, and operates by its own force on the subject-matter, in whatever state or territory it may happen to be. The proposition, therefore, that such a law cannot operate upon the subject-matter of its enactment, without the express consent of the people of the new state, where it may happen to be, contains its own refutation, and requires no further examination. ...

"The plain deduction from this case is that when a new state is admitted into the Union, it is so admitted with all the powers of sovereignty and jurisdiction which pertain to the original states, and that such powers may not be constitutionally diminished, impaired, or shorn away by any conditions compacts or stipulations embraced in the act under which the new state came into the Union, which would not be valid and effectual if the subject of congressional legislation after admission." Coyle v. Smith, 221 U.S. 559 (1911).  $^{1445}\ Td$

- 1 its state legislature or state convention, has a single "vote" either to
- 2 accept or reject a proposed amendment. 1446 While both state conventions and
- 3 legislatures may contain many voting members, as with the convention
- 4 delegates, the final decision is reduced to a single vote by each state.
- 5 In the case of the convention to propose amendments, it is the state
- 6 legislatures that initiate the formal process that culminates in the calling
- 7 of a convention. As the Court noted in <code>Hawke</code>, 1447 the amendatory process cannot
- 8 be changed or ignored; thus the participation of the states is obligatory. As
- 9 with all other forms granted sovereign expression by the states, no state can
- 10 have a greater "vote" than any other state either in application or
- 11 ratification. 1448 No state, for example, has two ratification votes on a
- 12 particular amendment. 1449
- 13 While there is no constitutional limit on the number of times a state
- 14 may apply for a convention to propose amendments, no state has more power of

 $<sup>^{1446}</sup>$  U.S. CONST., art. V.

&quot;It is not the function of courts or legislative bodies, national or state, to alter the [amendatory] method which the Constitutional has fixed." Hawke v. Smith, 253 U.S. 221 (1920).

<sup>1448</sup> The Supreme Court has ruled in several analogous decisions that the states, like the citizens in them, are equal to one another. In some instances, the Court has reduced state sovereignty, but the Court has never ruled that one state is superior in sovereignty over another. See Pollard v. Hagan, 44 U.S. 212 (1845); Escanaba Co. v. Chicago, 107 U.S. 678 (1883), Coyle v. Smith, 221 U.S. 559 (1911); United States v. Texas, 339 U.S. 707 (1950); United States v. Louisiana, 339 U.S. 699 (1950).

&lt;sup>1449</sup> U.S. CONST., art. V; "...when ratified by the legislatures of three-fourths of the several states..." This numeric calculation combined with the term "several states" serves to make it impossible for a state to vote twice as the numeric calculation calls for a certain number of the "several states" to vote for ratification, and a second vote by a state or even states that have already "voted" would not bring that total any closer to realization. Thus, a state can only "vote" once in ratification of an amendment. See supra text accompanying note 907.

- 1 application than any other state. 1450 The Constitution requires a total number
- 2 of two-thirds of the total states to apply for a convention to cause it to
- 3 occur. 1451 Thus, it would be unconstitutional to count the state of Texas, for
- 4 example, twice simply because they have two applications filed. Each state
- 5 receives credit for one application for each two-thirds count toward a
- 6 specific convention. It is not unconstitutional, however, once that two-thirds
- 7 count is reached, to count the next application on file by a state toward a
- 8 new set of applications which, when the two-thirds mark is again reached,
- 9 causes another convention call. 1452
- 10 Further, in the election of delegates to a convention to propose
- 11 amendments, these elections must be held on a state-by-state basis with the
- 12 state legislatures possessing the constitutional power to prescribe the time,

 $<sup>^{1450}</sup>$  Id.; The only variance here is that Article V calls for two-thirds of the states to apply, but the numeric-several states clause again assures one state/one application toward the two-thirds mark of any set of applications.  $^{1451}$  See supra text accompanying notes 437,506,513-514,516,519,521.

This suit does not advocate the calling of multiple conventions as the evidence of state applications indicates. (See infra TABLE 1—STATE APPLICATIONS FOR A CONVENTION, p.661;

TABLE 2-STATES APPLYING FOR A CONVENTION, p.673). The utter confusion of as many as eight concurrent conventions being called or the even more absurd possibility of eight conventions being called consecutively dictates a more practical solution.

Due to the unconstitutional action of Congress in not calling a convention in a timely fashion, application set after application set has piled up. The only practical solution to this laches by Congress is for the Court to rule in finding the Congress unconstitutional in not calling a convention, and that this call required by the Constitution satisfies all applications of the states. However, this must be done with an absolutely clear ruling by the Court that Congress may never again refuse to call a convention to propose amendments when the states have applied. Otherwise, Congress will certainly use this precedent to circumvent the Constitution. The Court can justify this decision as there was no action before it until this suit which permits it to rule. Thus, when only one set of applications existed in the early 1900's, the Court could not rule and thus is free to resolve this matter expeditiously as it was problem not of its own creation.

- 1 place and manner of the elections of these delegates. 1453 True, the
- 2 Constitution does prescribe that Congress under this provision of the
- 3 Constitution "may at any time by Law make or alter such Regulations, except as
- 4 to the Places of choosing Senators." Advocates favoring the regulating of
- 5 the convention through this apparent constitutional loophole, however, should
- 6 not jump too high for joy. As has been clearly shown under the  $14^{\rm th}$
- 7 Amendment  $^{1455}$  and by the fact the constitutional provision in question
- 8 specifically refers to "Senators and Representatives," it is clear that any
- 9 such law would have to equally affect members of Congress and could not be
- 10 used only to regulate convention delegates. Further, it is clear that laws
- 11 already in effect regulating the "time, places and manner" of election of
- 12 "Representatives and Senators" must equally apply to the election of
- 13 convention delegates. 1456
- 14 As the Constitution clearly mandates that the legislatures of each state
- 15 shall regulate the time, manner and places of election of delegates and
- 16 members of Congress, and as such sovereign authority ceases at the border of
- 17 each state where it meets another equal sovereign authority, there is no doubt
- 18 that any election of delegates must be confined with the borders of each
- 19 state. Because the delegates must represent all the sovereign power from which

<sup>1456</sup> Id.

<sup>1453 &</sup>quot;The Times, Places and Manner of holding Elections for Senators and Representatives, shall be prescribed in each State by the Legislature thereof; but the Congress may at any time by Law make or alter such Regulations except as to the Places of choosing Senators." U.S. CONST., art. I, § 4, §§ 1. See supra text accompanying notes 1116,1338.

<sup>1455</sup> See supra text accompanying notes 1209-1244.

- 1 they were elected, it is clear the delegates must not only represent the
- 2 population that elected them, but also the state from which they were
- 3 elected. 1457
- 4 Some scholars have attempted to maintain that the state possesses the
- 5 exclusive right to appoint delegates, absent election. 458 While conclusions

"Ratification must be done State by State, whether by legislatures or by ratification conventions. This means, there now being fifty States of widely different population, that disapproval by barely more than a quarter of those voting in the thirteen least populous States could block an amendment urgently demanded by the overwhelming majority of American citizens. A comparable observation applies to 'applications' for a 'proposing' convention. Even assuming the State legislatures as now reapportioned mirror exactly the sentiments of the electorate, a bare majority of legislatures in each of the thirty-four smallest states could compel a convention that the substantial majority of Americans do not want. These hypotheticals are more extreme than anything reality will present, but they illustrate the ineluctable point: Article V processes cannot be approximated to the ideal of 'one person, one vote.' Amendments of the Constitution necessitates action State-by-State, not democratic action by the nation as a whole.

"It would anomalous, then, to require delegation strength in a convention for proposing amendments to be proportional to population. It would be no less anomalous to require that delegation strength comport with the respective States' representation in Congress, which, except for the equality of representation in the Senate, conforms roughly to the same population proportionality rule. And it would be worse than anomalous---it would be an arrogation of forbidden prerogative in order to impose a dubious rule---for Congress to direct that delegations to a convention for proposing amendments conform to any such rule. Neither Article V nor anything else in the Constitution warrants federal interference with State discretion in this matter. On the contrary, the power to decide the delegation size comes within the Tenth Amendment's provision that powers not delegated to the United States are reserved to the states; or to the people.

"In default of any other established mechanism by which States (or the people in each of them) could do so, only the States' legislatures could make decisions on the size of State delegations. Whether to do so in the normal mode of legislation, with gubernatorial approval or veto, must be determined

(Footnote Continued Next Page)

 $<sup>^{1457}</sup>$  See supra text accompanying notes 1418,1419,1422,1424-1430.

<sup>1458 &</sup>quot;The first principle relevant to this reflection is one that infuses our entire constitutional structure: the principle of federalism. Regardless of any disparities of population among them, and notwithstanding the complexities of intergovernmental relations and power allocations, our constitutional union is a federation of distinct political communities and legal entities called States. And despite judicial decrees affecting apportionment of representation within the several States or within the federal House of Representatives, some features of our Constitution preclude subordination of State equality to the democratic ideal of an equal voice for every person. The Senate's composition, with two members from each State regardless of size or population is one example. The process of amendment under Article V is another.

- 1 regarding the fact that the states must be involved in the convention process
- 2 are correct, the conclusion that the states somehow have the implied power to
- 3 remove the Constitution from the people, the source of its sovereign power, is
- 4 ludicrous on its face. The idea of allowing the state legislatures exclusive
- 5 control of the amendatory process by allowing them the power to appoint
- 6 delegates absent consent of the people through open elections is so repulsive
- 7 to the spirit of the Constitution, if not its letter,  $^{1459}$  as to require no
- 8 further comment. True, in the Constitutional Convention of 1787 the in each State on the basis of its peculiar state constitution and practices. It would be naïve and officious for academics to suggest that State legislators would need extraordinary guidance on how to proceed. They have their staffs and State legal departments——not to mention such organizations as the council of State Governments and the National Conference of State Legislatures, which are quite capable not only of giving counsel but also of coordinating efforts to prevent extravagant or dysfunctional delegation disparities.

"It would not be the first time that several separate legislatures have had to decide how large a delegation to send to a convention. Twelve did so in 1787. On that occasion, two legislatures designated three delegates, two designated four, five designated five, one designated six, and two designated seven. Incidentally, there was no correlation between the number of delegates appointed and the States' size or population.

"A larger delegation could be of little value unless each delegate were to enjoy a separate vote; and in that case, there would be incentive to send thousands. But the same principle elucidated earlier suggests that voting at such a convention would have to follow the rule equality among States. That federalism principle which permeates the Constitution and particularly Article V, underscored by the absurd alternative of States vying to pack the house with delegates of their own choosing, compels the conclusion that whatever the number delegates from each State, every State's delegation must have equal voting power."

Bond & Engdahl, THE CONSTITUTIONAL CONVENTION, The Duties and Powers of Congress Regarding Conventions For Proposing Amendments, Nat'l. Legal Center for the Public Interest,(1987)(emphasis added).

1459 Bond's interpretation ignores two important constitutional points:

First, the fundamental, transcendent right of the people to alter or abolish guaranteed by the  $9^{th}$  Amendment and by treaty. See supra text accompanying notes 921-1147.

Second, the  $14^{\rm th}$  Amendment requirement, expressed in Hawke (see supra text accompanying notes 25,272) and supported by other decisions, that only United States citizens who are elected have the right to propose amendments to the Constitution. See supra text accompanying notes 1209-1244.

- 1 legislatures did appoint their delegates just as they did the first two
- 2 Continental Congresses. In all cases, however, the product of these
- 3 appointments was the absolute resolution in the Declaration of Independence
- 4 and the Constitution by these appointed delegates that this was to be a nation
- 5 of elected officials responsible to the will of the people and that the powers
- 6 granted to these elected officials derived from a Constitution, not from
- 7 politically expedient appointments.
- 8 The convention application is a state power. 1460 However, this state
- 9 power is clearly limited and clearly transitory in nature. It is in fact a
- 10 sovereign power of the people expressed through the states. 1461 This power
- 11 cannot be activated unless two-thirds of the states apply for a convention.
- 12 Each individual state legislature has the independent authority to submit an
- 13 application without approval of any other state legislature.
- 14 Once this power is used by the states, however, it has been
- 15 exhausted. 1462 Beginning with the people compelling action through their
- 16 representative states' bodies, 1463 these bodies act, each using the transitory
- 17 sovereign power assigned them by the people through the Constitution. This
- 18 transitory power is then transferred to Congress which is obligated to use it
- 19 in calling a convention to propose amendments. 1464 The power then becomes a
- 20 power of the people under their right to alter or abolish in a new form,

 $<sup>^{1460}</sup>$  See supra text accompanying notes 1148-1162.

&lt;sup>1461</sup> See supra text accompanying notes 921-1009,1135-1146.

&lt;sup>1462</sup> See supra text accompanying notes 907-920.

&lt;sup>1463</sup> See supra text accompanying notes 25,272,1035.

&quot;The Congress...shall...call a convention for proposing Amendments..." U.S. CONST., art. V.

1 autonomous of both federal and state power, yet constrained by the

2 Constitution. 1465 This then completes the sovereign circle. Hence, by brilliant

3 design of the Founders, the power to alter or abolish remains in the hands of 4 the people yet simultaneously is a state and federal power.

5 In this specific case, the people have established a procedure for the 6 amendment of their Constitution, which provides that the amendatory process

7 shall be carried out through the states. This does not mean the individual

8 states cannot be guided by votes of the people, as discussed earlier, 1466 or

9 that the fundamental right of the people to alter or abolish their government is abrogated by turning the matter to the exclusive control of the state

11 legislatures. It simply means the amendatory procedure must be based on the states. This procedure must provide an equal voice for all citizens despite the fact the national population base has been divided into varying numbers by state boundaries which still must somehow achieve equality despite their 15 population differences.

16 To satisfy the constitutional requirement of equal population, each delegate to a convention to propose amendments must represent an equal number of people within a state. 1467 The total number of delegates elected in each state is determined by the total population of the state. Thus, the larger the population of the state, the more delegates in its delegation to the 21 convention that state is entitled to have. 1468

<sup>1468</sup> Id.

1

10

12

13

14

17

18 19

20

 $<sup>^{1465}</sup>$  See supra text accompanying notes 1135-1147.

&lt;sup>1466</sup> See supra text accompanying notes 1109-1134.

&lt;sup>1467</sup> See supra text accompanying notes 1336.

1 The problems associated with an exclusively population-based delegate

2 vote at a convention to propose amendments faced the Founding Fathers. If they

- 3 had permitted convention voting to be based on individual delegate votes, the
- 4 convention could have easily degenerated into a contest between the states,
- 5 each attempting to stuff the most number of delegates into the convention hall
- 6 in order to insure passage of their particular views. 1469
- 7 The Founders' solution was to work through the states, giving each of
- 8 them a single vote regardless of population while permitting the state
- 9 legislatures to send as many delegates to the convention as they pleased.
- 10 Thus, the states' individual populations were represented by whatever
- 11 apportionment the legislatures chose to employ, while their respective state
- 12 sovereign authorities (and thus their sovereign powers) were protected equally
- 13 at the convention level.
- 14 By using the states as the basis of representation in the Constitutional
- 15 Convention, the Founders avoided the problem of delegate-stuffing while
- 16 answering negatively the basic question of equal representation: if citizens
- 17 are all equal, is a state which is more populous more "sovereign" than a
- 18 smaller, less populous state?

 $<sup>^{1469}</sup>$  The equal protection clause was placed in the Constitution to prevent this very thing from happening, thus providing constitutional protection of equal representation in government, giving an equal voice to all citizens of America, and providing equal sovereign authority for its representatives or delegates. As long as this goal is met, the specific numeric division of the convention is of no concern.

1 As pointed out by the Supreme Court, equality was never intended to

2 promote superiority. 1470 As state sovereignty is derived from the sovereignty

- 3 of its citizens, 1471 it is a small jump using the 14th Amendment to conclude
- 4 that each state's authority and the authority of the delegates in the
- 5 convention to propose amendments must be equal, i.e., that no state or
- 6 delegate shall possess any more constitutional authority than any other state
- 7 or delegate. 1472
- 8 As convention delegates are elected only by a segment of the national
- 9 population, specifically from a district within the boundaries of a particular
- 10 state, the total number of delegates chosen from each state will, in the
- 11 course of representing the total population of that state, differ from state
- 12 to state. If population is the exclusive basis of sovereign expression, and
- 13 the states are to be represented, as they must be in order to have all
- 14 sovereign power of the people represented, 1473 then it follows the
- 15 representative power of the states must be expressed by the number of
- 16 delegates it possesses. While the sovereign power of the people in this case
- 17 would apparently be equal, the state sovereign power is not.

&quot;In this case, the discrimination complained of is exercised against him and other citizens, who are as justly entitled to protection from wrongful discrimination, and to the full protection of their constitutional right of equality before all the courts of the State as if they were of African descent. If not, that amendment which sought to establish equality before the law established inequality, by giving preference to the rights of the colored race, and affording them superior protection.

&quot;The weight of authority and sound reason seem to establish, that while the immediate object sought by the adopting of the amendment was protection of the negro, its provisions extend and inure to the common benefit of all." Missouri v. Lewis, 101 U.S. 22 (1879).

&lt;sup>1471</sup> See supra text accompanying notes 1418-1425.

See supra text accompanying notes 1418-1439.

&lt;sup>1473</sup> See supra text accompanying notes 1425-1430.

- Depending on the number of delegates, some states would receive a larger
- 2 proportion of the people's sovereign power than others. This means the
- 3 sovereign authority of each delegate would "count" more (or less) depending on
- 4 which state the delegates happen to come from. Thus, in reality, the sovereign
- 5 authority of the delegates are unequal. The Court has made it clear this will
- 6 not be allowed. 1474

 $^{1474}$  "It would appear extraordinary to suggest that a State could be constitutionally permitted to enact a law providing that certain of the State's voters could vote two, five, or 10 times for their legislative representatives, while voters living elsewhere could vote only once. And it is inconceivable that a state law to the effect that, in counting votes for legislators, the votes of citizens in one part of the State would be multiplied by two, five, or 10, while the votes of persons in another area would be counted only a face value, could be constitutionally sustainable. Of course, the effect of state legislative districting schemes which give the same number of representatives to unequal numbers of constituents is identical. Overweighing and overvaluation of the votes of those living here has the certain effect of dilution and undervaluation of the votes of those living there. The resulting discrimination against those individual voters living in disfavored areas is easily demonstrable mathematically. Their right to vote is simply not the same right to vote as that of those living in a favored part of the states. Two, five, or 10 of them must vote before the effect of their voting is equivalent to that of their favored neighbor. Weighting the votes of citizens differently, by any method or means, merely because of where they happen to reside, hardly seems justifiable. One must be ever aware that the Constitution forbids 'sophisticated as well as simpleminded modes of discrimination.'" Lane v. Wilson, 307 U.S. 268, 275; Gomillion v. Lightfoot, 364 U.S. 339, 342.

As we stated in Wesberry v. Sanders [376 U.S. 1 (1964)], supra: "We do not believe that the Framers of the Constitution intended to permit the same vote-diluting discrimination to be accomplished through the device of district containing widely varied numbers of inhabitants. To say that a vote is worth more in one district than in another would...run counter to our fundamental ideas of democratic government..." Reynolds v. Sims, 377 U.S. 533 (1964). (emphasis added) (footnotes omitted).

The logic of this portion of the Court's ruling in Reynolds cannot be over emphasized. By determining that no voter in any state can be counted by any multiple, and by applying this logic though all the states via the 14th Amendment by the use of equal protection, it must be concluded that the same rule of equality must apply for voters or representatives of those voters when in a situation that such a comparison applies. In other words, the power of a representative or senator in Congress, in so far as his voting power, i.e., how much effect his vote will count, is the same, no matter from which state he comes. Therefore, his vote is equal with every other member of that body. The fact that he may come from a large state with large populace or a small state with small populace is discarded when the power of the vote is counted.

(Footnote Continued Next Page)

1 While the representative sovereign authority of the individual delegate

2 is equal as each delegate represents the same population segment, the

- 3 cumulative difference in number of delegates still presents the problem that
- 4 state sovereign authority is not equal between the states, and the
- 5 Constitution does not permit this. 1475 While politically problematic that all
- 6 members of a state delegation would favor a particular amendment, thus
- 7 actually using this sovereign advantage, nevertheless the constitutional
- 8 potential does exist. In the course of events, the constitutional probability
- 9 must take precedence over political improbability.
- 10 This constitutional potential means the effect of the "count" of each
- 11 delegate vote has the potential to extend the sovereign power of the state in
- 12 question beyond its own borders. The logic of this position is self evident.
- 13 In order for a particular state to possess more sovereign authority due to its
- 14 larger population, a corresponding decrease in sovereign authority must occur
- 15 in another state. This is in violation of the Constitution which specifies
- 16 that the "privileges and immunities" for citizens shall be equal in each
- 17 state, and no state is permitted to create an inequality. 1476 Whether
- 18 legislated by the state or not, such an action by a state gathering more
- 19 sovereign authority than another state violates the Constitution prima facie.

While a state may be entitled to more representation within its state delegation due to its population, the fact remains no vote counts any more than any other vote.

As this ruling applies equally to all states and all districts within them, it follows it must also apply between the states, i.e., that the political balance of representation between districts regardless of which state the district is in, is the same.

&lt;sup>1475</sup> See supra text accompanying note 1444.

&lt;sup>1476</sup> See supra text accompanying note 1418.

1 Thus, the 14th Amendment, together with the original privileges and

2 immunities clause in the Constitution, comes into play twice in this matter.

- 3 First, it demands convention delegates receive equal protection under the law
- 4 to that of members of Congress regarding their amendatory authority. 1477
- 5 Second, these provisions demand that because delegates are formed in groups
- 6 with each group of delegates representing a varying number of population in
- 7 each state, these groups nevertheless must be equal under the law, i.e., their
- 8 sovereign authority must be equal. 1478
- 9 This means the voting power of the delegates must be equal, i.e., one
- 10 delegate's vote cannot "count" more toward amending the Constitution than
- 11 another delegate's vote, and in this case that the group of delegates cannot
- 12 "count" more than another such group. Thus, as each delegate group is in fact
- 13 a state, it follows that no state's vote can be either greater or lesser than
- 14 any other in the proposal of amendments to the Constitution. Clearly, each
- 15 state must have an equally weighted vote in any convention just as each
- 16 delegate must have an equally weighted vote.
- 17 This fact does not deprive the delegates of equal protection as
- 18 previously described, nor does it violate the concept of the right to alter or
- 19 abolish because this is part of the deliberative process set up by the
- 20 citizens of the United States in the amendatory system of the Constitution.
- 21 Hence, representation by delegates, i.e., individual delegates voting
- 22 exclusively based on population, is unconstitutional as it would provide a

 $<sup>^{1477}</sup>$  See supra text accompanying notes 1211-1233,1234.

&lt;sup>1478</sup> See supra text accompanying notes 1235-1236.

- 1 means whereby a particular delegate's vote, based on the number of delegates
- 2 from a particular state, would "count" more than another state's delegate
- 3 vote.
- 4 There is only one way out of this constitutional dilemma. As the
- 5 Founding Fathers determined over two hundred years ago, by acknowledging that
- 6 the vote by the various states is an affirmation, they understood that
- 7 delegate votes are for the purpose of expressing the vote of the state, thus
- 8 expressing both the sovereign authority of the people and the sovereign
- 9 authority the people have given to the states. In turn, this cumulative vote
- 10 of the delegates, each of which has the same constitutional authority within
- 11 the boundaries of each state as each delegate represents the same population
- 12 value and thus sovereign authority, is used to express the vote of the state.
- 13 In this manner, the sovereign authority of each delegate is equal.
- 14 Hence, the convention votes must be by state, not by delegate, the
- 15 individual delegate votes being relegated to votes within each state
- 16 delegation to establish the state's position on the question before them. The
- 17 delegates' numbers in each delegation account for the equality required for
- 18 population representation, while their summary vote accounts for equal
- 19 representation among the several states. Thus, the Constitution is satisfied
- 20 in all respects.
- 21 As the convention will be conducted on the Internet, 1479 it is clear this
- 22 will require the establishment of a Web page for each state with a method for

-

 $<sup>^{1479}</sup>$  See supra text accompanying notes 1403-1417.

1 each state delegate to vote and the matter automatically forwarded to the home

2 page of the convention for cumulative votes. As to such parliamentary problems

- 3 of motion, second, and so forth, based on the experience of the 1787
- 4 Convention, there is no reason that the rules that worked so well once will
- 5 not work equally well again. Such matters should be left entirely to the
- 6 discretion of the convention to work out. 1480

7

8 The Effect of Section Two, 14th Amendment

9

18 19 20

21

22

10 Because of the one state/one vote rule, the effect of Section 2 of the 11 14th Amendment mandating reduction in congressional representation as a result 12 of discrimination is null. Because delegate representation is based on congressional redistricting, it is conceded the number of delegates would be 13 14 reduced, but the cumulative effect of the delegate's vote from the individual 15 state would be unaffected, because no matter the number of delegates in the state delegation, the state is still entitled under its equal sovereignty 16 protection to a single vote equal to that of the other states. It would simply 17

Thus, this suit will not pursue congressional reapportionment as mandated under Section 2 of the  $14^{\rm th}$  Amendment because it does not directly affect the convention to propose amendments. However, such a constitutional aberration could not be tolerated should Congress attempt to legislate the be voted by a lesser number of delegates.

<sup>1480</sup> See infra text accompanying notes 1339-1351.

- 1 convention. Congress' legislative authority is authorized by the Constitution,
- 2 and this same Constitution also includes Section 2 of the 14th Amendment which
- 3 also limits Congress.
- 4 As the courts have already found the states in violation of
- 5 apportionment due to discrimination,  $^{1481}$  it is clear Section 2 of the  $14^{\rm th}$
- 6 Amendment must be applied in this matter as it provides the redress felt
- 7 needed by the congressional authors of the 14th Amendment. If it is conceded
- 8 that Congress is constitutionally able to legislate in such a fundamental area
- 9 of the Constitution as regulating the entire amendatory process, 1482 it follows
- 10 at the minimum this requires Congress itself be constitutional. 1483 Otherwise,
- 11 the result is an unconstitutional body (Congress) regulating a constitutional
- 12 body (the convention), clearly the exact opposite of what was intended in the
- 13 Constitution: that the government obey the Constitution which at the minimum
- 14 means the government itself must be constitutional before it can demand that
- 15 others it regulates comply with the congressional interpretation of its
- 16 constitutional authority.
- 17 While the Court has held state legislatures hold power even if
- 18 malapportioned, 1484 it did not rule that Congress, which is bound to be ruled
- 19 by all provisions of the Constitution, is likewise exempt. Thus, Congress is
- 20 limited by the Constitution and can take no action unless authorized by the
- 21 Constitution, in contrast to the states which are limited by the Constitution

 $<sup>^{1481}\</sup> See\ supra$  text accompanying note 1260.

&lt;sup>1482</sup> See supra text accompanying notes 1053-1108,1125-1134.

<sup>1483</sup> See supra text accompanying note 1294.

&lt;sup>1484</sup> See supra text accompanying note 1297.

1 only if their actions are in conflict with the Constitution; otherwise they

2 are unbounded by it. $^{1485}$  However, this suit is not seeking congressional

3 reapportionment unless such unconstitutional legislative actions by Congress

4 attempt to affect it, as this would directly affect the convention as was

5 clearly not intended by the Founding Fathers.

to examine the entire Constitution for an answer.

6

7

Passage of An Amendment Proposal---The Proper Ratio

8

9

10

11

12

13

14

15

16

17

18 19 20

21

One of the final questions that must be addressed regarding the convention is, what proportion of vote must be taken by the states in a convention for an amendment proposal to be constitutionally valid. In other words, how many states must favor an amendment proposal in order for it to pass a convention to propose amendments. The Constitution is apparently silent on the matter as no such standard is expressed in Article V. However, this "silence" is a fabrication because those giving an opinion have simply failed

Over the years, four numeric ratios have emerged as the required number for a convention vote to pass a proposed amendment: a unanimous vote used by the first convention, a three-quarters vote based on the notion that ratification by the states requires this proportion; a two-thirds vote based on the fact the Constitution places this limit on the two Houses of Congress;

 $<sup>^{1485}</sup>$  "The powers not delegated to the United States by the Constitution, nor prohibited by it to the States, are reserved to the States respectively, or to the people." U.S. CONST.,  $10^{\rm th}$  Amend.

l and a simple majority vote based on the notion that as the Constitution is

2 silent on the matter, usual parliamentary procedure is sufficient. Each of

3 these must be examined in turn in the light of the entire Constitution for the 4 answer.

5

The Unanimous Vote

7

13

15

16

17 18

19 20 21

22 23

24

25 26

27

28

29 30

31

8 The most succinct argument against the convention to propose amendments

9 being required to vote unanimously on any amendment proposal before such an

10 amendment is considered passed is that this "unanimity" is precisely why the 11 Articles of Confederation failed to work. As a result of this failure, the 12 Founding Fathers created a new governmental instrument, the Constitution, that allowed for needed changes in the government with less than a unanimous 14 decision of all the states.

Madison discussed the matter directly:

"In one particular it is admitted that the convention have departed from the tenor of their commission. Instead of reporting a plan requiring the confirmation of the legislatures of all the states, they have reported a plan which is to be confirmed by the people, and may be carried into effect by nine states only. It is worthy of remark that this object, though the most plausible, has been the least urged in the publications which have swarmed against the convention. The forbearance can only have proceeded from an irresistible conviction of the absurdity of subjecting the fate of twelve States to the perverseness or corruption of a thirteenth; from the example of inflexible opposition given by a majority of one sixtieth of the people of America to a measure approved and called for by the voice of twelve States, comprising fifty-nine sixtieths of the people, an example still fresh in the memory an indignation of every citizen who has felt for the wounded honor and prosperity of his country. As this object, therefore, has been in a manner waived by those who have criticized the powers of the convention, I dismiss it without further observation." 1486

 $<sup>^{1486}</sup>$  FEDERALIST No. 40, James Madison, January 18, 1788. (emphasis in original).

1 It is clear any vote by a convention to propose amendments to approve an

2 amendment proposal never were intended by the Founding Fathers to need a

3 unanimous vote in order to pass. True, the Founding Fathers in their

4 Convention did mandate a unanimous vote in order to pass the proposed

5 Constitution from their Convention, but it must be remembered they were

6 operating under the Articles of Confederation which mandated unanimous votes

7 by the states before an amendment could be passed.  $^{1487}$  To have passed a

8 proposed constitution absent of a unanimous vote might have raised an

9 insurmountable legal issue that could have defeated the Constitution. However, clearly the Founding Fathers by their ensuing actions intended for this 11 problem of amendatory unanimity to end with them.

The Three-Quarters Vote

13

16

18 12

10

14 The next ratio is a three-quarters approval for an amendment proposal to 15 pass. This ratio appears a logical answer. The Constitution requires a three-quarters approval before an amendment proposal is ratified. Therefore, under 17 equal sovereignty, the states must use a three-quarters vote to pass an amendment proposal as this is the ratio required under their ratification

19 power.

_

&lt;sup>1487</sup> Technically speaking, the Convention did not pass the proposed Constitution by unanimous vote of the states. As Rhode Island did not send any delegates, it actually passed the Constitution by a unanimous vote of the delegates present at the Convention. To get around this problem, the Convention took the position that the proposed constitution was advisory in nature until ratified. See supra text accompanying notes 796,1486.

1 Such hasty inference ignores the basic concept of equal sovereignty: the 2 matter of sovereign equality is between the individual states and thus is a prescribed balance of power. Therefore, in the matter of ratification, it is 3 proper to say that each state shall have equal effect by its vote in the 4 5 ratification of an amendment, and it is equally proper to prescribe how much 6 collective sovereign power is required to accomplish the particular power 7 prescribed. This said, however, the matter terminates at this point. 8 Thus, the powers and limits of a specific prescribed sovereign power 9 have absolutely no bearing on another prescribed sovereign power; each is an 10 individual matter. The proof of this matter is self-evident in that the 11 Constitution says that each prescribed sovereign power of government may be 12 amended without effecting any other power unless so prescribed or implied by 13 the amendment. Thus, the fact the states are required to have a three-quarters affirmation in order to ratify a proposed amendment has absolutely nothing to 14 15 do with the sovereign power required by the states to approve a proposed 16 amendment at a convention. 17 The key point is that a three-quarters vote is constitutionally 18 enforceable unless a smaller ratio is also constitutionally valid, in which 19 case the minimum constitutional standard must take precedence. It is a self-20 evident proof that if the minimum constitutional standard is met, this is all 21 that is required for that constitutional effect to occur. Nowhere in the 22 Constitution is it expressed or even implied that if a standard set by the 23 Constitution is met, it then must be exceeded in order to meet a minimum standard.

24

1	For example, in the overturning of a presidential veto, which requires a
2	two-thirds vote in both Houses of Congress, 1488 it would be entirely
3	unconstitutional that Congress, having met this standard, would then have to
4	reach a three-quarters vote to override a veto. The Constitution, and thus the
5	issue, is satisfied at the constitutional minimum.
6	Thus, a final conclusion must be withheld until the other two smaller
7	ratios are examined to see if either is constitutionally valid and
8	enforceable.
9
10	The Majority Vote
11
12	Clearly, a simple majority vote of the states is less than the three-
13	quarters vote. Thus, if there is no intercession by the Constitution, the
14	majority vote must be the acceptable standard of a vote of the states at a
15	convention to propose amendments to pass a proposed amendment as it is the
16	least ratio possible that satisfies the most elemental parliamentary rule that
17	the majority rules. However, it is clear that parliamentary procedure must
18	yield to the Constitution, and thus the final option, two-thirds, must be
19	examined for its constitutional validity before a final judgment can be
20	rendered.
21
22	The Final Option

 $^{1488}$  U.S. CONST., art. I, § 7, §§ 2.

2 The final ratio is two-thirds. Unlike all the other ratios previously

- 3 discussed, this ratio does related directly to the proposal process of
- 4 amendments to the Constitution. Under Article V, two-thirds of the members of
- 5 Congress in each House must vote in favor of a proposed amendment to the
- 6 Constitution in order to submit it to the states for ratification. 1489 Thus,
- 7 this ratio is a limit on the effect of a vote of Congress (and its members) to
- 8 amend the Constitution. Under the doctrine of equal protection this ratio
- 9 must become the ratio of affirmation required for the convention to propose
- 10 amendments in order for those proposals to be constitutionally valid. Thus,
- 11 the ratios of unanimous, majority and three fourths are constitutionally
- 12 invalid.
- 13 The question however arises, with two sovereignties involved, population
- 14 and state, how shall the two-thirds ratio be imposed? An often overlooked
- 15 point is that the original intent of the Founding Fathers was to have two
- 16 different sovereignties, population, represented in the House of
- 17 Representatives, and states, represented in the Senate. The 17th Amendment
- 18 changed the manner of election of the members of the Senate but left
- 19 unaffected the political body the Senate members represent, specifically the
- 20 states.
- 21 The Constitution is clear and unambiguous on this point. The House of
- 22 Representatives is "composed of Members chosen every second Year by the People

 $<sup>^{1489}</sup>$  See supra text accompanying notes 869,1344.

<sup>1490</sup> See supra text accompanying notes 1211-1244.

- 1 of the several states." 1491 Representatives are "apportioned among the several
- 2 States...according to their respective Numbers...[and] shall not exceed one
- 3 [representative] for every thirty Thousand..." There is no question these
- 4 phrases in the Constitution indicate the intent of the Founding Fathers to
- 5 base representation in the House of Representatives on population.
- 6 In contrast, "[T]he Senate of the United States [is] composed of two
- 7 Senators from each State... $^{\prime\prime}$  The 17th Amendment, which changed the method of
- 8 choosing senators from the state legislatures to popular election, left the
- 9 phrase "from each State" intact thus preserving the fact senators are elected
- 10 to represent the state in spite of the fact it is population, rather than
- 11 state legislatures, that chooses them. 1494
- 12 Despite the different sovereignties of population and states the
- 13 convention delegates must represent, the Constitution is clear on one point.
- 14 Unlike Congress, the convention cannot consist of any upper and lower house.

&lt;sup>1491</sup> U.S. CONST., art. I, § 2, §§ 1.

 $<sup>^{1492}</sup>$  U.S. CONST., art. I, § 2, §§ 3.

&lt;sup>1493</sup> U.S. CONST., art. I, § 3, §§ 1.

This amendment makes it clear that it is constitutional intent, not method of voting, that determines which sovereignty or sovereignties an official elected under the Constitution represents.

Hence, it is constitutionally valid that a member of the Senate represents not only those citizens who chose him (population) but the state as well. Thus, a single official may simultaneously and constitutionally represent more than one sovereignty if that office is so established by the Constitution. However, the constitutional prohibition against an official holding more than one civil office still remains in effect, thus prohibiting any official from holding two offices simultaneously and assuming more sovereign authority than any other single official in the United States.

&quot;No Senator or Representative shall, during the Time for which he was elected, be appointed to any civil Office under the Authority of the United States, which shall have been created, or the Emoluments whereof shall have been increased during such time and no Person holding any Office under the United States, shall be a Member of either House during his Continuance in Office." U.S. CONST., art. I, § 6 §§ 1. See supra text accompanying note 1349,1431.

- 1 The reason is expressed in a Constitution which only authorizes "a
- 2 convention," 1495 i.e., a single proposing body, not two. The Constitution does
- 3 not create two separate houses as it does with Congress. The two houses of
- 4 such a hypothetical convention would have to be equal in power and sovereign
- 5 authority (using the same doctrine of equal protection that applies between
- 6 Congress and the convention as a whole) and thus would have the same identical
- 7 single power prescribed by the Constitution: the power to propose amendments
- 8 but without any constitutional language mandating that a proposed amendment
- 9 would have to pass both houses as is required for the two houses of
- 10 Congress. 1496 Indeed, the phrase "a convention" would preclude such a
- 11 presumption of dual passage. Thus, such an arrangement of dual houses would
- 12 create essentially two conventions, something prohibited by the clear language
- 13 of the Constitution.
- 14 Thus, the problem with a bicameral convention is, if one "house"
- 15 proposes one amendment and the other "house" proposes a different version of
- 16 that same amendment, how will it be determined which version will be sent to
- 17 the states as this is the only power the convention possesses? 1497 Any

&quot;The Congress...shall call a Convention for proposing Amendments..." U.S. CONST., art. V. (emphasis added).

 $<sup>^{1496}</sup>$  Unlike Congress, which the Constitution <code>specifically</code> demands both in Article I concerning legislative (U.S. CONST., art. I, § 7 §§ 2 "Every Bill which shall have passed the House of Representatives and the Senate...") and Article V, ("The Congress, whenever two thirds of both Houses shall deem it necessary..." (emphasis added).) concerning amendatory, where any action of Congress requires consent of both Houses, there is no such specific language regarding the convention to propose amendments. Thus, there is no expressed provision in the Constitution creating such a bicameral convention or, more importantly, any constitutional requirement that the two houses of such a creation must work in consensus in order to propose an amendment.  $^{1497}$  See supra text accompanying note 2.

- 1 amendment the convention produces must eventually be presented to the states
- 2 for ratification and would create constitutional chaos if it is presumed the
- 3 Founding Fathers intended that two versions of an amendment on the same issue
- 4 could be simultaneously submitted for ratification. If both versions were to
- 5 somehow receive ratification approval, which would be effective should they
- 6 contain contradictory provisions?
- 7 True, the Constitution does refer to "a Congress of the United
- 8 States," 1498 then immediately describes that Congress as consisting "of a
- 9 Senate and House of Representatives." 1499 Logically, for the Congress to
- 10 constitutionally exist, it "shall consist of a Senate and House of
- 11 Representatives." 1500
- 12 No such similar constitutional description exists for the convention to
- 13 propose amendments. Instead, the Constitution describes "a Convention for
- 14 proposing amendments." 1501 The intent and meaning of the word "a" by the
- 15 Founders is clearly inferred by their use of it regarding Congress. 1502 The
- 16 Founders established "a" Senate and "a" House of Representatives. Their intent
- 17 is obvious and unambiguous. The Founders created one Senate and one House of

 $<sup>^{1498}</sup>$  U.S. CONST., art. I, § 1.

&lt;sup>1499</sup> Id.

 $<sup>^{1500}</sup>$  Id.

 $^{\rm 1501}$  U.S. CONST., art. V.

 $<sup>^{1502}</sup>$  AN, [weakened variant of one from AS. an. the numeral one, which lost stress and shortened its vowel as it came into use as a mere particle; the older and fuller form of a.]

<sup>1.</sup> one; one sort of." (emphasis in original).

A "an abbreviation of Anglo-Saxon an or ane, one, used before word beginning with a consonant sound or a sounded h; as, a table, a home, a unicorn." (emphasis in original). WEBSTER'S NEW TWENTIETH CENTURY DICTIONARY, UNABRIDGED,  $2^{\rm nd}$  ed. (1983).

1	l Representatives ar	nd obvio	usly inten	ded, by t	the use	of th	ne word	"a",	that	there

2 be one convention.

3 Further, the Congress was established primarily by the Founding Fathers

4 as a legislative body with amendatory power added almost as an

5 afterthought. 1503 While the Constitution does require a two-thirds vote in each

6 house of Congress, the actual act of proposing an amendment is done by

7 Congress as a whole, i.e., a single body. 1504 Thus, it is clear it must be a

8 convention that proposes amendments just as it is a Congress which proposes

9 amendments.

10

11

12

13

14 The Quorum Issue

15

There is another element in this issue. The Supreme Court has ruled the two-thirds vote necessary in each House of Congress to pass a constitutional amendment is based not on two-thirds of the total membership of the House but on two-thirds of the members present, 1505 assuming a quorum. 1506 Under the equal $<sup>^{1503}</sup>$  See supra text accompanying notes 325,356,362,366,374,388,389,395,399,400.  $^{1504}$  "The Congress, whenever two thirds of both Houses shall deem it necessary, shall propose Amendments to this Constitution..." U.S. CONST., art. V. (emphasis added).

<sup>1505</sup> See supra text accompanying notes 869,870,920.
1506 A quorum is defined as ""a Majority of each [House]." U.S. CONST., art. I,
§ 5, §§ 1.

- 1 protection doctrine of the 14th Amendment, this Court decision must
- 2 presumptively apply to the convention to propose amendments. 1507
- 3 The Constitution places a quorum standard on both types of
- 4 representation in Congress, i.e., population and state. Presumptively, under
- 5 the doctrine of equal protection, this standard must be equally applied to
- 6 both forms of representations in the convention. Thus, the quorum rule applies
- 7 to the total number of delegates voting and to the total number of state
- 8 delegations voting for a proposed amendment. This translates in real numbers
- 9 to a minimum of twenty-six states represented by delegates at the
- 10 convention $^{1508}$  for a quorum to exist. Of these twenty-six states, a favorable
- 11 vote of two-thirds, or a minimum of eighteen states, would have to favor an
- 12 amendment proposal to pass.

&lt;sup>1507</sup> See supra text accompanying note 1236.

Or, in the case of the convention, as it is to be held on the Internet, on-line. The Internet does present an interesting twist to the issue in that it blurs the usual definition of the word "present." At a physical meeting, the matter is easily defined by a simple count of physical bodies in a given space. But in cyberspace no such physical world exists.

If, for example, a vote question is posted on the convention's page or is downloaded to the various delegates' e-mail, it is possible the delegates may not immediately receive this posting. Are they therefore "present" or not at the time the question before the "house" is asked? Thus, is there a quorum present? Obviously, the convention will have to determine this question in final form, but for the purposes of this suit, it will be assumed that as in Congress a specified period of time is set aside for members to vote, and as long as members vote within this prescribed time period, they are considered present and voting. Thus, a simple rule establishing such a period of voting for the delegates to a convention is constitutional as well as practical. The only difference would be that in Congress such voting is usually limited to fifteen minutes. In the convention, it is likely a period of perhaps as much as 48 hours might be more appropriate as many delegates who work all day might not read their postings for several hours until, for example, the evening hours and thus would not have a chance to respond immediately. This rule would also take into account the various time zones across the country so that delegates would not have to vote at inconvenient or unreasonable times.

constitutional it may be. With only twenty-six states required to constitute a 2 quorum and only eighteen votes needed to pass a proposed amendment, political 3 ambition might raise its ugly head. The Founders faced this threat, and the 4 convention will have to be equally vigilant. 1509 5 6 Thus, the quorum of the states is established, leaving only the question 7 of the number of delegates needed to constitute a quorum. While a simple 8 majority of each state delegation of the twenty-six states required for a state's quorum may appear appealing, there is little doubt that such an 10 arrangement is, due to the doctrine of equal protection, unconstitutional. 11 The Constitution does not demand that a vote in either House of Congress be based on individual states for a quorum to exist. Rather, the quorum is 12 13

Admittedly, there is some danger with this conclusion, however

1

14

15

16

17

18

19

The Constitution does not demand that a vote in either House of Congress be based on individual states for a quorum to exist. Rather, the quorum is based on the total number of members of the House present representing the particular sovereignty in question, regardless of which states or segments of population are represented. Thus, in the Senate, as far as quorum is concerned, it does not matter whether any specific state's senators are present, just so long as fifty-one senators, regardless of which states they represent, are present. In the House of Representatives, a quorum can exist that only includes nine states. 1510

(Footnote Continued Next Page)

&lt;sup>1509</sup> As Congress and the 1787 Convention have done, the convention to propose amendments will have to impose strict rules mandating attendance of delegates and the starting and adjournment of its on-line meetings in order to preserve the integrity of the convention against the possible actions of a few ambitious delegates lest they try what was attempted in the original Convention. See supra text accompanying note 440.

<sup>1510</sup> With 425 members in the House of Representatives a guerym in the House is

With 435 members in the House of Representatives, a quorum in the House is 217. Assuming the representatives of California, 52 representatives; Texas, 30; New York, 31; Florida, 23; Pennsylvania, 21; Illinois, 20; Ohio, 19;

However, there is a difference between the Houses of Congress and the convention to propose amendments. The members of Congress represent a single sovereignty while convention to propose amendments delegates represent two sovereignties. Thus, the quorum standards for both sovereignties, population and state, must be satisfied by the delegates in order for the convention to be constitutional.

In the convention, representation exists for a state whether it is

In the convention, representation exists for a state whether it is represented by all its delegates or a single delegate. Thus, a quorum is created and satisfied when one or more representatives from at least twenty-six states are present. In the matter of population, a quorum exists whether or not the delegates represent any specific state, as long as their total number satisfies the minimum established by the Constitution.

Therefore, in the convention to propose amendments, a simple majority of the total delegates, regardless of which states they represent, is all that is required to conduct business, assuming at least one delegate from each of the twenty-six states necessary to constitute the required state quorum exists. In other words, fifty-one percent of the delegates present constituting the population quorum must represent at least twenty-six states. Of this quorum, a two-thirds vote is required to pass an amendment proposal assuming a majority vote of the delegations from at least eighteen separate states favor the amendment. 1511

Michigan, 16; New Jersey, 13; are assembled, the required quorum is present with members to spare.

(Footnote Continued Next Page)

Assuming all 535 delegates representing all 50 states are present and voting, this means an amendment proposal to be passed by the convention must receive a favorable majority vote from at least 34 state delegations with at

COUNTING THE PENDING APPLICATIONS

3

7

8

10

11

12 13

14

15

16 17

18 19

In determining the number of states that have pending applications for a

5 convention for proposing amendments to the Constitution, several points must

6 be recognized:

- 1. According to the text of Article V, Congress must call a convention upon the application of two-thirds of the state legislatures;  $^{1512}$
- 2. The only standard in the Constitution is the two-thirds  $numeric\ count$  request by the state legislatures for a convention to propose amendments;  $^{1513}$
- 3. The purpose or subject of the application for a convention for proposing amendments is irrelevant;  $^{1514}$
- 4. There is nothing in the language of Article V that provides applications may be withdrawn by the states once they have been filed;  $^{1515}$
- 5. There is nothing in Article V that supports a construction of contemporaneousness for applications;  $^{\rm 1516}$
- 6. Congress has no power to establish any pseudo-constitutional standards for state applications in order to allow them not to "count" as applications for a convention.  $^{1517}$
- 20 As the record shows, 1518 many applications contain a general statement as
- 21 to the reason the states have applied for a convention for proposing
- 22 amendments; other applications are more specific, providing the proposed text
- 23 for an amendment to the Constitution. The fact that a state has provided its
- 24 rationale for submitting its application, or even specific language for a
- 25 proposed amendment, does not mean that the application should be considered least 359 of the 535 delegates favoring the measure regardless of which delegations they represent.

&lt;sup>1512</sup> See supra text accompanying notes 2,437,439,440,497-521.

&lt;sup>1513</sup> See supra text accompanying notes 2,437,439,440,497-521,728,834.

&lt;sup>1514</sup> See supra text accompanying notes 669-735.

&lt;sup>1515</sup> See supra text accompanying notes 837-920;1193-1205.

&lt;sup>1516</sup> See supra text accompanying notes 736-789.

See supra text accompanying notes 522-668;790-833.

<sup>1518</sup> See infra

TABLE 1-STATE APPLICATIONS FOR A CONVENTION, p.661;

TABLE 4-GENERAL APPLICATIONS, NON SPECIFIC, p.680;

TABLE 5-GENERAL APPLICATIONS, INCLUDING SPECIFIC, p.680.

- without effect. It is still an application for a convention for proposing 1
- amendments to the Constitution. Moreover, even if reference to the reason for 2
- the application was intended by the state legislature as a unstated attempt to 3
- limit the convention to one subject, the state has no authority to limit a 4
- convention for proposing amendments to a particular subject. 1519 5

7 The Question of Singularity

- 9 At first reading, it would appear the term "the application" implies a
- singularity, i.e., the same application for an "amendment." Even if the 10
- Founding Fathers and the Supreme Court are ignored in defining the term "on 11
- the application of the state legislatures of two-thirds of the several 12
- States..."  $^{1520}$  there is little help even in the semantics of the language to 13
- 14 those wishing for "same subject" interpretation; the above cited authorities
- have repeatedly disposed of the idea of applications for an amendment as 15
- opposed to the proper interpretation of applications by the states for a 16
- convention. 1521 17
- 18 Nor is there help in the apparent singularity of the phrase, "on the
- Application of the Legislatures of two-thirds of the several States..." 1522 19
- 20 which advocates of "single subject" apparently seem to rely on, interpreting

 $<sup>^{1519}</sup>$  See supra text accompanying notes 837-850.

 $^{\rm 1520}$  See supra text accompanying note 2.

&lt;sup>1521</sup> See supra text accompanying notes 261,271-273,284,434-440,491-521,527,551,670,728,1034,1074,1284.

<sup>1522</sup> See supra text accompanying note 2.

- 1 this phrase to somehow imply the states must submit to Congress the exact same
- 2 application. Nothing else in the actual language of Article V supports such a
- 3 supposition. These supporters use this "interpretation" to base their
- 4 contention Congress has the power to regulate a convention to propose
- 5 amendments without providing a single shred of authoritative proof 1523 for
- 6 their interpretations. 1524

 $^{1523}$  This suit defines authoritative proof as:

"Authority. Permission. Right to exercise powers; to implement and enforce laws; to exact obedience; to command; to judge. Control over; jurisdiction... Legal power; a right to command or to act; the right and power of public officers to require obedience to their orders lawfully issued in the scope of their public duties."

"Evidence. Any species of proof, or probative matter, legal presented at the trial of an issue, by the act of the parties and through the medium of witnesses, records, documents, exhibits, concrete objects, etc. for the purpose of inducing belief in the minds of the court of jury as to their contention. Taylor v. Howard, 111 R.I. 527, 304 A.2d 891, 893. Testimony, writings, or material objects offered in proof of an alleged fact or proposition." BLACK'S LAW DICTIONARY 6th Ed. (1990).

Using these definitions, authoritative proof is the establishment of facts based on evidentiary proof in the form of records, documents or other established legal acts derived from a source[s] of authority that possess the legal constitutional power to enforce its decision[s] based on that evidence and facts regarding a convention to propose amendments and related questions to it, or which that source[s] of authority recognizes as a valid source to provide such facts and evidence.

1524 Such examples can be found in Caplan, Constitutional Brinksmanship:

Amending the Constitution by National Convention, (1988):

"In providing that 'on the Application of the Legislatures' Congress 'shall call a Convention,' article V implies that Congress is the agent entrusted to receive, inspect, and decide on the validation of applications, and that applications must be submitted to Congress to be counted toward a convention call." p.94. (emphasis added).

There is no dispute that "applications must be submitted to Congress [in order] to be counted toward a convention call." But the clear intent of the Founders (see supra text accompanying notes 434-440,491-521) makes it clear there was no implication intended to allow Congress to "decide on the validation of applications." Further, as already noted, Caplan fails to provide a single authoritative reference to substantiate this sweeping assertion by the author. On the other hand, the opposing view represented in this suit has cited numerous Supreme Court cases to provide support together with the Founding Fathers speaking directly on the matter. See supra text accompanying notes 261,271-273,284,434-440,491-521,527,551,670,728,1034, 1074,1284.

(Footnote Continued Next Page)

Other authors are equally lax in providing substantiation in this critical area. One author at first seems to concede the obligation of Congress to call a convention and its ministerial powers in the call. Bond & Engdahl, THE CONSTITUTIONAL CONVENTION, The Duties and Powers of Congress Regarding Conventions For Proposing Amendments", Nat'l. Legal Center for the Public Interest, (1987):

"It thus seems quite certain that Congress is obligated to call a convention when the requisite number of States apply, so that its function in doing so is purely ministerial."

However, Bond then backtracks on his own statement saying:

"The questions...are secondary to questions about how Congress should determine whether the requisite number of States have applied for a convention... The test for determining the validity of Congress' answers to such questions should be whether they ensure that a convention will be called if the applications of two-thirds of the States constitute a contemporaneous consensus that a convention should be held to consider a matter or matters of concern. That is the only criterion which reconciles the right of the States to demand a convention and Congress' duty to call it. The 'contemporaneity' requisite to Congress' call obligation is not explicit in the text of Article V, but it seems implicit even without any certainty as to how much time should be permitted to elapse. The notion that the Congress is obligated to call a convention, simply because two-thirds of the States have---over some extended period of time---requested on, makes little sense." p.4. (emphasis added).

Bond is unique in his assertion, and of course, provides no authority to substantiate it. It offends intellectual honesty in that it is not even logical. Bond maintains Congress "is obligated" to call a convention "when the requisite number of states apply" and then proceeds to refute his own statement by providing a means where Congress can refuse to do what is obligated.

Another author, Edel, states:

"That this position does not resolve the question is clear the fact that Article V does not mention limitations when it speaks of a convention. Short of denying the theory of implied powers and implications of the 'necessary and proper' clause, it is difficult to insist that complete silence regarding congressional authority in this one segment of the Constitution indicates an intent to deny congress any authority in that area...

"As the Supreme Court said more than fifty years ago, Article V 'is intended to invest Congress with a wide range of power in proposing amendments.' [footnote cites Dillon v. Gloss, 256 U.S. 373 (1921)] Although this view was offered in the context of a complaint that Congress had acted illegally in placing a limit on the time permitted states for ratification of the Eighteenth Amendment, it was a broad response to an equally broad contention that 'Congress has no power to limit the time of deliberation or otherwise control what legislatures shall do in their deliberation' [emphasis in original text]. If the 'wide range of powers' allows conditions to be placed on some actions of state legislatures, it must surely permit the establishment of ground rules for a national convention that cannot come into existence except on the call of Congress...

"If it is reasonable that the national legislature provide uniform procedures for state conventions, it is practically inevitable that Congress perform the same function in the process of calling a national convention. The question is not whether there should be federal control, but How much federal control?" A CONSTITUTIONAL CONVENTION: THREAT OR CHALLENGE (1981) (Edel). p. 96-97.

(Footnote Continued Next Page)

- 1 Throughout our nation's history state legislatures have presented a
- 2 variety of legislative subjects to Congress usually in the form of
- 3 memorials. 1525 Thus, Congress routinely receives a variety of requests from the
- 4 states on a variety of subjects. These memorials were in common use even in
- 5 the colonial days.
- 6 Realizing this fact, the Founding Fathers made it clear in the language
- 7 of Article V that the phrase "the application" must relate exclusively to the
- 8 calling of a convention as opposed to involving the legislative powers of
- 9 Congress. 1526 Thus, the Founders enforced the separation of congressional
- 10 legislative and amendatory powers. 1527 The words "the application" refers not

While Edel does refer to a Supreme Court decision, it is interesting that he, like all the other authors, ignores the most persuasive statement by the Supreme Court favoring their position. This is of course the all encompassing authority granted to Congress in Coleman. It can only be presumed the authors have, like the Court, apparently rejected the premise of Coleman. See supra text accompanying notes 1053-1108,1208. Further, Edel's reliance on Dillon can be refuted. See supra text accompanying note 728.

In UNFOUNDED FEARS: MYTHS AND REALITIES OF A CONSTITUIONAL CONVENTION (1989)(P. Weber & B. Perry), the authors review all of the applications placed before Congress, then without substantiation state:

"The two-thirds majority required by Article V to trigger Congress' convention call has proved insurmountable over the two centuries since the founding." p.75.

Again these authors fail to provide authoritative substantiation, even to using Coleman for their primary argument on the convention to propose amendments: that the applications from the states for a convention must be for the same subject.

But the greatest offender in this is the American Bar Association whose August, 1973 report on the matter contains so many errors and misstatements as to requires two sections of this suit in order to respond to them. See infra APPENDIX C---1973 REPORT OF THE ABA SPECIAL CONSTITUTIONAL CONVENTION STUDY COMMITTEE, p.1.

"Memorial. A document presented to a legislative body, or to the executive, by one or more individuals, containing a petition or a representation of facts." BLACK'S LAW DICTIONARY  $6^{\rm th}$  Ed. (1990).

See supra text accompanying note 437-442.

See supra text accompanying notes 560-579.

- to the singularity of the application  $^{1528}$  as it pertains to same language, same
- 2 amendment etc., but to the singularity of function of the application 1529 which
- 3 is to compel Congress to call a convention to propose amendments.

5 An Application Is An Application

6

- 7 Simply put, an application is an application. <sup>1530</sup> An application cannot
- 8 be called something else just because it includes reference to the reason it

(Footnote Continued Next Page)

 $<sup>^{1528}</sup>$  Even the choice of the word "the" as opposed to the more general "a" or "an" lends strength to this position.

&quot;The. An article which particularizes the subject spoken of. In construing statue, definite article 'the' particularizes the subject which it precedes and is word of limitation as opposed to indefinite or generalizing force 'a' or 'an' Brooks v. Zabka, 168 Colo. 265, 450 P.2d 654, 655." (emphasis added).

&quot;Particular. Relating to a part or portion of anything; separate; sole; single; individual; specific; local; comprising a part only; partial in extent; not universal. Opposed to general. State v. Patterson, 6 Idaho 67, 88 P.2d. 493, 497. Of, or pertaining to, a single person, class or thing. Albin v. Hughes, Tex. Civ. App., 304 S. W.2d 371, 372."

&quot;Class. A group of persons, things, qualities, or activities having common characteristics or attributes. In re Kanawha Val. Bank, 144 W.Va. 346, 109 S.E.2d 649, 670."

&quot;Characteristics. 1. That which constitutes a character; that which characterizes; a distinguishing trait, feature, or quality; a peculiarity." BLACK'S LAW DICTIONARY 6th Ed. (1990). (emphasis added).

 $<sup>^{1529}</sup>$  "The act of making a request for something." BLACK'S LAW DICTIONARY 6th Ed. (1990).(emphasis added). See supra text accompanying note 1530 for full definition of "application."

<sup>1530</sup> The word "application" is defined as:

&quot;A putting to, placing before, preferring a request or petition to or before a person. The act of making a request for something. A petition. The use or disposition made of a thing. A bringing together, in order to ascertain some relation or establish some connection; as the application of a rule or principle to a case or fact. An appeal or petition, especially as written or presented; a putting to, placing before; preferring a request or petition to or before a person; the act of making a request for something, Sparacino v. Ferona, 9 Ill. App.2d. 422, 133 N.E.2d. 753, 755." BLACK'S LAW DICTIONARY 6th Ed. (1990). (emphasis in original).

The relevant portion of this definition is "the act of making a request for something," and "a petition." The relevant definition of the term "petition" clarifies the issue:

&quot;A formal written request addressed to some governmental authority." Id.

- 1 is made. 1531 Nor is its constitutional intent altered by its form or
- 2 content. 1532 The word "application" must be read in its "natural and obvious
- 3 sense." 1533 As the term "application" is a general one, it must be construed to
- 4 include applications of all types, including those that provide a statement
- 5 regarding why the application is made. This principle is demonstrated in
- 6 Fletcher v. Peck, 1534 wherein Chief Justice John Marshall construed the term
- 7 "contract" as used in the Constitution:

9

10

11

12

13 14

15

- "[S]ince the constitution uses the general term contract, without distinguishing between those which are executory and those which are executed, it must be construed to comprehend the latter as well as the former...
- "Is the clause to be considered as inhibiting the states from impairing the obligation of contracts between two individuals, but as excluding from that inhibition contracts made with itself? The words themselves contain no such distinction. They are general, and are applicable to contracts of every description."  $^{1535}$

The Founding Fathers intended Congress be required to call a convention on the application to two-thirds of the states; therefore there are no options on the part of that body as to the "requests" made by the states. Thus, the word "appeal", which implies consideration and judgment on the part of the body being appealed to, or the use of the word "request" in the sense of providing options to that body upon which the request is made, while certainly accurate and applicable in most cases, simply cannot apply in this specific, narrow case. See supra text accompanying notes 2,437-439,506-513.

1531 To do this would put the form of the application over its function, which is to cause the calling of a convention to propose amendments. In an early Supreme Court case involving the Compact Clause (U.S. CONST., art. I, § 10, §§ 3) the Court addressed the proposition of form over function in the Constitution.

The Court said:

"Can it be supposed, that the constitutionality of the act depends on the mere form of the agreement? We think not. The Constitution looked to the essence and substance of things, and not to mere form. It would be but an evasion of the constitution to place the question upon the formality with which the agreement is made." Holmes v. Jennison, 39 U.S. 540 (1840).

Thus, it is clear the Court regards the function of an application, that of causing a convention to propose amendments to be called, paramount to its form. Noticeably, this decision is particularly significant as it relates to state compacts. The argument can be well made that the convention is merely another constitutionally permissible compact. See supra text accompanying notes 551,1391.

- <sup>1532</sup> See supra text accompanying notes 1514,1517,1519-1531.
- Martin v. Hunter's Lessee, 14 U.S. 304 (1816). See supra text accompanying note 551.
- <sup>1534</sup> Fletcher v. Peck, 10 U.S. 87 (1810).  $\tau_A$

1 By the same logic, the Constitution uses the general term "application,"

- 2 without distinguishing between applications for a general convention and
- 3 applications relating to a particular subject. The term must therefore "be
- 4 construed to comprehend the latter as well as the former." And because the
- 5 term "application" is general in nature, it is appropriate to applications of
- 6 every description.
- 7 In sum, a state may give the reason for its submission of a convention
- 8 application in its application, but this reason has no effect on the
- 9 constitutional purpose of the application which is to compel Congress to call
- 10 a convention by acting as a valid application to establish the two-thirds
- 11 threshold of applying states for the calling of a convention for proposing
- 12 amendments. Thus, in the counting of applications, the matter is entirely a
- 13 numeric count, 1536 i.e., when two-thirds of the states have applied for a
- 14 convention, the Congress is mandated to call one. 1537
- 15 Also, it is not appropriate to omit any application on the theory of
- 16 contemporaneousness or any other pseudo-constitutional ground because the
- 17 constitutionally granted powers cannot be withdrawn on any theory of laches or
- 18 failure of Congress to act. 1538
- 19 In making the count of the applications pending for a convention to
- 20 propose amendments to the Constitution, none can be ignored due to recession
- 21 by the states. 1539 At least two-thirds of the states have applied for a

 $<sup>^{1536}\</sup> See\ supra$  text accompanying note 513.

&lt;sup>1537</sup> See supra text accompanying note 514.

&lt;sup>1538</sup> See supra text accompanying notes 730-836.

&lt;sup>1539</sup> See supra text accompanying notes 890-920.

1 convention, and these applications were submitted to Congress prior to any recessions being submitted by the states to withdraw them. 1540 Even if the 2 states possessed the power of recession, which they do not, they certainly 3 have no power to veto the Constitution any more than Congress does, and as 4 over two-thirds of them have applied for a convention prior to any submission 5 of any recessions, such recessions must be considered invalid as they would 6

7 serve to attempt to veto a provision of the Constitution mandating

8 congressional action. Hence, any recessions by the states are invalid. Thus,

9 these applications that the states have attempted to recess must be counted toward the constitutional two-thirds requirement regardless of any attempt at 11 recession.

10

13

14

15

17

18

19

Any attempt to construe the term "application" narrowly prevents the 12 full implementation of Article V. The most basic rule of constitutional construction is that the words contained in the Constitution are to be given full meaning and effect. 1541 In the words of Justice Story, "we cannot rightly 16 prefer, of the possible meanings of its words, that which will defeat rather than effectuate the Constitutional purpose." 1542 The term "application" must be given substance and effect. To quote Justice Frankfurter, no constitutional guarantee "should suffer subordination or deletion." 1543 Nor, as was clearly

BRIEF IN SUPPORT OF CONVENTION GENERAL BRIEF ARGUMENTS PAGE 657

TABLE 1-STATE APPLICATIONS FOR A CONVENTION, p.661; TABLE 3-STATE RECESSIONS,

p.674.

1541 See supra text accompanying notes 669-735. United States v. Classic, 313 U.S. 299, 316 (1941).
1543 Ullmann v. United States, 350 U.S. 422, 428 (1956).

1	stated	in	Miranda	V .	Arizona,	can	constitutional	rights,	whether	they	be
---	--------	----	---------	-----	----------	-----	----------------	---------	---------	------	----

- 2 granted to the states or the people, be removed by legislative fiat.
- 3 "...Where rights secured by the Constitution are involved, there can be 4 no rule making or legislation which would abrogate them."  $^{1544}$

5 Thus having eliminated all excuses that have been politically proposed

6 for not obeying the clear language of the Constitution, we left with more than a sufficient number of applying states to satisfy the constitutional mandate

8 of Article V, specifically every state in the Union.

9

10

7

STATE APPLICATIONS FOR A CONVENTION

11

12 INTRODUCTION

13

14 Until now this suit has discussed the deliberate unconstitutional laches

of Congress in calling a convention to propose amendments in terms of intent

16 of the Founding Fathers, interpretations by the Supreme Court and provisions

17 of the Constitution related to Article V. The following tables are derived

18 from three sources: "A Lawful and Peaceful Revolution: Article V and Congress' 19 Present Duty to Call a Convention for Proposing Amendments", 14 HAM. L. REV.

20 (1990) by the Honorable Bruce M. Van Sickle and Lynn M. Boughey; 1546

(Footnote Continued Next Page)

&lt;sup>1544</sup> Miranda v. Arizona, 384 U.S. 436, 491 (1966).

&quot;The Honorable Bruce M. Van Sickle is the United States Senior District Court Judge for the District of North Dakota. Judge Van Sickle received his B.S.L.(1939) and L.L.B.(1941) from the University of Minnesota. Following service in the Pacific during World War II, he practice law at Minot, North Dakota (1947-71), and served in the 1957 and 1959 North Dakota Legislative Sessions. Judge Van Sickle was appointed as a federal judge in 1971, and began senior status in 1986... Judge Van Sickle was nominated by President Richard Nixon, and received immediate confirmation by the senate without the necessity of attending any Senate hearings." Van Sickle, Boughey: "A Lawful and Peaceful

- 1 "Constitutional Brinksmanship: Amending the Constitution by National
- 2 Convention", by Russell L. Caplan; 1547 and Unfounded Fears: Myths and Realities
- 3 of a Constitutional Convention", by Paul J. Weber 1548 and Barbara A. Perry. 1549
- 4 Primary evidentiary reliance is made on the material from Senior Federal
- 5 District Court Judge Van Sickle. This material summarizes the immense volume
- 6 of applications 1550 by the states to Congress in the Congressional Record 1551 Revolution: Article V and Congress' Present Duty to Call a Convention for Proposing Amendments", 14 HAM. L. REV. (1990).

"Lynn M. Boughey is an attorney practicing law in Minot, North Dakota. Lynn is a Truman Scholar (1977). He received his B.A. from Grinnell College (1979) and his J.D. with honors from Hamline University School of Law (1983), where he served as Articles and Managing Editor of the Hamline Law Review. Following law school, he clerked for Judge Van Sickle (1983-85) and the Honorable Gerald VandeWalle, Justice, North Dakota Supreme Court (1985-86). From 1986 to 1989, he was in private practice at the law firm of Pringle & Herigstad, Minot, North Dakota, specializing in litigation. From 1989 to 1990, Lynn served as Deputy Insurance Commissioner for the State of North Dakota."

"Russell L. Caplan, an attorney with the United States Department of Justice, holds degrees from Dartmouth, Oxford (as a Fulbright Scholar) and the Yale Law School. His writing on constitutional theory and history has appeared in such journals as the Harvard Law Review, the Virginia Law Review, and The New Republic." Constitutional Brinksmanship: Amending the Constitution by National Convention. Caplan (1988).

"Paul J. Weber is a professor and chairman of Department of Political Science at the University of Louisville, Kentucky. He wrote Private Churches and Public Money and contributed to numerous publications including The Review of Politics, Polity, the Journal of Law and Politics, and several law reviews." Unfounded Fears: Myths and Realities of a Constitutional Convention, by Paul J. Weber and Barbara A. Perry (1989).

<sup>1549</sup> Barbara A. Perry is an assistant professor of Political Science at Sweet Briar College. She has written articles for the Journal of Church and State and the Journal of Law and Politics and is at work on another book regarding the U.S. Supreme Court's "Catholic Seat." Id.

"The contents of voluminous writing, recordings or photographs which cannot conveniently be examined in court may be presented in the form of a chart, summary, or calculation. The originals, or duplicates, shall be made available for examination or copying, or both, by other parties at reasonable time and place. The court may order that they be produced in court." Federal Civil Rules, Rule 1006 (1999).

1551 "Extrinsic evidence of authenticity as a condition precedent to admissibility is not required with respect to the following:

"(1) Domestic Public Documents Under Seal. A document bearing a seal purporting to be that of the United States, or of any State, district, Commonwealth, territory, or insular possession thereof, or the Panama Canal

(Footnote Continued Next Page)

1	for a convention to propose amendments. These tables are intended to provide
2 3 4 5 6	<ul> <li>conclusive evidence regarding the tyranny of Congress by substantiating:</li> <li>1. The numeric count of applying states as required by Article V of the Constitution has been satisfied and;</li> <li>2. Even when Congress establishes a pre-condition for calling a convention, it will not honor its own rules.</li> </ul>
7	The evidence shows any construement of Article V contrary to the
8	original intent of the Founding Fathers, i.e., a numeric count of states, will
9	be seized by Congress to prevent a convention call as a method to veto the
10	Constitution and maintain its tyrannical power. This must be permanently
11	struck down by the Court.
12
13	THE BIG PICTURE
14
15	According to Senior Federal District Court Judge Van Sickle, the states
16	have submitted a total of 523 applications and $44\ \text{recessions}$ to Congress. $^{1552}$
17	As Table 1 clearly shows, all but a handful of these applications have been
18	submitted to Congress in this century and over half of the total applications

Zone, or the Trust Territory of the Pacific Islands, or of a political subdivision, department, officer, or agency thereof, and a signature purporting to be an attestation or execution." Id. at Rule 902. <sup>1552</sup>See infra,

TABLE 1-STATE APPLICATIONS FOR A CONVENTION, p.661, TABLE 3-STATE RECESSIONS,

p.674.

1553 Even if applications received by Congress from the states were considered they are not. (See supra text accompanying notes 1245-1309.) the states have reapplied in sufficient numbers to again compel Congress to call a convention and have even satisfied the unconstitutional "same subject" requirement by applying for "Balanced Budget". Including general applications, (See infra text accompanying notes 1565-1568.) a total of 38 states have applied for this subject since 1963. In terms of numeric count applications, which is the only constitutional requirement the states need satisfy, (See supra text accompanying notes 505-514.) forty-six states have applied since 1963. Thus, under either interpretation,

(Footnote Continued Next Page)

BRIEF IN SUPPORT OF CONVENTION GENERAL BRIEF ARGUMENTS PAGE 660

submitted by the states are since 1963. 1553

4

TABLE 1-STATE APPLICATIONS FOR A CONVENTION

	Date	State	Subject	Location
1	1789	Virginia	General	1 Annals of Congress 248 (J Gales ed. 1789)
2	1789	New York	General	1 Annals of Congress 248 (J Gales ed. 1789)
3	1790	Rhode Island	General	1 Annals of Congress 1103 (J Gales ed. 1790)
4	1899	Texas	General	33 Cong. Rec. 219 (1899)
5	1899	Texas	General	33 Cong. Rec. 280 (1899)
6	1901	Oregon	Direct election of senators	35 Cong. Rec. 117 (1901)
7	1901	Minnesota	Direct election of senators	34 Cong. Rec. 2560 (1901)
8	1901	Minnesota	Direct election of senators	34 Cong. Rec. 2615 (1901)
9	1901	Minnesota	Direct election of senators	34 Cong. Rec. 2680 (1901)
10	1901	Nebraska	Direct election of senators	35 Cong. Rec. 1779 (1901)
11	1901	Michigan	Direct election of senators	35 Cong. Rec. 117 (1901)
12	1901	Pennsylvania	Direct election of senators	45 Cong. Rec. 7118 (1910) (1901)
13	1901	Montana	Direct election of senators	35 Cong. Rec. 208 (1901)
14	1901	Tennessee	Direct election of senators	35 Cong. Rec. 2344 (1901)
15	1901	Tennessee	Direct election of senators	35 Cong. Rec. 2707 (1902)
16	1901	Arkansas	Direct election of senators	45 Cong. Rec. 7113 (1910) (1901)
17	1901	Colorado	General (Direct election of senators)	45 Cong. Rec. 7113 (1910) (1901)
18	1901	Idaho	Direct election of senators	45 Cong. Rec. 7114 (1910) (1901)
19	1901	Minnesota	Direct election of senators	45 Cong. Rec. 7116 (1910) (1901)
20	1901	Texas	General	45 Cong. Rec. 7119 (1910) (1901)
21	1901	Nevada	Direct election of senators	35 Cong. Rec. 112 (1901)
22	1902	Tennessee	Direct election of senators	35 Cong. Rec. 2344 (1902)
23	1902	Kentucky	Direct election of senators	45 Cong. Rec. 7115 (1910) (1902)
24	1902	Tennessee	Direct election of senators	35 Cong. Rec. 2707 (1902)
25	1903	Utah	Direct election of senators	45 Cong. Rec. 7119 (1910) (1903)
26	1903	Washington	General (Direct election of senators)	45 Cong. Rec. 7119 (1910) (1903)
27	1903	Oregon	Direct election of senators	45 Cong. Rec. 7118 (1910) (1903)
28	1903	Nevada	Direct election of senators	45 Cong. Rec. 7117 (1910) (1903)
29	1903	Nebraska	Direct election of senators	45 Cong. Rec. 7116 (1910) (1903)
30	1903	Illinois	General (Direct election of senators)	45 Cong. Rec. 7114 (1910) (1903)
31	1903	Wisconsin	Direct election of senators	37 Cong. Rec. 276 (1903)
32	1903	Nevada	Direct election of senators	37 Cong. Rec. 24 (1903)
33	1903	Washington	General (Direct election of senators)	45 Cong. Rec. 3035 (1911) (1903)
34	1904	Iowa	Direct election of senators	38 Cong. Rec. 4959 (1904)
35	1905	Missouri	Direct election of senators	40 Cong. Rec. 138 (1905)

malapportionment has no effect on the obligation of Congress to call a convention.

	Date	State	Subject	Location
36	1905	Tennessee	Direct election of senators	45 Cong. Rec. 7118 (1905)
37	1905	Montana	Direct election of senators	39 Cong. Rec. 2447 (1905)
38	1906	New York	Anti-polygamy	40 Cong. Rec. 4551 (1906)
39	1907	South Dakota	Direct election of senators	41 Cong. Rec. 2497 (1907)
40	1907	Illinois	Direct election of senators	42 Cong. Rec. 359 (1907)
41	1907	Illinois	Direct election of senators	42 Cong. Rec. 164 (1907)
42	1907	Nevada	General (Direct election of senators)	42 Cong. Rec. 163 (1907)
43	1907	Delaware	Anti-polygamy	41 Cong. Rec. 3011 (1907)
44	1907	Iowa	Direct election of senators	45 Cong. Rec. 7114 (1910) (1907)
45	1907	Missouri	General	45 Cong. Rec. 7116 (1910) (1907)
46	1907	Indiana	Direct election of senators	45 Cong. Rec. 7114 (1910) (1907)
47	1907	Montana	Direct election of senators	45 Cong. Rec. 7116 (1910) (1907)
48	1907	New Jersey	Direct election of senators	45 Cong. Rec. 7117 (1910) (1907)
49	1907	North Carolina	General (Direct election of senators)	45 Cong. Rec. (1910) (1907)
50	1907	South Dakota	Direct election of senators	45 Cong. Rec. 7118 (1910) (1907)
51	1907	New Jersey	Direct election of senators	42 Cong. Rec. 164 (1907)
52	1907	Kansas	General	41 Cong. Rec. 3072 (1907)
53	1908	Wisconsin	Direct election of senators	45 Cong. Rec. 7119 (1910) (1908)
54	1908	Oklahoma	General (Direct election of senators)	45 Cong. Rec. 7117 (1910) (1908)
55	1908	Michigan	Direct election of senators	45 Cong. Rec. 7116 (1910) (1908)
56	1908	Kansas	General (Direct election of senators)	45 Cong. Rec. 7115 (1910) (1908)
57	1908	Iowa	Direct election of senators	42 Cong. Rec. 895 (1908)
58	1908	Nevada	Direct election of senators	42 Cong. Rec. 895 (1908)
59	1908	Wisconsin	Direct election of senators	42 Cong. Rec. 895 (1908)
60	1908	Oklahoma	General (Direct election of senators)	42 Cong. Rec. 894 (1908)
61	1909	Oregon	Direct election of senators	43 Cong. Rec. 2071 (1909)
62	1909	Oregon	Direct election of senators	43 Cong. Rec. 2065 (1909)
63	1909	Iowa	General (Direct election of senators)	44 Cong. Rec. 1620 (1909)
64	1909	Washington	Anti-polygamy	44 Cong. Rec. 127 (1909)
65	1909	Washington	Anti-polygamy	44 Cong. Rec. 50 (1909)
66	1909	South Dakota	Anti-polygamy	43 Cong. Rec. 2670 (1909)
67	1909	Oregon	Direct election of senators	43 Cong. Rec. 2025 (1909)
68	1909	Oregon	Direct election of senators	43 Cong. Rec. 2115 (1909)
69	1909	South Dakota	Direct election of senators	43 Cong. Rec. 2667 (1909)
70	1910	Washington	Anti-polygamy	46 Cong. Rec. 651 (1911) (1910)
71	1911	Wisconsin	General	47 Cong. Rec. 1842 (1911)
72	1911	Ohio	Anti-polygamy	47 Cong. Rec. 85 (1911)
73	1911	Wisconsin	General	47 Cong. Rec. 3087 (1911)
74	1911	Nebraska –	Anti-polygamy	47 Cong. Rec. 99 (1911)
75	1911	Tennessee	Anti-polygamy	47 Cong. Rec. 187 (1911)
76	1911	Illinois	Anti-monopoly	47 Cong. Rec. 1298 (1911)
77	1911	Wisconsin	General	47 Cong. Rec. 2188 (1911)
78	1911	Wisconsin	General	47 Cong. Rec. 2000 (1911)
79	1911	Wisconsin	General	47 Cong. Rec. 1873 (1911)
80	1911	Maine	Direct election of senators	46 Cong. Rec. 4339 (1911)
81	1911	Maine	Direct election of senators	46 Cong. Rec. 4280 (1911)
82	1911	Ohio	Anti-polygamy	47 Cong. Rec. 661 (1911)
83	1911	Montana	Anti-polygamy	47 Cong. Rec. 98 (1911)
84	1911	Montana	General (Direct election of senators)	46 Cong. Rec. 2411 (1911)

	Date	State	Subject	Location
85	1912	Vermont	Anti-polygamy	49 Cong. Rec. 2464 (1913) (1912)
86	1912	Vermont	Anti-polygamy	49 Cong. Rec. 1433 (1913) (1912)
87	1913	Wisconsin	Anti-polygamy	50 Cong. Rec. 116 (1913)
88	1913	Missouri	Judicial review of statutes	50 Cong. Rec. 2428 (1913)
89	1913	Michigan	Anti-polygamy	50 Cong. Rec. 2290 (1913)
90	1913	Illinois	Anti-polygamy	50 Cong. Rec. 120 (1913)
91	1913	Wisconsin	Anti-polygamy	50 Cong. Rec. 42 (1913)
92	1913	Oregon	Anti-polygamy	49 Cong. Rec. 2463 (1913)
93	1913	Missouri	Judicial review of statutes	50 Cong. Rec. 1796 (1913)
94	1916	South Carolina	Anti-polygamy	53 Cong. Rec. 2442 (1916)
95	1925	Nevada	Repeal of prohibition	67 Cong. Rec. 456 (1925)
96	1927	Idaho	Taxation of debts	69 Cong. Rec. 455 (1927)
97	1929	Wisconsin	General	71 Cong. Rec. 3856 (1929)
98	1929	Wisconsin	General	71 Cong. Rec. 2590 (1929)
99	1929	Wisconsin	General	71 Cong. Rec. 3369 (1929)
100	1931	Massachusetts	Repeal of prohibition	75 Cong. Rec. 45 (1931)
101	1931	Wisconsin	Repeal of prohibition	75 Cong. Rec. 57 (1931)
102	1931	New York	Repeal of prohibition	75 Cong. Rec. 48 (1931)
103	1932	New Jersey	Repeal of prohibition	75 Cong. Rec. 3299 (1932)
104	1935	California	Taxation of securities	79 Cong. Rec. 10814 (1935)
105	1935	California	Wage/hours regulation	79 Cong. Rec. 10814 (1935)
106	1939	Maryland	Limited taxation	84 Cong. Rec. 3320 (1939)
107	1939	Wyoming	Limited taxation	84 Cong. Rec. 2509 (1939)
108	1939	Oregon	National Recovery Plan	84 Cong. Rec. 985 (1939)
109	1940	Rhode Island	Limited taxation	86 Cong. Rec. 3439 (1940)
110	1940	Rhode Island	Limited taxation	86 Cong. Rec. 3407 (1940)
111	1941	Michigan	Limited taxation	87 Cong. Rec. 8904 (1941)
112	1941	Iowa	Limited taxation	87 Cong. Rec. 1729 (1941)
113	1941	Michigan	Limited taxation	87 Cong. Rec. 4537 (1941)
114	1941	Iowa	Limited taxation	87 Cong. Rec. 3172 (1941)
115	1943	Pennsylvania	Limited taxation	89 Cong. Rec. 8220 (1943)
116	1943	Pennsylvania	Unconditional public funds	89 Cong. Rec. 8220 (1943)
117	1943	Michigan	Limited presidential term	89 Cong. Rec. 2944 (1943)
118	1943	Iowa	Limited presidential term	89 Cong. Rec. 2516 (1943)
119	1943	Iowa	Limited presidential term	89 Cong. Rec. 2728 (1943)
120	1943	Wisconsin	Limited taxation	89 Cong. Rec. 7524 (1943)
121	1943	Florida	World government	89 Cong. Rec. 5690 (1943)
122	1943	Wisconsin	Limited presidential term	89 Cong. Rec. 7525 (1943)
123	1943	Delaware	Limited taxation	89 Cong. Rec. 4017 (1943)
124	1943	New Hampshire	Limited taxation	89 Cong. Rec. 3761 (1943)
125	1943	Alabama	Limited taxation	89 Cong. Rec. 7523 (1943)
126	1949	Connecticut	World government	95 Cong. Rec. 7689 (1949)
127	1949	Connecticut	World government	95 Cong. Rec. 7686 (1949)
128	1949	Florida	World government	95 Cong. Rec. 7000 (1949)
129	1949	North Carolina	World government	95 Cong. Rec. 6587 (1949)
130	1949	Florida	World government	95 Cong. Rec. 6586 (1949)
131	1949	Michigan	Limited taxation	95 Cong. Rec. 5628 (1949)
132	1949	New Jersey	World government	95 Cong. Rec. 4571 (1949)
133	1949	California	World government	95 Cong. Rec. 4568 (1949)

	Date	State	Subject	Location
134	1949	Connecticut	World government	95 Cong. Rec. 8285 (1949)
135	1951	Maine	Limited taxation	97 Cong. Rec. 6033 (1951)
136	1951	Kansas	Limited taxation	97 Cong. Rec. 2936 (1951)
137	1951	Florida	Limited taxation	97 Cong. Rec. 5155 (1951)
138	1951	New Hampshire	Limited taxation	97 Cong. Rec. 10716 (1951)
139	1951	Iowa	Limited taxation	97 Cong. Rec. 3939 (1951)
140	1952	Utah	Limited taxation	98 Cong. Rec. 947 (1952)
141	1952	Arkansas	Limited taxation	98 Cong. Rec. 742 (1952)
142	1952	New Mexico	Limited taxation	98 Cong. Rec. 947 (1952)
143	1952	Georgia	Limited taxation	98 Cong. Rec. 1057 (1952)
144	1952	Georgia	Treaty powers	98 Cong. Rec. 1057 (1952)
145	1952	Georgia	Limited taxation	98 Cong. Rec. 1225 (1952)
146	1952	Georgia	Treaty powers	98 Cong. Rec. 1225 (1952)
147	1952	Virginia	Limited taxation	98 Cong. Rec. 1496 (1952)
148	1952	California	Taxes on vehicles and fuel	98 Cong. Rec. 4003 (1952)
149	1952	Indiana	Limited taxation	98 Cong. Rec. 1056 (1952)
150	1953	Illinois	Mode of amendment	99 Cong. Rec. 10623 (1953)
151	1953	Illinois	Mode of amendment	99 Cong. Rec. 10052 (1953)
152	1953	Illinois	Mode of amendment	99 Cong. Rec. 9864 (1953)
153	1953	South Dakota	Mode of amendment	99 Cong. Rec. 9180 (1953)
154	1955	Georgia	Independent state schools	101 Cong. Rec. 1532 (1955)
155	1955	Oklahoma	Limited taxation	101 Cong. Rec. 8397 (1955)
156	1955	Texas	Mode of amendment	101 Cong. Rec. 2840 (1955)
157	1955	South Dakota	Mode of amendment	101 Cong. Rec. 2840 (1955)
158	1955	South Dakota	Mode of amendment	101 Cong. Rec. 2861 (1955)
159	1955	Oklahoma	Limited taxation	101 Cong. Rec. 8776 (1955)
160	1955	Texas	Mode of amendment	101 Cong. Rec. 2270 (1955)
161	1955	Georgia	Independent state schools	101 Cong. Rec. 2086 (1955)
162	1955	Georgia	Independent state schools	101 Cong. Rec. 2274 (1955)
163	1956	Michigan	Mode of amendment	102 Cong. Rec. 7240 (1956)
164	1956	Michigan	Mode of amendment	102 Cong. Rec. 7304 (1956)
165	1957	Alabama	Selection of federal judges	103 Cong. Rec. 10863 (1957)
166	1957	Indiana	Balanced budget	103 Cong. Rec. 6475 (1957)
167	1957	Indiana	Limited taxation	103 Cong. Rec. 6474 (1957)
168	1957	Indiana	Presidential electors	103 Cong. Rec. 6473 (1957)
169	1957	Indiana	Treaty procedures	103 Cong. Rec. 6472 (1957)
170	1957	Indiana	Mode of amendment	103 Cong. Rec. 6471 (1957)
171	1957	Idaho	Mode of amendment	103 Cong. Rec. 4831 (1957)
172	1957	Florida	Supreme Court authority	103 Cong. Rec. 12787 (1957)
173	1958	Connecticut	Interstate taxation	104 Cong. Rec. 8058 (1958)
174	1958	Connecticut	Interstate taxation	103 Cong. Rec. 8085 (1958)
175	1959	Georgia	Independent state schools	105 Cong. Rec. 2793 (1959)
176	1959	Georgia	Independent state schools	105 Cong. Rec. 1834 (1959)
177	1959	Arkansas	Validity of 14th Amendment	105 Cong. Rec. 4398 (1959)
178	1959	Arkansas	Validity of 14th Amendment	105 Cong. Rec. 4329 (1959)
179	1959	Alabama	Conflicting state and federal statutes	105 Cong. Rec. 3220 (1959)
180	1959	Alabama	Conflicting state and federal statutes	105 Cong. Rec. 3083 (1959)
181	1959	Georgia	Independent state schools	105 Cong. Rec. 1709 (1959)
182	1959	Wyoming	Limited taxation	105 Cong. Rec. 3085 (1959)

	Date	State	Subject	Location
183	1960	Nevada	Limited taxation	106 Cong. Rec. 10749 (1960)
184	1961	Georgia	Supreme Court authority	107 Cong. Rec. 4454 (1961)
185	1961	Georgia	Supreme Court authority	107 Cong. Rec. 4715 (1961)
186	1961	Massachusetts	Reading Bible in school	107 Cong. Rec. 7484 (1961)
187	1961	Wyoming	Balanced budget	107 Cong. Rec. 2742 (1961)
188	1961	Wyoming	Balanced budget	107 Cong. Rec. 2759 (1961)
189	1961	Wyoming	Balanced budget	107 Cong. Rec. 2799 (1961)
190	1961	Arkansas	Supreme Court authority	107 Cong. Rec. 2154 (1961)
191	1962	South Carolina	Limited taxation	108 Cong. Rec. 5051 (1962)
192	1963	Colorado	Presidential electors	109 Cong. Rec. 6657 (1963)
193	1963	South Carolina	Mode of amendment	109 Cong. Rec. 10441 (1963)
194	1963	Nevada	Apportionment	109 Cong. Rec. 10241 (1963)
195	1963	Nevada	Apportionment	109 Cong. Rec. 9942 (1963)
196	1963	Colorado	Limited taxation	109 Cong. Rec. 7277 (1963)
197	1963	Colorado	Limited taxation	109 Cong. Rec. 7060 (1963)
198	1963	Colorado	Limited taxation	109 Cong. Rec. 6931 (1963)
199	1963	South Carolina	Apportionment	109 Cong. Rec. 10441 (1963)
200	1963	Colorado	Presidential electors	109 Cong. Rec. 6659 (1963)
201	1963	Texas	Apportionment	109 Cong. Rec. 11852 (1963)
202	1963	Utah	Presidential electors	109 Cong. Rec. 6438 (1963)
203	1963	Utah	Presidential electors	109 Cong. Rec. 5947 (1963)
204	1963	Missouri	Mode of amendment	109 Cong. Rec. 5868 (1963)
205	1963	Missouri	Apportionment	109 Cong. Rec. 5868 (1963)
206	1963	Washington	Apportionment	109 Cong. Rec. 5867 (1963)
207	1963	Wyoming	Apportionment	109 Cong. Rec. 6930 (1963)
208	1963	South Dakota	Apportionment	109 Cong. Rec. 14767 (1963)
209	1963	Wisconsin	Presidential electors	109 Cong. Rec. 15107 (1963)
210	1963	Wisconsin	Presidential electors	109 Cong. Rec. 15105 (1963)
211	1963	Alabama	Court of Union	109 Cong. Rec. 5581 (1963)
212	1963	Wisconsin	Presidential electors	109 Cong. Rec. 14808 (1963)
213	1963	Oklahoma	Apportionment	109 Cong. Rec. 1173 (1963)
214	1963	South Carolina	Court of Union	109 Cong. Rec. 10442 (1963)
215	1963	Wisconsin	Presidential electors	109 Cong. Rec. 15362 (1963)
216	1963	South Carolina	Court of Union	109 Cong. Rec. 10441 (1963)
217	1963	South Dakota	Mode of amendment	109 Cong. Rec. 14767 (1963)
218	1963	South Dakota	Apportionment	109 Cong. Rec. 14639 (1963)
219	1963	South Dakota	Mode of amendment	109 Cong. Rec. 14638 (1963)
220	1963	Texas	Presidential electors	109 Cong. Rec. 11853 (1963)
221	1963	Texas	Mode of amendment	109 Cong. Rec. 11852 (1963)
222	1963	Texas	Apportionment and Presidential electors	109 Cong. Rec. 11530 (1963)
223	1963	Wisconsin	Presidential electors	109 Cong. Rec. 14779 (1963)
224	1963	Arkansas	No Reference	109 Cong. Rec. 2765 (1963)
225	1963	Illinois	Mode of amendment	109 Cong. Rec. 3788 (1963)
226	1963	Idaho	Apportionment	109 Cong. Rec. 3274 (1963)
227	1963	Kansas	Apportionment	109 Cong. Rec. 2769 (1963)
228	1963	Kansas	Mode of amendment	109 Cong. Rec. 2769 (1963)
229	1963	Alabama	Court of Union	109 Cong. Rec. 5250 (1963)
230	1963	Montana	Apportionment	109 Cong. Rec. 3854 (1963)
231	1963	Florida	Mode of amendment	109 Cong. Rec. 2072 (1963)

	Date	State	Subject	Location
232	1963	Arkansas	Apportionment	109 Cong. Rec. 2769 (1963)
233	1963	Idaho	Apportionment	109 Cong. Rec. 2281 (1963)
234	1963	Florida	Court of Union	109 Cong. Rec. 2278 (1963)
235	1963	Florida	Court of Union	109 Cong. Rec. 2071 (1963)
236	1963	Oklahoma	Mode of amendment	109 Cong. Rec. 1172 (1963)
237	1963	Arkansas	Presidential electors	109 Cong. Rec. 2769 (1963)
238	1963	Idaho	Apportionment	109 Cong. Rec. 2278 (1963)
239	1963	Arkansas	Court of Union	109 Cong. Rec. 2768 (1963)
240	1963	Wyoming	Apportionment	109 Cong. Rec. 5014 (1963)
241	1963	Arkansas	Mode of amendment	109 Cong. Rec. 2768 (1963)
242	1963	Wyoming	Court of Union	109 Cong. Rec. 5014 (1963)
243	1963	Idaho	Balanced budget	109 Cong. Rec. 3855 (1963)
244	1963	Wyoming	Mode of amendment	109 Cong. Rec. 5014 (1963)*
245	1963	Wyoming	Mode of amendment	109 Cong. Rec. 5014 (1963)
246	1963	Wyoming	Court of Union	109 Cong. Rec. 4900 (1963)
247	1963	Wyoming	Mode of amendment	109 Cong. Rec. 4779 (1963)
248	1963	Wyoming	Court of Union	109 Cong. Rec. 4778 (1963)
249	1963	Montana	Presidential electors	109 Cong. Rec. 4469 (1963)
250	1963	Montana	Presidential electors	109 Cong. Rec. 4457 (1963)
251	1963	Idaho	Balanced budget	109 Cong. Rec. 4050 (1963)
252	1963	Montana	Apportionment	109 Cong. Rec. 4050 (1963)
253	1963	Illinois	Mode of amendment	109 Cong. Rec. 3982 (1963)
254	1963	Idaho	Balanced budget	109 Cong. Rec. 3982 (1963)
255	1963	Wyoming	Apportionment	109 Cong. Rec. 4779 (1963)
256	1964	Virginia	Apportionment	110 Cong. Rec. 5922 (1964)
257	1964	Massachusetts	Pension for the elderly	110 Cong. Rec. 10013 (1964)
258	1964	Massachusetts	Pension for the elderly	110 Cong. Rec. 9875 (1964)
259	1964	Massachusetts	Reading Bible in school	110 Cong. Rec. 7616 (1964)
260	1964	Massachusetts	Reading Bible in school	110 Cong. Rec. 7371 (1964)
261	1964	Virginia	Apportionment	110 Cong. Rec. 5659 (1964)
262	1964	Massachusetts	Reading Bible in school	110 Cong. Rec. 7484 (1964)
263	1965	Virginia	Apportionment	111 Cong. Rec. 881 (1965)
264	1965	Arizona	Apportionment	111 Cong. Rec. 3061 (1965)
265	1965	Virginia	Mode of amendment	111 Cong. Rec. 94 (1965)
266	1965	Virginia	Mode of amendment	111 Cong. Rec. 880 (1965)
267	1965	Virginia	Apportionment	111 Cong. Rec. 880 (1965)
268	1965	Texas	Apportionment	111 Cong. Rec. 18476 (1965)
269	1965	Oklahoma	Presidential electors	111 Cong. Rec. 11713 (1965)
270	1965	Mississippi	No reference	111 Cong. Rec. 15764 (1965)
271	1965	New Hampshire	Apportionment	111 Cong. Rec. 12853 (1965)
272	1965	Nebraska	Apportionment	111 Cong. Rec. 24720 (1965)
273	1965	Florida	Apportionment	111 Cong. Rec. 14163 (1965)
274	1965	Florida	Apportionment	111 Cong. Rec. 14308 (1965)
275	1965	Florida	Apportionment	111 Cong. Rec. 14458 (1965)
276	1965	Mississippi	Apportionment	111 Cong. Rec. 15699 (1965)
277	1965	Mississippi	Independent state schools	111 Cong. Rec. 15769 (1965)
278	1965	Oklahoma	Apportionment	111 Cong. Rec. 1216 (1965)
279	1965	Mississippi	Apportionment	111 Cong. Rec. 15769 (1965)
280	1965	Mississippi	Sedition laws	111 Cong. Rec. 15770 (1965)

	Date	State	Subject	Location
281	1965	Oklahoma	Presidential electors	111 Cong. Rec. 11488 (1965)
282	1965	Texas	Apportionment	111 Cong. Rec. 18171 (1965)
283	1965	Oklahoma	Presidential electors	111 Cong. Rec. 11802 (1965)
284	1965	Illinois	Apportionment	111 Cong. Rec. 18999 (1965)
285	1965	Illinois	Apportionment	111 Cong. Rec. 19379 (1965)
286	1965	Illinois	Apportionment	111 Cong. Rec. 19534 (1965)
287	1965	Nebraska	Presidential electors	111 Cong. Rec. 19740 (1965)
288	1965	Nebraska	Presidential electors	111 Cong. Rec. 19775 (1965)
289	1965	Nebraska	Presidential electors	111 Cong. Rec. 20839 (1965)
290	1965	Nebraska	Presidential electors	111 Cong. Rec. 21105 (1965)
291	1965	Nebraska	Apportionment	111 Cong. Rec. 27482 (1965)
292	1965	Kentucky	Apportionment	111 Cong. Rec. 26167 (1965)
293	1965	Kentucky	Apportionment	111 Cong. Rec. 26073 (1965)
294	1965	Ohio	Tax refund	111 Cong. Rec. 25237 (1965)
295	1965	Nebraska	Apportionment	111 Cong. Rec. 24723 (1965)
296	1965	Montana	Apportionment	111 Cong. Rec. 2777 (1965)
297	1965	Alabama	Apportionment	111 Cong. Rec. 3722 (1965)
298	1965	Idaho	Apportionment	111 Cong. Rec. 1216 (1965)
299	1965	Idaho	Apportionment	111 Cong. Rec. 1229 (1965)
300	1965	Idaho	Apportionment	111 Cong. Rec. 1402 (1965)
301	1965	Idaho	Apportionment	111 Cong. Rec. 1437 (1965)
302	1965	Arizona	Apportionment	111 Cong. Rec. 2948 (1965)
303	1965	Georgia	Independent state schools	111 Cong. Rec. 6183 (1965)
304	1965	South Carolina	Apportionment	111 Cong. Rec. 3304 (1965)
305	1965	South Carolina	Independent state schools	111 Cong. Rec. 3304 (1965)
306	1965	Missouri	Apportionment	111 Cong. Rec. 3304 (1965)
307	1965	Illinois	Tax refund	111 Cong. Rec. 14144 (1965)
308	1965	South Carolina	Apportionment/state schools	111 Cong. Rec. 3714 (1965)
309	1965	Minnesota	Apportionment	111 Cong. Rec. 11163 (1965)
310	1965	South Dakota	Apportionment	111 Cong. Rec. 3722 (1965)
311	1965	Maryland	Apportionment	111 Cong. Rec. 5820 (1965)
312	1965	Arkansas	Apportionment	111 Cong. Rec. 7259 (1965)
313	1965	Illinois	Tax refund	111 Cong. Rec. 10016 (1965)
314	1965	Minnesota	Apportionment	111 Cong. Rec. 10673 (1965)
315	1965	Missouri	Apportionment	111 Cong. Rec. 3714 (1965)
316	1965	Minnesota	Apportionment	111 Cong. Rec. 10922 (1965)
317	1965	Arkansas	Apportionment	111 Cong. Rec. 6917 (1965)
318	1965	Georgia	Independent state schools	111 Cong. Rec. 6175 (1965)
319	1965	Georgia	Independent state schools	111 Cong. Rec. 5817 (1965)
320	1965	Maryland	Apportionment	111 Cong. Rec. 5800 (1965)
321	1965	Missouri	Apportionment	111 Cong. Rec. 4395 (1965)
322	1965	Utah	Apportionment	111 Cong. Rec. 4320 (1965)
323	1965	Missouri	Apportionment	111 Cong. Rec. 4083 (1965)
324	1965	South Dakota	Apportionment	111 Cong. Rec. 4064 (1965)
325	1965	South Dakota	Apportionment	111 Cong. Rec. 3990 (1965)
326	1966	Alabama	Apportionment	112 Cong. Rec. 200 (1966)
327	1966	Alabama	Apportionment	112 Cong. Rec. 43 (1966)
328	1966	New Mexico	Apportionment	112 Cong. Rec. 44 (1966)
329	1966	Tennessee	Apportionment	112 Cong. Rec. 44 (1966)

	Date	State	Subject	Location
330	1966	Tennessee	Apportionment	112 Cong. Rec. 199 (1966)
331	1966	New Mexico	Apportionment	112 Cong. Rec. 199 (1966)
332	1967	Illinois	Presidential electors	113 Cong. Rec. 20893 (1967)
333	1967	Colorado	Apportionment	113 Cong. Rec. 18007 (1967)
334	1967	Texas	Tax refund	113 Cong. Rec. 17634 (1967)
335	1967	Georgia	Tax refund	113 Cong. Rec. 11743 (1967)
336	1967	North Dakota	Apportionment	113 Cong. Rec. 11175 (1967)
337	1967	Alabama	Tax refund	113 Cong. Rec. 10118 (1967)
338	1967	Nevada	Apportionment	113 Cong. Rec. 7126 (1967)
339	1967	Indiana	Apportionment	113 Cong. Rec. 6384 (1967)
340	1967	Indiana	Apportionment	113 Cong. Rec. 6766 (1967)
341	1969	New Hampshire	Revenue sharing	115 Cong. Rec. 35587 (1969)
342	1969	Florida	Revenue sharing	115 Cong. Rec. 24116 (1969)
343	1969	Iowa	Apportionment	115 Cong. Rec. 12249 (1969)
344	1969	Iowa	Apportionment	115 Cong. Rec. 11987 (1969)
345	1969	New Hampshire	Revenue sharing	115 Cong. Rec. 36153 (1969)
346	1970	New Jersey	Revenue sharing	116 Cong. Rec. 41879 (1970)
347	1970	Mississippi	School attendance	116 Cong. Rec. 6097 (1970)
348	1970	Mississippi	School attendance	116 Cong. Rec. 6877 (1970)
349	1970	Mississippi	School attendance	116 Cong. Rec. 6221 (1970)
350	1971	Massachusetts	Secular school funding	117 Cong. Rec. 30905 (1971)
351	1971	West Virginia	Revenue sharing	117 Cong. Rec. 541 (1971)
352	1971	West Virginia	Revenue sharing	117 Cong. Rec. 527 (1971)
353	1971	Florida	Revenue sharing	117 Cong. Rec. 2789 (1971)
354	1971	Michigan	School attendance	117 Cong. Rec. 41598 (1971)
355	1971	Massachusetts	Secular school funding	117 Cong. Rec. 30887 (1971)
356	1971	Ohio	Revenue sharing	117 Cong. Rec. 22280 (1971)
357	1971	South Dakota	Revenue sharing	117 Cong. Rec. 5303 (1971)
358	1971	Oregon	Revenue sharing	117 Cong. Rec. 16574 (1971)
359	1971	Delaware	Tax refund	117 Cong. Rec. 3175 (1971)
360	1971	North Dakota	Revenue sharing	117 Cong. Rec. 12210 (1971)
361	1971	North Dakota	Revenue sharing	117 Cong. Rec. 11841 (1971)
362	1971	South Dakota	Revenue sharing	117 Cong. Rec. 4632 (1971)
363	1971	Ohio	Revenue sharing	117 Cong. Rec. 21712 (1971)
364	1971	Massachusetts	Revenue sharing	117 Cong. Rec. 5020 (1971)
365	1972	New York	Secular school funding	118 Cong. Rec. 33047 (1972)
366	1972	Arizona	School prayer	118 Cong. Rec. 11885 (1972)
367	1972	New York	Secular school funding	118 Cong. Rec. 33259 (1972)
368	1972	Florida	Presiding officer of Senate	118 Cong. Rec. 11444 (1972)
369	1972	lowa	Revenue sharing	118 Cong. Rec. 6501 (1972)
370	1972	Iowa	Revenue sharing	118 Cong. Rec. 5282 (1972)
371	1972	Tennessee	School attendance	118 Cong. Rec. 16214 (1972)
372	1972	Florida	Presiding officer of Senate	118 Cong. Rec. 11885 (1972)
373 274	1972	Arizona	School attendance	118 Cong. Rec. 11445 (1972)
374 275	1973	Oklahoma	School attendance	119 Cong. Rec. 14234 (1973)
375 376	1973 1973	Texas New Hampshire	School prayer	119 Cong. Rec. 11446 (1973)
376 377			School prayer School attendance	119 Cong. Rec. 18190 (1973)
377 378	1973	Nevada Nevada	School attendance School attendance	119 Cong. Rec. 17022 (1973)
3/0	1973	Nevada	School attenuance	119 Cong. Rec. 16324 (1973)

	Date	State	Subject	Location
379	1973	Oklahoma	School attendance	119 Cong. Rec. 14428 (1973)
380	1973	Oklahoma	School attendance	119 Cong. Rec. 14421 (1973)
381	1973	Maryland	School prayer	119 Cong. Rec. 14421 (1973)
382	1973	Massachusetts	Secular school funding	119 Cong. Rec. 11835 (1973)
383	1973	Texas	School attendance	119 Cong. Rec. 11515 (1973)
384	1973	Wyoming	Limited taxation	119 Cong. Rec. 1939 (1973)
385	1973	New Jersey	School prayer	119 Cong. Rec. 11446 (1973)
386	1973	Virginia	School attendance	119 Cong. Rec. 10675 (1973)
387	1973	Mississippi	School prayer	119 Cong. Rec. 8689 (1973)
388	1973	Mississippi	School prayer	119 Cong. Rec. 8550 (1973)
389	1973	Virginia	Balanced budget	119 Cong. Rec. 8091 (1973)
390	1973	Mississippi	School attendance	119 Cong. Rec. 8089 (1973)
391	1973	Mississippi	School attendance	119 Cong. Rec. 7282 (1973)
392	1973	Massachusetts	Secular school funding	119 Cong. Rec. 12408 (1973)
393	1973	Virginia	Balanced budget	119 Cong. Rec. 7282 (1973)
394	1975	North Dakota	Balanced budget	125 Cong. Rec. 10144 (1979) (1975)
395	1975	Arkansas	Balanced budget	121 Cong. Rec. 5793 (1975)
396	1975	Virginia	Balanced budget	121 Cong. Rec. 5793 (1975)
397	1975	Mississippi	Balanced budget	121 Cong. Rec. 12168 (1975)
398	1975	Mississippi	Balanced budget	121 Cong. Rec. 12175 (1975)
399	1975	Missouri	Right to life	121 Cong. Rec. 12867 (1975)
400	1975	Missouri	Right to life	121 Cong. Rec. 13433 (1975)
401	1975	Nevada	Unconditional federal funds	121 Cong. Rec. 19117 (1975)
402	1975	Nevada	Unconditional federal funds	121 Cong. Rec. 21065 (1975)
403	1975	Kentucky	School attendance	121 Cong. Rec. 29630 (1975)
404	1975	Virginia	Balanced budget	121 Cong. Rec. 4730 (1975)
405	1975	Kentucky	School attendance	121 Cong. Rec. 27821 (1975)
406	1976	Massachusetts	School attendance	122 Cong. Rec. 9735 (1976)
407	1976	Indiana	Balanced budget	122 Cong. Rec. 931 (1976)
408	1976	Indiana	Balanced budget	122 Cong. Rec. 1400 (1976)
409	1976	Georgia	Balanced budget	122 Cong. Rec. 2740 (1976)
410	1976	Georgia	Balanced budget	122 Cong. Rec. 3161 (1976)
411	1976	South Carolina	Balanced budget	122 Cong. Rec. 4090 (1976)
412	1976	Delaware	Balanced budget	122 Cong. Rec. 4329 (1976)
413	1976	Delaware	Balanced budget	122 Cong. Rec. 5572 (1976)
414	1976	Virginia	Balanced budget	122 Cong. Rec. 8336 (1976)
415	1976	Oklahoma	Unconditional federal funds	122 Cong. Rec. 16814 (1976)
416	1977	Utah	Right to life	123 Cong. Rec. 13301 (1977)
417	1977	Massachusetts	Right to life	123 Cong. Rec. 22002 (1977)
418	1977	Arizona	Balanced budget	123 Cong. Rec. 18873 (1977)
419	1977	Arizona	Balanced budget	123 Cong. Rec. 18869 (1977)
420	1977	Tennessee	Limited judicial terms	123 Cong. Rec. 18419 (1977)
421	1977	Tennessee	Balanced budget	123 Cong. Rec. 18419 (1977)
422	1977	Rhode Island	Right to life	123 Cong. Rec. 15808 (1977)
423	1977	Rhode Island	Right to life	123 Cong. Rec. 15539 (1977)
424	1977	Arkansas	Right to life	123 Cong. Rec. 14825 (1977)
425	1977	Maryland	Balanced budget	123 Cong. Rec. 2545 (1977)
426	1977	Utah	Right to life	123 Cong. Rec. 13471 (1977)
427	1977	Utah	Right to life	123 Cong. Rec. 13057 (1977)

	Date	State	Subject	Location
428	1977	South Dakota	Right to life	123 Cong. Rec. 11888 (1977)
429	1977	South Dakota	Right to life	123 Cong. Rec. 11048 (1977)
430	1977	South Dakota	Right to life	123 Cong. Rec. 11041 (1977)
431	1977	New Jersey	Right to life	123 Cong. Rec. 10481 (1977)
432	1977	New Jersey	Right to life	123 Cong. Rec. 9603 (1977)
433	1977	Virginia	Line item veto	123 Cong. Rec. 9289 (1977)
434	1977	Indiana	Re: 1973 app/right to life	123 Cong. Rec. 4797 (1977)
435	1977	Massachusetts	Right to life	123 Cong. Rec. 20659 (1977)
436	1977	Rhode Island	Right to life	123 Cong. Rec. 14649 (1977)
437	1977	Tennessee	Line item veto	123 Cong. Rec. 22002 (1977)
438	1978	Nebraska	Right to life	124 Cong. Rec. 12544 (1978)
439	1978	Pennsylvania	Right to life	124 Cong. Rec. 11103 (1978)
440	1978	Pennsylvania	Right to life	124 Cong. Rec. 11438 (1978)
441	1978	Pennsylvania	Right to life	124 Cong. Rec. 12011 (1978)
442	1978	Nebraska	Right to life	124 Cong. Rec. 12011 (1978)
443	1978	Oklahoma	Balanced budget	124 Cong. Rec. 12011 (1978)
444	1978	Nebraska	Right to life	124 Cong. Rec. 12215 (1978)
445	1978	Delaware	General	124 Cong. Rec. 1292 (1978)
446	1978	Nebraska	Right to life	124 Cong. Rec. 12397 (1978)
447	1978	Delaware	General	124 Cong. Rec. 1662 (1978)
448	1978	Nebraska	Right to life	124 Cong. Rec. 12694 (1978)
449	1978	Kansas	Balanced budget	124 Cong. Rec. 14193 (1978)
450	1978	Kansas	Balanced budget	124 Cong. Rec. 14584 (1978)
451	1978	South Carolina	Balanced budget	124 Cong. Rec. 14911 (1978)
452	1978	Delaware	Right to life	124 Cong. Rec. 17055 (1978)
453	1978	Delaware	Right to life	124 Cong. Rec. 19683 (1978)
454	1978	Oklahoma	Balanced budget	124 Cong. Rec. 12397 (1978)
455	1978	Tennessee	Limited judicial terms	124 Cong. Rec. 11437 (1978)
456	1979	Arkansas	Balanced budget	125 Cong. Rec. 4372 (1979)
457	1979	Maryland	Balanced budget	125 Cong. Rec. 13387 (1979)
458	1979	Iowa	Balanced budget	125 Cong. Rec. 15227 (1979)
459	1979	Iowa	Balanced budget	125 Cong. Rec. 15792 (1979)
460	1979	Iowa	Balanced budget	125 Cong. Rec. 15852 (1979)
461	1979	New Hampshire	Balanced budget	125 Cong. Rec. 11584 (1979)
462	1979	Georgia	Right to life	125 Cong. Rec. 4372 (1979)
463	1979	New Hampshire	Balanced budget	125 Cong. Rec. 11203 (1979)
464	1979	Nebraska	Balanced budget	125 Cong. Rec. 4152 (1979)
465	1979	Iowa	Balanced budget	125 Cong. Rec. 16351 (1979)
466	1979	Utah	Balanced budget	125 Cong. Rec. 4071 (1979)
467	1979	Arkansas	Balanced budget	125 Cong. Rec. 3906 (1979)
468	1979	Idaho	Balanced budget	125 Cong. Rec. 3657 (1979)
469	1979	New Mexico	Balanced budget	125 Cong. Rec. 3656 (1979)
470	1979	Nevada	Right to life	125 Cong. Rec. 16350 (1979)
471	1979	South Dakota	Balanced budget	125 Cong. Rec. 3656 (1979)
472	1979	Nebraska	Balanced budget	125 Cong. Rec. 4702 (1979)
473	1979	Georgia	Right to life	125 Cong. Rec. 4702 (1979)
474	1979	Pennsylvania	Balanced budget	125 Cong. Rec. 4627 (1979)
475	1979	Utah	Balanced budget	125 Cong. Rec. 4372 (1979)
476	1979	Texas	Balanced budget	125 Cong. Rec. 5223 (1979)

	Date	State	Subject	Location
477	1979	New Hampshire	Balanced budget	125 Cong. Rec. 12888 (1979)
478	1979	Alabama	Balanced budget	125 Cong. Rec. 5368 (1979)
479	1979	Alabama	Balanced budget	125 Cong. Rec. 4861 (1979)
480	1979	Virginia	Balanced budget	125 Cong. Rec. 5450 (1979)
481	1979	Oregon	Balanced budget	125 Cong. Rec. 5953 (1979)
482	1979	Arizona	Balanced budget	125 Cong. Rec. 7920 (1979)
483	1979	Arizona	Balanced budget	125 Cong. Rec. 8108 (1979)
484	1979	Indiana	Balanced budget	125 Cong. Rec. 9188 (1979)
485	1979	Indiana	Balanced budget	125 Cong. Rec. 9368 (1979)
486	1979	Texas	Reaffirmed earlier app for balanced budget	125 Cong. Rec. 134 (1979)
487	1979	Florida	Balanced budget	125 Cong. Rec. 3427 (1979)
488	1979	South Dakota	Balanced budget	125 Cong. Rec. 3427 (1979)
489	1979	New Mexico	Balanced budget	125 Cong. Rec. 3322 (1979)
490	1979	Mississippi	Right to life	125 Cong. Rec. 3196 (1979)
491	1979	North Carolina	Balanced budget	125 Cong. Rec. 3007 (1979)
492	1979	Mississippi	Right to life	125 Cong. Rec. 2936 (1979)
493	1979	Texas	Balanced budget	125 Cong. Rec. 134 (1979)
494	1979	Florida	Balanced budget	125 Cong. Rec. 3007 (1979)
495	1979	Idaho	Balanced budget	125 Cong. Rec. 3522 (1979)
496	1980	Nevada	Balanced budget	126 Cong. Rec. 1104 (1980)
497	1980	Arizona	Unconditional federal funds	126 Cong. Rec. 11389 (1980)
498	1980	Alabama	Right to life	126 Cong. Rec. 10650 (1980)
499	1980	Tennessee	Right to life	126 Cong. Rec. 9765 (1980)
500	1980	Tennessee	Right to life	126 Cong. Rec. 9337 (1980)
501	1980	Arizona	Unconditional federal funds	126 Cong. Rec. 10790 (1980)
502	1980	Nevada	Balanced budget	126 Cong. Rec. 909 (1980)
503	1980	Idaho	Right to life	126 Cong. Rec. 6172 (1980)
504	1980	Idaho	Right to life	126 Cong. Rec. 5768 (1980)
505	1980	South Dakota	Right to life	126 Cong. Rec. 8306 (1980)
506	1980	South Dakota	Right to life	126 Cong. Rec. 8360 (1980)
507	1980	Oklahoma	Right to life	126 Cong. Rec. 8972 (1980)
508	1981	Alabama	Limited judicial terms	127 Cong. Rec. 19856 (1981)
509	1981	North Dakota	Right to life	127 Cong. Rec. 1524 (1981)
510	1981	Delaware	Right to life	127 Cong. Rec. 761 (1981)
511	1982	Alaska	Balanced budget	128 Cong. Rec. 2917 (1982)
512	1982	Alaska	Balanced budget	128 Cong. Rec. 798 (1982)
513	1983	Missouri	Balanced budget	129 Cong. Rec. 10594 (1983)
514	1983	Missouri	Balanced budget	129 Cong. Rec. 4942 (1983)
515	1984	Arizona	Line item veto	130 Cong. Rec. 6892 (1984)
516	1984	Arizona	Line item veto	130 Cong. Rec. 4884 (1984)
517	1986	South Dakota	Line item veto	132 Cong. Rec. 1023 (1986)
518	1986	South Dakota	Line item veto	132 Cong. Rec. 2548 (1986)
519	1987	Utah	Taxation on debts	133 Cong. Rec. 4183 (1987)
520	1987	Utah	Taxation on debts	133 Cong. Rec. 7728 (1987)
521	1989	South Dakota	Limited congressional terms	135 Cong. Rec. 3233 (1989)
522	1989	South Dakota	Limited congressional terms	135 Cong. Rec. 232 (1989)
523	1989	Idaho	Limited taxation	135 Cong. Rec. 998 (1989)

1 2 3 4 5 6 7 8 9 10 11 THE RECESSION MYTH 12 Of the 567 applications submitted to Congress for a convention, forty-13 four are unconstitutional recessions submitted by a total of thirteen 14 states. 1554 Twenty-five of these forty-four unconstitutional recessions have 15 been submitted by a single state--Louisiana. 1555 16

While all recessions by the states are unconstitutional, 1556 it is still

18 interesting to note all of the states' recessions have been submitted on a one

19 to one ratio, i.e., a specific recession "affecting" a specific application.

20 No state has attempted to submit an all-encompassing general recession which

21 would be designed to withdraw some or all applications in a single stroke. 1557

22 The intent of the states regarding the rest of the applications they have sent

 $<sup>^{1554}</sup>$  See infra, TABLE 3-STATE RECESSIONS, p.674.

&lt;sup>1555</sup> Id.

 $^{\rm 1556}$  See supra text accompanying notes 890-920.

This fact is most clearly demonstrated by the "recessions" of the state of Louisiana in which that state in 1992 attempted to recess all its applications. In this single instance where a state has attempted to recess all its applications, the state sent a specific recession for each specific application previously filed.

1	t o	Congrege	cannot	ha	more	alaar	While	+ho	atataa	harro	unconstitutionally	,
_	LO	Congress	Calliot	рe	more	crear.	wiitte	LIIE	States	IIave	unconstitutionari	⌿

- 2 attempted to recess certain applications, they clearly intend that all others
- 3 submitted by them remain in effect.
- 4 Even if it were a not a fact that the recessions are constitutionally
- 5 invalid, as the two-thirds numeric count application threshold required by the
- 6 Constitution was exceeded before any recessions were submitted, 1558 the effect
- 7 of these recession on a convention call would be immaterial. The recessions,
- 8 if they were valid, have reduced the number of states applying for a
- 9 convention by only one state. This would still leave forty-eight states
- 10 applying for a convention to propose amendments. Congress would still be
- 11 obligated to call a convention.

13

TABLE 2-STATES APPLYING FOR A CONVENTION

States Making Application

- 1 Alabama
- 2 Alaska
- 3 Arizona
- 4 Arkansas
- 5 California
- 6 Colorado
- 7 Connecticut 8 Delaware
- 9 Florida
- 10 Georgia
- 11 Idaho
- 12 Illinois
- 13 Indiana
- 14 Iowa
- 15 Kansas
- 16 Kentucky
- 17 Louisiana

TABLE 8-PRE-1912 APPLICATIONS INCLUDING CAPLAN MATERIAL, p.685.

BRIEF IN SUPPORT OF CONVENTION GENERAL BRIEF ARGUMENTS PAGE 673

_

&lt;sup>1558</sup> See infra,

- 18 Maine
- 19 Maryland
- 20 Massachusetts
- 21 Michigan
- 22 Minnesota
- 23 Mississippi
- 24 Missouri
- 25 Montana
- 26 Nebraska
- 27 Nevada
- 28 New Hampshire
- 29 New Jersey
- 30 New Mexico
- 31 New York
- 32 North Carolina
- 33 North Dakota
- 34 Ohio
- 35 Oklahoma
- 36 Oregon
- 37 Pennsylvania
- 38 Rhode Island
- 39 South Carolina
- 40 South Dakota
- 41 Tennessee
- 10 -
- 42 Texas
- 43 Utah 44 Vermont
- 45 Virginia
- 46 Washington
- 47 West Virginia
- 48 Wisconsin
- 49 Wyoming

TABLE 3-STATE RECESSIONS

	Date State	Location	Subject
1	1951 Kentucky	97 Cong. Rec. 10973 (1951)	Limited taxation
2	1952 Illinois	98 Cong. Rec. 742 (1952)	Limited presidential term
3	1952 Illinois	98 Cong. Rec. 742 (1952)	Limited taxation
4	1952 Massachusetts	98 Cong. Rec. 4641 (1952)	Limited taxation
5	1953 Maine	99 Cong. Rec. 4311, 4434 (1953)	Limited taxation
6	1953 Nebraska	99 Cong. Rec. 6163 (1953)	Limited taxation
7	1955 New Jersey	100 Cong. Rec. 11943 (1954);	Limited taxation
		101 Cong. Rec. 99 (1955)
8	1969 Illinois	115 Cong. Rec. 19353, 24111 (1969)	Apportionment.
9	1969 Illinois	115 Cong. Rec. 19353, 24111 (1969)	Apportionment.
10	1969 North Carolina	115 Cong. Rec. 18411, 18714 (1969)	Apportionment.
11	1969 North Carolina	115 Cong. Rec. 18411, 18714 (1969)	Apportionment.

Date State	Location	Subject
12 1970 Kansas	116 Cong. Rec. 11548, 11942 (1970)	Mode of Amendment
13 1970 Kansas	116 Cong. Rec. 11548, 11942 (1970)	Presidential electors
14 1970 Kansas	116 Cong. Rec. 11548,11942 (1970)	Apportionment.
15 1988 Florida	134 Cong. Rec. 8312 (1988)	Balanced budget
16 1988 Florida	134 Cong. Rec. 8312 (1988)	Balanced budget
17 1989 Alabama	135 Cong. Rec. 5485 (1989)	Balanced budget
18 1989 Nevada	135 Cong. Rec. 3528 (1989)	Rescinding ? Application
19 1992 Louisiana	S 529 (28JA) Cong. Rec. Index (1992)	Direct election of senators
20 1992 Louisiana	S 529 (28JA) Cong. Rec. Index (1992)	General (Direct election of senators)
21 1992 Louisiana	S 529 (28JA) Cong. Rec. Index (1992)	Mode of amendment
22 1992 Louisiana	S 529 (28JA) Cong. Rec. Index (1992)	Mode of amendment
23 1992 Louisiana	100 Cong. Rec. 9420 (1954)	Limited taxation
24 1992 Louisiana	S 529 (28JA) Cong. Rec. Index (1992)	Limited taxation
25 1992 Louisiana	S 529 (28JA) Cong. Rec. Index (1992)	Limited taxation
26 1992 Louisiana	S 529 (28JA) Cong. Rec. Index (1992)	Limited taxation
27 1992 Louisiana	S 529 (28JA) Cong. Rec. Index (1992)	Independent state schools
28 1992 Louisiana	S 529 (28JA) Cong. Rec. Index (1992)	Independent state schools
29 1992 Louisiana	S 529 (28JA) Cong. Rec. Index (1992)	Apportionment
30 1992 Louisiana	S 529 (28JA) Cong. Rec. Index (1992)	Taxation of debts
31 1992 Louisiana	S 529 (28JA) Cong. Rec. Index (1992)	Taxation of debts
32 1992 Louisiana	S 529 (28JA) Cong. Rec. Index (1992)	Sedition laws
33 1992 Louisiana	S 529 (28JA) Cong. Rec. Index (1992)	Sedition laws
34 1992 Louisiana	S 529 (28JA) Cong. Rec. Index (1992)	Sedition laws
35 1992 Louisiana	S 529 (28JA) Cong. Rec. Index (1992)	Sedition laws
36 1992 Louisiana	S 529 (28JA) Cong. Rec. Index (1992)	School attendance
37 1992 Louisiana	S 529 (28JA) Cong. Rec. Index (1992)	School attendance
38 1992 Louisiana	S 529 (28JA) Cong. Rec. Index (1992)	Tax refund
39 1992 Louisiana	S 529 (28JA) Cong. Rec. Index (1992)	Revenue sharing
40 1992 Louisiana	S 529 (28JA) Cong. Rec. Index (1992)	Balanced budget
41 1992 Louisiana	S 529 (28JA) Cong. Rec. Index (1992)	Balanced budget
42 1992 Louisiana	S 529 (28JA) Cong. Rec. Index (1992)	Right to life
43 1992 Louisiana	S 529 (28JA) Cong. Rec. Index (1992)	Balanced budget
44 1992 Louisiana	S 529 (28JA) Cong. Rec. Index (1992)	Balanced budget
	THE NORMEDAL / AND NODECTRICAL AD	DITARTONG
	THE "GENERAL" AND "SPECIFIC" AP	LHICKITOMS
The states'	applications can be divided into	o two categories:

applications requesting a convention with no preconditions, so-called

BRIEF IN SUPPORT OF CONVENTION GENERAL BRIEF ARGUMENTS PAGE 675

- 1 "general" 1559 applications; 1560 applications requesting a convention with one or
- 2 more preconditions (such as a specific amendment), so-called "specific"
- 3 applications. 1561 While politically there may be differences between the two
- 4 types of applications, constitutionally there is no distinction as all
- 5 applications have the same intent, i.e., all applications request a
- 6 convention. This is the sole criterion the Constitution establishes 1562 in
- 7 order to have Congress call a convention, that the states request one through

In this assumption, Caplan is wrong. The reason the Founders did not refer to a general convention in the sense of its purpose, i.e., a "wideranging convention", or employ the terms "plenary" or "plenipotentiary", is they did not have to. It should be obvious to all that the Founders didn't like to repeat themselves. Once they had written something they expected others to have enough sense to put all that had been done before together.

The reason the Founders did not put the words "plenary", "general" or "plenipotentiary" in their applications is because they didn't have to. They had placed that language in the Constitution. A convention to propose amendments is empowered to propose amendments. (See U.S. CONST., art. V) It may propose a series of amendments, a single amendment, or no amendments. As the Constitution, either by expressed or implied language, puts no limits on what the convention may propose in the way of amendments, it follows there are no constitutional limits on what the convention may discuss. Further, there are no limits on who may or may not attend. Thus, it is a "general" convention as its intent is to discuss and possibly propose amendments on any subject the convention feels is warranted just as Congress may do in its proposal power. It is also a general convention in that all states may send delegates to attend. In granting the convention this power in the Constitution, to propose amendments, the Founders removed any need to repeat the power or extent of it in any other place or with any other words.

-

&lt;sup>1559</sup> Some scholars have taken issue with the term "general" attempting to maintain the term refers only to the members attending a convention and not to its purpose.

&quot;Some scholars have pointed to early applications requesting a 'general' convention as proof that only wide-ranging assemblies are contemplated by article V. Yet 'general' at the time primarily referred not to deliberative scope but to breadth of attendance. ... A 'general' convention was simply one inviting representatives from all states; a 'partial' convention included delegations from fewer than the total number. A wide-ranging convention was 'plenary' or 'plenipotentiary,' signaling that the delegates have received full deliberative powers from their constituents." Caplan, Constitutional Brinksmanship: Amending the Constitution by National Convention, (1988) p. xx (Footnotes omitted).

 $<sup>^{1560}</sup>$  For an example of these types of applications, see infra APPENDIX B--- EXAMPLES OF VARIOUS APPLICATIONS FILED BY THE STATES FOR A CONVENTION, p.715.  $^{1561}\ Id.$

&lt;sup>1562</sup> U.S. CONST., art. V.

1 applications. Thus the content or "subject" of the application, as well as any

2 other pre-conditions, are constitutionally irrelevant.

3 This suit asserts the only valid method for determining whether Congress

4 must call a convention is a numeric count of the states' applications absent

5 any political content in the applications. If the required two-thirds applying

6 states threshold required by the Constitution is met, Congress must call a

7 convention. Thus, a simple count of the states that have applied proves

8 Congress must call a convention. 1563

9

10 THE "SAME SUBJECT" MYTH

11

13

14

15

16

18

21

12 The other method of "counting" applications proposed by most antagonists to a convention is the content-based discrimination of "same subject." This myth requires that two-thirds of the states must each submit an application to Congress concerning the same subject before Congress is obligated to call a convention. Congress, of course, is the sole discriminator of whether the 17 states' applications satisfy the undefined term of "same subject." This leaves

Congress free to define this vague term so as to discriminate against any 19 number of applications needed to prevent a convention.

This suit asserts if "same subject" is construed as the proper method to "count" applications, this will only permit Congress the ability to veto this 22 provision of the Constitution. The easiest way to prove this is to demonstrate

23 that by using "same subject" Congress is already mandated to call as

TABLE 2-STATES APPLYING FOR A CONVENTION, p.673.

<sup>1563</sup> See infra,

- 1 convention and has not done so. The only conclusion that may be drawn from
- 2 this is Congress merely uses "same subject" as an excuse to veto the
- 3 Constitution, not as a constitutional standard, however incorrect, for which
- 4 it will dutifully issue a call should it be met.
- 5 The presentation of evidence showing "same subject" can be used to
- 6 compel Congress to call a convention is not intended as a concession to any
- 7 argument against the correct interpretation that Congress must call a
- 8 convention when two-thirds of the states numerically apply. Further, it is not
- 9 a concession favoring any unconstitutional pre-conditions such as same
- 10 subject, contemporaneousness, etc. 1564 It is instead intended to show Congress
- 11 cannot use this argument to avoid calling a convention, that no matter which
- 12 version is chosen by the Court, the original intent of the Founding Fathers or
- 13 the politically convenient "revisionist" interpretation, a convention must
- 14 nevertheless be called.

COMBINING GENERAL AND SPECIFIC APPLICATIONS

- 18 The proof begins by combining the applications from the states that have
- 19 called for a "general" convention and those applications from the states that
- 20 have applied for a "general" convention together with a particular amendment
- 21 proposal. 1565 It is reasonable to merge "general", "general with specific

&lt;sup>1564</sup> See supra text accompanying notes 437,482-490,506-521.

&lt;sup>1565</sup> See infra,

TABLE 4-GENERAL APPLICATIONS, NON SPECIFIC, p.680;

TABLE 5-GENERAL APPLICATIONS, INCLUDING SPECIFIC, p.680.

- 1 subject", and "specific subject" applications (where both types of "specific
- 2 subject" are the same) to arrive at the total number of "specific (or same)
  - subject" applications made by the states as:
    - 1. This combination of applications is implied by the state action in the applications concerning direct election for senators as the states requested a general convention while simultaneously applying for the specific subject of the direct election of senators 1566;
    - 2. The applications for a general convention envision all possible topics, including a topic proposed by other applications, and thus it is a reasonable inference that the intent of the states in requesting a general convention assents to a convention that may discuss any amendment subject in addition to the specific subject mentioned in the particular application; 1567
    - 3. If it is appropriate for those favoring "same subject" to ignore the "general" portion of an application so as to defeat the calling of a convention by concluding less than a two-thirds threshold has been met, then the reverse must also apply: that "same subject" may be ignored leaving only the "general" applications intact in order to conclude the two-thirds threshold has been met. 1568
    - Table 4 shows those states that have submitted general applications to
- 21 Congress with no specific provisions included in the application:

<sup>1566</sup> See supra,

3

4 5

6

7

8

10

11

12

13

14 15

16

17

18 19 20

22

TABLE 1-STATE APPLICATIONS FOR A CONVENTION, p.661.

However this does not mean that a strict numeric count of states is usurped by "same subject". In any matter involving interpretation of the Constitution, particularly where the meaning of the words in the Constitution require no interpretation, the intent of the Founding Fathers must take precedence over any modern, politically motivated "rendition" of constitutional intent. As the Founders were clear in their intent (Id.) that applications by the states should be counted numerically, this intent must negate any "same subject" interpretation.

The sole purpose in exploring "same subject" is to demonstrate the tyranny of Congress by proving that even when using the improper constitutional interpretation of "same subject", the states have fulfilled even this extreme unconstitutional standard, and thus Congress must call a convention.

BRIEF IN SUPPORT OF CONVENTION GENERAL BRIEF ARGUMENTS PAGE 679

<sup>1567</sup> See supra text accompanying note 945.

&lt;sup>1568</sup> As the Court has ruled any interpretation of constitutional provisions must be made in order to "effectuate" them, (See supra text accompanying notes 551,784,1089,1276,1311,1373,1394.) the interpretation of "same subject" clearly must be held to this standard. Thus, if a reasonable method exists whereby the applications filed by the states using "same subject" can cause a convention to be called, this interpretation must be prevail. Under no circumstances can this interpretation can be ignored in order to prevent the calling of the convention as the Founders clearly intended that Congress must call if the states apply. (See supra text accompanying notes 505-514).

TABLE 4-GENERAL APPLICATIONS, NON SPECIFIC

	State	Date
1	New York	1789
2	Virginia	1789
3	Rhode Island	1790
4	Texas	1899
5	Missouri	1907
6	Kansas	1907
7	Wisconsin	1911
8	Delaware	1978

- 2 Table 5 shows those states that have submitted applications for a
- 3 general convention in addition to those states that have requested a general
- 4 convention and a specific subject application in the same application:

5

6

1

TABLE 5-GENERAL APPLICATIONS, INCLUDING SPECIFIC

Ctata	Data
State	Date
1 Virginia	1789
2 New York	1789
3 Rhode Island	1790
4 Texas	1899
5 Colorado	1901
6 Washington	1903
7 Illinois	1903
8 Kansas	1907
9 Missouri	1907
10 North Carolina	1907
11 Indiana	1907
12 Nevada	1907
13 Louisiana	1907
14 Oklahoma	1908
15 lowa	1909
16 Wisconsin	1911
17 Montana	1911
18 Delaware	1978

- 8 This combination of general and general-specific applications is all
- 9 that is required to prove "same subject." Putting these "general" applications

- 1 with the specific subjects applied for by the states 1569 shows that several
- 2 subjects have exceeded the two-thirds threshold (assuming "same subject") and
- 3 thus mandating Congress call a convention, specifically one that discusses the
- 4 subjects so noted together with any other subject the convention desires,
- 5 i.e., a general convention. Opponents to a convention cannot have it both
- 6 ways: maintaining Congress must call a convention if "same subject" is
- 7 satisfied yet ignoring those applications that the states have submitted which
- 8 agree to any subject at a convention, thus becoming a proxy vote for any
- 9 subject another state wishes to discuss.

11

TABLE 6-SAME SUBJECT APPLICATIONS, PART I

Apportionment Balanced Budget Direct Election Of Limited Taxation Senators

This application number not only satisfies the two-thirds application requirement, but the ratification standard as well. Hence, it is a reasonable assumption to state that at least two subjects, "Balanced Budget" and "Repeal of Federal Income Tax", should not only have triggered a convention, but have become ratified amendments. Interestingly, as these two subjects would directly limit the "life blood" of the national government, i.e., taxes, it may explain why Congress has refused to call a convention to propose amendments.

However, this suit is not concerned with the selfish political motivations of Congress. It deals with the constitutional procedure thus far ignored by Congress. Thus, this material is supplied only to prove that "same subject" has been satisfied according to several independent sources.

<sup>1569</sup> All materials in TABLE 6—SAME SUBJECT APPLICATIONS, PART I, p. 681 and TABLE 6—SAME SUBJECT APPLICATIONS, PART II, p.682 are derived from TABLE 1—STATE APPLICATIONS FOR A CONVENTION, p.661 which in turn is derived from the work of Senior United States District Court Judge Bruce Van Sickle except for the final subject, "Limited Taxation". The title marked with an (*) denotes material from Weber-Perry who did not provide congressional citations and thus no evidentiary proof of their assertion that thirty-five states had applied for a convention to repeal the 16th Amendment to the Constitution. Rather, they copied, without citation or credit, the ABA Report on the Constitutional Convention. See infra text APPENDIX C---1973 REPORT OF THE ABA SPECIAL CONSTITUTIONAL CONVENTION STUDY COMMITTEE, Appendix B, p.59. The general applications cited in Tables 4 and 5 were added to the thirty-five applying states cited by Weber-Perry which merely serves to raise the number of applying states to thirty-nine.

Apportionment Balanced Budget Direct Election Of Limited Ta Senators	axation
1 Alabama 1 Alabama 1 Arkansas 1 Alabama
2 Arizona 2 Alaska 2 Colorado 2 Arkansas
3 Arkansas 3 Arizona 3 Delaware 3 Colorado
4 Colorado 4 Arkansas 4 Idaho 4 Delaware
5 Delaware 5 Colorado 5 Illinois 5 Florida
6 Florida 6 Delaware 6 Indiana 6 Georgia
7 Idaho 7 Florida 7 Iowa 7 Idaho
8 Illinois 8 Georgia 8 Kansas 8 Illinois
9 Indiana 9 Idaho 9 Kentucky 9 Indiana
10 Iowa 10 Illinois 10 Louisiana 10 Iowa
11 Kansas 11 Indiana 11 Maine 11 Kansas
12 Kentucky 12 Iowa 12 Michigan 12 Louisiana
13 Louisiana 13 Kansas 13 Minnesota 13 Maine
14 Maryland 14 Louisiana 14 Missouri 14 Maryland
15 Minnesota 15 Maryland 15 Montana 15 Michigan
16 Mississippi 16 Mississippi 16 Nebraska 16 Missouri
17 Missouri 17 Missouri 17 Nevada 17 Montana
18 Montana 18 Montana 18 New Jersey 18 Nevada
19 Nebraska 19 Nebraska 19 New York 19 New Ham	pshire
20 Nevada 20 Nevada 20 North Carolina 20 New Mexi	СО
21 New Hampshire 21 New Hampshire 21 Oklahoma 21 New York
22 New Mexico 22 New Mexico 22 Oregon 22 North Car	olina
23 New York 23 New York 23 Pennsylvania 23 Oklahoma	a
24 North Carolina 24 North Carolina 24 Rhode Island 24 Pennsylva	ania
25 North Dakota 25 North Dakota 25 South Dakota 25 Rhode Isla	and
26 Oklahoma 26 Oklahoma 26 Tennessee 26 South Car	olina
27 Rhode Island 27 Oregon 27 Texas 27 Texas
28 South Carolina 28 Pennsylvania 28 Utah 28 Utah
29 South Dakota 29 Rhode Island 29 Virginia 29 Virginia
30 Tennessee 30 South Carolina 30 Washington 30 Washington	on
31 Texas 31 South Dakota 31 Wisconsin 31 Wisconsir	1
32 Utah 32 Tennessee 32 Wyoming
33 Virginia 33 Texas
34 Washington 34 Utah
35 Wisconsin 35 Virginia
36 Wyoming 36 Washington
37 Wisconsin
38 Wyoming

2

TABLE 6-SAME SUBJECT APPLICATIONS, PART II

Right To Life	Anti-Polygamy	Revenue Sharing	Limited Taxation*
1 Alabama	1 Colorado	1 Colorado	1 Alabama
2 Arkansas	2 Delaware	2 Delaware	2 Arkansas
3 Colorado	3 Illinois	3 Florida	3 Colorado
4 Delaware	4 Indiana	4 Illinois	4 Delaware
5 Georgia	5 Iowa	5 Indiana	5 Florida

Limited Taxation* Right To Life Anti-Polygamy Revenue Sharing 6 Idaho 6 Kansas 6 Georgia 6 lowa 7 Louisiana 7 Idaho 7 Illinois 7 Kansas 8 Indiana 8 Michigan 8 Louisiana 8 Illinois 9 Iowa 9 Missouri 9 Massachusetts 9 Indiana 10 Kansas 10 Montana 10 Missouri 10 Iowa 11 Louisiana 11 Nebraska 11 Montana 11 Kansas 12 Massachusetts 12 Nevada 12 Nevada 12 Kentucky 13 Mississippi 13 New York 13 New Hampshire 13 Louisiana 14 Missouri 14 North Carolina 14 New Jersey 14 Maine 15 Montana 15 Ohio 15 New York 15 Maryland 16 Nebraska 16 Oklahoma 16 North Carolina 16 Massachusetts 17 Nevada 17 Oregon 17 North Dakota 17 Michigan 18 New Jersey 18 Rhode Island 18 Ohio 18 Mississippi 19 New York 19 South Carolina 19 Oklahoma 19 Missouri 20 North Carolina 20 South Dakota 20 Oregon 20 Montana 21 North Dakota 21 Tennessee 21 Rhode Island 21 Nebraska 22 Oklahoma 22 Texas 22 South Dakota 22 Nevada 23 Pennsylvania 23 Vermont 23 Texas 23 New Hampshire 24 Rhode Island 24 Virginia 24 Virginia 24 New Jersey 25 Washington 25 South Dakota 25 Washington 25 New Mexico 26 Tennessee 26 Wisconsin 26 West Virginia 26 New York 27 Texas 27 Wisconsin 27 North Carolina 28 Utah 28 Oklahoma 29 Virginia 29 Pennsylvania 30 Washington 30 Rhode Island 31 Wisconsin 31 South Carolina 32 South Dakota 33 Tennessee 34 Texas 35 Utah 36 Virginia 37 Washington 38 Wisconsin 39 Wyoming

- 2 Thus, at least three subjects--apportionment, balanced budget and
- 3 limited taxation (repeal of the 16th Amendment)--have satisfied the
- 4 unconstitutional requirement of "same subject" thus mandating even under this
- 5 unconstitutional requirement that Congress must call a convention.
- 6 However the matter does not stop there with "same subject." It is
- 7 important not only to establish that "same subject" exists but also how long

- it has existed so as to truly demonstrate the extent to which Congress has 1
- maintained its tyrannical veto of the Constitution. One need look no further 2
- than to material written by Russell Caplan, an attorney for the Department of 3
- 4 Justice.
- 5 In his book, 1570 Caplan presents evidence of applications made by the
- 6 states in the Nineteenth Century. Caplan, while providing state citations for
- 7 his material, fails to provide congressional citings of these applications
- 8 thus raising the question of whether they were indeed submitted to Congress.
- 9 However, as "same subject" is not the correct interpretation of state
- 10 applications in compelling Congress to call a convention, and the only purpose
- 11 of their presentation is to demonstrate under this false interpretation that

Congress has been obligated to call a convention to propose amendments for 12

- nearly 100 years, the veracity of this material will not be challenged. 13
- The applications by the states previous to 1900 cited by Caplan are as 14
- follows: 1571 15

16

17 TABLE 7-CAPLAN MATERIAL, PRE-1900 APPLICATIONS

Date	State		Subject	Location
1 1789	Virginia	General		1 Annals of Cong. 258-61 (1789)
2 1789	New York	General		1 Annals of Cong. 258-61 (1789)
3 1832	South Carolina	General		No Cong. Reference
4 1832	Georgia	General		Senate Journal, 22 Cong. 2d 65-66 (1833)
5 1833	Alabama	General		No Cong. Reference
6 1860	Delaware	Slavery		No Cong. Reference
7 1860	Arkansas	Slavery		No Cong. Reference

 $^{\rm 1570}$  See supra text accompanying note 1547.

<sup>1571</sup> Where Caplan has provided a congressional citation of an application not provided elsewhere, specifically the 1789 general application of New York, this application has been incorporated in the Van Sickle material shown in Tables 1,2, 4 and 5.

	Date	State	;	Subject	Location
8	1860	Tennessee	Slavery		No Cong. Reference
9	1861	Indiana	Slavery		No Cong. Reference
10	1861	New Jersey	Slavery		No Cong. Reference
11	1861	Illinois	Slavery		No Cong. Reference
12	1861	Ohio	Slavery		No Cong. Reference
13	1861	Kentucky	Slavery		No Cong. Reference
14	1863	Delaware	Slavery		No Cong. Reference
15	1863	Kentucky	Slavery		No Cong. Reference
16	1864	Oregon	Slavery		No Cong. Reference
17	1867	North Carolina	Emancipati	ion	No Cong. Reference
18	1893	Nebraska	Direct elect	tion of Senators	No Cong. Reference

- If the general applications made by states before  $1900^{1572}$  cited by
- 2 Caplan are combined with "same subject" applications cited by Judge Van
- 3 Sickle, the following table results:

5

TABLE 8-PRE-1912 APPLICATIONS INCLUDING CAPLAN MATERIAL

	Date	State	Subject	Location	# of States In Union	2/3rds Req.
1	1789	(New York)	General	1 Annals of Congress 248 (J Gales ed. 1789)	12	9
2	1789	Virginia	General	1 Annals of Congress 248 (J Gales ed. 1789)	12	9
3	1790	Rhode Island	General	1 Annals of Congress 1103 (J Gales ed. 1790)	13	9
4	1832	(South Carolina)	General	No Cong. Reference	24	17
5	1832	(Georgia)	General	Senate Journal, 22 Cong. 2d 65-66 (1833)	24	17
6	1833	(Alabama)	General	No Cong. Reference	24	17
7	1899	Texas	General	33 Cong. Rec. 219 (1899)	42	29
8	1901	Arkansas	Direct election of senators	45 Cong. Rec. 7113 (1910) (1901)	45	30
9	1901	Colorado	General (Direct election of senators)	45 Cong. Rec. 7113 (1910) (1901)	45	30
10	1901	Idaho	Direct election of senators	45 Cong. Rec. 7114 (1910) (1901)	45	30
11	1901	Michigan	Direct election of	35 Cong. Rec. 117 (1901)	45	30

 $<sup>^{1572}</sup>$  This includes the addition of four states: New York, 1789; Alabama, 1833; Georgia, 1832 and South Carolina, 1832. Where these states are added in other tables, they are surrounded by parentheses ().

BRIEF IN SUPPORT OF CONVENTION GENERAL BRIEF ARGUMENTS PAGE 685

Date	State	Subject	Location			# of States In Union	2/3rds Req.
12 1001	Minnesota	senators Direct election of	24 Cong	Rec. 2560 (1	001)	45	30
12 1901	Milliesota	senators	34 Cong.	Nec. 2500 (1	901)	45	30
13 1901	Montana	Direct election of senators	35 Cong.	Rec. 208 (19	001)	45	30
14 1901	Nebraska	Direct election of senators	35 Cong.	Rec. 1779 (1	901)	45	30
15 1901	Nevada	Direct election of senators	35 Cong.	Rec. 112 (19	001)	45	30
16 1901	Oregon	Direct election of senators	35 Cong.	Rec. 117 (19	001)	45	30
17 1901	Tennessee	Direct election of senators	35 Cong.	Rec. 2344 (1	901)	45	30
18 1901	Pennsylvania	Direct election of senators	45 Cong.	Rec. 7118 (1	910) (1901)	45	30
19 1902	Kentucky	Direct election of senators	45 Cong.	Rec. 7115 (1	910) (1902)	45	30
20 1903	Illinois	General (Direct election of senators)	45 Cong.	Rec. 7114 (1	910) (1903)	45	30
21 1903	Utah	Direct election of senators	45 Cong.	Rec. 7119 (1	910) (1903)	45	30
22 1903	Washington	General (Direct election of senators)	45 Cong.	Rec. 7119 (1	910) (1903)	45	30
23 1903	Wisconsin	Direct election of senators	37 Cong.	Rec. 276 (19	003)	45	30
24 1904	Iowa	Direct election of senators	38 Cong.	Rec. 4959 (1	904)	45	30
25 1905	Missouri	Direct election of senators	40 Cong.	Rec. 138 (19	005)	45	30
26 1907	Delaware	Anti-polygamy	41 Cong.	Rec. 3011 (1	907)	46	31
27 1907	Indiana	Direct election of senators	45 Cong.	Rec. 7114 (1	910) (1907)	46	31
28 1907	Kansas	General	41 Cong.	Rec. 3072 (1	907)	46	31
29 1907	Louisiana	Direct election of senators	42 Cong.	Rec. 5906 (1	908) (1907)	46	31
30 1907	New Jersey	Direct election of senators	42 Cong.	Rec. 164 (19	007)	46	31
31 1907	North Carolina	General (Direct election of senators)	45 Cong.	Rec. 7117 (1	910) (1907)	46	31
32 1907	South Dakota	Direct election of senators	41 Cong.	Rec. 2497 (1	907)	46	31
33 1908	Oklahoma	General (Direct election of senators)	42 Cong.	Rec. 894 (19	008)	46	31
34 1911	Maine	Direct election of senators	46 Cong.	Rec. 4280 (1	911)	46	31
35 1911	Ohio	Anti-polygamy	47 Cong.	Rec. 661 (19	111)	46	31

As shown by the above table, a total of thirty-five applications were 1 submitted by the states between 1789 and 1911. No recessions were submitted by 2

- any state, thus removing any question of continuing effect, intent or 3
- validity. 1573 For the purpose of showing the fallacy of "same subject", the 4
- 5 applications for "anti-polygamy" will not be "counted." 1574 Under this
- 6 fallacy, this leaves thirty-three applications from thirty-three states
- 7 applying either for a general convention or the "same subject" of the direct
- election of senators. 1575 8
- 9 The critical point is what was obviously ignored by Congress. While the
- 10 two-thirds threshold today is thirty-four states (two-thirds of the fifty
- 11 states now in the union) this was not always the case in the past. The reason
- is obvious. There were not always fifty states in the Union. Thus, the number 12
- 13 of states required to fulfill the two-thirds threshold for a convention to
- propose amendments call was less than it is today. 14

 $^{\rm 1573}$  See supra, TABLE 3-STATE RECESSIONS, p.674.

Under the precepts of "same subject" this discrimination is valid. However, as "same subject" is constitutionally invalid as it contradicts the clear intent of the Founding Fathers, all thirty-five applications should be counted toward determining whether a convention must be called by Congress. The fact Congress submitted a proposed amendment on this subject to the states for ratification, and that this proposal was ratified by the states as the 17th Amendment in 1913, is of no consequence in regards to the calling of the convention to propose amendments. Article V does not provide that if Congress submits an amendment for a subject, it can ignore or otherwise veto the applications of the states for a convention. It is obligated to call the convention anyway. While both methods of amendatory procedure obviously deal with amending the Constitution, they are two separate procedures for doing so. Thus, the actions of Congress have nothing to do with the actions of a convention. There is nothing to say, for example, that the states might not have written a different amendment proposal in a convention than the one submitted by Congress, or that they might not have addressed other subjects ignored by Congress.

1 As Table 8 shows, in 1911 there were only forty-six states in the Union.

2 The two-thirds threshold required to compel a convention at that time was only

- 3 31 states. Thus, even under "same subject", combining "general" applications
- 4 which clearly are made with the intent of applying for any subject with those
- 5 of a particular subject, in this case, direct election of senators, thirty-
- 6 three states had applied by 1911, thus more than satisfying the constitutional
- 7 requirement. Congress will have to look elsewhere for an excuse not to call a
- 8 convention.
- 9 By no stretch of implication or interpretation does the Constitution
- 10 relieve Congress of its mandated obligation to call a convention after some
- 11 period of time; the obligation is ongoing and continuing on Congress. 1576 This
- 12 being the case according to Caplan, an attorney for the United States
- 13 Department of Justice, and Senior Federal District Judge Van Sickle, Congress
- 14 has been obligated to call a convention to propose amendments even under the
- 15 unconstitutional standard of "same subject" since 1911. 1577

(Footnote Continued Next Page)

&lt;sup>1576</sup> As the Founding Fathers intended that "[T]he national rulers...will have no option upon the subject" in the calling of a convention to propose amendments, it follows this intent of "no option" certainly must include prohibiting Congress not calling a convention simply by allowing time to pass without taking any action on the matter. See supra text accompanying notes 505-514.

As observed by Senior United States District Court Judge Van Sickle:
"At this time more than two-thirds of the states have petitioned for a convention for proposing amendments. ...[A] total of forty-six states have applied for a convention for the purpose of proposing a particular amendment to the states for ratification. Significantly, these applications from the forty-six states do not state that the convention can only be held for the reason listed; nor do these applications contain any provision that the application is withdrawn or invalid if the convention expands its scope beyond the topic listed. Thirty-three states have submitted applications that ostensibly limit the convention to lonely the topic listed in the application, while a set of eleven states have submitted applications contain a provision that the application is withdraw or invalid if the convention expands its scope beyond the topic listed. As described above, such attempts by states to

- 1 If the Caplan applications are reintroduced into the "same subject"
- 2 applications previously shown in Tables 6, parts I and II, there is no change
- 3 in what subjects have satisfied "same subject" except that the number of
- 4 states applying for apportionment is increased by one state, the direct
- 5 election of senators is increased by three states, right-to-life is increased
- 6 by one state, anti-polygamy is increased by three states, and revenue sharing
- 7 is increased by three states.

9 TABLE 9-SAME SUBJECT APPLICATIONS INCLUDING CAPLAN, PART I

Apportionment	Balanced Budget	Direct Election Of Senators	Limited Taxation
1 Alabama	1 Alabama	1 (Alabama)	1 Alabama
2 Arizona	2 Alaska	2 Arkansas	2 Arkansas
3 Arkansas	3 Arizona	3 Colorado	3 Colorado
4 Colorado	4 Arkansas	4 Delaware	4 Delaware
5 Delaware	5 Colorado	5 (Georgia)	5 Florida
6 Florida	6 Delaware	6 Idaho	6 Georgia
7 (Georgia)	7 Florida	7 Illinois	7 Idaho
8 Idaho	8 Georgia	8 Indiana	8 Illinois
9 Illinois	9 Idaho	9 Iowa	9 Indiana
10 Indiana	10 Illinois	10 Kansas	10 Iowa
11 lowa	11 Indiana	11 Kentucky	11 Kansas
12 Kansas	12 Iowa	12 Louisiana	12 Louisiana
13 Kentucky	13 Kansas	13 Maine	13 Maine
14 Louisiana	14 Louisiana	14 Michigan	14 Maryland
15 Maryland	15 Maryland	15 Minnesota	15 Michigan
16 Minnesota	16 Mississippi	16 Missouri	16 Missouri
17 Mississippi	17 Missouri	17 Montana	17 Montana
18 Missouri	18 Montana	18 Nebraska	18 Nevada
19 Montana	19 Nebraska	19 Nevada	19 New Hampshire
20 Nebraska	20 Nevada	20 New Jersey	20 New Mexico

limit the convention method are invalid and without legal substance. Thus, each of the applications are rightfully considered valid applications for a convention to propose amendments. These applications derive from forty-nine states. Congress is there presently remiss in its constitutionally mandated obligation to call a convention for proposing amendments." Van Sickle, Boughey, "A Lawful and Peaceful Revolution: Article V and Congress' Present Duty to Call a Convention for Proposing Amendments", 14 HAM. L. REV. (1990). (Footnotes omitted).

Apportionment	Balanced Budget	Direct Election Of Senators	Limited Taxation
21 Nevada	21 New Hampshire	21 New York	21 New York
22 New Hampshire	22 New Mexico	22 North Carolina	22 North Carolina
23 New Mexico	23 New York	23 Oklahoma	23 Oklahoma
24 New York	24 North Carolina	24 Oregon	24 Pennsylvania
25 North Carolina	25 North Dakota	25 Pennsylvania	25 Rhode Island
26 North Dakota	26 Oklahoma	26 Rhode Island	26 South Carolina
27 Oklahoma	27 Oregon	27 (South Carolina)	27 Texas
28 Rhode Island	28 Pennsylvania	28 South Dakota	28 Utah
29 South Carolina	29 Rhode Island	29 Tennessee	29 Virginia
30 South Dakota	30 South Carolina	30 Texas	30 Washington
31 Tennessee	31 South Dakota	31 Utah	31 Wisconsin
32 Texas	32 Tennessee	32 Virginia	32 Wyoming
33 Utah	33 Texas	33 Washington
34 Virginia	34 Utah	34 Wisconsin
35 Washington	35 Virginia
36 Wisconsin	36 Washington
37 Wyoming	37 Wisconsin
	38 Wyoming

TABLE 9-SAME SUBJECT APPLICATIONS INCLUDING CAPLAN, PART II

Right To Life	Anti-Polygamy	Revenue Sharing	Limited Taxation*
1 Alabama	1 (Alabama)	1 (Alabama)	1 Alabama
2 Arkansas	2 Colorado	2 Colorado	2 Arkansas
3 Colorado	3 Delaware	3 Delaware	3 Colorado
4 Delaware	4 (Georgia)	4 Florida	4 Delaware
5 Georgia	5 Illinois	5 (Georgia)	5 Florida
6 Idaho	6 Indiana	6 Illinois	6 Georgia
7 Illinois	7 Iowa	7 Indiana	7 Idaho
8 Indiana	8 Kansas	8 Iowa	8 Illinois
9 Iowa	9 Louisiana	9 Kansas	9 Indiana
10 Kansas	10 Michigan	10 Louisiana	10 lowa
11 Louisiana	11 Missouri	11 Massachusetts	11 Kansas
12 Massachusetts	12 Montana	12 Missouri	12 Kentucky
13 Mississippi	13 Nebraska	13 Montana	13 Louisiana
14 Missouri	14 Nevada	14 Nevada	14 Maine
15 Montana	15 New York	15 New Hampshire	15 Maryland
16 Nebraska	16 North Carolina	16 New Jersey	16 Massachusetts
17 Nevada	17 Ohio	17 New York	17 Michigan
18 New Jersey	18 Oklahoma	18 North Carolina	18 Mississippi
19 New York	19 Oregon	19 North Dakota	19 Missouri
20 North Carolina	20 Rhode Island	20 Ohio	20 Montana
21 North Dakota	21 South Carolina	21 Oklahoma	21 Nebraska
22 Oklahoma	22 South Dakota	22 Oregon	22 Nevada
23 Pennsylvania	23 Tennessee	23 Rhode Island	23 New Hampshire
24 Rhode Island	24 Texas	24 (South Carolina)	24 New Jersey
25 (South Carolina)	25 Vermont	25 South Dakota	25 New Mexico

BRIEF IN SUPPORT OF CONVENTION GENERAL BRIEF ARGUMENTS PAGE 690

1

Right To Life	Anti-Polygamy	Revenue Sharing	Limited Taxation*
26 South Dakota	26 Virginia	26 Texas	26 New York
27 Tennessee	27 Washington	27 Virginia	27 North Carolina
28 Texas	28 Wisconsin	28 Washington	28 Oklahoma
29 Utah		29 West Virginia	29 Pennsylvania
30 Virginia		30 Wisconsin	30 Rhode Island
31 Washington			31 South Carolina
32 Wisconsin			32 South Dakota
			33 Tennessee
			34 Texas
			35 Utah
			36 Virginia
			37 Washington
			38 Wisconsin
			39 Wyoming

2

CONGRESS' FAILURE TO CALL A CONVENTION

- 4 Once two-thirds of the legislatures have requested a convention by
- 5 application, Congress' duty to call a convention is immediate and
- 6 continuing. 1578 The existence of applications from two-thirds of the state
- 7 legislatures creates and demands congressional action. 1579 Once that point is
- 8 reached, the dictates of Article V take precedence, and the states have no
- 9 power to withdraw their applications or to curtail the focus of the
- 10 convention. 1580 Nor is it appropriate to consider Congress' failure to call a
- 11 convention to propose amendments as placing some standard of
- 12 contemporaneousness upon the requirements of Article V. The Constitution--

&lt;sup>1578</sup> See supra,

TABLE 1-STATE APPLICATIONS FOR A CONVENTION, p.661; TABLE 2-STATES APPLYING FOR A CONVENTION, p.673.

&lt;sup>1579</sup> See supra text accompanying notes 506-514.

Further, they possess no constitutional power to withdraw their application previous to the two-thirds threshold. See supra text accompanying notes 890-920,1352.

1	especially	Article	Vcannot	be	vetoed	by	an	unlawful	inaction	of	Congress
---	------------	---------	---------	----	--------	----	----	----------	----------	----	----------

- 2 Allegations of a requirement of contemporaneousness cannot permit the dictates
- 3 of the Constitution to be ignored, nor can the requirements of our
- 4 Constitution be "overruled" by such bogus concepts of "same subject",
- 5 "protectionism," or the absurd assertion that Congress' laches is self-
- 6 justifying. No part of our Constitution can be vetoed by Congress. 1581

8

9 SUMMATION

10

11 THE COURT'S DILEMMA

- 13 The Court faces an interesting dilemma should it determine that the
- 14 meaning and intent of Article V convention applications is "same subject",
- 15 i.e., that two-thirds of the several state legislatures must apply for the
- 16 same amendatory subject before Congress is obligated to call a convention and

&quot;The constitution is either a superior, paramount law, unchangeable by ordinary means, or it is on a level with ordinary legislative acts, and, like other acts, is alterable when the legislature shall please to alter it.

&quot;If the former part of the alternative be true, then a legislative act contrary to the constitution is not law: if the latter part be true, then written constitutions are absurd attempts, on the part of the people, to limit a power in its own nature illimitable.

&quot;Certainly all those who have framed written constitutions contemplate them as forming the fundamental and paramount law of the nation, and consequently, the theory of every such government must be, that an act of the legislature, repugnant to the constitution, is void." Marbury v. Madison, 5 U.S. 137 (1803).

&quot;Should Congress, in the execution of its powers, adopt measures which are prohibited by the constitution; or should Congress, under the pretext of executing its powers, pass law for the accomplishment of objects not entrusted to the government; it would become the painful duty of this tribunal, should a case requiring such a decision come before it, to say that such an act was not the law of the land." McCulloch v. Maryland, 17 U.S. 316 (1819).

- 1 that Congress possesses the discretionary power to determine whether or not
- 2 the states, if ever, have satisfied the "same subject" criterion.
- 3 This suit requests the Court to compel Congress to call a convention
- 4 because the states' applications have satisfied the meaning and intent of
- 5 Article V. Without an action properly brought before the Court, the Court is
- 6 powerless to act. Therefore, only by affirming the request of this suit can
- 7 the Court act in the matter at all. Should the Court find that Article V
- 8 applications must satisfy a congressionally defined "same subject" criterion,
- 9 the effect of its order would be to compel Congress to call a convention by
- 10 finding Congress' current laches unconstitutional, yet simultaneously provide
- 11 a means for Congress to veto the Court order by simply determing the
- 12 applications do not satisfy Congress' own definition of "same subject." This
- 13 clearly establishes a precedent that would de facto overrule the judicial
- 14 principles established in Marbury.
- 15 If, on the other hand, the Court defines Article V applications as a
- 16 numeric count as urged by this suit, i.e., that upon a specific number of
- 17 applications submitted by the states, regardless of content, Congress is
- 18 obligated to call a convention with no discretion in the matter as the clear
- 19 language of the Founders states, then Congress, having no discretion, cannot
- 20 veto the order of the Court in any manner. Thus, there is no threat to the
- 21 powers of judicial review as set forth in Marbury. Of course, Congress could
- 22 exercise its incidental regulatory power to overthrow the state legislatures,
- 23 a power that the Court has already approved in Coleman, thus defeating the
- 24 Court's lawful order, but it will be up to the wisdom of Congress to take this

1	fateful	step.	The	Court	can	only	interpret	the	Constitution;	respect	for	its
2	rulings	is th	e on	ly lim:	it o	n raw	political	amb:	ition.

The third option would be for the Court to take no action and defeat the 3 plaintiff's motion. This result would affirm the de facto right of Congress to 4 5 veto the expressed language of the Constitution by laches, i.e., to simply 6 ignore it. This would establish the precedent of Congress, or any other branch 7 of government so regulated by the Constitution, possessing the power to veto 8 the Constitution at will by the least standard possible: acting as if the 9 language didn't even exist. As the evidence in this suit shows that the states 10 in their applications have not only satisfied the proper interpretation of numeric count, but the improper interpretation of "same subject", no other 11 conclusion is possible. As always, it is left to the wisdom of the Court to 12

14

13

15

16 CONCLUSION

resolve this dilemma.

17

18 19 20 21

22

23

24

25

Our Founding Founders created in the United States of America a new form of government. This government is dedicated to the proposition that free people have the right to freely govern themselves. The Founders professed this belief in the Declaration of Independence. They fought a war defending this belief. They wrote the United States Constitution embodying this belief.

In order to govern themselves, the Founding Fathers designed a national government, a kind that had never existed on earth before. This government was to be the servant of the people, not their master, limited in power and scope,

- 1 subject to the will of the people. It was dedicated to the proposition that
- 2 "all men are created equal and endowed with certain unalienable rights..."
- 3 The founders of the Republic knew that Tyranny is a beast that strains
- 4 to break any and all chains that may bind it. Recognizing the Beast, the
- 5 Founding Fathers carefully formulated and spelled out in written word a
- 6 government meant to hold the Beast in check. They knew whether wielded by the
- 7 many, the few or the one, however benevolent in purpose, however popular in
- 8 support, Tyranny left unchecked consumes all.
- 9 The Beast comes in many forms. It may be a king. It may be a foreign
- 10 power attempting to impose its will on our own. But what if that Tyranny stems
- 11 from our own government? What if our government threatens the life, liberty
- 12 and happiness of the people it is meant to protect?
- 13 The Founders answered this in ringing tones. "[T]hat when any form of
- 14 government becomes destructive to these ends, it is the right of the people to
- 15 alter or to abolish it..."
- 16 Thus, to protect this most sacred right to alter or abolish and to stem
- 17 the threat of Tyranny from the government itself, the Founders established a
- 18 method of amendment in the Constitution completely outside the control of the
- 19 national government: the convention to propose amendments. That amendatory
- 20 power was written in such firm language it requires no interpretation.
- 21 The record is clear. Americans have the right to alter or abolish their
- 22 government. They have spoken through their state legislatures. The states have
- 23 applied. Congress has vetoed the Constitution by ignoring its clear language.
- 24 Congress has ignored the will of the people. Congress has established a
- 25 Tyranny.

The words of Colonel Mason have become all too prophetic: 1 "The plan now to be formed will certainly be defective, as the 2 confederation has been found on trial to be. Amendments therefore will be 3 necessary, as it will be better to provide for them, in an easy, regular and 4 Constitutional way than to trust to chance and violence. It would be improper 5 6 to require the consent of the Natl. Legislature, because they may abuse their 7 power, and refuse their consent on that very account. The opportunity for such an abuse, may be the fault of the Constitution calling for amendmt."  $^{1582}$ 8 9 Under its oath, the Court is mandated to enforce the Constitution. It 10 must compel Congress to obey the Constitution. To do otherwise denies the most basic right of the people. Permitting Congress to deny its mandated obligation 11 as prescribed by the Constitution transforms America from a nation ruled by 12 13 law to a nation ruled by men. The Beast will have triumphed.

14

 $^{1582}$  See supra text accompanying notes 362-363 (emphasis added).

1 2	APPENDIX AEVIDENCE OF PERSONAL INJURY IN SUPPORT OF STANDING
3	EXHIBIT 1
4	Letter from Attorney General of Washington to Plaintiff, May 9, 1994

Christine O. Gregoire

ATTORNEY GENERAL OF WASHINGTON

905 Plum Street Bldg 3 • PO Box 40100 • Olympia WA 98504-0100

May 9, 1994

Bill Walker PO Box 78548 Seattle, WA 98178

Re: Initiative No. 160 to the Legislature

Dear Mr. Walker:

You recently wrote to this office inquiring about our authority to decline to issue a ballot title for the initiative you are sponsoring, Initiative No. 160 to the Legislature.

While I was researching an answer to your letter, another attorney in our office discovered that in 1983 we issued an official opinion that an initiative may be used for the purpose of applying to Congress to call a convention for proposing amendments to the United States Constitution. Although I had looked in several places for the existence of an Attorney General Opinion on the subject, I apparently had not looked in the right place. I enclose a copy of AGO 1983 No. 4, the opinion requested.

Once we have issued a formal opinion on a subject, we do not lightly reverse ourselves. While I think there is some authority for the position I took in my previous letter, I cannot say that AGO 1983 No. 4 is poorly reasoned or wrong. Accordingly, we will keep it as our guide for the office, which means that, if you wish to resubmit Initiative 160 to the Legislature for a ballot title, we will supply a title and summary for it.

I also apologize for any inconvenience or trouble that I have caused by my failure to find this opinion before I first wrote to you.

Very truly yours,

JAMES K. PHARRIS

Senior Assistant Attorney General

(206) 664-3027

JKP/bw

Enclosure

cc: The Honorable Ralph Munro

BRIEF IN SUPPORT OF CONVENTION APPENDIX A-STANDING EXHIBITS PAGE 698

1	EXIBIT 2
2	Washington State AGO Opinion No. 4, 1983
2

OFFICE OF THE ATTORNEY GENERAL

INITIATIVE AND REFERENDUM--LEGISLATURE--CONSTITUTIONAL CONVENTION--USE OF INITIATIVE TO CALL FOR FEDERAL CONSTITUTIONAL CONVENTION

An initiative, under Article II, § 1 of the Washington Constitution, may be used for the purpose of applying to the federal Congress to call a convention for proposing amendments to the United States Constitution in accordance with Article V thereof.

March 18, 1983

Honorable Doc Hastings St. Rep., 16th District 416 Legislative Building Olympia, WA 98504

Cite as: AGO 1983 No. 4

Dear Sir:

By recent letter you requested our opinion on a question which we paraphrase as follows:

May an initiative, under Article II, § 1 of the Washington Constitution, be used for the purpose of applying to the federal Congress to call a convention for proposing amendments to the United States Constitution?

We answer the foregoing question in the affirmative.

ANALYSIS

Article V of the United States Constitution, relating to the amendment thereof, provides as follows:

"The congress, whenever two-thirds of both houses shall deem it necessary, shall propose amendments to this Constitution, or, on the application of the legislatures of two-thirds of the several states, shall call a convention for proposing amendments, which, in either case, shall be valid to all intents and purposes, as part of this Constitution, when ratified by the legislatures

KC11EKC11XTTY Attorney General Temple of Justice. Olympia, Washington 98504 . T.

of three-fourths of the several states, or by conventions in three-fourths thereof, as the one or the other mode of ratification may be proposed by the congress; provided that no amendment which may be made prior to the year one thousand eight hundred and eight shall in any manner affect the first and fourth clauses in the ninth section of the first article; and that no state, without its consent, shall be deprived of its equal suffrage in the senate." (Emphasis supplied)

Article II, § 2 of our own state constitution, which originated with the Seventh Amendment thereto in 1912, provides, in material part, that:

"The legislative authority of the state of Washington shall be vested in the legislature, consisting of a senate and house of representatives, which shall be called the legislature of the state of Washington, but the people reserve to themselves the power to propose bills, laws, and to enact or reject the same at the polls, independent of the legislature, and also reserve power, at their own option, to approve or reject at the polls any act, item, section or part of any bill, act or law passed by the legislature.

Our research has disclosed no cases dealing with the use of an initiative in the performance of a legislative function relating to the federal constitution's amendatory process. We have, however, a case squarely in point insofar as the availability of a referendum in that general context is concerned; namely, State ex rel. Mullen v. Howell, 107 Wash. 167, 181 Pac. 920 (1919).

In the Howell case, the question presented to the Court was whether a joint resolution of the legislature, ratifying an amendment to the United States Constitution, was an "act, bill or law" within the meaning of so much of Article II, § 1 (Amendment 7) of the state constitution, supra, as further provides:

". . . The second power reserved by the people is the referendum, and it may be ordered on any act, bill, law, or any part thereof passed by the legislature, except such laws as may be necessary for the immediate preservation of the public peace, health or safety, support of the state government and its existing public institutions, either by petition signed by the required percentage of the legal voters, or by the legislature as other bills are enacted. ..."

The Court, after a thorough consideration of the underlying purposes of the Seventh Amendment to the state constitution, answered in the affirmative--notwithstanding that the act of ratification was in the form of a joint resolution rather than a bill. The critical point, it appears, was that the joint resolution nevertheless was of obvious legal force and effect in the implementation, by the State of Washington, of the procedures set forth in Article V of the United States Constitution, supra, relating to the amendatory process. In other words, it was not the form of the state action but, instead, its actual legal force and effect which was determinative. As stated by the Court, at page 173:

"The contention that a resolution, although it may have the force and consequence of a formal legislative enactment and affect the people in their civil and political rights, cannot be referred arises from a misconception of the term. This case sounds in fundamentals, not in definitions. It is not the resolution, but the act of the legislature in adopting it that is to be referred. A resolution, like all acts of the legislature, is to be measured by the end accomplished. . . . " (Emphasis supplied)

In addition, the Court noted the language of Article V of the United States Constitution, supra, and it then met the contention that the reference therein to the "legislature's" contemplated formal action by the respective state legislatures themselves by saying, at pages 176-177:

"It is argued that, inasmuch as article V of the constitution of the United States provides that a proposed amendment 'shall be valid to all intents and purposes, as part of this constitution, when ratified by the Legislatures of three-fourths of the several states, or by conventions in three-fourths thereof,' etc., the people have hitherto fixed the manner and form of ratification, against which the reserved power of the people of a sovereign state may not prevail. If we are to stand upon the word 'legislatures,' if that word, and that alone, is the Alpha and Omega of our inquiry, it follows that the controversy is at an end, but we are cited to no instances where a great question involving the political rights of a people have been met by such technical recourse--where any court has so exalted the letter or so debased the spirit of the law." (Emphasis theirs)

Also, at page 178, the Court said:

"It is provided in the Federal constitution that proposed amendments shall be ratified by the legislatures of the states or by conventions assembled for the purpose of considering them. It cannot be urged successfully that the framers of the constitution used the words 'legislatures' and 'conventions' as terms describing then present institutions, for it is well known that, at the time the constitution was adopted, some of the states did not have legislative assemblies.

"Article V can mean no more than this: that no amendment shall be adopted unless it is sanctioned by the supreme legislative power of a sufficient number of the commonwealths, whether such ratification be by legislative assembly, convention, or such other method as might thereafter be adopted by the people in the several states."

Lastly, we note the Court's apparent acceptance, at page 183, of the following excerpt from a decision of the South Dakota Supreme Court:

"'. . . The "Legislature" of the state, in its fullest and broadest sense, signifies that body in which all the legislative power of a state reside, and that body is the people themselves, who exercise the elective franchise, and upon their power of legislation there is no limitation or restriction, except such as may be found in the federal Constitution, or such as they themselves may provide by the organic law of the state.'"

See, State ex rel. Schrader v. Polley, 26 S.D. 5, 127 N.W. 848 (1910) at pages 11-12.

In our opinion this same reasoning is equally applicable to the use of an initiative—as a form of legislative action under Article II,  $\S$  1 (Amendment 7), supra—to carry an application by the State of Washington to the United States Constitution for the convening of a federal constitutional convention. We would, therefore, prepare an official ballot title for such an initiative should it be presented to us for that purpose in accordance with the applicable procedures set forth in RCW 29.79.040, et seq.

We trust that the foregoing will be of assistance to you.

WASHING TO WASHING TO THE PARTY OF THE PARTY

Very truly yours,

KENNETH O. EIKENBERRY Attorpey General

HILLIP H. AUSTIN

Senior Deputy Attorney General

mg

In the past, this office has declined to process, and prepare bullot titles for, initiatives which merely proposed to memorialize the United States Congress to take action on subjects over which the Congress, itself, has complete discretion—on the ground that such initiatives would be of no lied force or effect under the provisions of the United States Constitution relating to congressional action. Cf., State ex rel. Mullen v. Howell, supra. We would, however, discinguish those instances from the subject of your present inquiry because of the legal force and effect of state regislative action, on the Congress, of an application submitted pursuant to Article V of the United States Constitution, supra.

1 EXHIBIT 3

 Text of proposed initiative submitted by Plaintiff

AN ACT Relating to national initiative, referendum and electronic voting; and creating new sections.

BE IT ENACTED BY THE PEOPLE OF THE STATE OF WASHINGTON:

NEW SECTION. Sec. 1. Be it adopted and enacted by the legislature of the state of Washington that it hereby applies to the Congress of the United States, under the authority of Article V of the United States Constitution, that Congress hereby call a constitutional convention, to be independent of, and not subject to rule by, Congress, for the purpose of considering section 3 of this act as an amendment to the United States Constitution together with consideration of any and all other proposals for amendments to the United States Constitution by the several states together with any other business the convention may deem necessary and proper for its consideration.

NEW SECTION. Sec. 2. Recognizing that no state is empowered by the Constitution to write a specific proposed amendment, that this power is specifically limited to either Congress or a constitutional convention, the legislature hereby requests the constitutional convention to consider proposing an amendment as outlined in Section 3 of this application and submitting it to the several states for their ratification.

 $\underline{\text{NEW SECTION.}}$  Sec. 3. The proposed amendment shall be presented to a constitutional convention and to Congress and shall include the following provisions:

- (1) All acts of Congress shall be subject to review and approval by means of electronic initiative or referendum. Electronic vote shall replace all other forms of voting and shall include the right of election and selection.
- (2) All United States Supreme Court rulings, or any ruling of any inferior court, whether of the United States or of the several states, after suffering all possible court appeal, in which the ruling determines an act of the legislature, either state or national, or any regulation, executive action, or court ruling is unconstitutional and contrary to the United States Constitution, must, before becoming a final and effective ruling, be submitted to review and approval by the people in electronic ballot. If the people shall reject the court ruling, then the court's ruling shall be determined to have been overruled. There shall be no appeal to this vote except by a like vote. No electioneering shall be permitted in this vote and only those materials available to the final court of appeal in the matter shall be presented to the people for their consideration in their vote.
- (3) The Supreme Court, or any inferior court, either of the United States or of the several states, are forbidden from finding any election by the people, either in federal elections or in the several states on any issue, to be void or unconstitutional and only any election by the people shall have the power to overturn an election. Elections by the people shall be considered supreme to any other act of the government. However, should the question be poised to the court regarding fraud in the election or other irregularities, the court upon so determining, may act to void the election and provide for a new election.
- (4) All Presidential actions, unless they shall be specifically and expressly designated in the Constitution as powers of the President to act, must, upon the submission of a referendum questioning the same, be approved by a vote of the people through electronic ballot.

- (6) Any tax increase proposed by the Congress, must, before it shall take effect, be approved by the people through electronic vote with at least sixty percent of those voting granting approval for the same. No sales tax or other tax of any description shall be levied by either the several states or Congress on any transaction carried out on the Internet, nor shall the Internet suffer any tax of any description. No vote for a tax decrease by Congress shall be required.
- (7) As this amendment shall in no manner be construed to replace elections held by the several states and their political subdivisions, it shall be mandatory upon the several states to establish regulations and other required standards of electronic voting for the various states in state and their political sub-division elections. It shall be mandatory upon Congress to establish regulations and other required standards of election voting regarding any federal electronic election. Any dispute between any state and federal regulation shall be settled in an appropriate federal court whose decision in the matter shall be considered final. It shall be mandatory upon the several states to establish criminal punishment for any person or citizen of the United States tampering, interfering or otherwise distorting any electronic vote of the people. It shall be mandatory upon Congress to establish a concurrent federal criminal punishment for any person or citizen of the United States who shall tamper, interfere or other distort any electronic vote of the people. The sentence, once determined in court, either federal or state, shall have no appeal of any type to a higher court or executive.
- (8) Any tampering, interference, effectuation or distortion of any electronic vote of the people by any foreign source, either sovereign or individual, shall be considered an act of war by the United States.
- (9) The Congress, by law, shall establish full access for all citizens for the purposes of electronic voting and shall appropriate such funds as are required to accomplish the same. The government shall provide full disclosure of all records it possess necessary or required for the purpose of electronic voting regarding any issue that may be raised either in initiative or referendum. A court procedure shall be established for releasing said records and the burden of proof not to release said record shall fall entirely upon the government. Information to be withheld in this manner shall be as minimal and specific as possible in nature and no generalized defense to obstruct or otherwise delay such release of records shall be allowed.
- (10) This amendment shall be construed to provide the people the broadest possible control of the United States government and no action of the government shall therefore be exempt from the provisions of this amendment nor shall this amendment be construed in any way restricting the right of the people to regulate their government though lawful electronic vote.
- (11) All electioneering for office either federal or among the several states, together with any electioneering regarding any issue placed for electronic vote, either in general or special election, together

5

6

7

8 9 10

11

12

13

14

15

16

17 18

19 20 21 22

23

24

25

26

27

28

29

30

31 32

33

34 35

36

37 38

39

40

41

42

43

44 45

46

47 48

49

50

51 52

53

54

55

56

- with initiative and referendum, shall be limited to that means and method of vote.
- (12) All electioneering done under electronic voting must be sourced as to the identity of the sender, and all electioneering information must be linked. All servers shall be secure.
- (13) The government, except as is required to establish and maintain the specifications of electronic voting, is forbidden from otherwise regulating the medium known as the Internet or any equivalent system, unless such regulation shall first be approved by at least two-thirds of those voting in a special election. No regulation or act, in the United States or the several states, may be proposed which shall reduce or remove the right of electronic vote and its authority to regulate the government.
- (14) In addition to the two methods of amendment specified in Article V of this Constitution, amendments to the United States Constitution may be proposed by electronic initiative. The proposed amendment must suffer a two-thirds vote of approval of those voting in two separate and distinct elections which shall be no less than six months apart from one another before being considered ratified. Upon ratification, such amendment shall be considered valid and in full effect to all intents and purposes as part of the United States Constitution.
- (15) The power to approve treaties shall be removed from the Senate of the United States. All treaties shall be submitted for approval to a vote of the people and shall not be approved unless two-thirds of those voting shall approve.
- (16) The President and Vice President may be recalled at any time by an electronic vote of the voters. Such recall shall be accomplished by the filing of electronic votes of at least one third of the registered voters of the nation which may be gathered by a method specified by law. Upon the receipt of the proper number of votes, which shall have a specific time limit of effect established by law and may not be altered except by approval of the people, a special election shall be called to place the matter before the people. There shall be no electioneering permitted. It shall require a two-thirds vote of the people voting in the election recall the President or Vice President. Such recall shall take effect immediately and such recall shall not hold the President or Vice President harmless or immune from other civil or criminal prosecutions.
- (17) Any senator or representative of the United States Congress may be recalled by the voters of their respective state or district. The recall procedure shall be the same as prescribed for the President or Vice President except that the election shall be limited to only those voters who are eligible to vote in the state, in the case of a senator, or the district, in the case of a representative.
- (18) The Congress, with approval of the voters as prescribed above, shall have the power to prescribe legislation for this amendment in order to carry out its provisions.

1 EXHIBIT 4

Letters to Washington State Secretary of State Munro by Plaintiff
September 3, 1999

4 5 Ralph Munro

Secretary of StateOffice of the Secretary of StateLegislative Building

9 PO Box 40220 10 Olympia, WA

Olympia, WA 98504-0220

12 Dear Mr. Munro,

As I am sure you are aware, the United States Congress is required under Article V of the United States Constitution to call a constitutional convention whenever two-thirds of the several state legislatures apply for one. As that condition now exists, I wish to notify you of my intent and desire to file for the elective office of United States Constitutional Convention Delegate.

 Of course, I understand, in order to run for this elective position, I must legally and properly file first with your office. Therefore, would you please send me all necessary information regarding the cost of the filing fee for the office of United States Constitutional Convention Delegate, any state regulations regarding the terms and conditions of campaigning for this office, the date the election for such office will occur and any other relevant information I require in order to meet all state regulations for filing for the office of United States Constitutional Convention Delegate.

Thank you for your time in this matter.

Sincerely,

(signed)

Bill Walker PO Box 698 Auburn, WA 98071-0698

September 21, 1999
Mr. Bill Walker
PO Box 698
Auburn, WA 98071-0698
Dear Mr. Walker:
We received your inquiries regarding filing for the position of delegate to a constitutional convention.
At this time we have not received official notification from the congress of the United states that there is a proposed constitutional amendment. In the event that the congress notifies our state of a possible constitutional amendment, the governor will issue a proclamation establishing the date of the convention. At that time we will begin the process of electing delegates to the convention.
T have analoged a gener of the statutes severing United states Constitutional
I have enclosed a copy of the statutes covering United states Constitutional Amendment Conventions for your review. The enclosed statutes contain answers to each of your questions regarding timing and fees.
to each of your questions regarding timing and rees.
If you have any further question please feel free to contact us again.
II you have any raroner question prouse reer rice to concact as again.
Sincerely,
(signed)
Shawn Merchant
Voter Services Manager

September 22, 1999
Mr. Shawn Merchant
Voter Services Manager
Elections Division
Voters Pamphlet
Legislative Building
PO Box 40231
Olympia, WA 98504-0231

Dear Mr. Merchant,

 I wanted to thank you for your September 21, 1999 letter. However, regretfully, there has been a misunderstanding. As you can see by my enclosed letter of September 3, 1999, I was requesting information for filing for United States Constitutional Convention Delegate.

The information you sent me concerned filing for state delegate to a ratifying convention for a United States Constitutional amendment The law 29.74.010 through 29.74.150 concerns this second constitutional duty but does not include the United States Constitutional Convention Delegate. To avoid further confusion, I will intrude on your patience with a paragraph of explanation which I am sure you already familiar.

Under Article V of the United States Constitution, two methods of proposing amendments are prescribed. The first method is through the United States Congress. The second is through a United States Constitutional Convention. According to the Constitution, this convention is called when a sufficient number of states have applied for a convention. As I'm sure you know, it is obligatory on Congress to call when the states apply and Congress has no discretion in the matter. This situation now exists. As with members of Congress, delegates are elected to a constitutional convention. The convention then proposes amendments. These amendments are sent to Congress who then in turn sends them to the states for the ratifying convention you sent the material on.

I am not interested in filing for state ratification convention delegate. I am attempting to file for the position of delegate to the United States Constitutional Convention for proposing amendments.

I am sure, just like the law 29.74.010 to 29.74.150, there is law regarding this constitutional duty and it is a simple matter of merely sending me a copy of this law rather than the copy of the law you did send so that I can file for the position I am seeking.

I hope this clarifies the matter and I apologize if my letter was unclear as to my intent. Thank you again for your time in this matter.

Sincerely,

Bill Walker PO Box 698 Auburn, WA 98071-0698

October 17, 1999
Shawn Merchant
Voter Services Manager
Elections Division
Voters Pamphlet
Legislative Building
PO Box 40231
Olympia, WA 98504-0231

Dear Mr. Merchant,

It has been nearly a month since I wrote back to you asking for filing information regarding filing for Untied States Constitutional Convention Delegate. I have enclosed copies of our correspondence to date in order to conserve time in this letter. It has been over a month and a half since my first correspondence with you and STILL I have received nothing from your office in the form of information so that I may file for this important public service position.

I realize the position is not the usual one requested. I realize the laws involved may be old and rarely used but this is no excuse to compromise my right to seek elective post by simply ignoring my request until such time as I am unable to seek elective post because filing has closed.

If there is a problem with you supplying the information I have requested, I DEMAND a response as to why. If Congress is at fault, say so. If the state is at fault, say so. If your printing office is on strike, say so. If your secretary has been sick for a couple of weeks, please say so. But all this delay is causing is frustration on my part at wondering why you people have selected me not to be able to seek elective office.

Therefore, I again, in the strongest and most forceful terms, demand a response immediately from your office to a) provide me the information I have requested to allow me to file for the position of delegate to a United States Constitutional Convention for the purpose of proposing amendments to the United States Constitution or b) explain why you cannot do so.

I expected the filing procedure to be the easiest part of this matter and I am not interested in any legal proceedings involving it. Please do not give me further cause to change my mind in this matter.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Bill Walker PO Box 698 Auburn, WA 98071-0698

1 2	October 19, 1999 Mr. Bill Walker
3	PO Box 698
4	Auburn, WA 98071-0698
5
6	Dear Mr. Walker:
7
8	Let me apologize for the delay in my response. I thought that your question
9	had been answered when you contacted Secretary of State Munro directly.
10
11	I looked for every state statute concerning the United States Constitution and
12	have enclosed them with a copy of the General Index as well. The only statutes
13	that I was able to find are the ones that I am enclosing.
14
15	After looking in the Revised Code of Washington I searched the Washington
16	State Constitution. I have included a copy of Article 23, of the Washington
17	State Constitution and the index page listing the process for amendments.
18	However, these sections seem to cover only amending the State Constitution.
19
20	We are not aware of any other provisions concerning this matter.
21
22	Once again I sincerely apologize for my delay.
23
24	Sincerely,
25
26
27	(Signed)
28	Shawn Merchant
29	Voter Services Manager

2 STIPULATION REGARDING MATERIAL REFERRED TO IN OCT.19 LETTER

As noted in the text of Exhibit 5, Article 23 of the Washington State Constitution only relates to amending the state constitution. As to the other material mentioned, specifically a copy of Revised Code of Washington (RCW) Title 29, Chapter 29.74, Sections 29.74.010 to 29.74.150 inclusive, this code deals specifically and solely with election of delegates to a ratification convention as described in Article V of the United States Constitution. None of the language of Chapter 29.74 supra deals with the election of delegates to a United States convention that proposes amendments as described in Article V

Therefore, there is no legal procedure in the State of Washington whereby a person seeking the elected position of delegate to a United States amendatory convention to propose amendments may file, campaign or otherwise engage the usual electoral activities associated with seeking elected office. Further, no state law exists whereby delegates are in any fashion or manner appointed or otherwise assigned to a convention to propose amendments in order to represent the state. Thus, as these are public documents which under Federal Rules of Evidence 1006, may be referred to in summary, it is stipulated and summarized by the plaintiff that Washington State has no legal procedure whatsoever to send delegates to a United States convention to propose amendments.

of the United States Constitution.

1	APPENDIX BEXAMPLES OF VARIOUS APPLICATIONS FILED BY THE STATES FOR A
2	CONVENTION
3
4	GENERAL APPLICATION
5
6	An example of an application for a general convention is shown as
7	follows:
8	Concurrent resolution, S. Con. Res. 4
9	DEPARTMENT OF STATE.
10	Whereas the Constitution of the United States of America provided that
11	Congress, on the application of the legislatures of two-thirds of the several
12	States, shall call a convention for proposing amendments to said Constitution
13	Therefore, we, the senate of the State of Texas, the house of
14	representatives of the State of Texas, concurring, do hereby petition and
15	request the Congress of the United States of America to call a convention for
16	proposing amendments to said Constitution as soon as the legislatures of two-
17	thirds of the several States of the United States of America shall concur in
18	this resolution by applying to Congress to call said convention.
19	Be it further resolved, That the Secretary of State be, and is hereby,
20	directed to send a copy of this resolution to the Congressmen from Texas, and
21	to the governor of each State at once, and to the legislatures of the several
22	States as they convene, with a request to them to concur with us in this
23	resolution.
24	D.H. HARDY, Secretary of State.
25	Approved June 5, 1899. 1583
26 27

 $^{1583}$  33 CONG. REC. 219 (1899)(emphasis added).

BRIEF IN SUPPORT OF CONVENTION APPENDIX B-STATE APPLICATIONS PAGE 715

SECTION 2. That the resolution, duly authenticated, shall be delivered forthwith to the President of the Senate and Speaker of the House of Representatives of the United States, with the request that the same shall be laid before the said Senate and House. Approved April 12, A.D. 1909<sup>1584</sup>

28 29

25

26 27

 $^{1584}$  44 CONG. REC. 1620 (1909) (emphasis added).

APPLICATION FOR A CONVENTION FOR A SPECIFIC REASON

4 An example of an application for a convention for proposing amendments

5 for a particular reason is as follows:

6 H.R. Con. Res. 2001

Whereas, the powers delegated to the federal government by the United States Constitution are limited, and those powers not delegated to the federal government are reserved to the states; and

Whereas, it is becoming increasingly the practice of the federal government to require states to enact state laws to implement federal policies by threatening to withhold or withdraw federal funds for failure to do so; and

Whereas, the federal government has imposed upon the states many programs and obligations which require funding in excess of state means, thereby making the states subservient to and dependent upon the federal government for financial assistance; and

Whereas, through the coercive force of withdrawing or withholding federal funds, or the threat of withdrawing or withholding federal funds, the federal government is indirectly imposing its will upon the states and requiring implementation of federal policies which neither Congress nor the President nor any administrative agency is empowered to impose or implement directly; and

Whereas, this coercive power of the purse is being used to extend the power of the federal government over the states far beyond the powers delegated to the federal government by the United States Constitution; and

Whereas the power of the federal government should be exercised directly by the enactment of federal law governing only those areas in which the federal government is empowered to act by the United States Constitution, and the federal government should be prohibited from usurping the authority of the states and imposing its will indirectly in those areas in which it has no power to act directly; and

Whereas, the federal government has imposed upon the states many programs and obligations which require state administration and such programs or other programs may lose federal financing if certain conditions attached to the program are not met.

Therefore, be it resolved by the House of Representatives of the State of Arizona, the Senate concurring:

1. Pursuant to Article V of the Constitution of the United States, the 1 2 Legislature of the State of Arizona petitions the Congress of the United States to call a convention for the purpose of proposing an amendment to the 3 4 Constitution of the United States to prohibit the Congress, the President, and 5 any agent or agency of the federal government, from withholding or withdrawing, or threatening to withhold or withdraw, any federal funds from 6 7 any state as a means of requiring a state to implement federal policies which 8 the Congress, the President, or agent or agency of the federal government has no power, express or implied, under the Constitution of the United States, to 9 impose upon the States or implement its own action, and to limit permissible 10 conditions of federal financing by the Congress, or the President, or any 11 12 agent or agency of the federal government designed to obtain state 13 administration of federal programs at the risk of losing federal funds for 14 other programs if any or all conditions of the program are not met.

2. That the Secretary of State of the State of Arizona is directed to send a duly certified copy of this Resolution to the President of the United States Senate, the Speaker of the United States House of Representatives and to each Member of Congress from the State of Arizona. 1585

18 19

15

16

17

 $^{1585}$  126 CONG. REC. 11399 (1980)(emphasis added).

APPLICATION FOR A SPECIFIC TOPIC OR SUBJECT ONLY

4 An example of an application for a convention only for the purpose of proposing a particular amendment or raising a particular topic is as follows: S.J. RES. 9

Whereas, millions of abortions have been performed in the United States since the decision on abortions by the United States Supreme Court on January 22, 1973, and

Whereas, the Congress of the United States has not proposed to date a "human life amendment" to the Constitution of the United States.

Now therefore:

Be it resolved by the Legislature of Alabama, both Houses thereof concurring, that the Legislature of Alabama, 1980 Regular Session, applies to the Congress of the United States to call a convention for the sole and exclusive purpose of proposing an amendment to the Constitution that would protect the lives of all human being [sic] including unborn children at every stage of their biological development and providing that neither the United States nor any state shall deprive any human being, from the moment of fertilization the equal protection of the laws, except where pregnancy results from rape or from incest; or where abortion is necessary to save the life of the mother or where testing revealed abnormality or deformity of the fetus.

Be it further resolved, that this application shall constitute a continuing application for such a convention pursuant to Article V or the Constitution of the United States until such time as the Legislature of two-thirds of the States shall have made like applications and such convention shall have been called by the Congress of the United States.

Be it further resolved, that copies of this concurrent resolution be presented to the President of the Senate of the United States, the Secretary of the Senate of the United States, the Speaker of the House of Representatives of the United States, and to each member of the Congress from Alabama attesting the adoption of this concurrent resolution by the 1980 Regular Session of the Legislature of the State of Alabama. 1586

 $<sup>^{1586}</sup>$  126 CONG. REC. 10650 (1980)(emphasis added).

An example of an application for a convention only for the purpose of proposing a particular amendment or raising a particular topic; and claiming the invalidity of the application if a general convention is called or the convention goes beyond the scope of the particular topic is as follows:

A JOINT RESOLUTION

Whereas, with each passing year this nation becomes more deeply in debt as its annual expenditures frequently exceed annual available revenues, so that the public debt also steadily increases to a size of inordinate proportions; and

Whereas, unified budgets do not necessarily reflect actual spending because of the exclusion of special spending outlays which are not included in the budget nor are subject to the statutory legal public debt limit; and

Whereas, knowledgeable planning, fiscal prudence, and plain good sense require that the budget reflect all federal spending and be in balance; and

Whereas, we believe that fiscal irresponsibility at the federal level, with the inflation which results primarily from this policy, is the greatest threat which faces our nation, and that constitutional restraint is necessary to bring the fiscal discipline needed to restore financial responsibility; and

Whereas, under Article V of the Constitution of the United States, amendments to the Federal Constitution may be proposed by Congress whenever two-thirds of both houses deem it necessary, or on the application of the legislatures of two-thirds of the several states the Congress shall call a constitutional convention for the purpose of proposing such amendments;

Be it resolved by the Senate of the State of South Dakota, the House of Representatives concurring therein:

That the Legislature does hereby make application to the Congress of the United States that procedures be instituted in the Congress to add a new article to the Constitution of the United States, and that the Legislature of the state of South Dakota hereby requests the Congress to prepare and submit to the several states an amendment to the Constitution of the United States, requiring in the absence of a national emergency, as defined by law, that the total of all federal appropriations made by the Congress for any fiscal year

1 may not exceed the total of all estimated federal revenues for that fiscal 2 year; and

Be it further resolved, that alternatively, this Legislature hereby makes application under said Article V of the Constitution of the United States and with the same force and effect as if this Resolution consisted of this portion alone and requests that the Congress of the United States call a convention for the specific and exclusive purpose of proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States requiring in the absence of a national emergency, as defined by law, that the total of all federal appropriations made by the Congress for any fiscal year may not exceed the total of all estimated federal revenues for that fiscal years; and

Be it further resolved, that this application and request be deemed null and void, rescinded, and of no effect in the event that such convention not be limited to such specific and exclusive purpose; and

Be it further resolved, that this application by this Legislature constitutes a continuing application in accordance with Article V of the Constitution of the United States until at least two-thirds of the legislatures of the several states have made applications for similar relief pursuant to Article V, but, if Congress proposes an amendment to the Constitution identical in subject matter to that contained in this Joint Resolution then this petition for a Constitutional Convention shall no longer be of any force or effect; and

Be it further resolved, that this Legislature also proposes that the legislatures of each of the several states comprising the United States apply to the Congress requesting the enactment of an appropriate amendment to the Federal Constitution, or requiring the Congress to call a constitutional convention for proposing such an amendment to the Federal Constitution; and

Be it further resolved, that copies of this Joint Resolution be sent by the Secretary of State to each member of the South Dakota Congressional Delegation; and

Be it further resolved, that the Secretary of State is directed to send copies of this Joint Resolution to the presiding officers of both Houses of the Legislature of each of the other states in the Union, the Clerk of the United States of House of Representatives, Washington D.C. and the Secretary of the United States Senate, Washington D.C. 1587

_

 $<sup>^{1587}</sup>$  125 CONG. REC. 3656 (1979)(emphasis added).

APPENDIX C---1973 REPORT OF THE ABA SPECIAL CONSTITUTIONAL CONVENTION STUDY COMMITTEE

3 RECOMMENDATION 1588

4 WHEREAS, the House of Delegates, at its July 1971 meeting, created the 5 Constitutional Convention Study Committee "to analyze and study all questions

6 of law concerned with the calling of a national Constitutional Convention,

7 including, but not limited to, the question of whether such a Convention's

8 jurisdiction can be limited to the subject matter given rise to its call, or

9 whether the convening of such a Convention, as a matter of constitutional law,

10 opens such a Convention to multiple amendments and the consideration of a new

11 Constitution"; and

1

2

13

14

15

12 WHERAS, the Constitutional Convention Study Committee so created has intensively and exhaustively analyzed and studied the principal questions of law concerned with the calling of a national constitutional convention and has delineated its conclusions with respect to these questions of law in its

16 Report attached hereto,

Appendix C is a copy of the ABA Report referred to in this suit. Due to limitations of the word processing program used in this suit, some changes to it original printed format have had to be employed. The ABA Report's original footnotes cannot be numbered beginning with number one as they cannot be separated from previous footnotes of the brief. Therefore, the footnotes in the ABA Report have been converted to endnotes where their original numbering can be preserved. Where required therefore, such references as "infra" and "supra" used in the report have been altered so as to be correct in reference to the converted footnotes.

Further, because of spacing and other printing formats, the reproduction of this report has caused page references originally used in the report to be different than that in the original report. These references have been changed to reflect the current pages found in this suit. To minimize confusion between the original report and this reproduction, page numbering is started at page 1 rather than continuing from the last page in the brief. In Appendix A of the ABA Report, the comments of the committee originally found next to sections of proposed legislation have been changed into endnotes.

1	NOW, THEREFORE, BE IT RESOLVED, THAT, with respect to the provision of
2	Article V of the United States Constitution providing that "Congress on the
3	Application of the Legislatures of two-thirds of the several States, shall
4 5 6 7 8 9 10 11 12 13 14 15 16 17	<ul> <li>call a Convention for proposing Amendments" to the Constitution,</li> <li>1. It is desirable for Congress to establish procedures for amending the Constitution by means of a national constitutional convention,</li> <li>2. Congress has the power to establish procedures limiting a convention to the subject matter which is stated in the applications received from the state legislatures.</li> <li>3. Any Congressional legislation dealing with such a process for amending the Constitution should provide for limited judicial review of Congressional determinations concerning a constitutional convention.</li> <li>4. Delegates to a convention should be elected and representation at the conventions should be in conformity with the principles of representative democracy as enunciated by the "one person, one vote" decisions of the Supreme Court.</li> </ul>
18	BE IT FURTHER RESOLVED, THAT, the House of Delegates authorizes the
19	distribution of the Report of the Constitutional Convention Study Committee
20	for the careful consideration of federal and state legislators and other
21	concerned with constitutional law and commends the Report to them; and
22	BE IT FURTHER RESOLVED, THAT, representatives of the American Bar
23	Association designated by the President be authorized to present testimony on
24	behalf of the Association before the appropriate committees of the Congress
25	consistent with this resolution.
26	INTRODUCTION
27 28	There are few articles of the Constitution as important to the continued
29	viability of our government and nation as Article V. As Justice Joseph Story
30	wrote: "A government which provides no means of change will
31	either degenerate into a despotism or, by the pressure of its inequities,
32	bring on a revolution." $^1$ James Madison gave these reasons for Article V:
33 34 35 36 37	"That useful alterations [in the Constitution] will be suggested by experience, could not but be foreseen. It was requisite therefore that a mode for introducing them should be provided. The mode preferred by the Convention seems to be stamped with every mark of propriety. It guards equally against that extreme facility which would render the Constitution too mutable; and that extreme difficulty which might 1 perpetuate its discovered faults. It moreover equally enables the 3 general and the state governments to originate the amendment of errors 4 as they may be pointed out by the experience on one side or on the 5 6 Article V sets forth two methods of proposing and two methods of ratifying 7 amendments to the United States Constitution: 8 "The Congress, whenever two-thirds of both Houses shall deem it 9 necessary, shall propose Amendments to this Constitution, or, on the Application of the Legislatures of two-thirds of the several States, 10 shall call a Convention for proposing Amendments, which in either Case, 11 shall be valid to all Intents and Purposes, as part of this 12 Constitution, when ratified by the Legislatures of three-fourths of the 13 several States, or by Conventions in three-fourths thereof, as the one 14 15 or the other Mode of Ratification may be proposed by the 16 Congress . . . . " 17 18 Up to the present time all amendments have been proposed by the Congress and all but one have been ratified by the state legislature mode. The Twenty-First 19 Amendment was ratified by conventions called in the various states. Although 20 2.1 there has not been a national constitutional convention since 1787, there have been more than 300 applications from state legislatures over the past 184 22 years seeking such a convention.3 Every state, at one time or another, has 23 24 petitioned Congress for a convention. These state applications have ranged from applications calling for a general convention to a convention dealing 25 with a specific subject, as, for example, slavery, anti-polygamy, presidential 26 27 tenure, and repeal of prohibition. The pressure generated by numerous petitions for a constitutional convention is believed to have been a factor in 28 29 motivating Congress to propose the Seventeenth Amendment to change the method of selecting Senators. 30 31 32 Despite the absence at the national level since 1787, conventions have been the preferred instrument for major revision of state constitutions. As one 33 commentator on the state constitution-making process has stated: "The 34 convention is purely American—widely tested and used." There have been more than 200 conventions in the states, ranging from 15 in New Hampshire to one in 35

- 1 eleven states. In a substantial majority of the states the convention is
- 2 provided for by the state constitution. In the remainder it has been
- 3 sanctioned by judicial interpretation and practice.<sup>5</sup>

- 5 Renewed and greater efforts to call a national constitutional convention have
- 6 come in the aftermath of the Supreme Court's decisions in Baker v. Carr<sup>6</sup> and
- 7 Reynolds v. Sims. Thortly after the decision in Baker v. Carr, the Council
- 8 of State Governments recommended that the states petition Congress for a
- 9 national constitutional convention to propose three amendments to the
- 10 Constitution. One would have denied to federal courts original and appellate
- 11 jurisdiction over state legislative apportionment cases; another would have
- 12 established a "Court of the Union" in place of the Supreme Court; and the
- 13 third would have amended Article V to allow amendments to be adopted on the
- 14 basis of identically-worded sate petitions. 8 Twelve state petitions were sent
- 15 to Congress in 1963 and 1964 requesting a convention to propose an amendment
- 16 which would remove state legislative apportionment cases from the jurisdiction
- 17 of the federal judiciary. In December 1964 the Council of State Governments
- 18 recommended at its annual convention that the state legislatures petition
- 19 Congress for a national constitutional convention to propose an amendment
- 20 permitting one house of a state legislature to be apportioned on a basis other
- 21 than population.

- 23 By 1967 thirty-two state legislatures had adopted applications calling for a
- 24 constitutional convention on the question of apportionment. The wording of
- 25 these petitions varied. Several sought consideration of an amendment to
- 26 abolish federal judicial review of state legislative apportionment. Others
- 27 sought a convention for the purpose of proposing an amendment which would
- 28 "secure to the people the right of some choice in the method of apportionment
- 29 of one house of a state legislature on a basis other than population alone."
- 30 A substantial majority of states requested a convention to propose a specific

- 1 amendment set forth haec verba in their petitions. Even here, there was
- 2 variation of wording among a few of these state petitions.<sup>9</sup>

- 4 On March 18, 1967 a front page story in The New York Times reported that "a
- 5 campaign for a constitutional convention to modify the Supreme Court's one-
- 6 man, one-vote rule is nearing success." It said that the opponents of the rule
- 7 "lack only two states in their drive" and that "most of official Washington
- 8 has been caught by surprise because the state legislative actions have been
- 9 taken with little fanfare." That article prompted immediate and considerable
- 10 discussion of the subject both in and out of Congress. It was urged that
- 11 Congress would be under no duty to call a convention even if applications were
- 12 received from the legislatures of two-thirds of the states. Others argued that
- 13 the words of Article V were imperative and that there would be such a duty.
- 14 There was disagreement as to whether applications from malapportioned
- 15 legislatures could be counted, and there were different views on the authority
- 16 of any convention. Some maintained that, once constituted, a convention could
- 17 not be restricted to the subject on which the state legislatures had requested
- 18 action but could go so far as to propose an entirely new Constitution. Adding
- 19 to the confusion and uncertainty was the fact that there were no ground rules
- 20 or precedents for amending the Constitution through the route of a
- 21 constitutional convention.

- 23 As the debate on the convention method of initiating amendments continued into
- 24 1969, one additional state 10 submitted an application for a convention on the
- 25 reapportionment issue while another state adopted a resolution rescinding its
- 26 previous application. 11 Thereafter, the effort to call a convention on that
- 27 issue diminished. Recently, however, the filing of state applications for a
- 28 convention on the school busing issue has led to a new flurry of discussion on
- 29 the question of a national constitutional convention.

- 2 The circumstances surrounding the apportionment applications prompted Senator
- 3 Sam J. Ervin to introduce in the Senate on August 17, 1967 a bill to establish
- 4 procedures for calling a constitutional convention. In explaining his reasons
- 5 for the proposed legislation, Senator Ervin has stated:

6 "My conviction was that the constitutional questions involved were far 7 more important than the reapportionment issue that had brought them to 8 light, and that they should receive more orderly and objective 9 consideration than they had so far been accorded. Certainly it would be 10 grossly unfortunate if the partisanship over state legislative 11 apportionment -- and I am admittedly a partisan on the issue--should be 12 allowed to distort an attempt at clarification of the amendment process, 13 which in the long run must command a higher obligation and duty than any single issue that might be the subject of that process." 12 14

15

- 16 After hearings and amendments to the original legislation, Senator Ervin's
- 17 bill (S.215) passed the Senate by an 84 to 0 vote on October 19, 1971.<sup>13</sup>
- 18 Although there was no action in the House of Representatives in the Ninety-
- 19 Second Session of Congress, comparable legislation is expected to receive
- 20 attention in both Houses in the future. 14

ISSUES PRESENTED

3

8

9

10

11

12

13

14

15

16

17

18 19 20 21

22

23

24

25

- 4 The submission by state legislatures during the past thirty-five years of
- 5 numerous applications for a national constitutional convention has brought
- 6 into sharp focus the manifold issues arising under Article V. Included among
- 7 these issues are the following:
  - 1) If the legislatures of two-thirds of the states apply for a convention limited to a specific matter, must Congress call such a convention?
    - 2) If a convention is called, is the limitation binding on the convention?
    - 3) What constitutes a valid application which Congress must count and who is to judge its validity?
      - 4) What is the length of time in which applications for a convention will be counted?
      - 5) How much power does Congress have as to the scope of a convention? As to procedures such as the selection of delegates? As to the voting requirements at a convention? As to refusing to submit to the states for ratification the product of a convention?
      - 6) What are the roles of the President and state governors in the amending process?
      - 7) Can a state legislature withdraw an application for a convention once it has been submitted to Congress or rescind a previous ratification of a proposed amendment or a previous rejection?
      - 8) Are issues arising in the convention process justiciable?
    - 9) Who is to decide questions of ratification?

- 27 Since there has never been a national constitutional convention subsequent to
- 28 the adoption of the Constitution, there is no direct precedent to look to in
- 29 attempting to answer these questions. In searching out the answers, therefore,
- 30 resort must be made, among other things, to the text of Article V, the origins
- 31 of the provision, the intent of the Framers, and the history and workings of
- 32 the amending article since 1789. Our answers appear on the following pages. 15

30

2	RECOMMENDATIONS
3	General
4 5	Responding to our charge, our Committee has attempted to canvass all the
6	principal questions of law involved in the calling of a national
7	constitutional convention pursuant to Article V. At the outset, we note that
8	some, apprehensive about the scope of constitutional change possible in a
9	national constitutional convention, have proposed that Article V be amended so
10	as to delete or modify the convention method of proposing amendments. $^{16}$ On the
11	other hand, others have noted that a dual method of constitutional change was
12	intended by the Framers, and they contend that relative ease of amendment is
13	salutary, at least within limits. Whatever the merits of fundamental
14	modification of Article V, we regard consideration of such a proposal as
15	beyond the scope of our study. In short, we take the present text of Article ${\tt V}$
16	as the foundation for our study.
1.5
17 18	It is the view of our Committee that it is desirable for Congress to establish
19	procedures for amending the Constitution by the national constitutional
20	convention method. We recognize that some believe that it is unfortunate to
21	focus attention on this method of amendment and unwise to establish procedures
22	which might facilitate the calling of a convention. The argument is that the
23	establishment of procedures might make it easier for state legislatures to
24	seek a national convention, and might even encourage them to do so. 17
25	Underlying this argument is the belief that, at least in modern political
26	terms, a national convention would venture into uncharted and dangerous
27	waters. It is relevant to note in this respect that a similar concern has been
28	expressed about state constitutional conventions but that 184 years' experience at that level furnishes little support to the concern. 18 We are not persuaded by these suggestions that we should fail to deal with the convention

- 1 method, hoping that the difficult questions never arise. More than 300
- 2 applications during our constitutional history, with every state legislature
- 3 represented, stand as testimony that a consideration of procedure is not
- 4 purely academic. Indeed, we would ignore at great peril the lessons of the
- 5 recent proposals for a convention on legislative apportionment (the one-
- 6 person, one-vote issue) where, if one more state had requested a convention, a
- 7 major struggle would have ensued on the adequacy of the requests and on the
- 8 nature of the convention and the rules therefor.

- 10 If we fail to deal now with the uncertainties of the convention method, we
- 11 could be courting a constitutional crisis of grave proportions. We would be
- 12 running the enormous risk that procedures for a national constitutional
- 13 convention would have to be forged in time of divisive controversy and
- 14 confusion when there would be a high premium on obstructive and result-
- 15 oriented tactics.

16

- 17 It is far more prudent, we believe, to confront the problem openly and to
- 18 supply safeguards and general rules in advance. In addition to being better
- 19 governmental technique, a forthright approach to the dangers of the convention
- 20 method seems far more likely to yield beneficial results than would burying
- 21 our heads in the sands of uncertainty. Essentially, the reasons are the same
- 22 ones which caused the American Bar Association to urge, and our nation
- 23 ultimately to adopt, the rules for dealing with the problems of presidential
- 24 disability and a vice-presidential vacancy which are contained in the Twenty-
- 25 Fifth Amendment. So long as the Constitution envisions the convention method,
- 26 we think the procedures should be ready if there is a "contemporaneously felt
- 27 need" by the required two-thirds of the state legislatures. Fidelity to
- 28 democratic principles requires no less.

- 1 The observation that one Congress may not bind a subsequent Congress does not
- 2 persuade us that comprehensive legislation is useless or impractical. The
- 3 interests of the public and nation are better served when safeguards and rules
- 4 are prescribed in advance. Congress itself has recognized this in many areas,
- 5 including its adoption of and subsequent reliance on legislative procedures
- 6 for handling such matters as presidential electoral vote disputes and
- 7 contested elections for the House of Representatives. 19 Congressional
- 8 legislation fashioned after intensive study, and in an atmosphere free from
- 9 the emotion and politics that undoubtedly would surround a specific attempt to
- 10 energize the convention process, would be entitled to great weight as a
- 11 constitutional interpretation and be of considerable precedential value.
- 12 Additionally, whenever two-thirds of the state legislatures had applied for a
- 13 convention, it would help to focus and channel the ensuing discussion and
- 14 identify the expectations of the community.
- 16 In our view any legislation implementing Article V should reflect its
- 17 underlying policy, as articulated by Madison, of guarding "equally against
- 18 that extreme facility which would render the Constitution too mutable; and
- 19 that extreme difficulty which might perpetuate its discovered faults."20
- 20 Legislation should protect the integrity of the amending process and assure
- 21 public confidence in its workings.

- 22 Specific
- 24 It is our conclusion that Congress has the power to establish procedures
- 25 governing the calling of a national constitutional convention limited to the
- 26 subject matter on which the legislatures of two-thirds of the states request a
- 27 convention. In establishing procedures for making available to the states a
- 28 limited convention when they petition for such a convention, Congress must not
- 29 prohibit the state legislatures from requesting a general convention since, as

- 1 we view it, Article V permits both types of conventions (pp.13-21, infra).
- 2
- 3 We consider Congress' duty to call a convention whenever two-thirds of the
- 4 state legislatures have concurred on the subject matter of the convention to
- 5 be mandatory (p.20).

- 7 We believe that the Constitution does not assign the President a role in
- 8 either the call of a convention or the ratification of a proposed amendment
- 9 (pp.29-32).

10

- 11 We consider it essential that legislation passed by Congress to implement the
- 12 convention method should provide for limited judicial review of congressional
- 13 action or inaction concerning a constitutional convention. Provision for such
- 14 review not only would enhance the legitimacy of the process but would seem
- 15 particularly appropriate since, when and if the process were resorted to, it
- 16 likely would be against the backdrop of some dissatisfaction with prior
- 17 congressional performance (pp.23-29).

18

- 19 We deem it of fundamental importance that delegates to a convention be elected
- 20 and that representation at the convention be in conformity with the principles
- 21 of representative democracy as enunciated by the "one-person, one-vote"
- 22 decisions of the Supreme Court (pp.38-43). One member of the Committee,
- 23 however, does not believe that the one-person, one-vote rule is applicable to
- 24 a constitutional convention.

25

- 26 We believe also that a convention should adopt its own rules of procedure,
- 27 including the vote margin necessary at the convention to propose an amendment
- 28 to the Constitution (pp.21-23).

1 Our research and deliberations have led us to conclude that a state governor

2 should have no part in the process by which a state legislature applies for a

3 convention or ratifies a proposed amendment (pp.32-34). 21

4

5 Finally, we believe it highly desirable for any legislation implementing the 6 convention method of Article V to include the rule that a state legislature

7 can withdraw an application at any time before the legislatures of two-thirds

8 of the states have submitted applications on the same subject, or withdraw a vote rejecting a proposed amendment, or rescind a vote ratifying a proposed amendment so long as three-fourths of the states have not ratified (pp.37-38, 11 43).

12

9

10

2 DISCUSSION OF RECOMMENDATIONS

3 Authority of an Article V Convention

4

5 Central to any discussion of the convention method of initiating amendments is

6 whether a convention convened under Article V can be limited in its authority.

7 There is the view, with which we disagree, that an Article V convention would

8 be a sovereign assemblage and could not be restricted by either the state

9 legislatures or the Congress in its authority or proposals. And there is the 10 view, with which we agree, that Congress has the power to establish procedures

11 which would limit a convention's authority to a specific subject matter where

12 the legislatures of two-thirds of the states seek a convention limited to that 13 subject.

14

15 The text of Article V demonstrates that a substantial national consensus must

16 be present in order to adopt a constitutional amendment. The necessity for a

17 consensus is underscored by the requirement of a two-thirds vote in each House

18 of Congress or applications for a convention from two-thirds of the state

19 legislatures to initiate an amendment, and by the requirement of ratification

20 by three-fourths of the states. From the language of Article V we are led to the conclusion that there must be a consensus among the state legislatures as 22 to the subject matter of a convention before Congress is required to call one.

23 To read Article V as requiring such agreement helps assure "that an alteration

24 of the Constitution proposed today has relation to the sentiment and felt

25 needs of today . . . . "22

26

21

27 The origins and history of Article V indicate that both general and limited

28 conventions were within the contemplation of the Framers. The debates at the 29 Constitutional Convention of 1787 make clear that the convention method of 30 proposing amendments was intended to stand on an equal footing with the

- 1 congressional method. As Madison observed: Article V "equally enables the
- 2 general and the state governments to originate the amendment of errors as they
- 3 may be pointed out by the experience on one side or on the other."23 The
- 4 "state" method, as it was labeled, was prompted largely by the belief that the
- 5 national government might abuse its powers. It was felt that such abuses might
- 6 go unremedied unless there was a vehicle of initiating amendments other than
- 7 Congress.

- 9 The earliest proposal on amendments was contained in the Virginia Plan of
- 10 government introduced in the Convention on May 29, 1787 by Edmund Randolph. It
- 11 provided in resolution 13 "that provision ought to be made for the amendment
- 12 of the Articles of Union whensoever it shall seem necessary, and that the
- 13 assent of the National Legislature ought not to be required thereto."24 A
- 14 number of suggestions were advanced as to a specific article which eventuated
- in the following clause in the Convention's Committee of Detail report of
- 16 August 6, 1787:
- 17 "On the application of the Legislatures of two thirds of the States in 18 the Union, for an amendment of this Constitution, the Legislature of the 19 United States shall call a Convention for that purpose."<sup>25</sup>

20

- 21 This proposal was adopted by the Convention on August 30. Gouverneur Morris's
- 22 suggestion on that day that Congress be left at liberty to call a convention
- 23 "whenever it pleased" was not accepted. There is a reason to believe that the
- 24 convention contemplated under the proposal "was the last step in the amending
- 25 process, and its decisions did not require any ratification by anybody."<sup>26</sup>

- 27 On September 10, 1787 Elbridge Gerry of Massachusetts moved to reconsider the
- 28 amending provision, stating that under it "two thirds of the States may obtain
- 29 a Convention, a majority of which can bind the Union to innovations that may

- 1 subvert the State-Constitutions altogether." His motion was supported by
- 2 Alexander Hamilton and other delegates. Hamilton pointed to the difficulty of
- 3 introducing amendments under the Articles of Confederation and stated that "an
- 4 easy mode should be established for supplying defects which will probably
- 5 appear in the new System."27 He felt that Congress would be "the first to
- 6 perceive" and be "most sensible to the necessity of Amendments," and ought
- 7 also to be authorized to call a convention whenever two-thirds of each branch
- 8 concurred on the need for a convention. Madison also criticized the August 30
- 9 proposal, stating that the vagueness of the expression "call a convention for
- 10 the purpose" was sufficient reason for reconsideration. He then asked: "How
- 11 was a Convention to be formed? by what rule decide? what the force of its
- 12 acts?" As a result of the debate, the clause adopted on August 30 was dropped
- 13 in favor of the following provision proposed by Madison:
- "The Legislature of the U-S- whenever two thirds of both Houses shall deem necessary, or on the application of two thirds of the Legislatures of the several States, shall propose amendments to this Constitution, which shall be valid to all intents and purposes as part thereof, when the same shall have been ratified by three fourths at least of the Legislatures of the several States, or by Conventions in three fourths thereof, as one or the other mode of ratification may be proposed by the 21 Legislature of the U.S."<sup>28</sup>

- 23 On September 15, after the Committee of Style had returned its report, George
- 24 Mason strongly objected to the amending article on the ground that both modes
- 25 of initiating amendments depended on Congress so that "no amendments of the
- 26 proper kind would ever be obtained by the people, if the Government should
- 27 become oppressive . . . "29 Gerry and Gouverneur Morris then moved to amend
- 28 the article "so as to require a convention on application of" two-thirds of
- 29 the states. 30 In response Madison said that he "did not see why Congress
- 30 would not be as much bound to propose amendments applied for by two thirds of
- 31 the States as to call a Convention on the like application." He added that he
- 32 had no objection against providing for a convention for the purpose of

- 1 amendments "except only that difficulties might arise as to the form, the
- 2 quorum &c. which in Constitutional regulations ought to be as much as possible
- 3 avoided."<sup>31</sup>

- 5 Thereupon, the motion by Morris and Gerry was agreed to and the amending
- 6 article was thereby modified so as to include the convention method as it now
- 7 reads. Morris then successfully moved to include in Article V the proviso that
- 8 "no state, without its consent shall be deprived of its equal suffrage in the
- 9 Senate."

10

- 11 There was little discussion of Article V in the state ratifying conventions.
- 12 In The Federalist Alexander Hamilton spoke of Article V as contemplating "a
- 13 single proposition." Whenever two-thirds of the states concur, he declared,
- 14 Congress would be obliged to call a convention. "The words of this article are
- 15 peremptory. The Congress 'shall call a convention'. Nothing in this particular
- 16 is left to the discretion of that body."32 Madison, as noted earlier, stated
- 17 in The Federalist that both the general and state governments are equally
- 18 enabled to "originate the amendment of errors."

- 20 While the Constitutional Convention of 1787 may have exceeded the purpose of
- 21 its call in framing the Constitution, 33 it does not follow that a convention
- 22 convened under Article V and subject to the Constitution can lawfully assume
- 23 such authority. In the first place, the Convention of 1787 took place during
- 24 an extraordinary period and at a time when the states were independent and
- 25 there was no effective national government. Thomas Cooley described it as "a
- 26 revolutionary proceeding, and could be justified only by the circumstances
- 27 which had brought the Union to the brink of dissolution."34 Moreover, the
- 28 Convention of 1787 did not ignore Congress. The draft Constitution was
- 29 submitted to Congress, consented to by Congress, and transmitted by Congress to the states for ratification by popularly-elected conventions. 1 2 3 Both pre-1787 convention practices and the general tenor of the amending provisions of the first state constitutions lend support to the conclusions 4 that a convention could be convened for a specific purpose and that, once 5 6 convened, it would have no authority to exceed that purpose. 7 8 Of the first state constitutions, four provided for amendment by conventions 9 and three by other methods. 35 Georgia's Constitution provided that: 10 "no alteration shall be made in this constitution without petitions from a majority of the counties, . . . at which time the assembly shall order 11 a convention to be called for that purpose, 36 specifying the alterations 12 to be made, according to the petitions referred to the assembly by a 13 14 majority of the counties as aforesaid."37 15 16 Pennsylvania's Constitution of 1776 provided for the election of a Council of 17 Censors with power to call a convention: "if there appear to them an absolute necessity of amending any article 18 19 of the constitution which may be defective . . . . But the articles to 20 be amended, and the amendment proposed, and such articles as are proposed to be added or abolished, shall be promulgated at least six 21 months before the day appointed for the election of such convention, for 22 the previous consideration of the people, that they may have an 23 24 opportunity of instructing their delegates on the subject."38 25 26 The Massachusetts Constitution of 1780 directed the General Court to have the 27 qualified voters of the respective towns and plantations convened in 1795 to 28 collect their sentiments on the necessity or expediency of amendments. If twothirds of the qualified voters throughout the state favored "revision or 29 30 amendment," it was provided that a convention of delegates would meet "for the 31 purpose aforesaid." 32 33 The report of the Annapolis Convention of 1786 also reflected an awareness of the binding effect of limitations on a convention. That Convention assembled to consider general trade matters and, because of the limited number of state 2 representatives present, decided not to proceed, stating: 3 "That the express terms of the powers to your Commissioners supposing a 4 deputation from all the States, and having for object the Trade and 5 Commerce of the United States, Your Commissioners did not conceive it 6 advisable to proceed on the business of their mission, under the 7 Circumstances of so partial and defective a representation."3 8 9 In their report, the Commissioners expressed the opinion that there should be 10 another convention, to consider not only trade matters but the amendment of 11 the Articles of Confederation. The limited Authority of the Annapolis 12 Commissioners, however, was made clear: 13 "If in expressing this wish, or in intimating any other sentiment, your 14 Commissioners should seem to exceed the strict bounds of their 15 appointment, they entertain a full confidence, that a conduct, dictated 16 by an anxiety for the welfare, of the United States, will not fail to 17 receive an indulgent construction. 18 19 20 "Though your Commissioners could not with propriety address these 21 observations and sentiments to any but the States they have the honor to 22 Represent, they have nevertheless concluded from motives of respect, to 23 transmit Copies of this Report to the United States in Congress 24 assembled, and to the executives of the other States." 25 From this history of the origins of the amending provision, we are led to 26 27 conclude that there is no justification for the view that Article V sanctions only general conventions. Such an interpretation would relegate the 28 29 alternative method to an "unequal" method of initiating amendments. Even if 30 the state legislatures overwhelmingly felt that there was a necessity for 31 limited change in the Constitution, they would be discouraged from calling for 32 a convention if that convention would automatically have the power to propose 33 a complete revision of the Constitution. 34 Since Article V specifically and exclusively vests the state legislatures with 35 the authority to apply for a convention, we can perceive no sound reason as to 36 37 why they cannot invoke limitations in exercising that authority. At the state level, for example, it seems settled that the electorate may choose to delegate only a portion of its authority to a state constitutional convention and so limit it substantively. 40 The rationale is that the state convention 3 derives its authority from the people when they vote to hold a convention and 4

```
1
 2
 5
     that when they so vote they adopt the limitations on the convention contained 6 in the enabling legislation drafted by the legislature and presented on a
     "take it or leave it" basis. 41 As one state court decision stated:
 7
           "When the people, acting under a proper resolution of the legislature,
 8 9
           vote in favor of calling a constitutional convention, they are presumed 10 to ratify the terms of the legislative call, which thereby becomes the basis of the authority delegated to the convention." 42 11
     And another:
12
           "Certainly, the people, may, if they will, elect delegates for a 13 particular purpose without conferring on them all their authority . . .
14
15
16
17
     In summary, we believe that a substantively-limited Article V convention is consistent with the purpose of the alternative method since the states and 18 19 people would have a complete vehicle other than the Congress for remedying specific abuses of power by the national government; consistent with the 20 21 actual history of the amending article throughout which only amendments on single subjects have been proposed by Congress; consistent with state practice 22 under which limited conventions have been held under constitutional provisions 23 not expressly sanctioning a substantively-limited convention; 44 and consistent 24
25 with democratic principles because convention delegates would be chosen by the 26 people in an election in which the subject matter to be dealt with would be 27 known and the issues identified, thereby enabling the electorate to exercise 28 an informed judgment in the choice of delegates.
```

30

Power of Congress with Respect to an Article V Convention

2 Article V explicitly gives Congress the power to call a convention upon

- 3 receipt of applications from two-thirds of the state legislatures and to
- 4 choose the mode of ratification of a proposed amendment. We believe that, as a
- 5 necessary incident of the power to call, Congress has the power initially to
- 6 determine whether the conditions which give rise to its duty have been
- 7 satisfied. Once a determination is made that the conditions are present,
- 8 Congress' duty is clear it "shall" call a convention. The language of Article
- 9 V, the debates at the Constitutional Convention of 1787, and statements made
- 10 in The Federalist, in the debates in the state ratifying conventions, and in
- 11 congressional debates during the early Congresses make clear the mandatory
- 12 nature of this duty. 45

13

- 14 While we believe that Congress has the power to establish standards for making
- 15 available to the states a limited convention when they petition for that type
- 16 of convention, we consider it essential that implementing legislation not
- 17 preclude the states from applying for a general convention. Legislation which
- 18 did so would be of questionable validity since neither the language nor
- 19 history of Article V reveals an intention to prohibit another general
- 20 convention.

- 22 In formulating standards for determining whether a convention call should
- 23 issue, there is a need for great delicacy. The standards not only will
- 24 determine the call but they also will have the effect of defining the
- 25 convention's authority and determining whether Congress must submit a proposed
- 26 amendment to the states for ratification. The standards chosen should be
- 27 precise enough to permit a judgment that two-thirds of the state legislatures
- 28 seek a convention on an agreed-upon matter. Our research of possible standards
- 29 has not produced any alternatives which we feel are preferable to the "same
- 30 subject" test embodied in S.1272. We do feel however, that the language of

- 1 Sections 4, 5, 6, 10 and 11 of S.1272 is in need of improvement and
- 2 harmonization so as to avoid the use of different expressions and concepts.

- 4 We believe that standards which in effect required applications to be
- 5 identical in wording would be improper since they would tend to make resort to
- 6 the convention process exceedingly difficult in view of the problems that
- 7 would be encountered in obtaining identically worded applications from thirty-
- 8 four states. Equally improper, we believe, would be standards which permitted
- 9 Congress to exercise a policy-making role in determining whether or not to
- 10 call a convention. 46

11

- 12 In addition to the power to adopt standards for determining when a convention
- 13 call should issue, we also believe it a fair inference from the text of
- 14 Article V that Congress has the power to provide for such matters as the time
- 15 and place of the convention, the composition and financing of the convention,
- 16 and the manner of selecting delegates. Some of these items can only be fixed
- 17 by Congress. Uniform federal legislation covering all is desirable in order to
- 18 produce an effective convention.

- 20 Less clear is Congress' power over the internal rules and procedures of a
- 21 convention. 47 The Supreme Court's decisions in Dillon v. Gloss and Leser v.
- 22 Garnett49 can be viewed as supporting a broad view of Congress' power in the
- 23 amending process. As the Court stated in Dillon v. Gloss: "As a rule the
- 24 Constitution speaks in general terms, leaving Congress to deal with subsidiary
- 25 matters of detail as the public interests and changing conditions may require;
- 26 and Article V is no exception to the rule." On the other hand, the legislative
- 27 history of Article V reflects a purpose that the convention method be as free
- 28 as possible from congressional domination, and the text of Article V grants
- 29 Congress only two express powers pertaining to a convention, that is, the

- 1 power (or duty) to call a convention and the power to choose the mode of
- 2 ratification of any proposed amendment. In the absence of direct precedents,
- 3 it perhaps can be said fairly that Congress may not by legislation interfere
- 4 with matters of procedure because they are an intrinsic part of the
- 5 deliberative characteristic of a convention. 50 We view as unwise and of
- 6 questionable validity any attempt by Congress to regulate the internal
- 7 proceedings of a convention. In particular, we believe that Congress should
- 8 not impose a vote requirement on an Article V convention. We are influenced in
- 9 this regard by these factors:

- 11 First, it appears from our research that throughout our history conventions
- 12 generally have decided for themselves the vote that should govern their
- 13 proceedings. This includes the Constitutional Convention of 1787, the
- 14 constitutional conventions that took place between 1776 and 1787, many of the
- 15 approximately two hundred state constitutional conventions that have been held
- 16 since 1789, and the various territorial conventions that have taken place
- 17 under acts passed by Congress. 51 Second, the specific intent of the Framers
- 18 with regard to the convention method of initiating amendments was to make
- 19 available an alternative method of amending the Constitution one that would
- 20 be free from congressional domination. Third, a reading of the 1787 debates
- 21 suggests that the Framers contemplated that an Article V convention would have
- 22 the power to determine its own voting and other internal procedures and that
- 23 the requirement of ratification by three-fourths of the states was intended to
- 24 protect minority interest.<sup>52</sup>

- 26 We have considered the suggestion that Congress should be able to require a
- 27 two-thirds vote in order to maintain the symmetry between the convention and
- 28 congressional methods of initiating amendments. We recognize that the
- 29 convention can be viewed as paralleling Congress as the proposing body. Yet we

- 1 think it is significant that the Constitution, while it specifies a two-thirds
- 2 vote by Congress to propose an amendment, is completely silent as to the
- 3 convention vote.

4 Judicial Review

5

- 6 The Committee believes that judicial review of decisions made under Article V
- 7 is desirable and feasible. We believe Congress should declare itself in favor
- 8 of such review in any legislation implementing the convention process. We
- 9 regard as very unwise the approach of S.1272 which attempts to exclude the
- 10 courts from any role. While the Supreme Court's decision in Ex parte
- 11 McCardle<sup>53</sup> indicated that Congress has power under Article III to withdraw
- 12 matters from the jurisdiction of the federal courts, this power is not
- 13 unlimited. It is questionable whether the power reaches so far as to permit
- 14 Congress to change results required by other provisions of the Constitution or
- 15 to deny a remedy to enforce constitutional rights. Moreover, we are unaware of
- 16 any authority upholding this power in cases of original jurisdiction. 54

- 18 To be sure, Congress has discretion in interpreting Article V and in adopting
- 19 implementing legislation. It cannot be gainsaid that Congress has the primary
- 20 power of administering Article V. We do not believe, however, that Congress
- 21 is, or ought to be, the final dispositive power in every situation. In this
- 22 regard, it is to be noted that the courts have adjudicated on the merits a
- 23 variety of questions arising under the amending article. These have included
- 24 such questions as: whether Congress may choose the state legislative method of
- 25 ratification for proposed amendments which expand federal power; whether a
- 26 proposed amendment requires the approval of the President; whether Congress
- 27 may fix a reasonable time for ratification of a proposed amendment by state
- 28 legislatures; whether the states may restrict the power of their legislatures
- 29 to ratify amendments or submit the decision to a popular referendum; and the

1 meaning of the requirement of two-thirds vote of both Houses. 55

2

- 3 Baker v. Carr and Powell v. McCormack suggest considerable change in the
- 4 Supreme Court's view since Coleman v. Miller<sup>56</sup> on questions involving the
- 5 political process.

6

- 7 In Coleman, the Court held that a group of state legislators who had voted not
- 8 to ratify the child labor amendment had standing to question the validity of
- 9 their state's ratification. Four Justices dissented on this point. The Court
- 10 held two questions non-justiciable: the issue of undue time lapse for
- 11 ratification and the power of a state legislature to ratify after having first
- 12 rejected ratification. In reaching these conclusions, the Court pointed to the
- 13 absence of criteria either in the Constitution or a statute relating to the
- 14 ratification process. The four Justices who dissented on standing concurred on
- 15 non-justiciability. They felt, however, that the Court should have disapproved
- 16 Dillon v. Gloss insofar as it decided judicially that seven years is a
- 17 reasonable period of time for ratification, stating that Article V gave
- 18 control of the amending process to Congress and that the process was
- 19 "political in its entirety, from submission until an amendment becomes part of
- 20 the Constitution, and is not subject to judicial guidance, control or
- 21 interference at any point." Even though the calling of a convention is not
- 22 precisely within these time limits and the holding in Coleman is not broad, it
- 23 is not at all surprising that commentators read that case as bringing Article
- 24 V issues generally within the rubric of "political questions."

- 26 In Baker v. Carr, 57 the Court held that a claim of legislative
- 27 malapportionment raised a justiciable question. More generally, the Court laid
- 28 down a number of criteria, at least one of which was likely to be involved in
- 29 a true "political question," as follows:
- 30 "a textually demonstrable constitutional commitment of the issue to a BRIEF IN SUPPORT OF CONVENTION APPENDIX C- 1973 ABA REPORT PAGE 24

1 coordinate political department; or a lack of judicially discoverable and manageable standards for resolving it; or the impossibility of 3 deciding without an initial policy determination of a kind clearly for non-judicial discretion; or the impossibility of a court's undertaking 5 independent resolution without expressing lack of respect due coordinate 6 branches of government; or an unusual need for unquestioning adherence 7 to a political decision already made; or the potentiality of 8 embarrassment for multifarious pronouncements by various departments on 9 one question."58

10

- 11 Along with these formulas, there was additional stress in Baker v. Carr on the
- 12 fact that the Court there was not dealing with Congress, a coordinate branch,
- 13 but with the states. In reviewing the precedents, the Court noted that it had
- 14 held issues to be nonjusticiable when the matter demanded a single-voiced
- 15 statement, or required prompt, unquestioning obedience, as in a national
- 16 emergency, or contained the potential embarrassment of sitting in judgment on
- 17 the internal operations of a coordinate branch.

18

- 19 Perhaps the most striking feature of Baker and its progeny has been the
- 20 Court's willingness to project itself into redistricting and reapportionment
- 21 in giving relief. In addition, some of the criteria stressed by the Court as
- 22 determinative of "political question" issues were as applicable to Congress as
- 23 to the states.

- 25 In Powell, 59 the Court clearly marked out new ground. The question presented
- 26 was the constitutionality of the House of Representatives' decision to deny a
- 27 seat to Congressman-elect Powell, despite his having fulfilled the
- 28 prerequisites specified in Article I, Section 2 of the Constitution. Even
- 29 though it was dealing with Congress, and indeed with a matter of internal
- 30 legislative operation, still it held that the question was a justiciable one,
- 31 involving as it did the traditional judicial function of interpreting the
- 32 Constitution, and that a newly elected Representative could be judged as to
- 33 qualifications only as to age, citizenship, and residence. The Court limited
- 34 itself to declaratory relief, saying that the question of whether coercive

- 1 relief was available against employees of Congress was not being decided. But
- 2 the more important aspect of the decisions is the Court's willingness to
- 3 decide. It stressed the interest of voters in having the person they elect
- 4 take a seat in Congress. Thus, it looked into the clause on qualifications and
- 5 found in the text and history that Congress was the judge of qualifications,
- 6 but only of the three specified.

- 8 It is not easy to say just how these precedents apply to judicial review of
- 9 questions involving a constitutional convention under Article V. It can be
- 10 argued that they give three different doctrinal models, each leading to a
- 11 different set of conclusions. We are inclined to a view which seeks to
- 12 reconcile the three cases. Powell may be explained on the theory that
- 13 specially protected constitutional interests are at stake, that the criteria
- 14 for decisions were rather simple, and that an appropriate basis for relief
- 15 could be found. Baker is more complex, but it did not involve Congress
- 16 directly. The state legislatures had forfeited a right to finality by
- 17 persistent and flagrant malapportionments, and one person, one vote supplied a
- 18 judicially workable standard (though the latter point emerged after Baker).
- 19 Thus, Coleman may be understood as good law so far as it goes, on the theory
- 20 that Congress is directly involved, that no specially protected interests are
- 21 threatened, and that the issues are not easily dealt with by the Court.

- 23 Following this approach to the three cases, some tentative conclusions can be
- 24 drawn for Article V and constitutional conventions. If two-thirds of the state
- 25 legislatures apply, for example, for a convention to consider the
- 26 apportionment of state legislatures, and Congress refuses to call the
- 27 convention, it is arguable that a Powell situation exists, since the purpose
- 28 of the convention method was to enable the states to bring about a change in
- 29 the Constitution even against congressional opposition. The question whether

- 1 Congress is required to act, rather than having discretion to decide, is one
- 2 very similar in quality to the question in Powell. The difficulty not
- 3 confronted in Powell is that the relief given must probably be far-reaching,
- 4 possibly involving the Court in approving a plan for a convention. There are
- 5 at least two answers. The Court might find a way to limit itself to a
- 6 declaratory judgment, as it did in Powell, but if it must face far-reaching
- 7 relief, the reapportionment cases afford a precedent. In some ways, a plan for
- 8 a convention would present great difficulties for a court, but it could make
- 9 clear that Congress could change its plan, simply by acting. 60
- 11 If one concludes that the courts can require Congress to act, one is likely to
- 12 see the courts as able to answer certain ancillary questions of "law," such as
- 13 whether the state legislatures can bind a convention by the limitations in
- 14 their applications, and whether the state legislatures can force the call of
- 15 an unlimited convention. Here we believe Congress has a legislative power,
- 16 within limits, to declare the effects of the states' applications on the scope
- 17 of the convention. Courts should recognize that power and vary their review
- 18 according to whether Congress has acted.

19

- 20 Consequently, this Committee strongly favors the introduction in any
- 21 implementing legislation of a limited judicial review. 61 It would not only add
- 22 substantial legitimacy to any use of the convention process but it would ease
- 23 the question of justiciability. Moreover, since the process likely would be
- 24 resorted to in order to effect a change opposed by vested interests, it seems
- 25 highly appropriate that our independent judiciary be involved so that it can
- 26 act, if necessary, as the arbiter.
- 28 In view of the nature of the controversies that might arise under Article V,
- 29 the Committee believes that there should be several limits on judicial

- 1 consideration. First, a Congressional determination should be overturned only
- 2 if "clearly erroneous." This standard recognizes Congress' political role and
- 3 at the same time insures that Congress cannot arbitrarily void the convention
- 4 process.

- 6 Second, by limiting judicial remedies to declaratory relief, the possibility
- 7 of actual conflict between the branches of government would be diminished. As
- 8 Powell illustrated, courts are more willing to adjudicate questions with
- 9 "political" overtones when not faced with the institutionally destructive need
- 10 to enforce the result.

11

- 12 Third, the introduction of judicial review should not be allowed to delay the
- 13 amending process unduly. Accordingly, any claim should be raised promptly so
- 14 as to result in an early presentation and resolution of any dispute. We favor
- 15 a short limitation period combined with expedited judicial procedures such as
- 16 the selection of a three-judge district court. The possibility of providing
- 17 original jurisdiction in the Supreme Court was rejected for several reasons.
- 18 Initiation of suit in the Supreme Court necessarily escalates the level of the
- 19 controversy without regard to the significance of the basic dispute. In
- 20 addition, three-judge district court procedures are better suited to an
- 21 expedited handling of factual issues.

- 23 We do not believe that our recommendation of a three-judge court is
- 24 inconsistent with the American Bar Association's position that the
- 25 jurisdiction of such courts should be sharply curtailed. It seems likely that
- 26 the judicial review provided for will occur relatively rarely. In those
- 27 instances when it does, the advantages of three-judge court jurisdiction
- 28 outweigh the disadvantages which the Association has perceived in the existing

1 three-judge court jurisdiction. In cases involving national constitutional

2 convention issues, the presence of three judges (including a circuit judge)

3 and the direct appeal to the Supreme Court are significant advantages over

4 conventional district court procedure.

5

Role of Executive
(i) President

8

9 There is no indication from the text of Article V that the President is 10 assigned a role in the amending process. Article V provides that "Congress"

11 shall propose amendments, call a convention for proposing amendments and, in 12 either case, choose the mode for ratification of amendments. Article I,

13 Section 7 of the Constitution, however, provides that "every Order,

14 Resolution, or Vote to which the concurrence of the Senate and House of 15 Representatives may be necessary (except on a question of Adjournment) shall 16 be presented to the President" for his approval and, if disapproved, may be

17 repassed by a two-thirds vote of both Houses.

18

19 It has, we believe, been regarded as settled that amendments proposed by 20 Congress need not be presented to the President for his approval. The practice

21 originated with the first ten amendments, which were not submitted to 22 President Washington for his approval, and has continued through the recently

23 proposed amendment on equality of rights. The question of whether the 24 President's approval is required was passed on by the Supreme Court in 25 Hollingsworth v. Virginia. 62 There, the validity of the Eleventh Amendment was 26 attacked on the ground that it had "not been proposed in the form prescribed

27 by the Constitution" in that it had never been presented to the President.

28 Article I, Section 7 was relied upon in support of that position. The Attorney

29 General argued that the proposing of amendments was "a substantive act,

30 unconnected with the ordinary business of legislation, and not within the 31 policy or terms of investing the President with a qualified negative on the

- 1 Acts and Resolutions of Congress." It was also urged that since a two-thirds
- 2 vote was necessary for both proposing an amendment and overriding a
- 3 presidential veto, no useful purpose would be served by a submission to the
- 4 President in such case. It was argued in reply that this was no answer, since
- 5 the reasons assigned by the President for his disapproval "might be so
- 6 satisfactory as to reduce the majority below the constitutional proportion."
- 7 The Court held that the amendment had been properly adopted, Justice Chase
- 8 stating that "the negative of the President applies only to the ordinary cases
- 9 of legislation: he has nothing to do with the proposition or adoption of
- 10 amendments to the Constitution." <sup>63</sup> What was not pointed out, but could have
- 11 been, is that had the President's approval been found necessary, it would have
- 12 created the anomaly that only amendments proposed by Congress would be subject
- 13 to the requirements inasmuch as Article I, Section 7 by its terms could not
- 14 apply to action taken by a national constitutional convention.
- 16 Subsequent to Hollingsworth, the question of the President's role in the
- 17 amending process has been the subject of discussion in Congress. In 1803 a
- 18 motion in the Senate to submit the Twelfth Amendment to the President was
- 19 defeated. 64 In 1865 the proposed Thirteenth Amendment was submitted to
- 20 President Lincoln and, apparently through an inadvertence, was signed by him.
- 21 An extensive discussion of his action took place in the Senate and a
- 22 resolution was passed declaring that the President's signature was
- 23 unnecessary, inconsistent with former practice, and should not constitute a
- 24 precedent for the future. 55 The following year President Andrew Johnson, in a
- 25 report to the Congress with respect to the Fourteenth Amendment, made clear
- 26 that the steps taken by the Executive Branch in submitting the amendment to
- 27 the state legislatures was "purely ministerial" and did not commit the
- 28 Executive to "an approval or a recommendation of the amendment."66 Since that
- 29 time, no proposed amendment has been submitted to the President for his
- 30 approval and no serious question has arisen over the validity of amendments

- 1 for that reason. Thus, the Supreme Court could state in 1920 in Hawke v. Smith
- 2 that it was settled "that the submission of a constitutional amendment did not
- 3 require the action of the President."

- 5 While the "call" of a convention is obviously a different step from that of
- 6 proposing an amendment, we do not believe that the President's approval is
- 7 required. Under Article V applications from two-thirds of the state
- 8 legislatures must precede a call and, as previously noted, Congress' duty to
- 9 issue a call once the conditions have been met clearly seems to be a mandatory
- 10 one. To require the President's approval of a convention call, therefore,
- 11 would add a requirement not intended. Not only would it be inconsistent with
- 12 the mandatory nature of Congress' duty and the practice of non-presidential
- 13 involvement in the congressional process of initiating amendments but it would
- 14 make more difficult any resort to the convention method. The approval of
- 15 another branch of government would be necessary and, if not obtained, a two-
- 16 thirds vote of each House would be required before a call could issue.
- 17 Certainly, the parallelism between the two initiating methods would be
- 18 altered, in a manner that could only thwart the intended purpose of the
- 19 convention process as an "equal" method of initiating amendments.

- 21 While the language of Article I, Section 7 expressly provides for only one
- 22 exception (i.e., an adjournment vote), it has been interpreted as not
- 23 requiring presidential approval of preliminary votes in Congress, or, as
- 24 noted, the proposal of constitutional amendments by Congress, or concurrent
- 25 resolutions passed by the Senate and the House of Representatives for a
- 26 variety of purposes. 67 As the Supreme Court held in Hollingsworth, Section 7
- 27 applies to "ordinary cases of legislation" and "has nothing to do with the
- 28 proposition or adoption of amendments to the Constitution." Thus, the use of a

- 1 concurrent resolution by Congress for the issuance of a convention call is in
- 2 our opinion in harmony with the generally recognized exceptions to Article I,
- 3 Section 7.
- 4 State Governor (ii)

- 6 We believe that a state governor should have no part in the process by which a
- 7 state legislature applies for a convention or ratifies a proposed amendment.
- 8 In reaching this conclusion, we are influenced by the fact that Article V
- 9 speaks of "state legislatures" applying for a convention and ratifying an
- 10 amendment proposed by either Congress or a national convention. The Supreme
- 11 Court had occasion to focus on this expression in Hawke v.  $Smith^{68}$  (No. 1) in
- 12 the context of a provision in the Ohio Constitution subjecting to a popular
- 13 referendum any ratification of a federal amendment by its legislature. The
- 14 Court held that this requirement was invalid, reasoning that the term
- 15 "legislatures" had a certain meaning. Said the Court: "What it meant when
- 16 adopted it still means for the purpose of interpretation. A Legislature was
- 17 then the representative body which made the laws of the people."69 The
- 18 ratification of a proposed amendment, held the Court, was not "an act of
- 19 legislation within the proper sense of the word" but simply an expression of
- 20 assent in which "no legislative action is authorized or required." The Court
- 21 also noted that the power to ratify proposed amendments has its source in the
- 22 Constitution and, as such, the state law-making procedures are inapplicable.

- 24 That the term "Legislature" does not always mean the representative body
- 25 itself was made clear by Smiley v. Holm. 70 That case involved a bill passed by
- 26 the Minnesota legislature dividing the state into congressional districts
- 27 under Article I, Section 4. The bill was vetoed by the governor and not

1 repassed over his veto. As for the argument that the bill was valid because

Article I, Section 4 refers to the state "Legislatures," the Court stated:

"The use in the Federal Constitution of the same term in different relations does not always imply the same function . . . . Wherever the term 'legislature' is used in the Constitution it is necessary to consider the nature of the particular action in view . . . "71

7 8

2

3

4

5

6

The Court found that the governor's participation was required because the 9 function in question involved the making of state laws and the veto of the 10 governor was an integral part of the state's legislative process. In finding

11 that Article I, Section 4 contemplated the making of laws, the Court stated

12 that it provided for "a complete code for congressional elections" whose

13 requirements "would be nugatory if they did not have appropriate sanctions."

14 The Court contrasted this function with the "Legislature's" role as an

15 electoral body, as when it chose Senators, and a ratifying body, as in the 16 case of federal amendments.

17

19

18 It is hard to see how the act of applying for a convention invokes the law-making processes of the state any more than its act of ratifying a proposed 20 amendment. If anything, the act of ratification is closer to legislation since 21 it is the last step before an amendment becomes a fundamental part of our law.

22 A convention application, on the other hand, is several steps removed. Other

23 states must concur, a convention them must be called by Congress, and an

24 amendment must be proposed by that convention. Moreover, a convention

25 application, unlike legislation dividing congressional districts, does not have the force of law or operate directly and immediately upon the people of 27 the state. From a legal point of view, it would seem to be contrary to Hawke

v. Smith and Leser v. Garnett to require the governor's participation in the 29 application and ratification processes. 72

30

26

The exclusion of the governor from the application and ratification processes 1 also finds support in the overwhelming practice of the states, 73 in the views 2 of text-writers, 74 and in the Supreme Court's decision in Hollingsworth v. 3 Virginia holding that the President was excluded from any role in the process 4 5 by which amendments are proposed by Congress. 75 6 7 Article V Applications (i) Content 8 9 10 A reading of Article V makes clear that an application should contain a 11 request to Congress to call a national convention that would have the authority to propose an amendment to the Constitution. An application which 12 simply expressed a state's opinion on a given problem or requested Congress 13 itself to propose an amendment would not be sufficient for purposes of Article 14 15 V. Nor would an application seem proper if it called for a convention with no more authority than to vote a specific amendment set forth therein up or down, 16 since the convention would be effectively stripped of its deliberative 17 function. $^{76}$  A convention should have latitude to amend, as Congress does, by 18 evaluating and dealing with a problem. 19 20 21 On the other hand, an application which expressed the result sought by an 22 amendment, such as providing for the direct election of the President, should 23 be proper since the convention itself would be left free to decide on the 24 terms of the specific amendment necessary to accomplish that objective. We agree with the suggestion that it should not be necessary that each application be identical or propose similar changes in the same subject

27

28 matter.77

25

- 1 In order to determine whether the requisite agreement among the states is
- 2 present, it would seem useful for congressional legislation to require a state
- 3 legislature to list in its application all state applications in effect on the
- 4 date of its adoption whose subject or subjects it considers to be
- 5 substantially the same. By requiring a state legislature to express the
- 6 purpose of its application in relation to those already received, Congress
- 7 would have additional guidance in rendering its determination. Any such
- 8 requirement, we believe, should be written in a way that would permit an
- 9 application to be counted even though the state involved might have
- 10 inadvertently but in good faith failed to identify similar applications in
- 11 effect.
- 12 Timeliness (ii)
- 13 In Dillon v. Gloss, the Court upheld the fixing by Congress of a period
- 14 during which ratification of a proposed amendment must be accomplished. In
- 15 reaching that conclusion the Court stated that "the fair inference or
- 16 implication from Article V is that the ratification must be within some
- 17 reasonable time after proposal, which Congress is free to fix." The Court
- 18 observed that:

- "as ratification is but the expression of the approbation of the people and is to be effective when had in three-fourths of the States, there is a fair implication that it must be sufficiently contemporaneous in that number of States to reflect the will of the people in all sections at relatively the same period, which of course ratification scattered through a long series of years would not do." The course relative to the people in all sections at the course ratification scattered through a long series of years would not do." The course ratification scattered through a long series of years would not do."
- 26 We believe the reasoning of Dillon v. Gloss to be equally applicable to state
- 27 applications for a national constitutional convention. The convening of a
- 28 convention to deal with a certain matter certainly should reflect the "will of
- 29 the people in all sections at relatively the same period . . . . " In the
- 30 absence of a uniform rule, the timeliness or untimeliness of state

- 1 applications would vary, it seems, from case to case. It would involve, as the
- 2 Supreme Court suggested with respect to the ratification area in Coleman v.
- 3 Miller, a consideration of Apolitical, social and economic conditions which
- 4 have prevailed during the period since the submission of the
- 5 [applications] . . . . "79

- 7 A uniform rule, as in the case of ratification of proposed amendments since
- 8 1918,  $^{80}$  would add certainty and avoid the type of confusion which surrounded
- 9 the apportionment applications. Any rule adopted, however, must take into
- 10 account the fact that some state legislatures do not meet every year and that
- 11 in may states the legislative sessions end early in the year.

- 13 Although the suggestion of a seven year period is consistent with that
- 14 prescribed for the ratification of recent proposed constitutional amendments,
- 15 it can be argued that such a period is too long for the calling of a
- 16 constitutional convention, since a long series of years would likely be
- 17 involved before an amendment could be adopted. A shorter period of time might
- 18 more accurately reflect the will of the people at a give point in time.
- 19 Moreover, at this time in our history when social, economic and political
- 20 changes frequently occur, a long period of time might be undesirable. On the
- 21 other hand, a period such as four years would give states which adopted an
- 22 application in the third and fourth year little opportunity to withdraw it on
- 23 the basis of further reflection. This is emphasized when consideration is
- 24 given to the fact that a number of state legislatures do not meet every year.
- 25 Hence, a longer period does afford more opportunity for reflection on both the
- 26 submission and withdrawal of an application. It also enables the people at the
- 27 time of state legislative elections to express their views. Of course,
- 28 whatever the period it may be extended by the filing of a new proposal.

1 The Committee feels that some limitation is necessary and desirable but takes

2 no position on the exact time except it believes that either four or seven

3 years would be reasonable and that a congressional determination as to either

4 period should be accepted.

5

Withdrawal of Applications (iii)

6 7 8

There is no law dealing squarely with the question of whether a state may 9 withdraw an application seeking a constitutional convention, although some

10 commentators have suggested that a withdrawal is of no effect.81 The 11 desirability of having a rule on the subject is underscored by the fact that state legislatures have attempted to withdraw applications, particularly during the two most recent cases where a large number of state legislatures sought a convention on a specific issue. 82 As a result, uncertainty and 15 confusion have arisen as to the proper treatment of such applications.

16 17

18

19 12

13

14

During the Senate debates of October 1971 on S.215, no one suggested any limitation on the power to withdraw up to the time that the legislatures of two-thirds of the states had submitted proposals. Since a convention should 20 reflect a "contemporaneously-felt need" that it take place, we think there

21 should be no such limitation. In view of the importance and comparatively

22 permanent nature of an amendment, it seems desirable that state legislatures

23 be able to set aside applications that may have been hastily submitted or that

24 no longer reflect the social, economic and political factors in effect when the applications were originally adopted. We believe Congress has the power to 26 so provide.

27

25

28 From a slightly different point of view, the power to withdraw implies the

29 power to change and this relates directly to the question of determining

30 whether two-thirds of the state legislatures have applied for a convention to

- 1 consider the same subject. A state may wish to say specifically through its
- 2 legislature that it does or does not agree that its proposal covers the same
- 3 subject as that of other state proposals. The Committee feels that this power
- 4 is desirable.

- 6 Finally, we can see no problem with respect to a state changing a refusal to
- 7 request a convention to a proposal for such a convention. All states, of
- 8 course, have rules of one sort or another which restrict the time at which a
- 9 once-defeated proposition can be again presented. If these rules were to apply
- 10 to the call of a federal convention and operate in a burdensome manner, their
- 11 validity would be questionable under Hawke v. Smith.

12

- 13 The Article V Convention
- 14 (i) Election of Delegates

15

- 16 We believe it of fundamental importance that a constitutional convention be
- 17 representative of the people of the country. This is especially so when it is
- 18 borne in mind that the method was intended to make available to the "people" a
- 19 means of remedying abuses by the national government. If the convention is to
- 20 be "responsive" to the people, then the structure most appropriate to the
- 21 convention is one representative of the people. This, we believe, can only
- 22 mean an election of convention delegates by the people. An election would help
- 23 assure public confidence in the convention process by generating a discussion
- 24 of the constitutional change sought and affording the people the opportunity
- 25 to express themselves to the future delegates.
- 26 (ii)Apportionment of Delegates

27 28

Although there are no direct precedents in point, there is authority and

- 1 substantial reason for concluding, as we do, that the one-person, one-vote
- 2 rule is applicable to a national constitutional convention. In Hadley v.
- 3 Junior College District, the Supreme Court held that the rule applied in the
- 4 selection of people who carry on governmental functions. 83 While a recent
- 5 decision, affirmed without opinion by the Supreme Court, held that elections
- 6 for the judiciary are exempt from the rule, the lower court stated that
- 7 "judges do not represent people."84 Convention delegates, however, would
- 8 represent people as well as perform a fundamental governmental function. As a
- 9 West Virginia Supreme Court observed with respect to a state constitutional
- 10 convention: "[E]ven though a constitutional convention may not precisely fit
- 11 into one of the three branches of government, it is such an essential incident
- 12 of government that every citizen should be entitled to equal representation
- 13 therein."85 Other decisions involving conventions differ as to whether the
- 14 apportionment of a state constitutional convention must meet constitutional
- 15 standards. 86

- 17 Of course, the state reapportionment decisions are grounded in the equal
- 18 protection clause of the Fourteenth Amendment and the congressional decision
- 19 in Wesberry v. Sanders 87 was founded on Article I, Section 2. Federal
- 20 legislation providing for a national constitutional convention would be
- 21 subject to neither of these clauses but rather to the Fifth Amendment. Yet the
- 22 concept of equal protection is obviously related to due process and has been
- 23 so reflected in decisions under the Fifth Amendment.88
- 25 Assuming compliance with the one-person, one-vote rule is necessary, as we
- 26 believe it is, what standards would apply? While the early cases spoke in
- 27 terms of strict population equality, recent cases have accepted deviations
- 28 from this standard. In Mahan v. Howell, the Supreme Court accepted deviations
- 29 of up to 16.4% because the state apportionment plan was deliberately drawn to

1 conform to existing political subdivisions which, the Court felt, formed a

2 more natural basis for districting so as to represent the interests of the 3 people involved. 89 In Abate v. Mundt, the Court upheld a plan for a county

4 board of supervisors which produced a total deviation of 11.9%.90 It did so on

5 the basis of the long history of dual personnel in county and town government

6 and the lack of built-in bias tending to favor a particular political interest

7 or geographic area.

8

9 Elaborating its views on one person, one vote, the Committee believes that a

10 system of voting by states at a convention, while patterned after the original

11 Constitutional Convention, would be unconstitutional as well as undemocratic

12 and archaic. While it was appropriate before the adoption of the Constitution,

13 at a time when the states were essentially independent, there can be no

14 justification for such a system today. Aside from the contingent election

15 feature of our electoral college system, which has received nearly universal

16 condemnation as being anachronistic, we are not aware of any precedent which

17 would support such a system today. A system of voting by states would make it

18 possible for states representing one-sixth of the population to propose a

19 constitutional amendment. Plainly, there should be a broad representation and 20 popular participation at any convention.

21

26

22 While the representation provisions of S. 1272 allowing each state as many

23 delegates as it has Senators and Representatives in Congress are preferable to 24 a system of voting by states, it is seriously questionable whether that

25 structure would be found constitutional because of the great voting weight it would give to people of one state over the people of another. 91 It can be 27 argued that a representation system in a convention which parallels the 28 structure in Congress does not violate due process, since Congress is the only

- 1 other body authorized by the Constitution to propose constitutional
- 2 amendments. On the other hand, representation in the Congress and the
- 3 electoral college are explicit parts of the Constitution, arrived at as a
- 4 result of compromises at the Constitutional Convention of 1787. It does not
- 5 necessarily follow that apportionment plans based on such models are therefore
- 6 constitutional. On the contrary, the reapportionment decisions make clear that
- 7 state plans which deviate from the principle of equal representation for equal
- 8 numbers are unconstitutional. As the Supreme Court stated in Kirkpatrick v.
- 9 Preisler:
- 10 "Equal representation for equal numbers of people is a principle
- 11 designed to prevent debasement of voting power and diminution of access
- 12 to elected representatives. Toleration of even small deviations
- detracts from these purposes."92
- 14
- 15 In our view, a system allotting to each state a number of delegates equal to
- 16 its representation in the House of Representatives should be an acceptable
- 17 compliance with one-person, one-vote standards. 93 We reach this conclusion
- 18 recognizing that there would be population deviations of up to 50% arising
- 19 from the fact that each state would be entitled to a delegate regardless of
- 20 population. It would be possible to make the populations substantially equal
- 21 by redistricting the entire country regardless of state boundaries or by
- 22 giving Alaska one vote and having every other state elect at large a multiple
- 23 of 300,000 representing its population or redistrict each state on the new
- 24 population unit.94 None of these methods, however, seems feasible or
- 25 realistic. The time and expense involved in the creation and utilization of
- 26 entirely new district lines for one election, especially since state election
- 27 machinery is readily available, is one factor to be weighed. Another is the
- 28 difficulty of creating districts crossing state lines which would adequately

1 represent constituents from both states. There is also the natural interest of

2 the voter in remaining within his state. Furthermore, the dual nature of our

3 political system strongly supports the position that state boundaries be

4 respected. Abate v. Mundt, although distinguishable regarding apportionment of 5 a local legislative body, suggests an analogy on a federal level. The 6 rationale of the Court in upholding the legislative districts within counties drawn to preserve the integrity of the towns, with the minimum deviation

8 possible, could be applicable to apportionment of a convention. The functional interdependence and the coordination of the federal and state governments and 10 the fundamental nature of the dual system in our government parallel the 11 relationship between the county and towns in Abate. Appropriate respect for 12 the integrity of the states would seem to justify an exception to strict

13 equality which would assure each state at least one delegate. Thus, a system based on the allocation of Representatives in Congress would afford maximum 15 representation within that structure.

16 17

14

7

(iii) Members of Congress as Delegates

18

23

19 We cannot discern any federal constitutional bar against a member of Congress

20 serving as a delegate to a national constitutional convention. We do not

21 believe that the provision of Article I, Section 6 prohibiting congressmen

22 from holding offices under the United States would be held applicable to service as a convention delegate. The available precedents suggest that an

24 "office of the United States" must be created under the appointive provisions

25 of Article  ${\rm II}^{95}$  or involve duties and functions in one of the three branches

26 of government which, if accepted by a member of Congress, would constitute an

27 encroachment on the principle of separation of powers underlying our

28 governmental system. 96 It is hard to see how a state-elected delegate to a

- 1 national constitutional convention is within the contemplation of this
- 2 provision. It is noteworthy in this regard that several delegates to the
- 3 Constitutional Convention of 1787 were members of the Continental Congress and
- 4 that the Articles of Confederation contained a clause similar to Article I,
- 5 Section 6.

- 7 We express no position on the policy question presented, or on the
- 8 applicability and validity of any state constitutional bars against members of
- 9 Congress simultaneously serving in other positions.
- 10 Ratification

11

- 12 As part of our study, the Committee has considered the advisability of
- 13 including in any statute implementing the convention method a rule as to
- 14 whether a state should be able to rescind its ratification of a proposed
- amendment or withdraw a rejection vote. In view of the confusion and
- 16 uncertainty which exists with respect to these matters, we believe that a
- 17 uniform rule would be highly desirable.

- 19 The difficult legal and policy question is whether a state can withdraw a
- 20 ratification of a proposed amendment. There is a view that Article V envisions
- 21 only affirmative acts and that once the act of ratification has taken place in
- 22 a state, that state has exhausted its power with respect to the amendment in
- 23 question.97 In support, it is pointed out that where the convention method of
- 24 ratification is chosen, the state constitutional convention would not have the
- 25 ability to withdraw its ratification after it had disbanded. Consequently, it
- 26 is suggested that a state legislature does not have the power to withdraw a
- 27 ratification vote. This suggestion has found support in a few state court
- 28 decisions98 and in the action of Congress declaring the ratification of the
- 29 Fourteenth Amendment valid despite ratification rejections in two of the 1 states making up the three-fourths.

2

- 3 On the other hand, Article V gives Congress the power to select the method of
- 4 ratification and the Supreme Court has made clear that this power carries with
- 5 it the power to adopt reasonable regulations with respect to the ratification
- 6 process. We do not regard past precedent as controlling but rather feel that
- 7 the principle of seeking an agreement of public support espoused in Dillon v.
- 8 Gloss and the importance and comparatively permanent nature of an amendment
- 9 more cogently argue in support of a rule permitting a state to change its
- 10 position either way until three-fourths of the states have finally ratified.99

11

13

12

14 Much of the past discussion on the convention method of initiating amendments

CONCLUSION

- 15 has taken place concurrently with a lively discussion of the particular issue
- 16 sought to be brought before a convention. As a result, the method itself has
- 17 become clouded by uncertainty and controversy and attempted utilization of it
- 18 has been viewed by some as not only an assault on the congressional method of
- 19 initiating amendments but as unleashing a dangerous and radical force in our
- 20 system. Our two-year study of the subject has led us to conclude that a
- 21 national constitutional convention can be channeled so as not to be a force of
- 22 that kind but rather an orderly mechanism of effecting constitutional change
- 23 when circumstances require its use. The charge of radicalism does a disservice
- 24 to the ability of the states and people to act responsibly when dealing with
- 25 the Constitution.

- 27 We do not mean to suggest in any way that the congressional method of
- 28 initiating amendments has not been satisfactory or, for that matter, that it
- 29 is not to be preferred. We do mean to suggest that so long as the convention

1	method of proposing amendments is a part of our Constitution, it is proper to
2	establish procedures for its implementation and improper to place unnecessary
3	and unintended obstacles in the way of its use. As was stated by the Senate
4 5 6 7 8 9 10 11 12	Judiciary Committee, with which we agree:  "The committee believes that the responsibility of Congress under the Constitution is to enact legislation which makes article V meaningful. This responsibility dictates that legislation implementing the article should not be formulated with the objective of making the Convention route a dead letter by placing insurmountable procedural obstacles in its way. Nor on the other hand should Congress, in the guise of implementing legislation, create procedures designed to facilitate the adoption of any particular constitutional change." 101
13
14	The integrity of our system requires that when the convention method is
15	properly resorted to, it be allowed to function as intended.
16	Respectfully submitted,
17
18	SPECIAL CONSTITUTIONAL CONVENTION
19	STUDY COMMITTEE
20	C. Clyde Atkins, Chairman
21	Warren Christopher
22	David Dow
23	John D. Feerick
24	Adrian M. Foley, Jr.
25	Sarah T. Hughes
26	Albert M. Sacks
27	William S. Thompson
28	Samuel W. Witwer
29	July, 1973
30

1
2	CITATIONS
4 5 6 7 8 9	APPENDIX A  This appendix is designed to capsulize our comments regarding various principles reflected in S. 1272 and to cross-reference pertinent parts of our report. The underlining, insertions (noted by brackets) and deletions which appear in S. 1272 have been supplied by us for the purpose of illustrating our comments. 102
10	93 rd Congress
11	1 st Session
12	s. 1272
13
14
15	IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES
16	March 19, 1973
17	Referred to the Committee on the Judiciary
18	Passed the Senate July 9, 1973
19
20 21	A BILL To provide procedures for calling constitutional conventions for proposing
22	amendments to the Constitution of the United States, on application of the 23	legislatures of two-thirds of the States, pursuant to article V of the
24	Constitution.
25
26	Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States
27	of America in Congress assembled, that this Act may be cited as the "Federal
28	Constitutional Convention Procedures Act".
29
30	APPLICATIONS FOR CONSTITUTIONAL CONVENTION

- 1 SEC. 2. 103 The legislature of a State, in making application to the Congress
- 2 for a constitutional convention under article V of the Constitution of the
- 3 United States on and after the enactment of this Act, shall adopt a resolution
- 4 pursuant to this Act stating, in substance, that the legislature requests the
- 5 calling of a convention for the purpose of proposing one or more amendments to
- 6 the Constitution of the United States and stating the nature of the amendment
- 7 or amendments to be proposed.
- 8 APPLICATION PROCEDURE

- 10 SEC. 3.  $(a)^{104}$  For the purpose of adopting or rescinding a resolution pursuant
- 11 to section 2 and section 5, the State legislature shall follow the rules of
- 12 procedure that govern the enactment of a statute by that legislature, but
- 13 without the need for approval of the legislature's action by the governor of
- 14 the State.
- 15 (b)<sup>105</sup> Questions concerning the adoption of a State resolution cognizable
- 16 under this Act shall be [determined] determinable by the Congress of the
- 17 United States and its decisions thereon shall be binding on all others,
- 18 including State and Federal courts.
- 19 TRANSMITTAL OF APPLICATIONS

20

- 21 SEC. 4 (a) Within thirty days after the adoption by the legislature of a State
- 22 of a resolution to apply for the calling of a constitutional convention, the
- 23 secretary of sate of the State, or if there be no such officer, the person who
- 24 is charged by the State law with such function, shall transmit to the Congress
- 25 of the United States two copies of the application, one addressed to the
- 26 President of the Senate, and one to the Speaker of the House of
- 27 Representatives.

1 (b) Each copy of the application so made by any State shall containX 2 3 (1) the title of the resolution; 4  $(2)^{106}$  to the extent practicable a list of all state applications in effect 5 on the date of adoption whose subject or subjects are substantially the same 6 7 as the subject or subjects set forth in the application;] 8 [3] 9 (2) the exact text of the resolution signed by the presiding officer of each 10 house of the State legislature; and [4] 11 12 (3) The date on which the legislature adopted the resolution; and shall be accompanied by a certificate of the secretary of state of the State, or 13 such other person as is charged by the State law with such function, 14 certifying that the application accurately sets forth the text of the 15 16 resolution. 17  $[\ (c)^{107}\ \text{Upon receipt, an application shall be deemed valid and in compliance}]$ 18 19 with article V of the Constitution and this Act, unless both Houses of 20 Congress prior to the expiration of 60 days of continuous session of Congress 21 following the receipt of such application shall by concurrent resolution 22 determine the application is invalid, either in whole or in part. Failure of 23 Congress to act within the specified period is a determination subject to review under section 16 of this Act. Such resolution shall set forth with particularity the ground or grounds for any such determination. The 60-day

24

- 1 period referred to herein shall be computed in accordance with section 11(b)
- 2 (2) of this Act.]
- 3 [d]<sup>108</sup>
- 4 (e) Within ten days after receipt of a copy of any such application, the
- 5 President of the Senate and Speaker of the House of Representatives shall
- 6 report to the House of which he is the presiding officer, identifying the
- 7 State making application, the subject of the application, and the number of
- 8 States then having made application on such subject. [Within the 60-day period
- 9 provided for in Section 4(c), 1 the President of the Senate and Speaker of the
- 10 House of Representatives shall jointly cause copies of such application to be
- 11 sent to the presiding officer of each house of the legislature of every other
- 12 State and to each Member of the Senate and House of Representatives of the
- 13 Congress of the United States, [provided, however, that an application
- 14 declared invalid shall not be so transmitted.
- 15 EFFECTIVE PERIOD OF APPLICATION
- 16 SEC. 5 (a) 109 An application submitted to the Congress by a State, unless
- 17 sooner rescinded by the State legislature shall remain effective for seven
- 18 calendar years after the date it is received by the Congress, except that
- 19 whenever within a period of seven calendar years two-thirds or more of the
- 20 several States have each submitted an application calling for a constitutional
- 21 convention on the same subject all such applications shall remain in effect
- 22 until the Congress has taken action on a concurrent resolution pursuant to
- 23 section 6, calling for a constitutional convention.
- 24 (b)<sup>110</sup> A State may rescind its application calling for a constitutional
- 25 convention by adopting and transmitting to the Congress a resolution of

- 1 rescission in conformity with the procedure specified in sections 3 and 4,
- 2 except that no such rescission shall be effective as to any valid application
- 3 made for a constitutional convention upon any subject after the date on which
- 4 two-thirds or more of the State legislatures have valid applications pending
- 5 before the Congress seeking amendments on the same subjects.
- 6 (c) 111 Questions concerning the recession of a State's application shall be
- 7 determined by the Congress of the United States and its decisions shall be-
- 8 binding on all others including State and Federal Courts.
- 9 CALLING OF A CONSTITUTIONAL CONVENTION

- 11 SEC. 6.  $(a)^{112}$  It shall be the duty of the Secretary of the Senate and the
- 12 Clerk of the House of Representatives to maintain a record of all applications
- 13 received by the President of the Senate and Speaker of the House of
- 14 Representatives from States for the calling of a constitutional convention
- 15 upon each subject. Whenever applications made by two-thirds or more of the
- 16 States with respect to the same subject have been received, the Secretary and
- 17 the Clerk shall so report in writing to the officer to whom those applications
- 18 were transmitted, and such officer thereupon shall announce on the floor of
- 19 the House of which he is an officer the substance of such report. It shall be
- 20 the duty of such House to determine that there are in effect valid
- 21 applications made by two-thirds of the States with respect to the same
- 22 subject. If either House of the Congress determines, upon consideration of
- 23 any such report or of a concurrent resolution agreed to by the other House of
- 24 the Congress, that there are in effect valid applications made by two-thirds
- 25 or more of the States for the calling of a constitutional convention upon the
- 26 same subject, it shall be the duty of that House to agree to a concurrent
- 27 resolution calling for the convening of a Federal constitutional convention
- 28 upon that subject. Each such concurrent resolution shall (1) designate the

- 1 place and time of meeting of the convention, and (2) set forth the nature of
- 2 the amendment or amendments for the consideration of which the convention is
- 3 called. A copy of each such concurrent resolution agreed to by both Houses of
- 4 the Congress shall be transmitted forthwith to the Governor and to the
- 5 presiding officer of each house of the legislature of each State.

- 7 (b) The convention shall be convened not later than one year after adoption of
- 8 the resolution.

9

10 DELEGATES

11

- 12 SEC. 7.  $(a)^{113}$  A convention called under this Act shall be composed of as many
- 13 delegates from each State as it is entitled to Senators and Representatives in
- 14 Congress. In each State two delegates shall be elected at large and one
- 15 delegate shall be elected from each congressional district in the manner
- 16 provided by State law. Any vacancy occurring in a State delegation shall be
- 17 filled by appointment of the Governor of each state.

18

- 19 (b) The secretary of state of each State, or, if there be no such officer, the
- 20 person charged by State law to perform such function shall certify to the Vice
- 21 President of the United States the name of each delegate elected or appointed
- 22 by the Governor pursuant to this section.

- 24 (c) Delegates shall in all cases, except treason, felony, and breach of the
- 25 peace, be privileged from arrest during their attendance at a session of the
- 26 convention, and in going to and returning from the same and for any speech or
- 27 debate in the convention they shall not be questioned in any other place.

1	(d) Each delegate shall receive compensation for each day of service and shall
2	be compensated for traveling and related expenses. Provision shall be made
3	therefor in the concurrent resolution calling the convention. The
4	convention shall fix the compensation of employees of the convention.
5
6	CONVENING THE CONVENTION
7 8	SEC. 8. (a) The Vice President of the United States shall convene the
9	constitutional convention. He shall administer the oath of office of the
10	delegates to the convention and shall preside until the delegates elect a
11	presiding officer who shall preside thereafter. Before taking his seat each
12	delegate shall subscribe to an oath by which he shall be committed during the
13	conduct of the convention to refrain from proposing or casting his vote in
14	favor of any proposed amendment to the Constitution of the United States
15	relating to any subject which is not named or described in the concurrent
16	resolution of the Congress by which the convention was called. Upon the
17	election of permanent officers of the convention, the names of such officers
18	shall be transmitted to the President of the Senate and the Speaker of the
19	House of Representatives by the elected presiding officer of the convention.
20	Further proceedings of the convention shall be conducted in accordance with
21	such rules, not inconsistent with this Act, as the convention may adopt.
22 23	(b) There is hereby authorized to be appropriated such sums as may be
24	necessary for the payment of the expenses of the convention.
25
26	(c) The Administrator of General Services shall provide such facilities, and
27	the Congress and each executive department and agency shall provide such information and assistance, as the convention may require, upon written 1 request made by the elected presiding officer of the convention. 2 PROCEDURES OF THE CONVENTION 3 4 SEC. 9.  $(a)^{114}$  In voting on any question before the convention, including the 5 proposal of amendments, each delegate shall have one vote. 6 7 8 (b) The convention shall keep a daily verbatim record of its proceedings and publish the same. The vote of the delegates on any question shall be entered 9 10 on the record. 11 12 (c) The convention shall terminate its proceedings within one year after the 13 date of its first meeting unless the period is extended by the Congress by 14 concurrent resolution. 15 (d) Within thirty days after the termination of the proceedings of the 16 17 convention, the presiding officer shall transmit to the Archivist of the 18 United States all records of official proceedings of the convention. 19 20 PROPOSAL OF AMENDMENTS SEC. 10. (a) 115 Except as provided in subsection (b) of this section, a 21 22 convention called under this Act may propose amendments to the Constitution by a vote of two-thirds of the total number of delegates to the convention. 23 24 (b) 116 No convention called under this Act may propose any amendment or amendments of a nature different from that stated in the concurrent resolution calling the convention. Questions arising under this subsection shall be 25

- 1 determined solely by the Congress of the United States and its decisions shall
- 2 be binding on all others, including State and Federal courts.

4 APPROVAL BY THE CONGRESS AND TRANSMITTAL TO THE STATES FOR RATIFICATION

- 6 SEC. 11. (a) The presiding officer of the convention shall, within thirty days
- 7 after the termination of its proceedings, submit to the Congress the exact
- 8 text of any amendment or amendments agreed upon by the convention.
- 9 (b)  $(1)^{117}$  Whenever a constitutional convention called under this Act has
- 10 transmitted to the Congress a proposed amendment to the Constitution, the
- 11 President of the Senate and the Speaker of the House of Representatives,
- 12 acting jointly, shall transmit such amendment to the Administrator of General
- 13 Services upon the expiration of the first period of ninety days of continuous
- 14 session of the Congress following the date of receipt of such amendment unless
- 15 within that period both Houses of the Congress have agreed to (a) a concurrent
- 16 resolution directing the earlier transmission of such amendment to the
- 17 Administrator of General Services and specifying in accordance with article V
- 18 of the Constitution the manner in which such amendment shall be ratified, or
- $(B)^{118}$  a concurrent resolution stating that the Congress disapproves the
- 20 submission of such proposed amendment to the States because such proposed
- 21 amendment relates to or includes a subject which differs from or was not
- 22 included among the subjects named or described in the concurrent resolution of
- 23 the Congress by which the convention was called, or because the procedures
- 24 followed by the convention in proposing the amendment were not in substantial
- 25 conformity with the provisions of this Act. No measure agreed to by the
- 26 Congress which expresses disapproval of any such proposed amendment for any
- 27 other reason, or without a statement of any reason, shall relieve the
- 28 President of the Senate and the Speaker of the House of Representatives of the
- 29 obligations imposed upon them by the first sentence of this paragraph.

2 (2) For the purposes of paragraph (1) of this subsection, (A) the continuity

- 3 of a session of the Congress shall be broken only by an adjournment of the
- 4 Congress sine die, and (B) the days on which either House is not in session
- 5 because of an adjournment of more than three days to a day certain shall be
- 6 excluded in the computation of the period of ninety days.

7

- 8 (c) Upon receipt of any such proposed amendment to the Constitution, the
- 9 Administrator shall transmit forthwith to each of the several States a duly
- 10 certified copy thereof, a copy of any concurrent resolution agreed to by both
- 11 Houses of the Congress which prescribes the time within which and the manner
- 12 in which such amendment shall be ratified, and a copy of this Act.
- 13 RATIFICATION OF PROPOSED AMENDMENTS

14

- 15 SEC. 12. (a) Any amendment proposed by the convention and submitted to the
- 16 States in accordance with the provisions of this Act shall be valid for all
- 17 intents and purposes as part of the Constitution of the United States when
- 18 duly ratified by three-fourths of the States in the manner and within the time
- 19 specified.

20

- 21 (b) 119 Acts of ratification shall be by convention or by State legislative
- 22 action as the Congress may direct or as specified in subsection (c) of this
- 23 section. For the purpose of ratifying proposed amendments transmitted to the
- 24 States pursuant to this Act the State legislatures shall adopt their own rules
- 25 of procedure. Any State action ratifying a proposed amendment to the
- 26 Constitution shall be valid without the assent of the Governor of the State.

1	(c)Except as otherwise prescribed by concurrent resolution of the Congress,
2	any proposed amendment to the Constitution shall become valid when ratified by
3	the legislatures of three-fourths of the several States within seven years
4	from the date of the submission thereof to the States, or within such other
5	period of time as may be prescribed by such proposed amendment.
б
7	(d) The secretary of state of the State, or if there be no such officer, the
8	person who is charged by State law with such function, shall transmit a
9	certified copy of the State action ratifying any proposed amendment to the 10	Administrator of General Services.
11	RECISSION OF RATIFICATIONS
12 13	SEC. 13.(a) $^{120}$ Any State may rescind its ratification of a proposed amendment
14	by the same processes by which it ratified the proposed amendment, except that
15	no State may rescind when there are existing valid ratifications of such
16	amendments by three-fourths of the States.
17
18	(b) Any State may ratify a proposed amendment even though it previously may
19	have rejected the same proposal.
20
21	$\left(\mathrm{c}\right)^{121}$ Questions concerning State ratification or rejection of amendments
22	proposed to the Constitution of the United States, shall be determined solely
23	by the Congress of the United States and its decisions shall be binding on all
24	others, including State and Federal courts.
25

26 PROCLAMATION OF CONSTITUTIONAL AMENDMENTS

1 SEC. 14. The Administrator of General Services, when three-fourths of the

2 several States have ratified a proposed amendment to the Constitution of the

- 3 United States, shall issue a proclamation that the amendment is a part of the
- 4 Constitution of the United States.

5

6 EFFECTIVE DATE OF AMENDMENTS

7

- 8 SEC. 15. An amendment proposed to the Constitution of the United States shall
- 9 be effective from the date specified therein or, if no date is specified, then
- 10 on the date on which the last State necessary to constitute three-fourths of
- 11 the States of the United States, as provided for in article V, has ratified
- 12 the same.

13

14 JUDICIAL REVIEW

- 15 [SEC. 16. (a) 122 Determinations and findings made by Congress pursuant to the
- 16 Act shall be binding and final unless clearly erroneous. Any person aggrieved
- 17 by any such determination or finding or by any failure of Congress to make a
- 18 determination or finding within the periods provided in this Act may bring an
- 19 action in a district court of the United States in accordance with 28 U.S.C. >
- 20 1331 and 28 U.S.C.  $\rightarrow$  2201 without regard to the amount in controversy. The
- 21 action may be brought against the Secretary of the Senate and the Clerk of the
- 22 House of Representatives or, where appropriate, the Administrator of General
- 23 Services, and such other parties as may be necessary to afford the relief
- 24 sought. The district courts of the United States shall have exclusive
- 25 jurisdiction of any proceedings instituted pursuant to this Act, and such

- 1 proceedings shall be heard and determined by three judges in accordance with
- 2 28 U.S.C. 3 2284. Any appeal shall be to the Supreme Court.]
- $3 [ (b)^{123}$  Every claim arising under this Act shall be barred unless suit is
- 4 filed thereon within sixty days after such claim first arises.]

1	APPENDIX B
2	Article V Applications Submitted Since 1789
3	PART ONE: A Tabulation of Applications by States and Subjects
4	By Barbara Prager and Gregory Milmoe <sup>124</sup>
5	A General Note on the Table:
6	This table is offered as a comprehensive compilation of Article V
7	applications categorized by state and by application content. $^{125}$ The table
8	maximized the number of applications, i.e., whenever any source recognizes an
9	application, it has been included in the table. For this reason it must be
10	emphasized that the totals are valuable only as an overview and not for the
11	purpose of determining whether any two-thirds of the states have applied for a
12	convention on any given category.
13
14	Allowing for slight semantic differences among the authorities
15	consulted, the categories used are, for the most part, generally accepted. Any
16	readily discernable [sic] differences are set forth in the notes below. A more
17	serious problem is the sometimes sharp disparity among the sources consulted
18	with regard to what should be recognized as an application. Rather than
19	attempt to make definitive judgments as to what applications should be treated
20	as such, we have set out in the notes below the generally recognized
21	applications followed by the applications recognized by particular sources.
22
23	A total of six sources were selected for consultation in the preparation
24	of this table. They are:
25

```
Buckwalter, "Constitutional Conventions and State Legislators," 20
 1
     J.Pub.L. 543 (1971) [hereinafter cited as Buckwalter]; Graham, "The Role of 2
     the States in Proposing Constitutional Amendments," 49 A.B.A.J. 1175 (1963)
 3
 4
     [hereinafter cited as Graham]; E. Hutton, State Applications to Congress
 5
     Calling for Conventions to Propose Constitutional Amendments (January 1963 to 6
     June 8, 1963), June 12, 1973 (Library of Congress, Congressional Research
 7
     Service, American Law Division Paper)[hereinafter cited as Library of Congress 8
     Study]; Hearings on S.2307 Before the Subcomm. on Separation of Powers of the Senate Comm. on the Judiciary, 90th Cong., 1st Sess. 115-19 (1967) [hereinafter 10 cited as 1967 Hearings]; Tydings, Federal Constitutional Convention, S. Doc.
11
     No. 78, 71st Cong., 2d Sess. (1930) [hereinafter cited as 1930 S.Doc.]; and W.
     Pullen, "The Application Clause of the Amending Provision of the 12
     Constitution," 1951 (unpublished dissertation in Univ. of North Carolina
13
     Library) [hereinafter cited as Pullen].
14
15
16
           It should be noted that certain of the studies consider only limited 17 time periods and, therefore, were consulted only for the time periods 18 indicated: Buckwalter (1788-1971); Graham (1788-1963); Library of Congress 19
     Study (1963-73); 1967 Hearings (1963-67); 1930 S. Doc. (1788-1911); Pullen 20
     (1788-1951).
21
22
```

	General	Direct	Anti-	Repeal of	Limitation of	World	Limited
	Contrai	Election of		Prohibition:	Fed. Taxing;	Federal	Presidential Senators	, , , , , ,	21st Amend.	Repeal 16th Amend.	Gov't.	Tenure
Alabama					1
Alaska					•
Arizona
Arkansas		3			1
California		3	1		-	1
Colorado		1			1
Connecticut		-	1		-	1
Delaware			1		1
Florida					1	3
Georgia	1				1
Hawaii					-
Idaho		2			1
Illinois	1	3	1		1		1
Indiana	1	1	-		2		-
Iowa		4	1		2		1
Kansas		4	-		1		-
Kentucky	2	1			1
Louisiana		1	1		2
Maine		1	1		2	1
Maryland		•	2		1	•
Massachusetts				1	1
Michigan		1	1	-	2		1
Minnesota		2	1		_		-
Mississippi		_	-		1
Missouri	1	3			-
Montana		6	1		1		1
Nebraska		4	1		1		-
Nevada		6		1	1
New			1		2
Hampshire			-		_
New Jersey	1	1		1	1	1
New Mexico					1
New York	1		1	1
North Carolina	1	2				1
North Dakota		1	1
Ohio	1	2	1
Oklahoma		1	1		1
Oregon	1	6	1
Pennsylvania		1	2		1
Rhode Island					1
South Carolina	1		1		1
South Dakota		3	1		1
Tennessee		4	1		1
Texas	1	2	1		1
Utah		1			1
Vermont			1

	General		Anti-		Limitation of	World	Limited
		Election of	polygamy		Fed. Taxing;		Presidential Senators		21st Amend.	Repeal 16th	Gov't.	Tenure Amend.
Virginia	2				1
Washington	1	1	2
West Virginia			1
Wisconsin	2	3	1	1	1		1
Wyoming		1			2
Totals	18	75	30	5	42	8	5

	Treaty Making	Revision of Article V	Exclusive state jurisdiction over schools	Supreme Court Decisions	Apportionment	Court of the Union	Prayer In Schools
Alabama					2	1
Alaska					1
Arizona					1		1
Arkansas		1		1	2	1
California					1
Colorado					2
Connecticut
Delaware
Florida	1	1		1	1	1
Georgia	1		3	1	1
Hawaii
Idaho		2			2
Illinois		2			2
Indiana	1	1			2
Iowa					1
Kansas		1			2
Kentucky					1
Louisiana			1	1	1
Maine
Maryland					1		1
Massachusetts							1
Michigan		1
Minnesota					1
Mississippi			1		1
Missouri		1			2
Montana					2
Nebraska					1
Nevada					3
New					1
Hampshire
New Jersey
New Mexico					1
New York
North Carolina					1
North Dakota					2		1
Ohio
Oklahoma		1			2
Oregon
Pennsylvania
Rhode Island					1
South Carolina		1			2	1
South Dakota		3			2
Tennessee					1
Texas		2			2
Utah					2

	Treaty Making		Exclusive state jurisdiction over schools	Court	Apportionment		Prayer In Schools
Vermont
Virginia		1	1		2
Washington					1
West Virginia
Wisconsin
Wyoming		1			1	1
Totals	3	19	6	4	54	5	4

	Redistribution of Pres. Electors	Presidential Disability Succession	Revenue Sharing	Freedom of Choice of Schools	Prohibition of Muni. Tax	Misc.	Total States
Alabama			1			3	8
Alaska			•				1
Arizona							2
Arkansas	1					1	11
California	•					3
Colorado	1	1				1	7
Connecticut	•	•				1	3
Delaware			1			 	3
Florida			2			1	12
Georgia			1				9
Hawaii			-		1		1
Idaho					-	2	9
Illinois	1		1			1	14
Indiana						1	9
lowa			1			 	10
Kansas	1						9
Kentucky							5
Louisiana			2	1	1	2	13
Maine			1	-	-		6
Maryland			1				6
Massachusetts			-			3
Michigan				1		Ĭ	7
Minnesota				-			4
Mississippi				2		2
Missouri				_		1	8
Montana	1					1	13
Nebraska	1	1				_	9
Nevada	-	-		1			12
New			1	-			5
Hampshire			-
New Jersey			1			1	7
New Mexico							2
New York						2
North Carolina							5
North Dakota			1				6
Ohio			2				6
Oklahoma	1			1			8
Oregon			1			1	10
Pennsylvania						1	5
Rhode Island			1			1	4
South Carolina							7
South Dakota	1		1				12
Tennessee					1	1	9
Texas	1		1	1		3	15
Utah	1						5
Vermont							5 1

Virginia		1			1	1	10
Washington							5
West Virginia			1				2
Wisconsin	1					1	11
Wyoming						1	7
Totals	11	3	21	7	4	36	356

2 GENERAL

Buckwalter, Pullen, 1930 S. Doc. and Graham were consulted. All sources cite: Ga. 1832: Mo. 1907; N.Y. 1789: Tex. 1899; Ga. 1788; Wis. 1929.

Buckwalter, Pullen and Graham cite: Ill. 1861: Ind. 1861; Ky. 1861: Ohio 1861: Wash. 1901; Wis. 1911.

Buckwalter and Graham cite: Va. 1861.

Pullen cites: Ky. 1863; N.J. 1861; N.C. 1866; Ore. 1864; S.C. 1832.

 Buckwalter apparently categorized 15 applications as "General" applications, which he also included in his "Direct Election of Senators" category. They are: Colo. 1901; Ill. 1903; Iowa 1907, 1909; Kan. 1901, 1905, 1907; La. 1907; Mont. 1911; Neb. 1907; Nev. 1907; N.C. 1907; Okla. 1908; Ore. 1901; Wash. 1903.

DIRECT ELECTION OF SENATORS

 Pullen, Graham, 1930 S. Doc., and Buckwalter were consulted. All sources cite:
Ark. 1901, 1903; Cal. 1903, 1911; Colo. 1901; Idaho, 1903; Ill. 1903, 1907, 1909; Ind. 1907; Idaho 1901*; Iowa, 1904, 1909; Kan. 1907; Ky. 1902; La. 1907;
Me. 1911; Mich. 1901; Minn. 1901; Mo. 1901, 1905; Mont. 1901, 1905, 1907, 1911; Neb. 1893, 1901, 1903, 1907; Nev. 1901, 1903, 1907; N.J. 1907; N.C.
1901, 1907; Ore. 1901, 1903, 1909; Pa. 1901; S.D. 1901, 1907, 1909; Tenn.
1901, 1905; Tex. 1901; Utah 1903; Wash. 1903; Wis. 1903, 1907.

Pullen, Graham and Buckwalter cite: Ark. 1911; Iowa 1907; Minn. 1911; Mo. 1903; Mont. 1903; Nev. 1905; N.D. 1903; Ohio 1908, 1911; Okla. 1908 [1930 S. Doc. dated this application 1909]; Tenn. 1903; Tex. 1911.

Graham, Buckwalter and 1930 S. Doc. cite Kan. 1901; Wyo. 1895.

Graham and Buckwalter cite: Kan. 1905, 1909; Mont. 1908; Wis. 1908; Ore. 1907.

Pullen, Graham and 1930 S. Doc. cite [as second applications] Ore. 1901, 1903.

1930 S. Doc. cites: [second applications] Iowa 1904.

 Pullen cites: [second applications] Cal. 1911; Tenn. 1901; Nev. 1901; Iowa 1911; Ore. 1909.

*Graham, Pullen and 1930 S. Doc. note that this application proposed the direction election of the President and Vice President as well as Senators.

ANTI-POLYGAMY

Pullen, Graham, Buckwalter and 1930 S. Doc. were consulted. All sources cite: Del. 1907; Ill. 1913; Mich. 1913; Mont. 1911; Neb. 1911; N.Y. 1906; Ohio 1911; S.D. 1909; Tenn. 1911; Vt. 1912; Wash. 1909; Wis. 1913. 3 5 Pullen, Graham and Buckwalter cite: Cal. 1909; Conn. 1915; Iowa 1906; La. б 1916; Me. 1907; Md. 1908, 1914; Minn. 1909; N.H. 1911; Okla. 1911; Ore. 1913; 7 Pa. 1907, 1913; S.C. 1915; Tex. 1911; W. Va. 1907. 8 9 Graham and Buckwalter cite: N.D. 1907; Wash. 1910. 10 REPEAL OF PROHIBITION 11 12 13 Pullen, Buckwalter and Graham were consulted. All sources cite: Mass. 1931; Nev. 1925; N.J. 1932; N.Y. 1931; Wis. 1931. 14 15 LIMITATION OF FEDERAL TAXING POWER AND REPEAL OF 16TH AMENDMENT 16 17 18 Graham and Buckwalter were consulted. All sources cite: Ala. 1943°; Ark. 1943°; Del. 1943; Fla. 1951; Ga.  $1952^{(a)}$ : Ill.  $1943^{r}$ ; Ind. 1943, 1957; Iowa  $1941^{r}$  1951; Kan. 1951; Ky.  $1944^{r}$ ; La.  $1950^{r}$ ; Me. 1941,  $1951^{r}$ ; Mass.  $1941^{r}$ ; 19 20 Mich. 1941, 1949; Miss. 1940; Neb. 1949<sup>r</sup>; N.H. 1943, 1951; N.J. 1944<sup>r</sup>; N.M. 21 1951; Nev.  $1960^{(a)}$ ; Okla. 1955; Pa. 1943; R.I.  $1940^{r}$ ; Utah 1951; Va.  $1952^{(a)}$ ; Wis.  $1943^{r}$ ; Wyo. 1939; S.C.  $1962^{(a)}$ . 22 23 24 25 *Packard, "Constitutional Law: The States and the Amending Process," 45 26 A.B.A.J. 161 (1959), limiting his discussion to this subject, lists 27 applications (undated) from: Idaho, Mont., S.D. and Tenn., none of which are 28 cited by any other source. 29 Graham cites: Colo. 1963; La. 1960<sup>(a)</sup>; Md. 1939; Tex. 1961<sup>(a)</sup>; Wyo. 1959<sup>(a)</sup>. 30 31 (a) Repeal of the 16th Amendment 32 33 34 *Graham cites these as Repeal applications while Buckwalter merely cites them 35 as tax limitation applications. 36 37 r= Rescinded 38 39 WORLD FEDERAL GOVERNMENT 40 41 Pullen, Graham and Buckwalter were consulted. All sources cite: Cal. 1949*; Conn. 1949; Fla. 1949; Me. 1949; N.J. 1949*; N.C. 1949* 42 43 44 Graham and Buckwalter cite: Fla. 1943, 1945. 45 46 *Rescinded 47 48 LIMIT PRESIDENTIAL TENURE 49 50 Pullen, Graham, and Buckwalter were consulted. All sources cite: Ill. 1943; 51 Iowa.[sic] 1943; Mich. 1943; Mont. 1947; Wis. 1943. 52 53 TREATY MAKING OF THE PRESIDENT 54 55 Pullen, Graham, and Buckwalter were consulted. All sources cite: Fla. 1945. 56 57 Buckwalter and Graham cite: Ga. 1952; Ind. 1957. 58 59 REVISION OF ARTICLE V 60

BRIEF IN SUPPORT OF CONVENTION APPENDIX C- 1973 ABA REPORT PAGE 67

```
Buckwalter, Graham, and Library of Congress Study* were consulted. All sources
 1
     cite: Ark. 1963; Fla. 1963; Idaho 1963; Ill. 1963; Kan. 1963<sup>r</sup>; Mo. 1963; Okla.
 3
     1963; S.C. 1963; S.D. 1963; Tex. 1963; Wyo. 1963.
 4
 5
     Buckwalter and Graham cite: Idaho 1957; Ill. 1953; Ind. 1957; Mich. 1956; S.D.
 6
     1953, 1955; Tex. 1955.
 7
 8
     *The Graham study continued through 1963, while the Library of Congress Study 9
     began in 1963.
10 r= Rescinded
11 12
13
     Buckwalter and Library of Congress Study cite: Va. 1965.
14
                 GIVE STATES EXCLUSIVE JURISDICTION OVER PUBLIC SCHOOLS
15
16
17
     Buckwalter, Graham and Library of Congress Study were consulted.
18
19
     Buckwalter and Graham cite: Ga. 1955, 1959.
20
21
     Buckwalter and Library of Congress Study cite: Ga. 1965, La. 1965; Miss. 1965.
22
23
     Graham cites: Va. 1960*
24
25
     *The Graham study continued through 1963, while the Library of Congress Study 26 began in 1963.
27
28
                                 SUPREME COURT DECISIONS
29
30
     Graham was the only source cited.
31
     Graham cites: Ark. 1961; Fla. 1957; Ga. 1961; La. 1960.
32
33
34
                                      APPORTIONMENT
35
     Buckwalter, 1967 Hearings, and Library of Congress Study were consulted. All 36 sources cite: Ala. 1965; Ariz. 1965; Ark. 1963, 1965; Colo. 1965; Fla. 1965; 37
     Idaho 1963, 1965; Ill. 1967; Ind. 1967; Kan. 1963, 1965, Ky. 1965; Md. 1965; 38
39
     Minn. 1965; Miss. 1965; Mo. 1963, 1965; Mont. 1963, 1965; Neb. 1965; Nev.
     1963, 1967; N.H. 1965; N.M. 1966; N.C. 1965; N.D. 1967; Okla. 1965; S.C. 1965; 40
     S.D. 1965; Tenn. 1966; Tex. 1963, 1965; Utah 1965; Va. 1964, 1965; Wash. 1963;
41
42
     Wyo. 1963.
43
44
     Buckwalter and Library of Congress of Study cite: Ala. 1966; Colo. 1967; Iowa
     1969; Ill. 1965; N.D. 1965.
45
46
47
     Buckwalter and 1967 Hearings cite: Ga. 1965; La. 1965; S.C. 1963.
48
49
     Library of Congress Study and 1967 Hearings cite: S.D. 1963.
50
51
     Buckwalter cites: Ind. 1957.
52
53
     Library of Congress Study cites: Alaska 1965; Cal. 1965; Nev. 1965; Okla.
54
     1963; R.I. 1965; Utah 1963.
55
56
     r= Rescinded
57
58
                                    COURT OF THE UNION
59
```

1 2	Graham, Library of Congress Study, and Buckwalter were consulted. All sources cite: Ala. 1963; Ark. 1963; Fla. 1963.
3	Graham and Buckwalter cite: S.C. 1963; Wyo. 1963.
5
6 7	PRAYER IN SCHOOLS
8 9 10	Buckwalter and Library of Congress Study were consulted. All sources cite: Mass. 1964.
11 12	Library of Congress Study cites: Ariz. 1972; Md. 1966; N.D. 1963.
13	REDISTRIBUTION OF PRESIDENTIAL ELECTORS
14 15 16 17	Buckwalter, Graham, and Library of Congress Study were consulted. All sources cite: Ark. 1963; Kan. 1963 <sup>r</sup> ; Mont. 1963; Utah 1963; Wis. 1963.
18 19	Buckwalter and Library of Congress Study cite: Neb. 1965; Okla. 1965.
20 21	Buckwalter and Graham cite: Tex. 1963.
22 23	Buckwalter cites: Ill. 1967.
24 25 26	While Buckwalter cites Colo. 1965 and S.D. 1965, Graham cites those applications as Colo. 1963 and S.D. 1963.
27	r= Rescinded
28 29	PRESIDENTIAL DISABILITY AND SUCCESSION
30 31	Tibuani of Carrier and Children the only records reprolled The about without
32	Library of Congress Study was the only source consulted. The study cites: Colo. 1965; Neb. 1965; Va. 1965.
32 33 34
32 33 34 35 36 37	Colo. 1965; Neb. 1965; Va. 1965.
32 33 34 35 36 37 38 39	Colo. 1965; Neb. 1965; Va. 1965.  REVENUE SHARING  Buckwalter and Library of Congress Study were consulted. All sources cite:
32 33 34 35 36 37 38 39 40 41 42 43	Colo. 1965; Neb. 1965; Va. 1965.  REVENUE SHARING  Buckwalter and Library of Congress Study were consulted. All sources cite: Ala. 1967; Fla. 1969; Ill. 1965; Ohio 1965; Tex. 1967.
32 33 34 35 36 37 38 39 40 41 42 43 44 45	Colo. 1965; Neb. 1965; Va. 1965.  REVENUE SHARING  Buckwalter and Library of Congress Study were consulted. All sources cite: Ala. 1967; Fla. 1969; Ill. 1965; Ohio 1965; Tex. 1967.  Buckwalter cites: N.H. 1969.  Library of Congress Study cites: Del. 1971; Fla. 1971; Ga. 1967; Iowa 1972; La. 1970*, 1971; Mass. 1971; N.J. 1970; N.D. 1971; Ore. 1971; S.D. 1971; Ohio 1971; W.Va. 1971.  Received by the Committee from the Attorney Generals of the respective states:
32 33 34 35 36 37 38 39 40 41 42 43 44 45 46	Colo. 1965; Neb. 1965; Va. 1965.  REVENUE SHARING  Buckwalter and Library of Congress Study were consulted. All sources cite: Ala. 1967; Fla. 1969; Ill. 1965; Ohio 1965; Tex. 1967.  Buckwalter cites: N.H. 1969.  Library of Congress Study cites: Del. 1971; Fla. 1971; Ga. 1967; Iowa 1972; La. 1970*, 1971; Mass. 1971; N.J. 1970; N.D. 1971; Ore. 1971; S.D. 1971; Ohio 1971; W.Va. 1971.
32 33 34 35 36 37 38 39 40 41 42 43 44 45	Colo. 1965; Neb. 1965; Va. 1965.  REVENUE SHARING  Buckwalter and Library of Congress Study were consulted. All sources cite: Ala. 1967; Fla. 1969; Ill. 1965; Ohio 1965; Tex. 1967.  Buckwalter cites: N.H. 1969.  Library of Congress Study cites: Del. 1971; Fla. 1971; Ga. 1967; Iowa 1972; La. 1970*, 1971; Mass. 1971; N.J. 1970; N.D. 1971; Ore. 1971; S.D. 1971; Ohio 1971; W.Va. 1971.  Received by the Committee from the Attorney Generals of the respective states:
32 33 34 35 36 37 38 39 40 41 42 43 44 45 46 47 48 49 50	Colo. 1965; Neb. 1965; Va. 1965.  REVENUE SHARING  Buckwalter and Library of Congress Study were consulted. All sources cite: Ala. 1967; Fla. 1969; Ill. 1965; Ohio 1965; Tex. 1967.  Buckwalter cites: N.H. 1969.  Library of Congress Study cites: Del. 1971; Fla. 1971; Ga. 1967; Iowa 1972; La. 1970*, 1971; Mass. 1971; N.J. 1970; N.D. 1971; Ore. 1971; S.D. 1971; Ohio 1971; W.Va. 1971.  Received by the Committee from the Attorney Generals of the respective states: Me. 1971; R.I. 1971.
32 33 34 35 36 37 38 39 40 41 42 43 44 45 46 47 48 49 50 51 52 53	REVENUE SHARING  Buckwalter and Library of Congress Study were consulted. All sources cite: Ala. 1967; Fla. 1969; Ill. 1965; Ohio 1965; Tex. 1967.  Buckwalter cites: N.H. 1969.  Library of Congress Study cites: Del. 1971; Fla. 1971; Ga. 1967; Iowa 1972; La. 1970*, 1971; Mass. 1971; N.J. 1970; N.D. 1971; Ore. 1971; S.D. 1971; Ohio 1971; W.Va. 1971.  Received by the Committee from the Attorney Generals of the respective states: Me. 1971; R.I. 1971.  *The La. 1970 application was approved by the House of Representatives only.
32 33 34 35 36 37 38 39 40 41 42 43 44 45 46 47 48 49 50 51 52 53 54 55	REVENUE SHARING  Buckwalter and Library of Congress Study were consulted. All sources cite: Ala. 1967; Fla. 1969; Ill. 1965; Ohio 1965; Tex. 1967.  Buckwalter cites: N.H. 1969.  Library of Congress Study cites: Del. 1971; Fla. 1971; Ga. 1967; Iowa 1972; La. 1970*, 1971; Mass. 1971; N.J. 1970; N.D. 1971; Ore. 1971; S.D. 1971; Ohio 1971; W.Va. 1971.  Received by the Committee from the Attorney Generals of the respective states: Me. 1971; R.I. 1971.  *The La. 1970 application was approved by the House of Representatives only.  FREEDOM OF CHOICE IN SELECTION OF SCHOOLS  Library of Congress Study was the only source consulted. The study cites: La.
32 33 34 35 36 37 38 39 40 41 42 43 44 45 46 47 48 50 51 55 56 57 58	REVENUE SHARING  Buckwalter and Library of Congress Study were consulted. All sources cite: Ala. 1967; Fla. 1969; Ill. 1965; Ohio 1965; Tex. 1967.  Buckwalter cites: N.H. 1969.  Library of Congress Study cites: Del. 1971; Fla. 1971; Ga. 1967; Iowa 1972; La. 1970*, 1971; Mass. 1971; N.J. 1970; N.D. 1971; Ore. 1971; S.D. 1971; Ohio 1971; W.Va. 1971.  Received by the Committee from the Attorney Generals of the respective states: Me. 1971; R.I. 1971.  *The La. 1970 application was approved by the House of Representatives only.  FREEDOM OF CHOICE IN SELECTION OF SCHOOLS  Library of Congress Study was the only source consulted. The study cites: La. 1970; Mich. 1971; Miss. 1970, 1973; Nev. 1973: Okla. 1973; Tex. 1973.
32 33 34 35 36 37 38 39 40 41 42 43 44 45 46 47 48 50 51 52 53 54 55 56 57	REVENUE SHARING  Buckwalter and Library of Congress Study were consulted. All sources cite: Ala. 1967; Fla. 1969; Ill. 1965; Ohio 1965; Tex. 1967.  Buckwalter cites: N.H. 1969.  Library of Congress Study cites: Del. 1971; Fla. 1971; Ga. 1967; Iowa 1972; La. 1970*, 1971; Mass. 1971; N.J. 1970; N.D. 1971; Ore. 1971; S.D. 1971; Ohio 1971; W.Va. 1971.  Received by the Committee from the Attorney Generals of the respective states: Me. 1971; R.I. 1971.  *The La. 1970 application was approved by the House of Representatives only.  FREEDOM OF CHOICE IN SELECTION OF SCHOOLS  Library of Congress Study was the only source consulted. The study cites: La. 1970; Mich. 1971; Miss. 1970, 1973; Nev. 1973: Okla. 1973; Tex. 1973.  PROHIBIT TAXATION OF STATE OR MUNICIPAL BONDS  Library of Congress Study was the only source consulted. The study cites:

BRIEF IN SUPPORT OF CONVENTION APPENDIX C- 1973 ABA REPORT PAGE 69

```
1
 2
     Alabama
 3
     1833-Nullification: 1930 S. Doc. and Graham.
     Because the resolution of the Alabama Legislature was worded "This assembly...recommends to the Congress..." Pullen views it as merely a 6 recommendation rather than a formal application.
 4
 5
 7
     1957-Selection of Federal Judges: Graham.
 8
     1959-Federal Pre-emption: Graham.
 9
10
     Arkansas
     1959-Examination of 14th Amendment Ratification: Buckwalter and Graham.
11
12 13
     California
     1935-Federal Regulation of Wages and Hours: Buckwalter and Graham.
14
15
     1935-Taxation of Federal and State Securities: Buckwalter, Graham, and Pullen.
16
     1952-Distribution of Proceeds of Federal Taxes on Gasoline: Buckwalter and 17
     Graham.
18 19
     Colorado
     1963-Direct Election of President and Vice President: Library of Congress 20 21
     Study.
22
23
     Connecticut
24
     1958-State Tax on Income of Non-residents: Graham.
25
26
     Florida
     1972-Repalce the Vice President as Head of the Senate: Library of Congress 27
2.8
     Study.
29
30
     Idaho
31
     1927-Taxation of Federal and State Securities: Buckwalter, Graham, and Pullen.
32
     1963-Federal Debt Limit: Buckwalter, Graham, and Library of Congress Study.
33
34 Illinois
35
     1911-Prevention and Suppression of Monopolies: Buckwalter, Graham, and Pullen.
36
37
38
     1957-Balancing the Budget: Buckwalter and Graham.
39
40
     Louisiana
41
     1920-Popular Ratification of Amendments: Buckwalter, Graham, and Pullen.
     1970- Sedition and Criminal Anarchy: Library of Congress Study.
42
43
44
    Massachusetts
    1964-Pensions to Persons Over 65: Buckwalter and Library of Congress Study.
45
     1967-Bible reading in Public Schools: Library of Congress Study. Buckwalter 46 cites this application as 1964.
47
48
     1973-Public Funds for Secular Education: Library of Congress Study.
49
50
    Mississippi
51
     1965-Control Communist Party in U.S.: Buckwalter and Library of Congress 52
53
     1973-Prayer in Public Buildings.: Library of Congress Study.
54
55
    Missouri
     1913-Constitutionality of State Enactments: Buckwalter, Graham, and Pullen.
56
57
58
    Montana
```

BRIEF IN SUPPORT OF CONVENTION APPENDIX C- 1973 ABA REPORT PAGE 70

1 2 3	1963-Direct Election of President and Vice President: Library of Congress Study.
4	New Jersey
5 6	1965-Residence of members of Congress: Library of Congress Study.
7	New York
8 9 10	1965-Equal Rights for Women: Library of Congress Study. 1972-Public Funds for Secular Education: Library of Congress Study.
11	Oregon
12	1939-Townsend Plan: Buckwalter, Graham, and Pullen.
13	1939 Townbella Frair Buoliwarder, Graham, and Farren.
14	Pennsylvania
15	1943-Prohibition of Conditions in Grants-in-Aid: Buckwalter, Graham, and
16 17	Pullen.
18	Rhode Island
19 20	1790-Revision of Constitution: Graham.
21	Tennessee
22 23 24	1972-Prohibit Interference with Neighborhood Schools: Library of Congress Study.
25	Texas
26	1949-Tidelands Problem: Buckwalter, Graham, and Pullen.
27	1957-Oil and Mineral Rights; Graham
28	1957-Preservation of States' Rights: Graham.
29	1207 1102017401011 01 204002 11151102 0141141117
30	Virginia
31	1973-Prohibiting Deficit Spending: library of Congress Study.
32
33	Wisconsin
34	1973-Right to Life: Received by the Committee from the Attorney General of the
35	state.
36
37	Wyoming
38	1961-Balancing of Budget: Buckwalter.
39
40
41 42
43
44	PART TWO: A History of Applications
45	by Barbara Prager
46	INTRODUCTION

Article V of the Constitution provides that "The Congress on the 1 Application of the Legislatures of two-thirds of the Several States shall call 2 a Convention for proposing Amendments..." Since 1788, despite a total of more 3 than 300 applications from every state in the Union, there has never been a 4 convention convened by this process. The purpose of this paper is to analyze 5 6 the unsuccessful attempts made to amend the Constitution by this procedure. 7 When applicable, the following factors will be discussed: description of the 8 problem, reasons for the use of the application process, nature of the requests, reasoning of the states declining to make application to Congress; 10 and the resolution of the problem. 11 BILL OF RIGHTS 12 The first group of applications was provoked by dissatisfaction with the scope of the Constitution. The Anti-Federalists felt that the Constitution had 13 not provided for certain basic rights of mankind. During the ratification of 14 the Constitution, the Virginia and New York legislatures submitted separate 15 16 resolutions to Congress applying for a convention. The text of the Virginia 17 resolution read in part: 18 "that a convention be immediately called ... with full power to take into their consideration the defects of this constitution that have been suggested 20 by the State conventions... and secure to ourselves and our latest posterity the great and unalienable rights of mankind. 126 22 Madison and Jefferson opposed the idea of a second convention. Madison 23 expressed the view that a second convention would suggest a lack of confidence 24 in the first. Others believed that proposing amendments to the Constitution 25 might better be accomplished by Congress. These sentiments found support in 26 the state legislatures. Pennsylvania and Massachusetts explicitly rejected the idea of a second convention, and the remaining states took no final action in making application to Congress. 127

27

The underlying issue was resolved in 1789 when Congress proposed the Bill of Rights.

THE NULLIFICATION APPLICATIONS

3

21

4 South Carolina was in severe economic difficulty in the eighteentwenties. Believing that this problem was a result of the high protective 5 6 tariff levied by the federal government, the state developed the nullification 7 theory, i.e., that a sovereign state could declare an act of Congress null and 8 void. James Hamilton, Jr. advocated a convention of the states to resolve this conflict and recommended to the South Carolina legislature that they apply to 10 Congress for such a convention. South Carolina's petition and a similar application from Georgia took the form of resolutions that Congress call a 11 convention for the purpose of resolving questions of disputed power. 28 Alabama 12 13 recommended to her co-states and to Congress that a convention be called to resolve the nullification problem and to make "such other amendments and 14 15 alterations in the Constitution as time and experience have discovered to be necessary." 129 16 17 No other state petitioned for a convention. The problem was considered and the idea of a convention rejected in eight states. 130 Opposition to the 18 19 South Carolina proposal was manifold. Some objecting to the terminology of the 20 proposal, maintained that an article V convention must be a convention of the Others, disagreeing with South Carolina's statement that the convention would have the power to determine the constitutional issue, asserted that the convention was limited to proposing amendments. Still others feared the people's delegates, and not a convention of the states' representatives.

- potentially disastrous effects of a convention or considered the call of a 1
- convention impolitic, inexpedient, unnecessary, or an appalling task. 2
- The states that declined to apply to Congress during this period 3
- apparently were not reaching the merits of the issue. Rather, they rejected 4
- 5 the idea of a convention on two main grounds: (1) that South Carolina hoped to
- 6 invest the convention with arbitration power not provided for by the
- 7 Constitution; and (2) that such a body would not be subject to sufficient
- 8 control and might therefore upset the existing governmental structure.
- 9 SLAVERY
- 10 The devisive issue of slavery was the next issue to provoke state
- 11 applications. In 1860 the secession of the lower southern states seemed
- probable. Seeking to effect a reconciliation, President Buchanan proposed that 12
- 13 an explanatory amendment to the Constitution be initiated either by Congress
- or by the application procedure. In support of this suggestion several 14
- Congressmen introduced resolutions in Congress to encourage the legislatures 15
- 16 of the states to make applications for the call of the convention. This
- 17 represented the first attempt by Congress to stimulate the application
- 18 process. The process received further support from newly elected President
- 19 Lincoln who in his inaugural address stated:
- "the convention mode seems preferable, in that it allows amendments to 20
- originate with the people themselves; instead of only permitting them to take 21
- or reject propositions originated by others, not especially chosen for the 22
- purpose, and which might not be precisely such as they would wish to accept or refuse... 131 23
- 24
- 25 The states, however, were less enthusiastic. During the entire Civil War
- period, only seven states took affirmative action. 132 The applications tended 26
- 27 to be broad in scope, requesting a convention to propose amendments to the
- 28 Constitution. Several resolutions were merely recommendations that Congress

- 1 call a convention, while others favored a convention only as a last resort and
- 2 preferred to rely on Congress to propose any amendments. Many resolutions were
- 3 tabled in the state legislatures or were referred to a committee which failed
- 4 to report them back to the legislature. The state of Iowa observed that since
- 5 eleven states were in open rebellion against the Union, no amendment could be
- 6 ratified without the votes of at least two rebel states. 133
- 7 Procedural problems played a large role in the states' failure to make
- 8 successful use of the application process during the Civil War period. Given
- 9 the frenetic pace of the times, the states failed either to act in strict
- 10 conformity with article V or to direct their energies to the completion of the
- 11 process.
- 12 MODERN PERIOD
- 13 Since the turn of the twentieth century, the application process has
- 14 been used primarily to encourage Congress to propose specific amendments.
- 15 DIRECT ELECTION OF SENATORS
- 16 In the eighteen-nineties public sentiment grew for an amendment
- 17 providing for the direct election of U.S. Senators. On several occasions from
- 18 1893 to 1902, the House passed resolutions proposing such an amendment which
- 19 never came to a vote in the Senate.
- In 1906, motivated by the inaction of Congress, conference of twelve
- 21 states met and decided to initiate a campaign to urge applications on the
- 22 direct election issue from the requisite number of states. Thirty states
- 23 adopted sixty-nine applications for the call of a convention during the period
- 24 from 1901 to 1911. 134 Opposition came primarily from two sources: (1) those who
- 25 objected to the substance of the amendment; and (2) those who feared the

- 1 potential power of such a convention. The latter group expressed the view that
- 2 a convention would open the door to recommendations for amendments on a wide
- 3 variety of sectional interests. The issue was resolved in 1912 when Congress
- 4 proposed the seventeenth amendment.
- 5 POLYGAMY
- 6 Utah was admitted into the Union in 1896 on the condition that her
- 7 constitution included an irrevocable prohibition of polygamous marriages.
- 8 Later, when it was brought to public attention that the state was not
- 9 enforcing this provision, an anti-polygamy amendment to the Constitution which
- 10 would give the United States jurisdiction of the matter was proposed as a
- 11 possible solution. However, the amendment was opposed on several grounds: it
- 12 would interfere with the sovereignty of the states; the subject was not of
- 13 sufficient importance to merit a constitutional amendment; and the problem was
- 14 susceptible of resolution by other means. The state legislatures, however, did
- 15 not dismiss the problem as quickly as Congress did. From 1906 to 1916, twenty-
- 16 six states made almost identical applications requesting a convention to
- 17 propose an amendment prohibiting polygamous marriages. 135 But after this surge
- 18 of applications, polygamy ceased to be an issue.
- 19 REPEAL OF PROHIBITION
- 20 A movement for the repeal of prohibition began in the nineteen-twenties.
- 21 Eleven states considered applications to Congress for a constitutional
- 22 convention. Five adopted resolutions for a limited convention to propose the
- 23 specific amendment. Congress responded to the pressure by proposing the
- 24 twenty-first amendment.
- 25 LIMITATION OF FEDERAL TAXES

1 Federal taxes were greatly increased during the mid-nineteen-thirties. 2 The American Taxpayers Association failed in its efforts to exert pressure on Congress for an amendment to limit the federal taxing power. The group then 3 began a quiet campaign to apply pressure to use the application procedure of 4 5 article V. By 1945, seventeen states had submitted resolutions for the call of a convention. 136 The movement lost momentum but was revived again at the end of 6 7 the decade. Representative Wright Patman from Texas attacked the advocates of the amendment, claiming that their purpose was to make the rich richer and the 8 9 poor poorer. He advised the states to rescind their applications. By 1963, 10 there were claims that thirty-four states had made applications to Congress, thus meeting the constitutional requirements for a convention. 137 Opponents of 11 the amendment pointed to deficiencies in these claims: twelve states had 12 rescinded their applications; 138 some resolutions had not requested a 13 convention, but merely had asked Congress to propose the amendment; some 14

LIMITATION OF PRESIDENTIAL TENURE

fifteen or twenty years earlier was questionable.

applications were for other purposes; and the validity of resolutions passed

When Franklin D. Rossevelt [sic] was elected to a third term, the belief that the tenure of the office of President should be limited gained adherents. In 1943, four states submitted applications to Congress requesting a national convention to propose an amendment to that effect. A few years later, an additional state adopted a similar resolution. Congress then proposed an amendment limiting the number of successive presidential terms.

WORLD FEDERAL GOVERNMENTS

15

16

17

18 19 20 21

22

23

At the beginning of the second world war, there was support for the 1 ideal that the United States should commit itself to a world organization 2 3 aimed at preserving peace. Twenty-three states adopted resolutions urging 4 their representatives in Congress to support such a commitment. In 1949, six states made formal applications to Congress for a constitutional convention to 5 6 propose an amendment authorizing the United States to participate in a limited 7 world government. Within the following two years, half of the states rescinded their applications. 139 8 9 APPORTIONMENT 10 The Supreme Court decision establishing the "one-person-one vote" 11 principle and applying it to state legislature apportionment sparked the latest bout of serious interest in a national constitution convention. 12 13 The Council of State Governments in 1962 suggested a constitutional

The Council of State Governments in 1962 suggested a constitutional convention to propose amendments a) removing apportionment cases from federal jurisdiction, b) establishing a "Court of the Union" to hear certain appeals from the Supreme Court, and c) easing the process whereby states themselves may initiate constitutional amendments under article V.

In 1964, the Council on State Governments suggested an amendment exempting one house of any state legislature from the "one person-one vote" rule. When an amendment to that effect failed in the Senate in 1965 (gaining a majority of the votes but not the constitutionally required two-thirds), the Council and Senator Everett Dirksen initiated a national campaign to convene a constitutional convention to deal with the apportionment problem. 140

By 1967, thirty-two states had applied for a constitutional convention, although their applications differed in form, content, and specificity. In the 14

15

16

17

18 19 20 21

22

- 1 following years, one more state petitioned for a convention, and one withdrew
- 2 its original application. Since 1969, no further applications have been
- 3 submitted on this issue.
- 4 Throughout the 1960's and into the present decade particularly salient
- 5 issues have at one time or another provoked scattered applications for a
- 6 constitutional convention; e.g., school prayer in the early 1960's, revenue
- 7 sharing and busing of school children to achieve integration more recently
- 8 None of these issues, however, has produced applications totaling near the
- 9 two-thirds required by article V. 141
- 10 CONCLUSION
- 11 It is submitted that the majority of applications presented issues of
- 12 potentially national concern. In some instances, such as the nullification or
- 13 the slavery issues, the question was initially a sectional concern, but
- 14 national ramifications developed.
- 15 Another generalization that emerges from an historical analysis of the
- 16 application process is that the majority of concerns raised in state
- 17 applications have been resolved in some way other than by convention. In a
- 18 large number of situations Congress took over the initiative and proposed the
- 19 requested amendment to the Constitution. Numerous examples are readily
- 20 available. The 1788 and 1789 applications of Virginia and New York for a
- 21 general convention were resolved by congressional proposed amendments-the Bill
- 22 of Rights. Similarly, in the twentieth century, state applications that
- 23 advocated direct election of senators, the limitation of presidential tenure,
- 24 presidential disability and succession and the repeal of prohibition were
- 25 resolved by congressional proposed amendments. The problems raised by the

- 1 state applications during the slavery period were resolved in a more
- 2 revolutionary way. The Civil War and ultimately the thirteenth, fourteenth,
- 3 and fifteenth amendments rendered the applications moot.
- 4 However, there are a number of situations in which there has been no
- 5 resolutions of the problem. In some instances, such as the issue of polygamy,
- 6 a change in social attitudes over time led to the abandonment of the issue.
- 7 This example highlights a problem which may be inherent in the procedure
- 8 itself: sluggishness. The problem has its roots in a fundamental distinction
- 9 between the ratification process and the amendment process. While the former
- 10 only requires the state legislatures to respond to an already formulated
- 11 amendment the latter requires affirmative action. This is time-consuming since
- 12 typically before drafting a resolution both houses of each state legislature
- 13 consider all the other applications on the subject submitted to Congress by
- 14 other states. The slavery period provides numerous examples of potential
- 15 applications that were tabled in the state legislatures or were never reported
- 16 back from committees. Action on the resolution is further delayed by the fact
- 17 that state legislatures convene at different times during the year. Additional
- 18 problems arise because Congress has not provided for adequate machinery to
- 19 handle the applications presented to them. Thus, with the passage of time, new
- 20 interests tend to replace the proposed interests, so that the issue is
- 21 eventually resolved by a means other than the convention method or not
- 22 resolved at all.
- 23 It is further evident that the issues that have called for a convention
- 24 have been popular ones. Historically, although an individual state did not
- 25 petition Congress for a convention on a particular issue, the state more often

- than not considered submitting a resolution. The states declining to submit
- 2 applications generally did not reject the application procedure based on the
- 3 substantive merits of the problem. Rather, the states expressed fear of the
- 4 power of a constitutional convention and its potential for revolutionary
- 5 change.

1 2 BIBLIOGRAPHY 3 4 Treatises 5 6 Allen, T., and Ransone, C., Constitutional Revision in Theory and Practice 7 (1962).8 9 Brown, E., Ratification of the Twenty-First Amendment to the Constitution of 10 the United States: State Convention Records and Laws (1938). 11 12 Cooley, T., The General Principles of Constitutional Law in the United States 13 of America 221 (3d. ed. 1898). 14 15 Curtis, G., Constitutional History of the United States, Vol. I., pp. 614-16 15, Vol. II, pp. 160-62 (1889). 17 Dodd, W., The Revision and Amendment of State Constitutions (1910). 18 19 20 Elliot, J., The Debates in the Several State Conventions on the Adoption of the Federal Constitution (2d ed. 1836). 21 22 The Federalist, Nos. 43 and 85. 23 24 25 Hoar, R. S., Constitutional Conventions: Their Nature, Powers and 26 Limitations (1917). 27 Jameson, J., A Treatise on Constitutional Conventions: Their History, Powers 28 and Modes of Proceeding ( $4^{th}$  ed. 1887). 29 30 31 Orfield, L., The Amending of the Federal Constitution (1942). 32 Pomeroy, J., An Introduction to the Constitutional Law of the United States > 33  $9 \ 109-20 \ (5^{th} ed. 1880).$ 34 35 36 Poore, B., The Federal and State Constitutions, Colonial Charters, and Other 37 Organic Laws of the United States, Vol. 1, pp. 273, 383, 828, 972; Vol. 2, 38 pp. 1293, 1310, 1328, 1409, 1541, 1548, 1627. 39 Story, J., Commentaries on the Constitution of the United States 3 3 1826-28  $(5^{th} ed. 1905).$ 41 42

40

43 44

The Records of the Federal Convention of 1787, Vol. 1, pp. 28, 117, 121, 126, 194, 202, 206, 227, 237, 478; Vol. 2, pp. 87, 133, 136, 148, 159, 174, 188, 461, 467, 555-59, 578, 602, 629-31, 662; Vol. 3, pp. 120, 121, 126, 357, 367, 45 400, 609, 630 (Farrand ed. 1937 and 1966 paper bound ed.). 46

47

48 Willoughby, W., The Constitutional Law of the United States, Vol. I 3 331 (2d ed. 1929).

Periodicals

Ames, "The Amending Provisions of the Federal Constitution in Practice," 63

49

51 52 53

50

Ames, "Recent Development of the Amending Power as Applied to Federal Constitution," 72 Proc. Of the Am. Philos. Soc'y 87 (1933).

54 55 56

> BRIEF IN SUPPORT OF CONVENTION APPENDIX C- 1973 ABA REPORT PAGE 82

Proc. of the Am. Philos. Soc'y 62 (1924).

```
1 Black, "The Proposed Amendment of Article V: A Threatened Disaster," 72 Yale 2 L.J. 957 (1963).
```

Bonfield, "Proposing Constitutional Amendments by Convention: Some Problems," 39 Notre Dame Lawyer 659 (1964).

5 6 7

Brown, "The Ratification of the Twenty-First Amendment, 29 Am. Pol. Sci. Rev. 1005 (1935).

8 9

Buckwalter, "Constitutional Conventions and State Legislators," 20 J. of Pub. Law 543 (1971).

12 13

Clark, "The Supreme Court and the Amending Process," 39 Va. L. Rev. 621 (1953).

14 15

16 Comment, "Ratification of Proposed Federal Amendment After Prior Rejection," 17 11 So. Calif. L. Rev. 472 (1938).

18

Corwin & Ramsey, "The Constitutional Law of Constitutional Amendment," 26 Notre Dame Lawyer 185 (1951).

21 22

Current Legislation, "Amendment to Constitution: Ratification by State Convention," 7 St. John's L. Rev. 375 (1933).

232425

Cuvillier, "Shall We Revise the Constitution?," 77 Forum 321 (1927).

26 27

Dodd, "Amending the Federal Constitution," 30 Yale L.J. 321 (1921).

28 29

Dowling, "A New Experiment in Ratification," 19 A.B.A.J. 383 (1933).

30 31

Dowling, "Clarifying the Amending Process," 1 Wash. & Lee L. Rev. 215 (1940).

32

Fennell, "The States Rights Amendments -Debates of the 'Founding Fathers' Cast Doubts on Current Proposals," 35 N.Y.S.B.A.J. 465 (1963).

35

Fensterwald, "Constitutional Law: The States and the Amending Process-A Reply," 46 A.B.A.J. 717 (1960).

38

Forkosch, "The Alternative Amending Clause in Article V: Reflections and Suggestions," 51 Minn. L. Rev. 1053 (1967).

41

42 Graham, "Efforts to Amend the Constitution on Districts Gain," N.Y. Times, 43 March 18, 1967, at 1, col. 6.

44

Graham, "The Role of the States in Proposing Constitutional Amendments," 49 A.B.A.J. 1175 (1963).

47

Grinnell, "Finality of State's Ratification of a Constitutional Amendment," 11 A.B.A.J. 192 (1925).

50

Grinnell, "Petitioning Congress for a Convention: Cannot a State Change Its Mind?," 45 A.B.A.J. 1164 (1959).

53

54 Ireland, "Constitutional Amendments--Power of Conventions, 6 Tul. L. Rev. 75 (1931).

56

57 Lincoln, "Ratification by Conventions," 18 Mass. L.Q. 287 (1933).

58 59 60

Loeb, "Constitution by Convention," 33 Nat. Mun. Rev. 14 (1944).

BRIEF IN SUPPORT OF CONVENTION APPENDIX C- 1973 ABA REPORT PAGE 83

```
1 MacDonald, "The Constitution of the United States Needs to be Fixed," Esquire, Vol. LXX, p. 143 (Oct. 1968).
```

Martig, "Amending the Constitution--Article V: The Keystone of the Arch," 35 Mich. L. Rev. 1253 (1937).

Martin, "The Application Clause of Article Five," 85 Pol Sci. Q. 616 (1970).

9 Miller, "Amendment of the Federal Constitution: Should It Be Made More 10 Difficult?," 10 Minn. L. Rev. 185 (1926).

Mitchell, W.D., "Methods of Amending the Constitution," 25 Lawyer and Banker 265 (1932).

Note, "The Constitutional Convention, Its Nature and Powers, And the Amending Procedure," 1966 Utah L. Rev. 390.

Note, "Power to Call a Constitutional Convention Limited to Consideration of Specific Topics," 3 Vand. L. Rev. 111 (1949).

Note, "Proposed Legislation on the Convention Method of Amending the United States Constitution," 85 Harv. L. Rev. 1612 (1972).

Note, "Proposing Amendments to the United States Constitution by Convention," 70 Harv. L. Rev. 1067 (1957).

Note, "Ratification of Constitutional Amendment by State Conventions," 2 Geo Wash. L. Rev. 216 (1934).

Note, "Rescinding Memorialization Resolutions," 30 Chi-Kent L. Rev. 339 (1952).

Oberst, "The Genesis of the Three States Rights Amendments of 1963, 39 Notre Dame Lawyer 644 (1964).

Packard, "Constitutional Law: The States and Amending Process," 45 A.B.A.J. 161 (1959).

Packard, "Legal Facets of the Income Tax Rate Limitation Program," 30 Chi-Kent L. Rev. 128 (1952).

Pei, "The Case for a Constitutional Convention," Modern Age, Vol. 12, p. 8 (Winter, 1967-8).

Phillips, "Has the Congress the Power Under Article V of the Constitution to Call and Regulate the Holding of Ratifying Conventions Independent of State Legislatures?," 6 Fla. S.B.A.L.J. 573 (1933).

49 Platz, "Article Five of the Federal Constitution," 3 Geo. Wash. L. Rev. 17 (1934).

Pullen, "The Application Clause of the Amending Provision of the Constitution" (unpublished dissertation, University of North Carolina, Chapel Hill, 1951).

Quarles, "Amendments to the Federal Constitution," 26 A.B.A.J. 617 (1940).

57 Scharpf, "Judicial Review and the Political Question: A Functional Analysis," 58 75 Yale L.J. 517 (1966).

Scheips, "The Significance and Adoption of Article V of the Constitution," 26 Notre Dame Lawyer 46 (1950).

BRIEF IN SUPPORT OF CONVENTION APPENDIX C- 1973 ABA REPORT PAGE 84

```
1 Shanahan, "Proposed Constitutional Amendments: They Will Strengthen Federal- State Relations," 49 A.B.A.J. 631 (1963).
```

Smith, "Has Congress Power to Call Conventions in the States to Consider Constitutional Amendment," 2 J. Bar Assn of Kansas 1 (1933).

Sorensen, "The Quiet Campaign to Rewrite the Constitution," Sat. Rev., July 15, 1967, at 17.

Sprague, "Shall We Have a Federal Constitutional Convention, and What Shall It Do?," 3 Maine L. Rev. 115 (1910).

Symposium on the Article V Convention Process, 66 Mich. L. Rev.: Bonfield, "The Dirksen Amendment and the Article V Convention Process" 949; Carson, "Disadvantages of a Federal Constitutional Convention" 921; Dirksen, "The Supreme Court and the People" 837; Dixon, "Article V: The Comatose Article of Our Living Constitution?" 931; Ervin, "Proposed Legislation to Implement the Convention Method of Amending the Constitution" 875; Kauper, "The Alternative Amendment Process: Some Observations" 903; McCleskey, "Along the Midway: Some Thoughts on Democratic Constitution-Amending" 1001 (1968).

Tugwell, "Rewriting the Constitution: A Center Report," Center Magazine, Vol. 1, (March 1968).

Tuller, "A Convention to Amend the Constitution: Why Needed, How It May Be Obtained," 193 N. Amer. Rev. 369 (1911).

Tydings "Speaking Out: They Want to Tamper with the Constitution; States Calling for a National Constitutional Convention," Sat. Eve. Post, July 17, 1967, at 10.

33 Weinfield, "Power of Congress Over State Ratifying Conventions," 51 Harv. L. 34 Rev. 473 (1938).

36 Wheeler, "Is a Constitutional Convention Impending?," 21 Ill. L. Rev. 782 (1927).

39 Wolf, "An Antireapportionment Amendment: Can It Be Legally Ratified?," 52

40 A.B.A.J. 326 (1966).

41 Congressional Materials 42

43 Ames, H., The Proposed Amendments to the Constitution of the U.S. During the 44 First Century of Its History, H.R. Doc. No. 353, pt. 2,  $54^{th}$  Cong., 2d Sess. (1897).

Brickfield, C., Staff of House Comm. on the Judiciary, 85th Cong., 1st Sess., Problems Relating to a Federal Constitutional Convention (Comm. Print 1957). 142

50 113 Cong. Rec. 7551-52, 7573-85 (March 22, 1967), 9342-43 (April 13), 10101-15 (April 19), 12267-74 (May 10).

117 Cong. Rec. S16519-35 (daily ed. Oct. 19, 1971).

55 Hearings on Reapportionment of State Legislatures Before the Subcomm. on Constitutional Amendments of the Senate Comm. on the Judiciary,  $89^{th}$  Cong.,  $1^{st}$  Sess. (1965).

BRIEF IN SUPPORT OF CONVENTION APPENDIX C- 1973 ABA REPORT PAGE 85

```
Hearings on S.2307 Before the Subcomm. on Separation of Powers of the Senate
 1
     Comm. on the Judiciary, 90^{th} Cong., 1^{st} Sess. (Oct. 30 and 31, 1967).
     Myers, D., The Process of Constitutional Amendment, S. Doc. No. 314, 76^{\rm th}
 5
     Cong., 3d Sess. (1940).
 6
     S. Rep. No. 92-336, 92^{nd} Cong., 1^{st} Sess. (July 31, 1971).
 7
 8
     S. Rep. No. 93-293, 93^{rd} Cong. 1^{st} Sess. (1973).
 9
10
     S. Doc. No. 78, 71st Cong., 2d Sess., "Compilation Showing the Applications 11
     Made From Time to Time to the Senate by the Legislatures of Various States for 12 the Calling of a Constitutional Convention for the Purpose of Proposing 13
     Certain Amendments to the Constitution of the United Sates" (1930).
14
15
     Staff of House Comm. on the Judiciary, 82d Cong., 2d Sess., "Problems 16
17
     Relating to State Applications for Convention to Propose Constitutional Limitations on Federal Tax Rates (Comm. Print, 1952).
18 19 20
                               Reports and Other Materials
21
22
     Amending the Constitution to Strengthen the States in the Federal System, 36
     State Gov't 10 (1963).
23
24
25 American Enterprise Institute For Public Policy Research, "A Convention to 26
     Amend the Constitution: Questions Involved in Calling a Convention upon 27
     Applications by State Legislatures" (Special Analysis No. 5, 1967).
28
29
     Letter of Charles L. Black, Jr., to Hon. Emanuel Celler dated February 28, 30
31
32
     Report of Committee on National Constitutional Conventions, American Bar 33
     Association Section on Individual Rights and Responsibilities (Sept. 20, 34
35
     Report of Proposed Procedures for Federal Constitutional Conventions (S.215), 36
37
     11 Reports of Committees of the Association of the Bar of the City of New York
38 Concerned with Federal Legislation (1972); also reprinted in The Record of 39
     N.Y.C.B.A. 327 (May 1972).
40
41
     "A Report on Three Amendments to the United States Constitution Proposed by 42 the Council of State Governments," 2 Reports of Committees of the Association 43 of the Bar of the City of New York Concerned with Federal Legislation 21 44
     (1963).
45
46
     Small, N.J., "Procedures for Amending the United States Constitution," Library 47 of Congress, Legislative Reference Service, American Law Division (1965).
48
49 Yadlosky, E., "State Petitions and Memorials to Congress on the Subject of 50
     State Legislatures," Library of Congress, Legislative Reference Service Report 51
     JK140C-32/205R (to Aug. 5, 1965).
52
                                 Supreme Court Decisions
53
54
     Dillon v. Gloss, 256 U.S. 368 (1921).
55
        BRIEF IN SUPPORT OF CONVENTION
        APPENDIX C- 1973 ABA REPORT
```

PAGE 86

```
Coleman v. Miller, 307 U.S. 433 (1939).
 1
 3
     Hawke v. Smith (No. 1), 253 U.S. 221 (1920).
 4
 5
     Hollingsworth v. Virginia, 3 U.S. (3 Dall.) 378 (1798).
 6
 7
     United States v. Sprague, 282 U.S. 716 (1931).
 8
 9
     Leser v. Garnett, 258 U.S. 130 (1922).
10
11
     Rhode Island v. Palmer (National Prohibition Cases), 253 U.S. 350 (1920).
12
     Whitehill v. Elkins, 389 U.S. 54, 57 (1967).
13
14
                        State Constitutional Convention Materials
15
                                 Treatises and Documents
16
     Arkansas Constitutional Revision Study Commission, Revising the Arkansas 17
     Constitution (Little Rock, 1968).
18
19
     Bartley, E. R., "Methods of Constitutional Change," in W. Brooke Graves (ed.)
20
     Major Problems in State Constitutional Revision (Chicago: Pub. Adm. Ser.
21
     1960).
22
23
     Breuer, E. H., Constitutional Developments in New York, 1777-1958; A 24
     Bibliography of Conventions and Constitutions With Selected References for 25
     Constitutional Research (Albany; Univ. of State of N.Y., the State Education 26
     Dep't, 1958).
27
28 Citizens Research Council of Michigan, "A Comparison of Organization and 29 Procedures of Six State Constitutional Conventions" (Detroit, 1961).
30
31
     Connecticut, Constitutional Convention 1965, Journal (Hartford, 1965).
32
33
     Connors, R.J., The Process of Constitutional Revision in New Jersey, 1940-1947 34
     (Nat. Mun. L. 1970).
35
36
     Cornwell, E. E., Jr., and Goodman, J. S., The Politics of the Rhode Island 37
     Constitutional Convention (Nat. Mun. L. 1969).
38
39 Englebert, A., State Constitutional Revision in California (Calif. Univ. of 40
     Bur. Gov't Res., 1961).
41
42
     Friedman, R. S., The Michigan Constitutional Convention and Administrative 43 Organization: A Case Study in the Politics of Constitution-Making (Inst. of 44
     Pub. Adm. Univ. of Mich. 1963).
45
46
     Graves, W. B., ed., Major Problems in State Constitutional Revision:
     (Chicago: Pub. Adm. Ser., 1960).
47
48
49
     Halevy, J., A Selective Bibliography on State Constitutional Revision; 50
     Supplement Compiled by Myron Fink (Nat. Mun. L. 1967).
51
52
     Maryland, Report of the Constitutional Convention Commission (1967).
53
54
     New York Temporary State Commission on the Constitutional Convention, Report 55
     No. 5, Convention Organization and Rules For Effective Constitutional Review (1967).
56
57
```

```
1 Pollock, J. K., Making Michigan's New Constitution, 1961-62 (Wahr. 1962).
```

3 Sturm, A. L., Constitution-Making in Michigan, 1961-62 (Inst. of Pub. Adm. 4 Univ. of Mich. 1963).

5 6

Sturm, A. L., & Whitaker, M., Implementing a New Constitution: The Michigan Experience (Mich. Inst. of Pub. Adm., 1968).

7 8

Sturm, A. L., Methods of State Constitutional Reform (1954).

9 10

Sturm, A. L., Selective Bibliography on State Constitutional Revision (Tallahassee, Fla. St. Univ. Inst. of Gov't Res. 1967).

13

Sturm, A. L., Thirty Years of State Constitution Making, 1938-1968 (with an epilogue on developments in 1969) (Nat. Mun. L. 1970).

16

17 Uhl, R., Stoudmire, H., & Sherrill, G., Constitutional Conventions; 18 Organization, Powers, Function, and Procedures (Bureau of Pub. Adm., Univ. of 19 South Carolina, 1951).

20

Wheeler, J. P., The Constitutional Convention; A Manual on its Planning, Organization and Operation (Nat. Mun. L. 1961).

23

Wheeler, John P., ed., Salient Issues of Constitutional Revision (Nat. Mun. L. 1961).

26 27

Wolf, G. D., Constitutional Revision in Pennsylvania; The Dual Tactic of Amendment and Limited Convention (Nat. Mun. L. 1969).

- Periodicals
- Adrian, "Trends in State Constitutions," 5 Harv. J. of Leg. 311 (1968).

32 33

Bebout, "Organizing the Constitutional Convention," 28 Acad. of Pol. Sci. Proc. 250 (1967).

343536

Bebout, "Recent Constitution Writing," 35 Tex. L. Rev. 1071 (1957).

37

38 Beiser, Goodman & Cornwell, "Judicial Role in a Non-Judicial Setting, Some 39 Empirical Manifestations and Consequences," 5 Law and Soc. Rev. 571 (1971).

40 41

Braxton, "Powers of Conventions," 7 Va. L. Reg. 79 (1901).

42 43

Dixon & Hathaway, "The Seminal Issues in State Constitution Revision: Reapportionment Method and Standards," 10 W & M. L. Rev. 888 (1969).

44 45 46

Dodd, "Judicial Control Over the Amendment of State Constitutions," 10 Colum. L. Rev. 618 (1910).

48

Dodd, "State Constitutional Conventions and State Legislative Powers," 2 Vand. L. Rev. 27 (1948).

51

52 Fuld, "Court of Appeals and the 1967 Constitutional Convention," 39 N.Y.S.B.J. 99 (1967).

54

Goldings, "Massachusetts Amends: A Decade of State Constitutional Revision," 56 5 Harv. J. of Leg. 373 (1968).

50 57

58 Gooch, "The Recent Limited Constitutional Convention in Virginia," 31 Va. L. 59 Rev. 708 (1945).

```
1 Graves, "Current Trends in State Constitutional Revision," 40 Neb. L. Rev. 560 (1961).
```

Handler & Sills, "The Imbroglio of Constitutional Revision: Another By-Product of Reapportionment," 20 Rutgers L. Rev. 1 (1965).

5 6 7

Harvard, "Notes on a Theory of State Constitutional Change: The Florida Experience," 21 J. of Pol. 80 (1959).

8 9

Hempelmann, "Convening a Constitutional Convention in Washington Through the Use of the Popular Initiative," 45 Wash. L. Rev. 535 (1970).

12

Hindman, "Roadblocks to Conventions," 37 Nat. Mun. Rev. 129 (1948).

14

Mogan, "The Constitutional Convention and the Courts," N.Y.L.J., June 7, 8, 9, 16 1967.

17

18 J. vanden Heuvel, "Reflections on Constitutional Conventions," 40 N.Y.S.B.J. 19 261 (1968).

20

Kaden, "The People: No! Some Observations on the 1967 New York Constitutional Convention," 5 Harv. J. of Leg. 343 (1968).

22 23 24

Laub, "Issues Before the Judiciary Committee of the Pennsylvania Constitutional Convention," 39 Penn. B.A.Q. 390 (1968).

252627

Martineau, "The Mandatory Referendum on Calling a State Constitutional Convention: Enforcing the People's Right to Reform Their Government," 31 Ohio S. L. Rev. 421 (1970).

Martineau, "Maryland's 1967-68 Constitutional Convention: Some Lessons for Reformers," 55 Iowa L. Rev. 1196 (1970).

32 33 34

McGeary, "Pennsylvania's Constitutional Convention in Perspective," 41 Penn. B.A.Q. 175 (1970).

35 36

McKay, "Constitutional Revision in New York State: Disaster in 1967," 19 Syracuse L. R. 207 (1967).

38 39

Mosley, "Limited Constitutional Convention," 21 Tenn. L. Rev. 867 (1951).

40 41

Note, "Constitutional Revisions by a Restricted Convention," 35 Minn. L. Rev. 283 (1951).

44

Note, "Judicial Reform Through Total Revisions of State Constitutions," 51 Amer. Soc. Jud. 347 (1968).

46

Note, "State Constitutional Change: The Constitutional Convention," 54 Va. L. Rev. 995 (1968).

50

Note, "State Constitutional Conventions: Limitations on Their Powers," 55 Iowa L. Rev. 244 (1969).

53

Note, "The Constitutional Convention, Its Nature and Powers, And the Amending Process," 1966 Utah L. Rev. 390 (1966).

56

Note, "The Powers of Constitutional Conventions," 29 Harv. L. Rev. 528 (1916).

58

59 Powell, "Constitutional Growth and Revision in the South," 10 J. Pol. 354 (1948).

Sandelius, "The Kansas Experience; State Constitutional Revision and the Moral Element," 40 Neb. L. Rev. 575 (1961).

3

1

Shull, "Legislature and the Process of Constitutional Amendment," 53 Ken. L. J. 531 (1964).

5 6 7

Sidman, "Constitutional Revision in Pennsylvania: Problems and Procedures," 71 W. Va. L. Rev. 306 (1969).

8 9 10

Sprague, Cornwell & Goodman, "Judicial Role in a Non-Judicial Setting: Survey Evidence, " 4 Law and Soc. Rev. 371 (1970).

11 12 13

Sturm & Craig, "State Constitutional Commissions: Fifteen Years of Increasing Use," 39 State Govt. 56 (1966).

14 15 16

Sturm & Craig, "State Constitutional Conventions: 1950-1965," 39 State Govt. 152 (1966).

17 18

Sumner, "Constitutional Revision in California," 40 State Govt. 224 (1967).

19 20 21

22

23

Symposium on Constitutional Revision, 72 W. Va. L. Rev. 33: Frasure, "Constitutional Revision: The Legislature" 33; Howard, "Constitutional Revision-Virginia's Approach" 41; Shelton, "Constitutional Revision-The Counties" 60 (1969).

24 25 26

Symposium on the 1964 New Hampshire Constitutional Convention, 6 N.H.B.J. 212 (1964).

27 28 29

Thomas, "The Electorate and State Constitutional Revision . . . An Analysis of Four Michigan Referenda," 12 Midwest J. of Pol. Sci. 115 (1968).

30 31 32

Wheeler, "Constitutional Reform Fails in the Free State: The Maryland Constitutional Convention of 1967-68," 26 Wash. & Lee 218 (1969).

33 34 35

36

White, "Amendment and Revision of State Constitutions," 100 Penn. L. Rev. 1132 (1952).

ENDNOTES

 $<sup>^{1}</sup>$  2 J. Story, Commentaries on the Constitution of the United States (1826) (5 $^{ m th}$ ed. 1905).

&lt;sup>2</sup> The Federalist No. 43, at 204 (Hallowell; Masters, Smith & Co. ed. 1852) (J. Madison).

&lt;sup>3</sup> These applications are classified by subject and state in Appendix B; Part One, p.59. They are also discussed generally in Barbara Prager's paper, which is also included in Appendix B, Part Two, p.71.

&lt;sup>4</sup> J. Wheeler, The Constitutional Convention: A Manual on its Planning, Organization and Operation xiii (National Municipal League Series 1, No. 4 1961); see R. Hoar, Constitutional Conventions 1-3 (1917).

 $<sup>^{5}</sup>$  See A. Sturm, Thirty Years of State Constitution Making: 1938-1968, at 51-80, 132-37 (National Municipal League 1970). 6 369 U.S. 186 (1962).

&lt;sup>7</sup> 377 U.S. 533 (1964).

&lt;sup>8</sup> See Black, "The Proposed Amendment of Article V: A Threatened Disaster," 72 Yale L.J. 957 (1963); Fensterwald, "Constitutional Law: The States and the Amending Process X A Reply," 46 A.B.A.J. 717 1960); Oberst, "The Genesis of the Three States-Rights Amendments of 1963," 39 Notre Dame Lawyer 644 (1964); Shanahan, "Proposed Constitutional Amendments: They Will Strengthen Federal-State Relations," 49 A.B.A.J. 631 (1963).

- <sup>9</sup> See American Enterprise Institute, A Convention to Amend the Constitution: Questions Involved in Calling a Convention Upon Applications by State Legislatures (Special Analysis No. 5, 1967).
- <sup>10</sup> Making thirty-three in all, including applications from two state legislatures made in 1963.
- $^{11}$  See Martin, "The Application Clause of Article Five," 85 Pol. Sci. Q. 616, 626 (1970).
- <sup>12</sup> Ervin, "Proposed Legislation to Implement the Convention Method of Amending the Constitution," 66 Mich. L. Rev. 875, 878 (1968).
- $^{13}$  See Hearings on S. 2307 Before the Subcomm. on Separation of Powers of the Senate Comm. on the Judiciary, 90th Cong., 1st Sess. (1967); S. Rep. No. 336, 92nd Cong., 1st Sess. (1971); 117 Cong. Rec. 36803-06 (1971).
- <sup>14</sup> S.215 was re-introduced in the Senate on March 19, 1973, as S.1272 and was favorably reported out of the Subcommittee on Separation of Powers on June 6, 1973, and passed the Senate July 9, 1973. That legislation is set forth and discussed in Appendix A, p.46.
- 15 While we also have studied a great many related and peripheral issues, our conclusions and recommendations are limited to the principal questions.

  16 The literature in this field deals with various proposals to "reform" Article V by easing, restricting, or otherwise altering the means of proposing amendments to the Constitution through the convention method. See, e.g., L. Orfield, The Amending of the Federal Constitution, Chap. VI (1942); McCleskey, "Along the Midway: Some Thoughts on Democratic Constitution-Amending," 66 Mich. L. Rev. 1001, 1012-16 (1968).
- $^{17}$  On the other hand, some have suggested that state legislatures will be less likely to seek a national constitutional convention if they are more aware of the risks and uncertainties of the convention method. See, e.g., Buckwalter, "Constitutional Conventions and State Legislators," 20 J. Pub. Law 543 (1971).  $^{18}$  J. Wheeler, supra note 4, at xv. There have been occasions on which state constitutional conventions have successfully exceeded limitations placed upon them. Conventions in Georgia (1789), Illinois (1862 and 1869), Pennsylvania (1872), Alabama (1901) and Michigan (1907) all violated legislative directives X either procedural, substantive, or both. See R. Hoar, supra note 4, at 111-115.

The Virginia Convention of 1901 and the Kentucky Convention of 1890 both wrote major changes in suffrage into their creations, and then proclaimed the new constitutions as law without holding the legislatively mandated popular referenda. (Referenda conducted under the suffrage provisions of the old constitutions would have resulted in disapproval of the new instruments.)

19 Article 1, 35, of the Constitution gives the House of Representatives the authority to judge challenges to the election of its members. Since 1798, the House has seen fit to exercise this power through procedures enacted into law. Act of Jan. 23, 1798, Ch. 8, 1 Stat. 537. Subsequent modifications of that law appear in 2 U.S.C. 3 201-226 (1970). Precedents for the use of this class of legislation, despite recognition that the rules enacted by one Congress in this area cannot bind a successor Congress, may be found in 1 Hinds, Precedents of the House of Representatives 3 3 680, 719, 833 (1907).

In 1969 Congress passed the Federal Contested Elections Act, 2 U.S.C.  $\ni$  381-96 (1970). In the House Report Accompanying that legislation appeared the following:

Election contests affect both the integrity of the elected process and of the legislative process. Election challenges may interfere with the discharge of public duties by elected representatives and disrupt the normal operations of the Congress. It is essential, therefore, that such contests be determined by the House under modern procedures which provide efficient, expeditious processing of the cases and a full opportunity for both parties to be heard. H.R. Rep. No. 569, 91st Cong., 1st Sess. 3 (1969).

Similarly, Congress decided in 1877 to establish procedures for handling electoral vote disputes for President rather than adopt ad hoc procedures, as it did in 1876 to resolve the Presidential election dispute of that year. That ad hoc resolution led to a great deal of criticism of Congress, as many felt the issue had been decided on the basis of political bias rather than facts. See generally 3 U.S.C.  $\Rightarrow$  15 (1970); Rosenbloom, A History of Presidential Elections 243 (1965).

- <sup>20</sup> The Federalist No. 43, supra note 2.
- <sup>21</sup> We, of course, are referring to a substantive role and not a role such as the agency for the transmittal of applications to Congress, or for receipt of proposed amendments for submission to the state legislature, or for the certification of the act of ratification in the state.
- $^{22}$  J. Jameson, A Treatise on Constitutional Conventions; Their History, Powers, and Modes of Proceeding  $\ni$  585, at 634 (4th ed. 1887); cited with approval in Dillon v. Gloss, 256 U.S. 368, 375 (1921).
- <sup>23</sup> The Federalist No. 43, supra note 2, at 204.
- $^{24}$  1 The Records of the Federal Convention of 1787, at 22 (Farrand ed. 1937)(hereinafter cited as Farrand).
- <sup>25</sup> 2 Id. 188 (emphasis added).
- $^{26}$  Weinfeld, "Power of Congress over State Ratifying Conventions," 51 Harv. L. Rev. 473, 481 (1938).
- <sup>27</sup> 2 Farrand 558.
- <sup>28</sup> Id. 559
- <sup>29</sup> Mason's draft of the Constitution, as it stood at that point in the Convention, contained the following notations: "Article  $5^{th}$  X By this article Congress only have the power of proposing amendments at any future time to this constitution and should it prove ever so oppressive, the whole people of America can't make, or even propose alterations to it; a doctrine utterly subversive of the fundamental principles of the rights and liberties of the people." 2 The Records of the Federal Convention of 1787, at 629 n. 8 (Farrand ed. 1937).
- <sup>30</sup> 2 Farrand 629.
- <sup>31</sup> Id. 629, 630.
- $^{32}$  The Federalist No. 85, at 403 (Hallowell; Masters, Smith & Co. ed. 1852) (A. Hamilton).
- $^{33}$  This is because it was called "for the sole and express purpose of revising the Articles of Confederation and reporting . . . such alterations and provisions therein as shall . . . render the federal constitution adequate to the exigencies of government and the preservation of the Union."
- $^{34}$  T. Cooley, The General Principles of Constitutional Law in the United States of America 15, (2d ed. 1891).
- <sup>35</sup> Georgia, Massachusetts, New Hampshire, and Pennsylvania provided for amendments by convention; Delaware, Maryland and South Carolina provided methods of amendment, but not through conventions; New Jersey, New York, North Carolina and Virginia lacked any provisions for amendment; and Connecticut and Rhode Island did not adopt constitutions at that time. The constitution of Vermont (then considered a territory) provided for amendments through convention. Weinfeld, supra note 26, at 479.

- $^{36}$  Note the similarity between this language (emphasis ours) and the language contained in the earliest drafts of Article V (p.14-15, supra).
- <sup>37</sup> Ga. Const. Art. LXIII (1777), at 1 B. Poore, The Federal and State Constitutions, Colonial Charters, and Other Organic Laws of the United States 383 (1878) [hereinafter cited as Poore].
- $^{38}$  Pa. Const.  $\ni$  47 (1776), at 2 Poore 1548. Vermont's Constitution of 1786 contained a similar amending article.
- $^{39}$  "Documents Illustrative of the Formation of the Union of the American States," H. Doc. No. 398, 69th Cong., 1st Sess. 41-43 (1927).
- 40 A. Sturm, Methods of Sate Constitutional Reform 102 (1954); R. Hoar, supra note 4, at 71, 120-1; Dodd, "State Constitutional Conventions and State Legislative Power," 2 Vand. L. Rev. 27 (1948). The following state cases support the proposition: Opinion of the Justices, 264 A.2d 342 (Del. 1970); Chenault v. Carter, 332 S.W.2d 623 (Ky. 1960); State v. American Sugar Refining Co., 137 La. 407, 68 So. 742 (1915); Opinion of the Justices, 60 Mass. (6 Cush.) 573 (1833); Erwin v. Nolan, 280 Mo. 401, 217 S.W. 837 (1920); State ex rel. Kvaalen v. Graybill, 496 P.2d 1127 (Mont. 1972); Wood's Appeal, 75 Pa. 59 (1874); Wells v. Bain, 75 Pa. 39 (1873); In re Opinion of the Governor, 55 R.I. 56, 178 A. 433 (1935); Cummings v. Beeler, 189 Tenn. 151, 223 S.W.2d 913 (1949); Quinlan v. Houston and Texas Central Ry. Co., 89 Tex. 356, 34 S.W. 738 (1896); Staples v. Gilmer, 183 Va. 613, 33 S.E.2d 158, 158 A.L.R. 495 (1945). See Annot. "Power of state legislature to limit the power of a state constitutional convention," 158 A.L.R.512 (1945).
  - [T]here would be no convention unless the people voted affirmatively, that an affirmative vote would result in holding exactly the sort of convention in every detail provided in the act, and that the people are presumed to know the terms of the act under which they vote. The conclusion drawn from this is that the convention act in its every detail is enacted by the people voting under it. R. Hoar, supra note 4, at 71.
- $^{42}$  State v. American Sugar Refining Company, 137 La. 407, 415, 68 So. 742, 745 (1915).
- <sup>43</sup> State ex rel. McCready v. Hunt, 20 S.C. (2 Hill's Law) 1,271 (1834).
  <sup>44</sup> Nearly 15% of the total number of state constitutional conventions called have been substantively limited in one or more respects. The limited or restricted state constitutional convention has been used frequently since World War II. See A. Sturm, supra note 5, at 56-60, 113; A. Sturm, "State Constitutions and Constitutional Revision, 1970-1971," in Council of State Govts', The Book of the States, 1972-1973, at 20 (1972).
- <sup>45</sup> Upon receipt of the first state application for a convention, a debate took place in the House of Representatives on May 5, 1789, as to whether it would be proper to refer that application to committee. A number of Representatives, including Madison, felt it would be improper to do so, since it would imply that Congress had a right to deliberate upon the subject. Madison said that this "was not the case until two-thirds of the State Legislatures concurred in such application, and then it is out of the power of Congress to decline complying, the words of the Constitution being express and positive relative to the agency Congress may have in case of applications of this nature." The House thus decided not to refer the application to committee but rather to enter it upon the Journals of Congress and place the original in its files. 1 Annals of Congress, cols. 248-51 (1789). Further support for the proposition that Congress has no discretion on whether or not to call a constitutional convention, once two-thirds of the states have applied for one, may be found in IV Elliot, The Debates in the Several State Conventions on the Adoption of the Federal Constitution 178 (2d ed 1836) (remarks of delegate James Iredell of North Carolina); 1 Annals of Congress, col. 498 (1796) (remarks of Rep. William Smith of South Carolina during debate on a proposed treaty with Great Britain); Cong. Globe, 38th Cong., 2d Sess. 630-31 (1865) (remarks of Senator Johnson).

 $^{46}$  See our discussion at pages 34-35, supra.

<sup>47</sup> For a related discussion, see the debates which took place at the time the Twenty-first Amendment was being formulated concerning the extent of congressional power over state ratifying conventions. See, e.g., 76 Cong. Rec. 124-34, 2419-21, 4152-55 (1933); 77 Cong. Rec. 481-82 (1933); 81 Cong. Rec. 3175-76 (1937). Former Attorney General A. Mitchell Palmer argued that Congress could legislate all the necessary provisions for the assembly and conduct of such conventions, a view that was controverted at the time by former Solicitor General James M. Beck.

<sup>48</sup> 256 U.S. 368 (1921).

<sup>49</sup> 258 U.S. 130 (1922), where the Court stated: "But the function of a state legislature in ratifying a proposed amendment to the Federal Constitution, like the function of Congress in proposing the amendment, is a federal function derived from the Federal Constitution; and it transcends any limitations sought to be imposed by the people of a State."

<sup>50</sup> As Justice Felix Frankfurter has observed: "The history of American freedom is, in no small measure, the history of procedure," Malinski v. New York, 324 is, in no small measure, the history of procedure." Malinski v. New York, 324 U.S. 401, 414 (1945). It is not surprising, therefore, that procedural limitations on conventions have been invalidated. See Carton v. Secretary of State, 151 Mich. 337, 115 N.W. 429 (1908); Goodrich v. Moore, 2 Minn. 61 (1858). See also Jameson, supra note 22, at 364; Dodd, supra note 40, at 31, 33.

<sup>51</sup> A number of the Congressional Acts providing for territorial conventions did prescribe that the convention must determine by a majority of the whole number of delegates whether it was expedient for the territory to form a constitution and state government. No such requirement, however, was imposed on the conventions in their work of framing such constitutions and governments. See, e.g., Act of April 30, 1802, ch. 40, 1 Stat. 173 (Ohio); Act of Feb. 20, 1811, ch. 21, 3 Stat. 641 (Louisiana); Act of July 16, 1894, ch. 138, 28 Stat. 107 (Utah); Act of June 16, 1906, ch. 3335, 34 Stat. 267 Oklahoma).

Among those few state constitutional conventions, for which the vote needed to govern convention proceedings was established in enabling legislation were the 1967 Pennsylvania convention, and the New Jersey conventions of 1947 and 1966. See Law of March 16, 1967, ch. 2 [1967] Pa. Laws 2; Act of Feb. 17, 1947, ch. 8, [1947] N.J. Laws 24; Act of May 10, 1965, ch. 43, [1965] N.J. Laws 101.

When Congress required that the Twenty-First Amendment (ending Prohibition) be ratified by state conventions, rather than legislatures, forty-three states enacted legislation providing for such conventions. Thirty-two of those enabling acts established the vote required of convention delegates for ratification; either a majority of those delegates present and voting (e.g., New Mexico and North Carolina X such acts also established a minimum quorum) or a majority of the total number of delegates (e.g. California and Illinois). In no case was the requirement greater than a majority of the total number of delegates. See E. Brown, Ratification of the Twenty-First Amendment to the Constitution of the United States: State Convention Records and Laws 515-701 (1938).

```
52 To be noted is Gerry's criticism of the August 30, 1787 proposal, specifically, his observation that a "majority" of the states might bind the country in the convention contemplated by that proposal See pp.14-15, supra.
Gerry's criticism eventually led to the inclusion of ratification requirements. See Weinfeld, supra note 26, at 482-483.
53 74 U.S. (7 Wall.) 506 (1869); criticized in Glidden Co. v. Zdanok, 370 U.S.
530, 605 n.11 (1962) (Douglas, J., dissenting).
^{54} See Strong, "Three Little Words and What They Didn't Seem to Mean," 59
A.B.A.J. 29 (1973). See generally Fairman, "Reconstruction and Reunion, 1864-88," in VI History of the Supreme Court of the United States 433-514 (Freund ed. 1971).
55 The cases are: United States v. Sprague, 282 U.S. 716 (1931); Leser v.
Garnett, 258 U.S. 130 (1922); Dillon v. Gloss, 256 U.S. 368 (1921); National Prohibition Cases, 253 U.S. 350 (1920); Hawke v. Smith (No. 1), 253 U.S. 221
(1920); Hollingsworth v. Virginia, 3 U.S. (3 Dall.) 378 (1798).
<sup>56</sup> 307 U.S. 433 (1939).
<sup>57</sup> 369 U.S. 186 (1962).
<sup>58</sup> Id. 217.
<sup>59</sup> 395 U.S. 486 (1969).
60 See Butterworth v. Dempsey, 237 F. Supp. 302 (D. Conn. 1965), involving a court-ordered state constitutional convention on the subject of reapportionment. Cf. Sixty-Seventh Minnesota State Senate v. Beens, 406 U.S.
187 (1972).
<sup>61</sup> Appendix A sets forth suggestions as to how such review might be provided for in S.1272.
62 3 U.S. (3 Dall.) 378 (1798).
63 Id. 380 n.(a).
^{64} Ill Journal of the Senate 323 (1803) (motion defeated by a vote of 23 to ^{65} Cong. Globe, 38^{\text{th}} Cong., 2d Sess. 629-33 (1865). Four years earlier a proposed amendment on slavery was presented to and signed by President Buchanan. No discussion took place in Congress concerning this action and the proposed amendment was never ratified.
66 VI J. Richardson, A Compilation of the Messages and Papers of the Presidents, 1789-1897, at 391-392 (1897).
^{\rm 67} The concurrent resolution is used to express "the sense of Congress upon a given subject," Watkins, C.L., & Riddick, F.M., Senate Procedure: Precedents and Practices 208 (1964); to express "facts, principles, opinions, and purposes of the two Houses," Deschler, L., Jefferson's Manual and Rules of the House of Representatives 185-186 (1969); and to take a joint action embodying a matter within the limited scope of Congress, as, for instance, to count the electoral votes, terminate the effective date of some laws, and recall bills from the President, Evins, Joe L., Understanding Congress 114 (1963); Watkins and Riddick, supra at 208-9. A concurrent resolution was also used by Congress in declaring that the Fourteenth Amendment should be promulgated as part of the Constitution. 15 Stat. 709-10. Other uses include terminating powers delegated to the President, directing the expenditure of money appropriated to the use of Congress, and preventing reorganization plans taking effect under general powers granted the President to reorganize executive agencies. For an excellent discussion of such resolutions, see S.
Rep. No. 1335, 54th Cong., 2d Sess. (1897).
68 253 U.S. 221 (1920).
<sup>69</sup> Id. 227.
<sup>70</sup> 285 U.S. 355 (1932).
<sup>71</sup> Id. 365, 366.
```

72 See Coleman v. Miller, 146 Kan. 390, 71 P.2d 518 (1937), aff'd, 307 U.S. 433 (1939), upholding the right of a lieutenant governor to cast the tiebreaking vote in the state senate on the ratification of the proposed child labor amendment. In affirming, the United States Supreme Court expressed no opinion as to the propriety of the lieutenant governor's participation. <sup>73</sup> The results of a questionnaire-type inquiry which we sent to the fifty states indicate that a substantial majority exclude the governor from participation and that in a number that include him it is not clear whether his inclusion is simply a matter of form. Historically, it appears that the governor generally has not played a role in these processes, although there are exceptions to this rule. See Myers, "The Process of Constitutional Amendment," S. Doc. No. 314,  $76^{th}$  Cong.,  $3^{rd}$  Sess. 18 n.47 (1940), wherein it is stated that governors gave 44 approvals in the ratifications of 15 amendments. Whether the approvals were simply a matter of form or were required as a matter of state law is not clear. In several cases there were qubernatorial vetoes of ratifications, including the governor of New Hampshire's attempted veto of his state's ratification of the twelfth amendment.

<sup>74</sup> H. Ames, "The Proposed Amendments to the Constitution of the United States During the First Century of Its History," H. Doc. No. 353, pt. 2, 54th Cong., 2d Sess. 298 (1897); Bonfield, "Proposing Constitutional Amendments by Convention; Some Problems," 39 Notre Dame Lawyer 659, 664-65 (1964); Buckwalter, supra note 17, at 551; Brickfield, Staff of House Committee on the Judiciary, 85th Cong., 1st Sess., "Problems Relating to a Federal Constitutional Convention" 7-9 (Comm. Print 1957); Note, "Proposing Amendments to the United States Constitution by Convention," 70 Harv. L. Rev. 1067, 1075 (1957). But compare 69 Op. Att'y Gen. of Okla. 200 (1969), in 115 Cong. Rec. 23780 (1969), with In re Opinion of the Justices, 118 Maine 544, 107 A. 673 (1919). See generally Dodd, The Revision and Amendment of State Constitutions 148-55 (1910); Hoar, supra note 4, at 90-93; Orfield, supra note 16, at 50 & n.30, 66 & n.89.

 $^{75}$  3 U.S. (3 Dall.) 378 (1798). See also Omaha Tribe of Nebraska v. Village of Walthill, 334 F. Supp. 823 (D. Neb. 1971), aff'd, 460 F.2d 1327 (8th Cir. 1972), cert. denied, 93 S.Ct. 898 (1973) (governor's approval not required in order for a state to cede jurisdiction over Indian residents); Ex parte Dillon, 262 F. 563 (1920) (when the Legislature is designated as a mere agency to discharge some duty of a non-legislative character, such as ratifying a proposed amendment, the legislative body alone may act).  $^{76}$  In commenting on the ratification process, the Supreme Court stated in

"In commenting on the ratification process, the Supreme Court stated in Hawke v. Smith (No. 1). "Both methods of ratification, by legislatures or conventions, call for action by deliberative assemblages representative of the people, which it was assumed would voice the will of the people." 253 U.S. at 226-27 (emphasis added).

- <sup>77</sup> Brickfield, supra note 74, at 11-12.
- <sup>78</sup> 256 U.S. 368, 375 (1921).
- <sup>79</sup> 307 U.S. 433, 453-54 (1939).
- Beginning with the proposal of the eighteenth amendment, Congress has, either in the amendment or proposing resolution, included a provision requiring ratification within seven years from the time of the submission to the states.
- $^{\rm 81}$  See, e.g., Note' "Rescinding Memorialization Resolutions," 30 Chi. Kent L. Rev. 339 (1952).
- $^{82}$  That is, the reapportionment and tax limitation applications.

83 397 U.S. 50 (1970).

84 Wells v. Edwards, 347 F. Supp. 453, 455 (M.D. La. 1972), aff'd, 93 S. Ct.
904 (1973).

85 Smith v. Gore, 150 W. Va. 71, 143 S.E.2d 791, 794 (1965).

- 86 See Forty-Second Legislative Assembly v. Lennon, 481 P.2d 330 (Mont. 1971); Jackman v. Bodine, 43 N.J. 453, 470, 476-77, 205 A.2d 713, 722, 726 (1964). In Butterworth v. Dempsey, 237 F. Supp. 302 (D. Conn. 1965), a federal court ordered, without indicating the basis for it, apportionment of convention delegates on a one-person, one-vote basis. See also State v. State Canvassing Board, 78 N.M. 682, 437 P.2d 143 (1968), where a section of the state constitution, requiring that any amendments to that constitution affecting suffrage or apportionment be approved by both 3/4 of the voters of the state as a whole and 2/3 of those voting in each county, was found to violate the 'one-person, one-vote' and equal protection principles, and was accordingly declared invalid. Contra, West v. Carr, 212 Tenn. 367, 370 S.W.2d 469 (1963), cert. denied, 378 U.S. 557 (1962), holding equal protection guarantees inapplicable to a state constitutional convention since it had no power to take any final action; accord, Livingston v. Ogilvie, 43 Ill.2d 9, 250 N.E.2d 138 (1969); Stander v. Kelley, 433 Pa. Super. 406, 250 A.2d 474 (1969), appeal dismissed sub nom. mem., Lindsay v. Kelley, 395 U.S. 827 (1969). West, Stander and Livingston, in reaching this result, emphasized the fact that the entire electorate would be afforded a direct and equal voice, in keeping with the 'one-person, one-vote' principle, when the convention's product was submitted for ratification.
- 87 376 U.S. 1 (1964).
- 88 See Shapiro v. Thompson, 394 U.S. 618 (1969); Schneider v. Rusk, 377 U.S.
  163 (1964); Bolling v. Sharpe, 347 U.S. 497 (1954). See also United States v.
  Pipefitters, 434 F.2d 1116, 1124 (8th Cir. 1971); United States v. Synnes, 438
  F.2d 764, 771 (8th Cir. 1971); Henderson v. ASCS, Macon County, Alabama, 317
  F. Supp. 430, 434-35 (M.D. Ala. 1970). See generally Griffin v. Richardson, 346 F. Supp. 1226, 1232-33 (D. Md. 1972).
- <sup>89</sup> 93 S.Ct. 979 (1973).
- 90 403 U.S. 182 (1971).
- <sup>91</sup> Use of an electoral-college-type formula would mean that 15 states would be over represented by 50 percent or more, with the representation rising to close to 375 percent for Alaska. California, on the other hand, would be underrepresented by nearly 20 percent.
- <sup>92</sup> 394 U.S. 526, 531 (1968).
- $^{93}$  We have not studied the District of Columbia question, although we note that the District does not have a role in the congressional method of initiating amendments or in the ratification process.
- $^{94}$  The present 1970 census establishes the mean population of congressional districts as approximately 467,000. As Alaska has a population of approximately 302,000, the absolute differential is over 50%. There are similar disparities in some states with two representatives (e.g., South Dakota's two Congressmen each representing 333,000 people), but they are not as great.
- 95 See United States v. Germaine, 99 U.S. 508 (1878); United States v. Mouat, 124 U.S. 303 (1888); United States v. Smith, 124 U.S. 525 (1888). See generally 1 Hinds, Precedents of the House of Representatives 3 493 (1907). In Board of Supervisors of Elections v. Attorney General, 246 Md. 417, 439, 229 A.2d 388, 395 (1967), the court held that a delegate to a state constitutional convention was not an "officer" so that a member of the legislature was not guilty of dual office-holding when he simultaneously served as a delegate; accord, Livingston v. Ogilvie, 43 Ill.2d 9, 250 N.E.2d 138 (1969). But see Forty-Second Legislative Assembly v. Lennon, 481 P.2d 330 (Mont. 1971); State v. Gessner, 129 Ohio St. 290, 195 N.E. 63 (1935).

96 See 1 Farrand 376; Reservists Comm. to Stop the War v. Laird, 323 F. Supp. 833 (D.D.C. 1971).

- $^{97}$  Jameson, supra note 22, at  $\mathfrak F$  582-584; Dodd, "Amending the Federal Constitution," 30 Yale L.J. 321, 346 (1921).
- <sup>98</sup> Wise v. Chandler, 270 Ky. 1, 108 S.W.2d 1024 (1937) (also holding that state legislative rejection of a proposed constitutional amendment cannot be reconsidered); Coleman v. Miller, 146 Kan. 390, 71 P.2d 518 (1937) (dicta). The issue was discussed, though not passed on by the Court, in Chief Justice Hughes' opinion in Coleman v. Miller, 307 U.S. 433, 447-50 (1938).
- <sup>99</sup> This rule would take precedence over the action of Congress in refusing to permit New Jersey and Ohio to rescind their ratifications of the fourteenth amendment. The right to ratify after a previous rejection would confirm precedents established in connection with the ratifications of the Thirteenth and Fourteenth Amendments. See generally Myers, The Process of Constitutional Amendment, S. Doc. No. 314, 76th Cong., 3rd Sess. (1940).
- These views of the Committee are in accord with the rule which is expressed in S.1272 and its predecessor, S.215, which was unanimously passed by the Senate in October 1971. See page 6, supra.
- <sup>101</sup> S. Rep. No. 336, 92nd Cong., 1st Sess. 2 (1971).
- $^{102}$  Our views as to the desirability of legislation implementing the convention method of initiating amendments appear at pages 8 to 10.
- $^{103}$  Sec. 2 Our views as to the limitability of a convention are set forth at pages 10 to 19.

The phrase "nature of the amendment or amendments" is unclear and differs from the phraseology contained in Sections 4, 5, 6, 8, 10 and 11. Our discussion of this item appears at pages 20,21,34 and 35.

- Sec.3(a) For the reasons set forth at pages 32 to 34, we believe that a state governor should have no part in the process by which a state legislature applies for a convention. This section is unclear as to whether a state may on its own initiative assign a role to the governor. The phraseology concerning the governor also is different from that employed in Section 12(b) with respect to ratification. Additionally, the requirement that state statutory procedures "shall" apply to applications differs from the terminology of Section 12(b) as well as raises questions under Hawke v. Smith, No. 1, 253 U.S. 221 (1920), and Leser v. Garnett, 258 U.S. 130 (1922). See Trombetta v. Florida, 393 F. Supp. 575 (D. Fla. 1973).
- 105 (b) As discussed at pages 23 to 29, the Committee believes that limited judicial review is necessary and desirable and has specifically so provided in a new proposed Section 16. The introduction of such review requires the deletion of the language regarding the binding nature of congressional determinations. The "clearly erroneous" standard suggested in our proposed Section 16 acknowledges the appropriateness of initial congressional determinations in this area but withdraws the finality of such decisions.
- $^{106}$  (2) New. Inasmuch as each legislature receives a copy of all valid applications pursuant to Section 4(d) [4(c) in S.1272], preparation of the list would be a simple task. In doing so, the state would be able to express the purpose of its application in relation to those already received, thereby assisting Congress in rendering its determination pursuant to Section 6(a) as to whether the requisite number of applications have been received on "the same subject."
- 107 (c) New. The adoption of judicial review requires that courts be able to define the accrual of grievances with particularity. S.1272 leaves uncertain the status of an application or rescission absent specific congressional action. Our proposed new Section 4(c) limits the period of uncertainty to 60 days. If Congress does not act upon a state transmittal within that period, it is deemed valid. The period for judicial review thus begins to run no later than 60 days after receipt of the application.

The possibility of a Senate filibuster blocking rejection of a patently defective application, thus causing the application to be deemed valid under Section 4(c), is offset by the fact that an action would lie under Section 16(a) for declaratory relief. Section 4(c) expressly notes that such a failure to act is subject to review under Section 16. State legislators as well as members of Congress would appear to qualify as "aggrieved" parties. See Coleman v. Miller, 307 U.S. 433 (1939).

Section 4(c) thus results in an early determination of the application's procedural aspects. Only the question of the similarity of an application's subject to the subject of other applications is reserved for later determination by Congress.

- $^{108}$  (d) Same as present Section 4(c) of S.1272 except for the suggested insertions, which are designed to reflect the introduction of judicial review. The requirement for transmittal of applications to state legislatures is limited to valid applications.
- $^{109}$  (a) For the reasons set forth at pages 35 to 37, the Committee agrees that some time limitation is necessary and desirable but takes no position on the exact time, except believes that four or seven years would be reasonable and that a congressional determination as to either should be accepted.

The Committee's views as to the use of the "same subject" test appear at pages 21,22,34 and 35.  $^{110}$  (b) We believe that it is desirable to have a rule such as that contained in this section permitting the withdrawal of an application. See our discussion of this point at pages 37 to 38.

As for the requirement respecting the procedures to be followed, see our comments to Section 3(a).

(c) See our comments to Section 3(b).

 $^{112}$  With regard to "the nature of the amendment or amendments" phraseology, see our comments to Section 2.

The concurrent resolution calling the convention may also have to deal with such questions as to when the election of delegates will take place.

The position that the President has no place in the calling process is discussed at pages 29 to 32.

113 The Committee believes that the principle of one person, one vote applies and that Section 7(a) violates that principle. The Committee is of the view that an apportionment plan which allotted to each state a number of delegates equal to its representation in the House of Representatives should be an acceptable compliance with those standards. This subject is discussed at pages 38 to 42.

The persons entitled to vote for delegates could be more clearly stated to include all persons entitled to vote for members of the House of Representatives. The manner of nominating persons for delegate election might, as provided by S.1272, best be left to each state.

The question of the eligibility of members of Congress to be delegates is discussed at page 42.

- The Committee agrees with the principle that each delegate have one vote.
- $^{115}$  (a) The Committee believes that Congress should not impose a vote requirement on a convention. It views as unwise and of questionable validity any attempt to regulate the internal procedures of a convention. It also notes that the vote requirement in S.1272 based on the total number of delegates is more stringent than that required for amendments proposed by Congress. See pages 21 to 23 of this report.

 $^{116}$  (b) See our comments to Section 2 with regard to the underlining and our comments to Section 3(b) as for the deletions.

 $^{117}$  (b) The position that the President has no place in this process is discussed at pages 29 to 32.

As for the language "relates to or includes a subject" in (B), see our comments to Section 2.

119 (b) It is not clear whether this section would accept any special limitation adopted by a state with respect to ratification, other than the assent of the governor or any other body. See our comments to Section 3(a).

The exclusion of the governor from the process, with which we agree, is discussed at pages 32 to 34.

 $^{120}$  (a)-(b) As discussed at pages 43 to 44, the Committee agrees with the principle permitting a state to rescind a ratification or rejection vote.  $^{121}$  (c) See our comments to Section 3(b).

New. The purpose of our proposed Section 16 is to provide limited judicial review of controversies arising under S.1272. The procedural framework of the bill sets forth clear standards for adjudication of many of the potential controversies, and to this extent judicial interpretation of the act does not differ from the normal role of the courts. Moreover, determinations such as the similarity of applications or the conformity of proposed amendments to the scope of the convention call are no more difficult than, say, interpretation of the general language of the antitrust laws or the securities acts. The fact that these questions occur in a constitutional context does not diminish the skill of the Bench to interpret and develop the law in light of the factual situations of a given controversy.

Selection of a three-judge district court as the initial forum for controversies acknowledges that many controversies may be essentially state questions. For example, Congress might reject an application because of a defect in the composition of the state legislature. Cf., Petuskey v. Rampton, 307 F. Supp. 231, 235 (D. Utah 1969), aff'd. 431 F. 2d 378 (10th Cir. 1970), cert. denied, 401 U.S. 913. In this instance, it seems preferable to provide that the district court, schooled in state matters, make the initial review. Appeal from three-judge courts would lie in the United States Supreme Court. <sup>123</sup> New. This subsection would establish a short limitation period. Since the introduction of judicial review should not be allowed to delay the amending process unduly, any claim must be raised promptly. The limitations period combined with expedited judicial procedures is designed to result in early presentation and resolution of any dispute.

presentation and resolution of any dispute.  $^{124}$  Barbara Prager is a student at New York Law School and Gregory Milmoe a student at Fordham Law School. We are deeply grateful to them for their time and efforts in preparing this document for our Committee and are pleased to have it accompany our report. We believe it presents an excellent overview of the types of applications which have been submitted to Congress since the adoption of the Constitution.

Note: The table provided in Appendix B of the ABA Report has been duplicated exactly except for one change. In the original report the total number of applications made by the states was listed as totaling 356 applications. However, simple arithmetic shows this figure to be in error. The correct figure is 360 applications by the states. This suit is unable to explain why the ABA Committee was unable to do basic addition or correct spelling except, in the case of incorrect addition, it would tend to explain why the committee did not understand the basic meaning and intention of the word "two-thirds".

126 37 American State papers 6-7.

 $^{127}$  W. Pullen, The Application Clause of the Amending Provision of the Constitution 22-28 (1951) (unpublished dissertation in Univ. of North Carolina Library) (hereinafter cited as Pullen).  $^{128}$  Id. at 38-39.

- $^{129}$  Massachusetts General Court Committee on the Library, State Papers on Nullification 223 (1834). The quote is from the resolution addressed to her co-states. The recommendation to Congress varies slightly.
- <sup>130</sup> Pullen at 66.
- <sup>131</sup> S. Jour., 36th Cong. Spec. Sess. 404 (1861).
- $^{132}$  Pullen at 102.
- <sup>133</sup> 1861 Iowa S. Jour. 68-69.
- $^{134}$  Pullen at 108.
- <sup>135</sup> Id. at 115.
- <sup>136</sup> Id. at 119.
- $^{137}$  Graham, The Role of the States in Proposing Constitutional Amendments, 49 A.B.A.J. 1175, 1176-77 (1963).
- 138 See Appendix B.
- <sup>139</sup> Pullen at 126.
- $^{140}$  See Dirksen, The Supreme Court and the People, 66 Mich. L. Rev. 837 (1968).
- 141 See Appendix B, Part One, for a complete listing.
- Contains an excellent bibliography at pages 104-12.

APPENDIX D---REBUTTAL OF 1973 REPORT OF THE ABA SPECIAL CONSTITUTIONAL CONVENTION STUDY COMMITTEE

3

1

2

4 INTRODUCTION

5

6

7

8

9

10

11

12

13

14

15

16

17

18 19 20 21

22

23

Much of the support offered by proponents of a limited, same subject, congressionally regulated convention to propose amendments stems from a 1973 report by the Constitutional Convention Study Committee of the American Bar Association. This committee was formed, according to the report, to answer "the question of whether such a Convention's jurisdiction can be limited to the subject matter giving rise to its call, or whether the convening of such a Convention, as a matter of constitutional law, opens such a Convention to multiple amendments and the consideration of a new Constitution..."  $^{1589}$ While the strict constitutionally correct "convention to propose amendments" term which specifically defines and limits its powers should have been used by the ABA in its report, as opposed to the more loose, inaccurate "constitutional convention," nevertheless the ABA choose to use the more inflammatory term ignoring, in fact, not even discussing the specific language of Article V. In its desire to be constitutionally and editorially accurate, this rebuttal will use the term "convention to propose amendments" in its comments, while leaving untouched any quotes by the ABA Report with the assumption that the ABA Report most likely was addressing this portion of Article V as contrasted to a general constitutional convention which would

AMERICAN BAR ASSOCIATION CONSTITUTIONAL CONVENTION STUDY COMMITTEE REPORT (Hereinafter referred to as ABA Report), p.1 of RECOMMENDATIONS TO THE HOUSE OF DELEGATES OF THE ABA, submitted August, 1973, adopted 1974.

- 1 have the authority to propose a new constitution but which has no
- 2 constitutional provision supporting this, thus making such a convention
- 3 automatically unconstitutional. The ABA Report does not at any point
- 4 distinguish the two, thus making it possible it could have been referring only
- 5 to the latter rather than the former. Thus it is possible the ABA may have
- 6 spent a great deal of time discussing a subject that is total speculation and
- 7 has no constitutional validity.
- 8 In August, 1973 the committee submitted a report to the ABA House of
- 9 Delegates that outlined several proposals concerning the so-called
- 10 constitutional convention. In summary, the report favored a single subject,
- 11 congressionally regulated convention.

13

The ABA Report Proposals

14

15

16

17 18

19 20 21

22

23 24

25

26

27

Among the more important recommendations by the ABA Committee were:

- 1. Congress [should] establish procedures for amending the Constitution by means of a national constitutional convention;  $^{1590}$
- 2. Congress has the power to establish procedures limiting a convention to the subject matter stated in the applications received from the state legislatures;  $^{1591}$
- 3. Any congressional legislation dealing with such a process for amending the constitution should provide for limited judicial review of congressional determinations concerning a convention; 1592
- 4. Delegates to a convention should be elected, and representation at the convention should be in conformity with the principles of representative democracy as enunciated by the "one person, one vote" decisions of the Supreme Court.<sup>1593</sup>

&lt;sup>1590</sup> ABA Report, p.2.

&lt;sup>1591</sup> Id.

&lt;sup>1592</sup> Id.

&lt;sup>1593</sup> Id.

In order to focus its work, the committee posed a series of nine 2 questions or issues which it then addressed in the report. These questions 3 were: 4 1. If the legislatures of two-thirds of the states apply for a 5 convention limited to a specific matter, must Congress call such a convention? 1594 6 7 2. If a convention is called, is the limitation binding on the convention? 1595 8 9 3. What constitutes a valid application which Congress must count and who is to judge its validity? 1596 10 11 4. What is the length of time in which applications for a convention will be counted? 1597 12 13 5. How much power does Congress have as to the scope of a convention? As 14 to procedures such as the selection of delegates? As to the voting 15 requirements at a convention? As to refusing to submit to the states for ratification the product of a convention? 1598 16 17 6. What are the roles of the President and state governors in the amending process? 1599 18 19 7. Can a state legislature withdraw an application for a convention once 20 it has been submitted to Congress or rescind a previous ratification of a proposed amendment or a previous rejection? 1600 21 8. Are issues arising in the convention process justiciable? $^{1601}$  9. Who is to decide questions of ratification? $^{1602}$ 22 23 24 25 Conclusions and Recommendations of the ABA Report 26 CONGRESS MAY REGULATE THE CONVENTION 2.7 28 The ABA Committee provided both general and specific conclusions and 29 recommendations regarding a convention to propose amendments.  $^{1594}$  Id. at p.7. <sup>1595</sup> Id. <sup>1596</sup> Id. <sup>1597</sup> Id. <sup>1598</sup> Id. <sup>1599</sup> Id. <sup>1600</sup> Id.

<sup>1601</sup> Id. <sup>1602</sup> Id. 1 The most significant is the conclusion that Congress can regulate the

- 2 convention. The report, significantly, did not present any direct
- 3 constitutional evidence for this conclusion. 1603 In fact, the comments of the
- 4 committee show a clear trend of thought as to why they recommended Congress be
- 5 able to regulate the convention, despite the historic record to the
- 6 contrary: 1604 that of their fear of the unknown. 1605
- 7 REBUTTAL

8

9 The report furnishes no substantial evidence proving the convention

- 10 system is any more inherently dangerous or uncertain than any other political
- 11 system in America.

<sup>1603 &</sup>quot;It is the view of our Committee that it is desirable for Congress to establish procedures for amending the Constitution by the national constitutional convention method." ABA Report at p.8. "Underlying this argument is the belief that, at least in modern political terms, a national convention would venture into uncharted and dangerous waters. It is relevant to note in this respect that a similar concern has been expressed about state constitutional conventions but that 184 years' experience at that level furnishes little support to the concern." Id.(emphasis added).

1604 See supra text accompanying notes 497-521,675-699.

&quot;If we fail to deal now with the uncertainties of the convention method, we could be courting a constitutional crisis of grave proportions. We would be running the enormous risk that procedures for a national constitutional convention would have to be forged in time of divisive controversy and confusion when there would be a high premium on obstructive and result-oriented tactics." ABA Report at p.9.

&quot;In addition to being better governmental technique, a forthright approach to the dangers of the convention method seems far more likely to yield beneficial results than would burying our heads in the sands of uncertainty." Id. (emphasis added).

The report then continues:

&quot;Essentially, the reason are the same ones which caused the American Bar Association to urge, and our national ultimately to adopt, the rules for dealing with the problem of presidential disability which are contained in the Twenty-Fifth Amendment. So long as the Constitution envisions the convention method, we think the procedures should be ready if there is a 'contemporaneously felt need' by the required two-thirds of the state legislatures." Id.

Great concern is expressed about the "uncertainties" 1606 or the 1

"dangers" of the convention, but the report simultaneously debunks any fear 2 of a national convention venturing "into uncharted and dangerous waters" 1608 by 3

noting that "184 years experience [in state constitutional 4

5 conventions]...furnishes little support to the concern." 1609

6 Thus, the committee's position favoring that Congress heavily regulate

7 the convention is born of fear of what a convention might do. Ignored in all

8 of this is the fact that fear of a convention was exactly what the Founding Fathers intended in the provision. But it was not fear of the convention, it was fear by the national government that any of its actions with which the people disagreed could be overturned, thus keeping the national government in check. The Founders knew that the people would not act against their best interests. Thus, they realized that the people would not introduce amendments limiting themselves, but instead would introduce amendments limiting the national government. The proof of this fear is obvious. Congress has used every rhetorical and parliamentary weapon in its arsenal to either ignore

17 applications for a convention, or to spread misinformation and even outright

18 terror about what a convention might do. But this is mere sophistry. The people will not act against themselves. They understand self-government and democracy. As Franklin Roosevelt phrased it, "The only thing we have to fear, 21 is fear itself."

10

11

12

13

14

15

16

19

<sup>1606</sup> See supra text accompanying note 1605.

<sup>1608</sup> See supra text accompanying note 1603.

&lt;sup>1609</sup> Id.

CURRENT APPLICATIONS DO NOT SATISFY THE TWO-THIRDS REOUIREME

The report notes that "[E]very state, at one time or another, has

5 petitioned Congress for a convention",  $^{1610}$  but does not feel these applications constitute the required two-thirds applications by the state legislatures as

7 specified in Article V. 1611

8

6

9 REBUTTAL

10

The ABA Report clearly ignored the effect, meaning, and intent of the Gerry-Morris amendment to the language of Article V at the 1787 Convention which was to cause a convention call "on the application of two-thirds of the states..."
The Gerry-Morris amendment dictated a simple numeric count for causing a convention to be called. There is no language calling for a 17

16

18 LEGISLATION NECESSARY FOR SAFEGUARDS

"contemporaneously felt need" by the states.

&lt;sup>1610</sup> ABA Report at p.3.

&quot;...if there is a 'contemporaneously felt need' by the required two-thirds of the states legislatures." Id. at p.9.

&lt;sup>1612</sup> See supra text accompanying notes 435-437.

1 The report states that "one Congress may not bind a subsequent

2 Congress" 1613 regarding legislation but this fact "does not persuade us that

3 comprehensive legislation is useless or impractical. $^{\prime\prime}$   $^{1614}$

The report then continues:

"The interests of the public and nation are better served when safeguards and rules are prescribed in advance. Congress itself has recognized this in many areas, including its adoption of and subsequent reliance on legislative procedures for handling such matters as presidential electoral vote disputes and contested elections for the House of Representatives. Congressional legislation fashioned after intensive study, and in an atmosphere free from the emotion and politics that undoubtedly would surround a specific attempt to energize the convention process, would be entitled to great weight as a constitutional interpretation and be of considerable precedential value." 1615

15

4

5

6

7

8

9

10 11

12

13

14

16 REBUTTAL

17

18 amendments that Congress might invent will somehow create a political climate that places a "high premium on obstructive and result-oriented tactics" 1616, i.e., in the Congress itself. Logically, any amendment proposed for consideration in a convention (not to mention the convention itself) will have its supporters and opponents in Congress. These people will be inclined to use whatever political tools are available to further their ends and justify their

The report assumes any regulations controlling a convention to propose

25 methods.

 $<sup>^{1613}</sup>$  ABA Report at p.10.

&lt;sup>1614</sup> Id.

&lt;sup>1615</sup> Id.

<sup>1616</sup> See supra text accompanying note 1605.

1 A convention to propose amendments subject to regulation by Congress 2 would be as vulnerable to these political ax-grinders as any other piece of legislation made in Congress. History has demonstrated time and again that 3 political expediency often outweighs all other considerations in such 4 5 political battles with justifications left to later, if attended to at all. If 6 such regulations can be used to benefit a particular political persuasion, 7 there is no reason to assume they will not be so used. If on the other hand, 8 such regulations can be readily changed to benefit a particular political 9 persuasion, there is no reason to assume this will not be done. 10 The most obvious use or misuse of these regulations would be to block 11 the clear intent of the Constitution which is to allow the states the equal ability to amend the Constitution when they desire. As such regulations could 12 13 be altered to block a convention with little more than a simple majority vote, it may be politically opportunistic for both opponents and proponents of a 14 measure to change such regulations for simple political gain. The fact the 15 16 clear intent of the Constitution was totally stymied in the process would be 17 justified later, most likely on Sunday talk shows by professional spinners. 18 Thus, it is a very significant point that one Congress may not bind a 19 subsequent Congress on any regulations regarding the convention, as these 20 regulations would be based not on the Constitution, but on political 21 considerations. In a single sentence, the ABA Report concedes that whatever 22 regulations might be installed by Congress can just as easily be altered or 23 uninstalled by a subsequent Congress, providing an easy method for Congress to block a convention from occurring no matter how many states apply, simply by changing the rules contained with the legislation. Or Congress may allow a 24

25

- 1 convention, but just as easily regulate it to whatever political ends it
- 2 desires.
- 3 The presidency is no less susceptible to these political pressures and
- 4 therefore would be equally vulnerable to their attacks. Thus, there is little
- 5 if any hope the presidency would stand against such pressure. Indeed, recent
- 6 political events suggest such pressure might emanate from the White House. It
- 7 is for these reasons the convention procedures must be grounded in the
- 8 constitutional rather than the political. Any amendments proposed at a
- 9 convention must be political fair game, i.e., subject to the same public
- 10 debate and deliberation that any similar proposal in Congress suffers. But,
- 11 like those of Congress, the presidency and the courts, the convention
- 12 procedures that allow for the orderly, fair and public disposal of public
- 13 questions must be grounded within the Constitution safe from the short-sighted
- 14 whims of politics.
- No less short-sighted are the two examples of congressional regulation
- 16 the ABA Report cites in its attempt to justify congressional regulation of the
- 17 convention. 1617 The difficulty with the two examples cited by the report is &quot;Congress itself has recognized this in many areas, including its adoption of and subsequent reliance on legislative procedures for handling such matters as presidential electoral vote disputes and contested elections for the House of Representatives." ABA Report at p. 10.

The report then cites a footnote which reads:

&quot;Article 1 § 5 of the Constitution gives the House of Representatives the authority to judge challenges to the election of its members. Since 1798, the House has seen fit to exercise this power through procedures enacted into law. Act of Jan. 23, 1798, Ch. 8, 1 Stat. 537. Subsequent modifications of that law appear in 2 U.S.C.A. §§ 201-226 (1970)." (See ABA Report, endnote 19).

Significantly, the ABA Report ignores Powell v McCormack, 395 U.S. 486 (1969) in which the Supreme Court ruled "the House could exclude him (Powell) only if it found he failed to meet the standing requirements of age, citizenship;, and residence contained in Art. I, 2 of the Constitution..."

- 1 that the clear language of the Founders used in the Constitution makes it
- 2 abundantly clear the Founders intended to allow for congressional regulation
- 3 while the clear language of the same Founding Fathers makes it abundantly
- 4 clear no such intent was meant for the convention. 1618
- 5 Thus, these examples actually defeat the report's argument as they
- 6 present clear evidence the Founders realized the difference between
- 7 discretionary and non-discretionary powers of Congress and, where they
- 8 intended such discretion, they placed textual language in the Constitution to
- 9 so indicate their intentions. Thus, as the Founders did insert such language
- 10 when they intended discretion, it follows where they did not include such
- 11 language, they intended no discretion. No such discretionary is included in

In the Powell ruling, the Court recognized the House had the power to regulate its members in regards to seating them, but that such regulation must be based on specified, textual constitutional standards and that the House could add no additional barriers against a member being seated.

As to the second example in the ABA Report, regarding presidential electors, the  $12^{\rm th}$  Amendment clearly gives Congress specific, textual power to choose a President and Vice President should the electors reach a tie. "The House of Representatives shall choose immediately, by ballot, the President." ( $12^{\rm th}$  Amendment). Clearly, it is the right of Congress to establish procedures for a particular constitutional duty if the Constitution so assigns that duty to Congress and provides discretion on the part of Congress in the performance of that duty. In the case of the  $12^{\rm th}$  Amendment, this particular authority involves discretion on the part of the House of Representatives in that it elects the President. Clearly, in order to perform this specific duty, Congress has discretion, from how it goes about performing the election to whom it elects. All of this power is implied in the term "by ballot."

These examples, however, have no bearing on the convention to propose amendments as it was the intent of the Founding Fathers that Congress have "no discretion" in the convention. The ABA Report examples clearly deal with specified, textual authority granted by the Constitution to Congress. Further, the two examples clearly allow for discretion (in choosing to seat a member based on textual standards established in the Constitution, or the election of a president) whereas no such specified, textual authority exists for congressional regulation of the convention. See supra text accompanying notes 435-437,497-521,675-699.

1618 See supra text accompanying notes 497-521.

1	Article V regarding a convention. The conclusion on this point therefore is
2	obvious.
3
4	I FOTCI ATTON DROTTOTE THE CONCITTUATION
	LEGISLATION PROTECTS THE CONSTITUTION
5
6 7 8 9 10 11	The report quotes Madison saying:     "In our view any legislation implementing Article V should reflect its underlying policy, as articulated by Madison, of guarding "equally against that extreme facility which would render the Constitution too mutable; and that extreme difficulty which might perpetuate its discovered faults." 1619
12
13	REBUTTAL
14
15	A closer examination of this Madison quote is in order. The Madison
16	quote is taken from FEDERALIST No. 43. When that quote is examined in its full
17	context rather than only partially quoted, as the ABA Report did, its intent
18	and thus its meaning are significantly different than the use obviously
19	intended by the ABA Report. In FEDERALIST No. 43, Madison was discussing the
20	"miscellaneous powers" of the federal government.
21	Madison listed these powers by quote or paraphrase from various parts of
22	the Constitution. The partial quote used by the ABA Report above was taken
23 24 25	from the eighth point in FEDERALIST No. 43 which stated (in full):     "8. To provide for amendments to be ratified by three fourths of the States under two exceptions only.

 $^{1619}$  ABA Report at p. 10.

"That useful alterations will be suggested by experience, could not but be foreseen. It was requisite, therefore, that a mode of introducing them should be provided. The mode preferred by the convention seems to be stamped with every mark of propriety. It guards equally against that extreme facility, which would render the Constitution too mutable; and that extreme difficulty, which might perpetuate its discovered faults. It, moreover, equally enables the general and the State governments to originate the amendment of errors, as they may be pointed out by the experience on side, or on the other."

Using the full text, it is clear Madison always discussed the amendment proposal power of the states in the plural sense, i.e., "amendment of errors", "introducing them", "to provide for amendments." Further, Madison in his quote was clearly referring to the general government (Congress) or the states to equally originate amendments to the Constitution if they felt such amendments were needed and not to some strait-jacket control by Congress over the

3

5

6

7

8

9

10

11

12

13

14

 $^{\rm 1620}$  FEDERALIST No. 43. (emphasis added).

This quote by Madison has been much maligned by those favoring a single, "same subject" amendment convention. Strictly speaking, the quote actually deals with the power of Congress to propose amendments, (only in passing mentioning the states have the equal power to do so) a fact Madison took full advantage of when he later drafted the Bill of Rights (See supra text accompanying note 489). When the quote is taken in its full context, its true meaning becomes clear.

First, Madison clearly understood that amendments could be proposed by either Congress or a convention. Second, the use of the quote to support "same subject" or regulation of the convention fails with Madison's own words. Madison clearly is discussing the mode of introduction of amendments and was pointing out that by allowing Congress or a convention to propose amendments, this system guarded against two dangers. First, the two-thirds requirement, together with the three-fourths ratification prevents "the Constitution [from being] too mutable". Secondly however, as there are two methods of amendment proposal, they would serve to protect against any "perpetuate of its discovered faults." The logic of Madison is obvious: if one method of amendment failed to bring about a needed change, the other method was available to see it did happen.

Finally, the phrase "amendment of errors" had been used by many to indicate Madison thought that only one amendment could be proposed at a time by the convention. Obviously this is incorrect. As noted earlier in this footnote, Madison himself introduced twelve simultaneous amendments in Congress using its power to propose amendments (See supra text accompanying note 2).

Again, taken in full context, the true meaning of the statement is clear. Either the states or the federal government has the power to propose amendments. In other words, they can originate an amendment[s] to correct the error[s] of the Constitution. Madison was simply saying that either the states or the federal government have the powers to propose amendments to correct any error or errors they feel exist in the Constitution.

1	convention. The quote used by the ABA actually refers to the method of
2	amendment, i.e., requiring a numeric number of assents before an amendment
3	became part of the Constitution but not requiring unanimous consent in order
4	to do so.
5
6 7	SPECIFIC RECOMMENDATIONGENERAL AND LIMITED CONVENTIONS
8	The ABA Report then makes specific recommendations regarding the
9	convention to propose amendments.
10 11 12 13 14 15 16 17	Its first recommendation reads:  "It is our conclusion that Congress has the power to establish procedures governing the calling of a national constitutional convention limited to the subject matter on which the legislatures of two-thirds of the states request a convention. In establishing procedures for making available to the states a limited convention when they petition for such a convention, Congress must not prohibit the state legislatures from requesting a general convention since, as we view it, Article V permits both types of conventions."  1621
19	REBUTTAL
20
21	The report spends much time attempting to create two types of
22	conventions: a "general" convention and a "limited" convention with the
23	understanding that the states must apply for one type of convention or the
24	other, and that Congress has the power to decide whether the states in their
25	applications have satisfied this requirement. 1622

 $^{\rm 1621}$  ABA Report at p.10-11.  $^{\rm 1622}$  See ABA Report, p.13.

(Footnote Continued Next Page)

1 The language of Article V of the Constitution makes no distinction as to

2 the type of convention called by Congress. 1623 Instead, Congress is required to

- 3 call "a convention...on the application of two-thirds of the states..."  $^{1624}$
- 4 There is nothing in the Constitution to support the idea that there can be a
- 5 "limited" versus a "general" convention. Where the Founders intended to
- 6 describe a specific body, they named it: a Supreme Court, a Senate and House
- 7 of Representatives. Thus, as no such label is attached to the word
- 8 "convention" it is clear they intended a convention with no other limitations.
- 9 Further, as the convention is licensed certain specified sovereign power by
- 10 the people, logically, it must have the power to perform these duties as
- 11 specified in Article V. As such, it requires no supervision or control by
- 12 Congress unless specified by the Constitution. Article V makes the convention
- 13 to propose amendments equal in stature to Congress. Neither body in performing
- 14 its duties may infringe upon the rights and duties of the other. 1625 As the
- 15 sole duty of the convention is proposing amendments, it has only a single

&quot;From the language of Article V we are led to the conclusion that there must be a consensus among the state legislatures as to the subject matter of a convention before Congress is required to call one.... "The origins and history of Article V indicate that both general and limited conventions were within the contemplation of the Framers." (emphasis added).

&lt;sup>1623</sup> See supra text accompanying note 2. Just as the Constitution makes no distinction regarding the word "contract". See supra text accompanying note 1534.

&lt;sup>1624</sup> Id.

&lt;sup>1625</sup> Except, under the doctrine of equal protection, where whatever power of regulation by one body claimed over the other is equally applied to the body making the claim. Thus, under this doctrine, entirely ignored by the ABA Report, all proposed restrictions and regulations on the convention must be equally applied to Congress.

In specific terms this requires, for example, that if, as the report suggests, before a convention may be held, the subjects to be discussed must be agreed to by at least two-thirds of the states, translates into meaning that in Congress, before an amendment proposal can be even be discussed, two-thirds of the members of Congress must agree to do so.

- function. Thus, there can be only one kind of convention to propose
- amendments: a "general" convention, with its purview defined and restricted by 2
- the words of Article V, not Congress. 3
- 4 As to the history the ABA Report describes, it is clear the Founders
- intended a system whereby actions of the national government could be 5
- 6 countered and nullified by the states and the people. Allowing Congress the
- 7 power to describe what sort of convention must exist, whether it shall exist
- 8 at all, and under what terms it shall exist, defeats the entire purpose of
- this power provided by the Founders. Such discretion was not intended by the
- 10 Founding Fathers. 1626
- 11 The answer to the limited convention proposal by the ABA is obvious. The
- Founding Fathers provided all the power the states require to "limit" a 12
- 13 convention. This power is the ratification vote. If thirteen states vote "no"
- on any proposed amendment, that proposal is dead. 1627 Thus, by this single 14
- power, the states can "limit" a convention's proposals to a single subject, or 15
- 16 expand it to many subjects, if they so desire, by a simple vote without the
- 17 slightest interference by Congress. Further, there is nothing in the
- 18 Constitution preventing the convention from regulating itself to deal only
- 19 with a single subject of amendment, just as Congress is free to do the same
- thing. But just like Congress, 1628 the convention is free to propose amendments 20
- 21 if it desires.

&lt;sup>1626</sup> See supra text accompanying notes 495-513,682-685.

Assuming of course, Congress does not exercise its incidental regulatory power and override the ratification vote. See supra text accompanying notes 849,917,1006,1053-1073,1077,1079,1089,1094,1239,1253-1259,1333.

&lt;sup>1628</sup> See supra text accompanying notes 489,1620.

2 STATES MUST CONCUR ON A SUBJECT BEFORE CONGRESS MUST CALL A CONVENTION

3

5

6

7

4 The next recommendation of the report states:

"We consider Congress duty to call a convention whenever two-thirds of the state legislatures have concurred on the subject matter of the convention to be mandatory." 1629

8

9 REBUTTAL

10

11

12

13

14

16

18 19 20

21

The intent and purpose of the applications by the state legislatures is for the calling of a convention, not for a specific amendment or subject. 1630 However, more importantly, the ABA Report introduces a subtle but important difference regarding its proposals for regulating a convention to propose 15 amendments. With this proposal, the report shifts the matter away from the subject matter of a particular amendment to the "subject matter of the convention." 17

In other words, the report now says Congress has a duty to call a convention only if there is concurrence by the legislatures of whatever is to be discussed---not just proposed---at a convention. Thus the ABA Report now demands not only concurrence and consensus by the states as to their positions

 $<sup>^{1629}</sup>$  ABA Report at p.11.

&lt;sup>1630</sup> See supra text accompanying notes 682-689.

1	on a specific amendment, it also insists that the subjects to be discussed
2	must be approved by Congress before it has to call a convention.
3	The report obviously holds that Congress can refuse to call a convention
4	if the particular subject matter of the convention is not "concurred" by the
5	states, even though the number of states that has applied for a convention may
6	exceed the two-thirds requirement. Naturally the report attempts to establish
7	Congress' right to judge whether the states are "in concurrence", to refuse to
8	issue a convention call no matter how many states have applied, and to refuse
9	to send a proposed amendment to the states for ratification. 1631
10
11	THE ROLE OF THE EXECUTIVE
12
13 14 15 16	The report then deals with the role of the executive in the convention: "We believe that the Constitution does not assign the President a role in either the call of a convention or the ratification of proposed amendment." 1632
17
18	REBUTTAL
19

&quot;In formulating standards for determining whether a convention call should issue, there is a need for great delicacy. The standards not only will determine the call but they also will have the effect of defining the convention's authority and determining whether Congress must submit a proposed amendment to the states for ratification." ABA Report, p. 20. (emphasis added).

&lt;sup>1632</sup> See ABA Report, p.11.

The ABA Report states "the Constitution does not assign the President a 1 role in...the call of a convention," yet simultaneously holds Congress may 2

- regulate the convention. 1633 As the Constitution only provides for 3
- congressional participation through the convention call in Article V, and no 4
- such power is provided under Article I where Congress' legislative powers are 5
- specified, the obvious question is: how can Congress legislatively regulate 6
- 7 the convention without the participation of President of the United States?
- 8 The Constitution clearly specifies that for Congress to pass a law, such as
- legislation regulating the convention, the President must be involved. 1634
- 10 Based on the report's conclusions of non-participation of the president,
- 11 yet regulation by Congress, the only logical conclusion is Congress has the
- right to pass legislation without the participation of the President. 12
- 13 Apparently, this is acceptable because of the "dangers" of the convention
- system, dangers which have never manifested themselves in 184 years of state 14
- constitutional convention history. 1635 The report does not address what dangers 15
- 16 might occur if the entire concept of separation of powers as laid out by the
- 17 Constitution is violated by such unconstitutional actions as the report
- 18 advocates.
- 19 There is another alternative. This would be for Congress to attempt to
- 20 regulate the convention to propose amendments using a "sense of the Congress"
- 21 or other non-binding action that requires no presidential approval, then
- 22 insisting this action has the legal force of ordinary legislation that does

&lt;sup>1633</sup> See ABA Report, p.10.

&lt;sup>1634</sup> See supra text accompanying notes 547-592,620-668,718-728.

&lt;sup>1635</sup> See ABA Report, p.8.

1	pass presidential review. In something so fundamental as the amendatory
2	process of the United States Constitution, it is probably an understatement to
3	suggest this action might, in some legal circles, be considered
4	constitutionally questionable.
5
6 7	LIMITED JUDICIAL REVIEW OF CONGRESSIONAL ACTION REGARDING A CONVENTION
8	The report then recommends "limited judicial review of congressional
9	action or inaction concerning a constitutional convention." 1636
10	The report recommends several limits on judicial review. It recommends
11	"a Congressional determination should be overturned only if 'clearly
12 13 14	"This standard recognizes Congress' political role and at the same time
15 16 17	The report then says:  "[B]y limiting judicial remedies to declaratory relief, the possibility of actual conflict between the branches of government would be diminished." 1639
18
19	REBUTTAL
20
21	The ABA Report takes the position that the only branch of the government
22	capable of compelling Congress to obey the Constitution as it was intended by 1636 ABA Report at p.11. (emphasis added). 1637 ABA Report at p.28. 1638 Id. 1639 Id.

BRIEF IN SUPPORT OF CONVENTION APPENDIX D-1973 ABA REPORT PAGE 745

- the Founding Fathers should be excluded from doing so by the very branch of
- 2 the government attempting to violate the Constitution. Taken in this context,
- limited judicial review as suggested by the report must be opposed. The reason 3
- is self-evident. When political ambition runs amok, Congress will never pass 4
- up a chance to veto the Court if it can. Integrity and Congress have been 5
- 6 strangers for many years.
- 7 However, if the report's recommendations are taken in the context of the
- 8 Court defining the meaning of the Constitution as it applies to all proposed
- amendments, ratifications and the constitutional procedures related thereto,
- 10 such judicial review must be supported. It is the assigned constitutional duty
- 11 of the judiciary to define these areas. The ABA Report attempts to straddle
- the fence in this issue. The result is it only succeeds in impaling itself on 12
- 13 the stakes in the middle, leaving the issue unresolved and muddied.
- 14 The report states:

15

16

17

18 19 20

21

22

23 24

25

27

"The committee believes that judicial review of decisions made under Article V is desirable and feasible. We believe Congress should declare itself in favor of such review in any legislation implementing the convention process. We regard as very unwise the approach to S.1272 which attempts to exclude the courts from any role. While the Supreme Court's decision in Ex parte McCardle indicated that Congress has power under Article III to withdraw matters from the jurisdiction of the federal courts, this power is not unlimited. It is questionable whether the power reaches so far as to permit Congress to change results required by other provisions of the Constitution or to deny a remedy to enforce constitutional rights. Moreover, we are unaware of any authority upholding this power in cases of original jurisdiction." 1640

26 Despite this apparent support of judicial review, the report then immediately reasserts that Congress has "discretion in interpreting Article V and in adopting implementing legislation." 1641 The report acknowledges that the 28

 $<sup>^{1640}</sup>$  ABA Report at p.23.

 $<sup>^{1641}</sup>$  Id. at p.23. That the report's choice of the word "discretion" to describe the power of Congress regarding the convention to propose amendments flies directly in the face of the author of Article V and his interpretation of his own writing cannot be lightly ignored. In FEDERALIST No. 85, Hamilton made it

- 1 convention method of amendment was intended to be free of congressional
- 2 domination, 1642 but apparently doesn't believe it. 1643 The report supports
- 3 allowing Congress to refuse to call a convention even if two-thirds of the
- 4 states apply, to refuse to submit proposed amendments by the convention to the
- 5 states for possible ratification, and to determine what subjects for amendment
- 6 will be even discussed at a convention. 1644 The only question the report fails
- 7 to answer is what it feels is not left to total congressional domination.
- 8 There is no doubt that these three powers place the entire convention in the
- 9 hands of Congress.
- 10 It is just as obvious the ABA Report wishes no judicial review of
- 11 congressional control of the convention, but just doesn't want to say so.
- 12 Nowhere does the report simply allow the Court to declare congressional action
- 13 or inaction unconstitutional. If as the report suggests, the courts are
- 14 reduced to finding matters "clearly erroneous" 1645 without any further input in clear Congress was to have no discretion in the matter. See supra text accompanying notes 497-513.

ABA Report at p.28.

(Footnote Continued Next Page)

&quot;[T]he specific intent of the Framers with regard to the convention method of initiating amendments was to make available an alternative method of amending the Constitution—one that would be free from Congressional domination." ABA Report at p.22.

Further, the report added: "We recognize that the convention parallels Congress as the proposing body." Id. at p.22.

&quot;The debates at the Constitutional Convention of 1787 make it clear that the convention method of proposing amendments was intended to stand on an equal footing with the Congressional method." Id. at p.13. Otherwise how could the report hold:

&quot;In formulating standards for determining whether a convention call should issue, there is a need for great delicacy. The standards not only will determine the call but they also will have the effect of defining the convention's authority and determining whether Congress must submit a proposed amendment to the states for ratification. The standard chosen should be precise enough to permit a judgment that two-thirds of the state legislatures seek a convention on an agreed-upon matter." ABA Report at p.20. (emphasis added).

<sup>1644</sup> See supra text accompanying note 1643.

- 1 the matter, then they have no role at all. The term is clearly designed to
- 2 provide Congress as much latitude as possible and still maintain the
- 3 appearance of objective judicial review. Further, the report, rather than
- 4 establishing the usual procedure of law in which Congress allows for the
- 5 courts to review an area of law, then leaves it to the courts to set the
- 6 standards therein, instead attempts to lay out the standard of review the
- 7 courts shall follow. The only thing missing from the report is a
- 8 recommendation of how the court shall phrase its rulings so as to always favor
- 9 Congress in the matter.
- 10 The report's suggestion places the Court in the position of catch-up.
- 11 First, Congress would propose a regulation[s] which then might be challenged
- 12 in court. The Court finds the matter "clearly erroneous" but is prevented
- 13 under the report's scenario from taking any further action. A subsequent
- 14 Congress at some unspecified date might then make changes to the
- 15 regulation[s]. But what if Congress doesn't? What if Congress merely drops the
- 16 matter? The convention is now delayed, if not effectively canceled, because
- 17 the regulations that would have instigated the convention have been negated,

&quot;If one concludes that the courts can require Congress to act, one is likely to see the courts as able to answer certain ancillary questions of 'law,' such as whether the state legislatures can bind a convention by the limitations in their applications, and whether the state legislatures can force the call of an unlimited convention. Here we believe Congress has a legislative power, within limits, to declare the effects of the states' applications on the scope of the convention. Courts should recognize that power and vary their review according to whether Congress has acted." ABA Report at p.27.

&quot;Second, by limiting judicial remedies to declaratory relief, the possibility of actual conflict between the branches of government would be diminished. As Powell illustrated, courts are more willing to adjudicate questions with 'political' overtones when not faced with the institutionally destructive need to enforce the result." ABA Report at p.28.

- 1 but Congress has not bothered to institute new ones. Meanwhile, under the
- 2 report's concept of judicial authority, all the Court can do is state the
- 3 matter is "clearly erroneous", and no further action by the Court to compel
- 4 compliance with the Constitution can be accomplished. The Constitution
- 5 therefore is neatly thwarted.
- The courts are empowered by the Constitution to determine the meaning
- 7 and intent of the Constitution, and any attempt to thwart that power must be
- 8 rejected by the courts, particularly where obvious political considerations
- 9 outweigh the Constitution.
- 10 There is no finer example of demonstrating the ABA Report's
- 11 indecisiveness in this manner than to quote from the report itself. While the
- 12 report maintains there should be "limited judicial review" it nevertheless
- 13 states:
- 14 "If two-thirds of the state legislatures apply, for example, for a
- 15 convention to consider the apportionment of state legislatures, and Congress
- 16 refuses to call the convention, it is arguable that a Powell situation exists,
- 17 since the purpose of the convention method was to enable the states to bring
- about a change in the Constitution even against congressional opposition. $^{\prime\prime}^{1646}$
- 19 In Powell, the Court prevented down clearly politically motivated
- 20 attempts by members of Congress to deny seating an otherwise properly elected
- 21 representative of a congressional district. Thus, it preserved the
- 22 Constitution as intended by the Founding Fathers by refusing Congress any
- 23 discretion in the clear standards of admission set by the Constitution. For
- 24 the report to urge congressional discretion, then cite Powell as an example
- 25 where the report only urges the Court to have the power to declare a
- 26 congressional action "clearly erroneous," is totally contradictory.

 $<sup>^{1646}</sup>$  ABA Report at p.26.

1 The ABA Report would have Congress regulate the convention and for good measure have the courts sit idly by, able to do no more than simply issue 2 useless, meaningless orders, all the while watching political opportunists 3 4 tear up every shred of the separation of powers doctrine. 5 The only response to this suggestion by the ABA is to entirely ignore it 6 and allow the courts to do their job and keep congressional regulation 7 entirely out of it. 8 9 DELEGATES ELECTED TO THE CONVENTION 10 11 The report next recommends: 12 "...that delegates to a convention be elected and that representation at 13 the convention be in conformity with the principles of representative democracy as enunciated by the "one person, one-vote" decisions of the Supreme Court."  $^{1647}$ 14 15 16 It should be noted that not all of the members of the ABA committee agreed with this position. 1648 The committee spoke in some detail regarding its 17 suggestion that delegates to a convention to propose amendments be directly 18 19 elected based on the concept of one person, one vote. As with the rest of the 20 report, several contradictory statements are found. The committee said: 21 "Elaborating its view on one person, one vote, the Committee believes that a system of voting by states at a convention, while patterned after the 22 23 original Constitutional Convention, would be unconstitutional as well as 24 undemocratic and archaic. While it was appropriate before the adoption of the 25 Constitution, at a time when the states were essentially independent, there 26 can be no justification for a system today. Aside from the contingent election feature of our electoral college system, which has received nearly universal condemnation as being anachronistic, we are not aware of any precedent which would support such a system today. A system of voting by states would make it

<sup>1648</sup> Id. at p.11.

_

27

28

29

 $^{\rm 1647}$  ABA Report at p.11.

possible for states representing one-sixth of the population to propose a constitutional amendment. Plainly, there should be a broad representation and popular participation at any convention." 1649

4

1

5 REBUTTAL

6

7 As far as its determination that the delegates to a convention to

8 propose amendments should be chosen by election of the people of the United

9 States, this suit has no quarrel with the committee's conclusions.

10 However, it does take issue with the statement by the committee that no 11 precedent exists today that would justify voting at the convention by the delegates as states. A simple examination of Article V makes it clear that 12 while a convention may be composed of elected delegates, these delegates must 13 ultimately vote as states. 1650 The ratification process is done by states, and 14 15 applications for such a convention are done by states. As has been pointed out in court decisions, when the Founding Fathers wished to specify the direct 16 participation of the people, there was no doubt as to that intent. 1651 Clearly 17

18 the Framers intended the amendatory process to be state-based, i.e., the

19 actual voting done by delegates to be on a state basis. Thus, the delegates

 $<sup>^{1649}</sup>$  Id. at p.40.

&lt;sup>1650</sup> See supra text accompanying note 2.

&quot;There can be no question that the framers of the Constitution clearly understood and carefully used the terms in which that instrument referred to the action of the Legislatures of the states. When they intended that direct action by the people should be had they were no less accurate in the use of apt phraseology to carry out such purpose." Hawke v. Smith, 253 U.S. 221 (1920).

1 are elected by the people of a state, and these delegates, as a group, cast

2 the state's vote.

20

21

22

23

24

25

The committee's concerns that one-sixth of the population could propose 3 an amendment and that this automatically means the state-based system is 4 5 archaic, totally misses the point. The fact a group of states composed of 6 small populations may propose an amendment is no more significant than the 7 fact a single member of Congress may propose amendment, and he may represent a 8 state with the least population in the Union. The fact is, it still requires 9 three-fourths of the states to ratify any proposed constitutional amendment 10 whether by Congress or convention, and any way that it is calculated, three-11 fourths of the states constitute a substantial mass of the population. Thus, 12 it is not in the proposing that the question of population consent should be 13 addressed, but in the ratification process where assent by a large measure of population is, and should be, mandated. 14 15 Secondly, voting by state is the only absolutely fair way to provide 16 that each state, regardless of population, has equal say in the amendatory 17 process of the Constitution at a convention. Provided the populations within 18 the states are independently free to ascertain their own decisions regarding 19

the states are independently free to ascertain their own decisions regarding the amendment process, there is no problem with voting by states at a convention. If the vote is done by representation of population, then the large populous states will control any convention which is as dangerous as the supposed danger of one-sixth of the population being able to control it.

Neither is acceptable, and thus both must be eliminated. The only equitable way to eliminate the dangers of both is voting by state, with population dealt with within each state delegation. Thus, the suggestion by the report that

1	voting in a convention be based on population must be rejected as it offers
2	more dangers to the constitutional system of the United States than solutions.
3
4	CONGRESSIONAL "POWER" AND THE CONVENTION
5
6	As part of its pre-condition maintaining that Congress has discretion
7	regarding the convention, the ABA Report discusses the power of Congress with
8 9 10 11 12 13 14 15 16 17 18 19	"Article V explicitly gives Congress the power to call a convention upon receipt of applications from two-thirds of the states legislatures and to choose the mode of ratification of a proposed amendment. We believe that, as a necessary incident of the power to call, Congress has the power initially to determine whether the conditions which give rise to its duty have been satisfied. Once a determination is made that the conditions are present, Congress' duty is clear—it "shall" call a convention. The language of Article V, the debates at the Constitutional Convention of 1787, and the states made in THE FEDERALIST, in the debates in the state ratifying constitutions, and in Congressional debates during the early Congresses make clear the mandatory nature of this duty." 1652
21	REBUTTAL
22
23	The report assumes Congress has a "power" to call a convention. As the
24	Founding Fathers intended that Congress has no discretion in calling a
25	convention, $^{1653}$ then Congress does not possess a "power" but an obligation. The
26	difficulty with the committee's use of the word "power" is the word implies
27	that Congress has the option not to exercise that power.

BRIEF IN SUPPORT OF CONVENTION APPENDIX D-1973 ABA REPORT PAGE 753

-

 $<sup>^{1652}</sup>$  ABA Report at p.20. (emphasis added).  $^{1653}$   $See\ supra$  text accompanying notes 497-513.

1 Clearly, this is the path the committee intends, that a convention call

2 is an option of Congress, not an obligation. As the report states:

3 "...Congress has the power initially to determine whether the conditions 4 which give rise to its duty have been satisfied."

5 The report assumes Congress has a choice in the matter. As the 6 Constitution only establishes a single condition to cause Congress to call a

7 convention, that two-thirds of the states apply, and as Hamilton indicated, 1654

8 a numeric count is all that was intended as the standard by the Founding

9 Fathers, obviously Congress cannot be said to have the "power" to "determine

10 whether the conditions...have been satisfied" as there is only one condition

11 established by the Constitution to satisfy. If the proper number of 12 applications exists, Congress must call, and this numeric total requires no determination of conditions on the part of Congress. Congress is expected to 14 know how to count and do basic fractional mathematics. The ABA Report, on the 15 other hand, urges the creation of any number of pseudo-constitutional or 16 political "conditions" so as to allow Congress as much latitude as possible in 17 exercising its "power", presumably to either deny a convention call or regulate it to such an extent as to render its calling irrelevant and 19 meaningless.

13

18

20 Yet in spite of this, the report furnishes convincing evidence that it

21 was the intent of the Founding Fathers that the calling of a convention be so

22 automatic and devoid of congressional influence that Congress wasn't even

23 supposed to discuss the issue in any manner before calling. 1655

&lt;sup>1654</sup> Id.

&quot;Upon receipt of the first state application for a convention, a debate took place in the House of Representatives on May 5, 1789 as to whether it would be proper to refer that application to committee. A number of

1	The ABA	Report's	position	that	Congress	has	"the	power	to	call	а
---	---------	----------	----------	------	----------	-----	------	-------	----	------	---

- 2 convention" implies Congress has the power not to call a convention unless the
- 3 states are in "concurrence" 1656 with Congress having the sole power to
- 4 determine when this condition exists. This flies directly in the face of the
- 5 clear intent of the Founders and thus must be rejected.

6

7 THE HISTORIC PERSPECTIVE OF THE ABA REPORT

8

- 9 As part of its argument for a "single subject", congressionally
- 10 regulated convention, the ABA Report attempts to use the historic record

Representatives, including Madison, felt it would be improper to do so, since it would imply that Congress had a right to deliberate upon the subject. Madison said that this 'was not the case until two-thirds of the State Legislatures concurred in such application, and then it is out of the power of Congress to decline complying, the words of the Constitution being express and positive relative to the agency Congress may have in case of applications of this nature.' The House thus decided not to refer the application to committee but rather to enter it upon the Journals of Congress and place the original in its files. 1 Annals of Congress, cols. 248-51 (1789)." ABA Report at p.20, endnote 45. (emphasis added).

It is important to remember that, like Morris and Hamilton, Madison was a member of the Committee of Style that wrote the final version of Article V. (See supra text accompanying note 427). Further, it was Madison's proposed article which served as the basis (with amendments from the convention) for Article V. (See supra text accompanying notes 418-458). Thus, Madison certainly understood the meaning and intent of Article V, and most especially the effect of the amendments on it by the 1787 Convention. Therefore, if Madison expressed that the matter should not even be referred to committee in Congress, as this is where deliberations concerning a subject are carried out, and then when two-thirds of the states had applied, expressed it [was] "out of the power of Congress to decline..." the only logical conclusion is that Madison, one of the authors of Article V, meant that Congress had no discretion, including even the discussion of the matter. Clearly, he meant that before the two-thirds threshold, Congress could not discuss the matter because that would imply Congress could deliberate on the matter, and after the two-thirds threshold was reached, Congress could not decline the matter simply because Constitution made it plain there was nothing to discuss. 1656 See supra text accompanying note 1629.

1 surrounding not only the Constitutional Convention of 1787, but state

2 constitutions written at the same time. The report states:

"Both pre-1787 convention practices and the general tenor of amending provisions of the first state constitutions lend support to the conclusions that a convention could be convened for a specific purpose and that, once convened, it would have no authority to exceed that purpose." 1657

7 The report then cites specific examples in the Massachusetts,

- 8 Pennsylvania and Georgia state conventions as examples of specific purpose
- 9 conventions. 1658 In order to justify its interpretation of specific purpose
- 10 conventions, the report attempts to defend this unconstitutional action by
- 11 comparing it with the 1787 Constitutional Convention where accusations of the
- 12 convention exceeding its authority were made. The report states:
- "While the Constitutional Convention of 1787 may have exceeded the purpose of its call in framing the Constitution, it does not follow that a convention convened under Article V and subject to the Constitution can lawfully assume such authority." 1659
- 17 But then the report retracts this contention that the 1787 Convention
- 18 might have exceeded its authority by stating:

19 "Moreover, the Convention of 1787 did not ignore Congress. The draft 20 Constitution was submitted to Congress, consented to by Congress and 21 transmitted by Congress to the states for ratification by popularly-elected 22 conventions." 1660

Despite this, the ABA Report takes the position that:

"[0]rigins and history of Article V indicate that both general and limited conventions were within the contemplation of the Framers."  $^{1661}$

It then continues:

"From this history of the origins of the amending provision, we are led to conclude that there is no justification for the view that Article V sanctions only general conventions. Such an interpretation would relegate the alternative method to an "unequal" method of initiating amendments. Even if the state legislatures overwhelmingly felt that there was a necessity for

3

4

5

6

23

24

25

26

27

28

29 30

31

&lt;sup>1657</sup> ABA Report at p.17.

&lt;sup>1658</sup> Id.

 $^{\rm 1659}$  ABA Report at p.16. The report then added in endnote 33:

&quot;This is because it was called 'for the sole and express purpose of revising the Articles of Confederation and reporting...such alterations and provisions therein as shall...render the federal constitution adequate to the exigencies of government and the preservation of the Union.'"

ABA Report at p.16.

ABA Report at p.13.

limited change in the Constitution, they would be discouraged from calling for a convention if that convention would automatically have the power to propose a complete revision of the Constitution."  $^{1662}$ 4 The report then states: 5 "The necessity for a consensus is underscored by the requirement of a 6 two-thirds vote in each House of Congress or applications for a convention 7 from two-thirds of the states legislatures to initiate an amendment. From the 8 language of Article V we are led to the conclusion that there must be a 9 consensus among the state legislatures as to the subject matter of a convention before Congress is required to call one." 1663 10 11 Insofar as the Convention history itself, the report, in abbreviated form, generally follows the history presented earlier in this suit. 1664 12 13 However, the report does not reach the same conclusions regarding the 14 convention's authority to propose amendments and thus is not to be limited to 15 a single subject. Instead, the report bases its pre-condition of limiting a 16 convention to a single subject on the August 30 proposal. The ABA Report 17 emphasizes the words "an amendment" and "for that purpose" in the August 30 draft. 1665 18 19 Regarding post-Convention discussion, the report states: 20 "There was little discussion of Article V in the state ratifying conventions. In THE FEDERALIST Alexander Hamilton spoke of Article V as 2.1 contemplating "a single proposition." Whenever two-thirds of the states 22 concur, he declared, Congress would be obligated to call a convention. "The 23 words of this article are peremptory. The Congress 'shall call a convention'. 24 Nothing in this particular is left to the discretion of that body." 1666 25 26

REBUTTAL

28

27

 $^{1662}$  ABA Report at p.18.

ABA Report at p.13.(emphasis added).

&lt;sup>1664</sup> See supra text accompanying notes 310-458.

&lt;sup>1665</sup> ABA Report at p.14.

<sup>1666</sup> ABA Report at p.16.

The major problem with the ABA Report and its support of "same subject", 1 insofar as its rendition of constitutional history is concerned, is not so 2 much that the report gets history wrong, but that it ignores the history the 3 report itself describes as the basis for its arguments. 4

5 The primary error of the report is in its loose usage of specific constitutional words such as freely substituting "amendment" for "amendments". 6

7 The Constitution clearly specifies both the Congress and the convention have the power to propose "amendments". 1667 Article V clearly allows for amendments 8

9 to be proposed either by the convention or Congress, and it is clear by the actions of Congress that this can involve the simultaneous proposal of several amendments on various subjects. 1668 11

10

12

13

14

15

16

17

18 19 20

21

In a desperate attempt to prove the validity of its unconstitutional pre-condition, the report freely interchanges the two words with obvious disregard to the differences in their meaning and intent. Such free usage of constitutional words cannot be permitted where such "interpretation" leads to the complete misconstruement of the Constitution. The "s" in "amendments" can no more be ignored than the word "one" contained in the phrase "vested in one Supreme Court" 1669 or the "a" in the phrase "vested in a President" 1670 or "vested in a Congress." 1671 Without these small words, it is possible to have more than one president, Congress or Supreme Court. Ignoring these small words would create horrendous constitutional issues and crises. The smallness of the

BRIEF IN SUPPORT OF CONVENTION APPENDIX D-1973 ABA REPORT PAGE 758

<sup>1667</sup> See supra text accompanying note 2.

&lt;sup>1668</sup> See supra text accompanying note 489.

U.S. CONST., art. III (emphasis added).

1670 U.S. CONST., art. II (emphasis added).

1671 U.S. CONST., art. I (emphasis added).

- 1 letter or the word in the Constitution makes no difference as to its effect
- 2 and cannot be ignored in any legitimate discussion concerning the intent or
- 3 meaning of that document. 1672 Therefore, any legitimate pre-condition
- 4 concerning the scope and power of the convention to propose amendments must
- 5 begin at the point where the Constitution grants the convention the power to
- 6 propose amendments and that these amendments may be simultaneously proposed
- 7 and can cover a multitude of subjects.
- 8 The report's asserts that:
- 9 "The necessity for a consensus is underscored by the requirement [of
- 10 the] applications for a convention from two-thirds of the states legislatures
- 11 to initiate an amendment. ... [T]here must be a consensus among the state
- 12 legislatures as to the subject matter of a convention before Congress is
- 13 required to call one."
- 14 This assertion is inaccurate on its face because the language of Article
- 15 V allows for amendments. 1673 Therefore, the only possible consensus that can
- 16 exist between the states is a consensus to hold a convention in which one or
- more amendments may be proposed.
- 18 How does the ABA Report reach this erroneous conclusion? By basing its
- 19 argument on an early version of Article V, a version the report itself
- 20 concedes was discarded by the Founders with the introduction of Madison's new
- 21 amendatory proposal on September 10, 1787. 1674 In this earlier version, the
- 22 word "amendment" was used, but with the substitution by Madison of an entirely
- 23 new proposal and the decision by the Convention to discard the old amendatory
- 24 proposal, the word "amendment" was likewise discarded in favor of
- 25 "amendments." Thus, the reliance of the report on the August 30, 1787 version

See supra text accompanying notes 700-716,852-867.

<sup>1673</sup> See supra text accompanying note 2.

<sup>1674</sup> ABA Report at p.15.

- 1 of the amendatory proposal is entirely misplaced because that version of the
- 2 amendatory proposal for the Constitution was tossed out by the Founders.
- 3 Any further action by the Founders, including the addition of the Gerry
- 4 amendment to Madison's proposal which "moved to amend the article so as to
- 5 require a Convention on application of 2/3 of the Sts...", 1675 was carried out
- 6 on the Madison substitution, not the August 30 proposal. Thus, any language,
- 7 meaning or intent of that proposal is irrelevant as it no longer was part of
- 8 the 1787 Constitutional Convention process, having been discarded by that
- 9 convention. The report constantly refers to the power of the convention to
- 10 propose "an amendment" 1676 as if somehow repeating this misnomer will make it
- 11 true. Despite the fact the report correctly notes the August 30 proposal was
- dropped by the delegates, 1677 a new proposal by Madison substituted in its
- 13 place, that this new draft first authorized Congress, 1678 then later Congress
- 14 and a convention, 1679 the equal power to propose amendments rather than an
- 15 amendment, and this change was carried forward to the final form of Article
- $^{16}$  V,  $^{^{1680}}$  the report acts as if none of these changes ever occurred.

BRIEF IN SUPPORT OF CONVENTION APPENDIX D-1973 ABA REPORT PAGE 760

 $<sup>^{1675}</sup>$  See supra text accompanying note 437.

&lt;sup>1676</sup> ABA Report at pp.13,20.

&quot;As a result of the debate, the clause adopted on August 30 was dropped in favor of the following provision proposed by Madison:

&quot;'The Legislature of the U-S- whenever two-thirds of both Houses shall deem necessary, or on the application of two-thirds of the Legislatures of the several States, shall propose amendments to this constitution, which shall be valid to all intents and purposes as part thereof, when the same shall have been ratified by three fourths at least of the Legislatures of the several States, or by Conventions in three fourths thereof, as one or the other mode of ratification may be proposed by the Legislatures of the U.S.'" (emphasis added); ABA Report at p.15. See supra text accompanying notes 418-430.

1678 Id.

 $^{\rm 1679}$  See supra text accompanying notes 435-442.

<sup>1680</sup> See supra text accompanying note 2.

1 Clearly it is in the power of the convention to limit itself to a single

2 subject simply by proposing only one amendment concerned with a single

3 subject. But it is not in the power of Congress to mandate that the convention

4 do this. The word "amendments" precludes Congress from doing so. Therefore, a

5 single subject convention, where that convention is limited by Congress as a

6 condition of the call, simply cannot be constitutionally supported. Critics

7 and opponents of the convention will have to take the word amendments and deal

8 with it.

13

15

16

17

20

9 The report attempts to use state conventions and constitutions as a

10 basis to determine how the federal Constitution must be interpreted. The 11 report maintains that in conventions of that time, single amendments and 12 limited conventions were used in the states, and therefore this concept applies to the national amendment process. However, the Supreme Court, in 14 rulings directly related to amendment process, has made it clear that the power of amendment derives from the federal Constitution, not the state constitutions. 1681 Thus, the interpretation of the state constitutions and their amendment processes have no bearing whatsoever on the interpretation of 18 the federal Constitution.

19 Conveniently, the report sidesteps the fact that specific language in each of the examples used in the report allowed for a specific purpose

21 convention and that without such language a specific purpose convention could

22 not be held. It further ignored the fact that no such specific purpose

 $^{1681}$  State of Rhode Island v. Palmer, 253 U.S. 350 (1920), Hawke v. Smith, 253 U.S. 221 (1920).

BRIEF IN SUPPORT OF CONVENTION APPENDIX D-1973 ABA REPORT PAGE 761

- 1 convention language is contained in Article V of the United States
- 2 Constitution.
- 3 The report intimates the 1787 Convention "may have exceeded the purpose
- 4 of its call in framing the Constitution" 1682 and that while it may have been

More significantly, Madison discussed why the Convention proposed a new constitution and basis for it. He said in part:

"From these two acts [Annapolis, September 1786 and Act of Congress, February, 1787] it appears,  $1^{\rm st}$ , that the object of the convention was to establish, in these States, a firm national government;  $2^{\rm nd}$  that this government was to be such as would be adequate to the exigencies of government and the preservation of the union;  $3^{\rm rd}$  that these purposes were to be effected by alterations and provisions in the Articles of Confederation, as it is expressed in the act of Congress, or by such further provisions as should appear necessary, as it stands in the recommendatory act from Annapolis;  $4^{\rm th}$ , that the alterations and provisions were to be reported to Congress, and to the States, in order to be agreed to by the former and confirmed by the latter.

"From a comparison and fair construction of these several modes of expression, is to be deduced the authority under which the convention acted. They were to frame a national government, adequate to the exigencies of government, and of the union, and to reduce the articles of Confederation into such form as to accomplish these purposes.

"There are two rules of construction, dictated by plain reason, as well as founded on legal axioms. The one is, that every part of the expression ought, if possible, be allowed some meaning, and be made to conspire to some common end. The other is, that where the several parts cannot be made to coincide, the less important should give way to the more important part, the means should be sacrificed to the end, rather than the end to the means.

"Suppose then, that the expression defining the authority of the convention were irreconcilably at variance with each other, that a national and adequate government could not possibly, in the judgment of the convention, by affected by alterations and provisions in the Articles of Confederation; which part of the definition ought to have been embraced, and which rejected?"

Madison then continued:

"Let the most scrupulous expositors of delegated powers, let the most inveterate objectors against those exercised by the convention, answer these questions. Let them declare, whether it was of most importance to the happiness of the people of America, that the articles of Confederation should be disregarded, and an adequate government be provided...or than an adequate government should be omitted, and the articles of Confederation preserved."

Madison then said:

"The truth is, that the great principles of the Constitution proposed by the convention may be considered less as absolutely new, than as the expansion of principles which are found in the articles of Confederation. The misfortune under the latter system has been, that these principles are so feeble and confined as to justify all the charges of inefficiency which have been urged against it, and to require a degree of enlargement which gives to the new system the aspect of an entire transformation of the old."

(Footnote Continued Next Page)

 $<sup>^{1682}</sup>$  Madison rebutted this argument directly in FEDERALIST No. 40 by noting that no matter what the 1787 Convention did, it was advisory until ratified by the states and the people. See supra text accompanying note 796.

- 1 permissible then, it does not mean a convention could do so now. The report
- 2 misses the entire purpose and process of Article V. The purpose of the
- 3 convention is to propose amendments and send them to Congress where that body
- 4 decides by which method, legislature or state convention, they shall be
- 5 ratified. As long as the convention limits itself to that single action,
- 6 proposing amendments, it is entirely within the clear meaning of Article V.
- 7 As noted by Madison in FEDERALIST No. 40, the 1787 Convention was also
- 8 in compliance with its instructions. The Convention was to report its actions
- 9 to Congress, which it did, and such actions were without legal effect until
- 10 ratified. Generally less discussed, but equally important is the fact that
- 11 Congress could have refused to send the proposed Constitution to the states
- 12 and people for ratification, but that in the new Constitution such refusal was
- 13 made impossible by the convention clause. Thus, the report and Madison make it
- 14 clear that if the provisions laid out either in the act of Congress in the
- 15 case of 1787 Convention, or in the case of Article V for a present convention,
- 16 the convention is absolutely legal and lawful. By this logic it follows if a

Madison then said:

&quot;Let us view the ground on which the convention stood. It may be collected from their proceedings, that they were deeply and unanimously impressed with the crisis, which had led their country, almost with one voice to make so singular and solemn an experiment for correcting the errors of a system by which this crisis had been produced; that they were no less deeply and unanimously convinced that such a reform as they have proposed was absolutely necessary to effect the purposes of their appointment... They must have reflect, that in all great changes of established governments, forms ought to give way to substance, that a rigid adherence to such cases to the former, would render nominal and nugatory the transcendent and precious right of the people to "abolish or alter their governments as to them shall seem most likely to effect their safety and happiness." FEDERALIST No. 40 (emphasis added in original).

- 1 convention does not follow the provisions laid out by the Constitution, it is
- 2 unlawful and illegal.
- 3 As the report makes it clear using its own examples of state conventions
- 4 that specific, expressed language is needed for a convention to be a specific
- 5 purpose convention, and as the United States Constitution contains no such
- 6 language, it follows that a specific purpose, or "same subject" convention
- 7 cannot be constitutional, and that if attempts are made to limit the
- 8 convention, they are unlawful, illegal and unconstitutional.
- 9 While it may be of some historic interest that state constitutions did
- 10 have limited conventions, it should be remembered that a convention for a
- 11 single state would deal with an entirely different set of political realities
- 12 than would be faced in a national convention where several interests in
- 13 varying subjects might come into play as they did at the 1787 Constitutional
- 14 Convention. It is illogical to believe that delegates who in the very process
- 15 of creating a national government so carefully crafted the balance between the
- 16 state and federal, the large state versus the small, the north versus the
- 17 south, anti-slavery against pro-slavery, would naïvely assume that in the
- 18 future such a diversity of interests would never occur again and therefore
- 19 limit the ability of the nation to deal with such diversity in its amendment
- 20 process to that of a single subject and a single amendment at a time.
- 21 The ABA Report cites Hamilton's discussion of the convention to propose
- 22 amendments in FEDERALIST No. 85 in which Hamilton made it clear that Congress
- 23 had no discretion regarding a convention. It completely ignores his point that

1 the call was to be based on numeric count rather than subject content. $^{1683}$

2 Further, it incorrectly stated that little discussion was done regarding the

3 amendment process at the state conventions. The exact opposite was true. 1684

4 In summary, the reliance of the ABA Report on Convention history is

5 either inaccurate, incomplete or invalid and thus provides no merit to prove

6 its assertions.

7

8 A STATE VETO?

9

10

11

12

13

14

15

The ABA Report holds that the states should have the right to withdraw applications for a convention prior to the two-thirds application requirement being reached. It also holds states should be able to withdraw a vote rejecting a proposed amendment and rescind a vote ratifying a proposed amendment so long as three-fourths of the states have not ratified the amendment. Finally, the ABA Report says that states should have the power

16 to determine whether they agree the subject of the application is to be

 $^{\rm 1683}$  See supra text accompanying notes 495-513.

&lt;sup>1684</sup> See supra text accompanying notes 491-521.

&quot;Finally, we believe it highly desirable for any legislation implementing the convention method of Article V to include the rule that a state legislature can withdraw an application at any time before the legislatures of two-thirds of the states have submitted applications on the same subject, or withdraw a vote rejecting a proposed amendment, or rescind a vote ratifying a proposed amendment so long as three-fourths of the states have not ratified." ABA Report at p.12.

1 considered the same as other subjects proposed by other states in applying for

2 a convention, thus creating a dual filtering system for all applications. 1686

3 The report proposes that not only Congress must have a say on whether

4 all applications satisfying the two-thirds requirement are for the same

5 subject, but each state shall have a say on whether its own application also

6 satisfies the "same subject" pre-condition. Thus, the situation exists where

7 Congress could state that two-thirds of the states have applied for "same

8 subject" only to have such a decision vetoed by a single state, thus defeating

9 the convention procedure.

10

11 REBUTTAL

12

13

14

15

16

17

18

19

The overall effect of these proposals in the ABA Report would be to create a chaotic veto power by the individual states over the calling of a convention to propose amendments by Congress. While it is unlikely a radical group could gain power nationally without great scrutiny, 1687 it is possible that such a group could infiltrate a single legislature or a region of legislatures. Such a group could, under the ABA proposed rules of permitting each state a de facto veto of any congressional call, stymie the entire &quot;From a slightly different point of view, the power to withdraw implies the power to change and this relates directly to the question of determining whether two-thirds of the state legislatures have applied for a convention to consider the same subject. A state may wish to say specifically through its legislature that it does or does not agree that its proposal covers the same subject as that of other state proposals. The Committee feels that this power is desirable." ABA Report at p.37.

1687 See supra text accompanying note 792.

- 1 convention clause by use of a small number of legislators. This was clearly
- 2 not the intention of the Founding Fathers. Indeed, much of the impetus for
- 3 calling the convention, as Madison noted, had to do with disallowing a single
- 4 state the ability to veto the desires of the other states. 1688
- 5 Further, there is a clear conflict in the report itself between this
- 6 proposal and its earlier position of allowing Congress to determine whether
- 7 "same subject" had been satisfied. Assuming "same subject", which this suit
- 8 rejects but allows solely for the purpose of this rebuttal, 1690 what the report
- 9 proposes is first allowing Congress to determine whether the applications are
- 10 of the same subject, then allowing each state a veto of that decision.
- 11 This would create complete constitutional chaos. If Congress called a
- 12 convention, for example, then one state "changed" its mind and said its
- 13 application was not of the same subject as what Congress had determined was
- 14 the same subject, would the two-thirds threshold still be met? The report's

&quot;The forbearance can only have proceeded from an irresistible conviction of the absurdity of subjecting the fate of twelve States to the perverseness or corruption of a thirteenth, from the example of inflexible opposition given by a majority of one sixtieth of the people of America to a measure approved and called for by the voice of twelve States, comprising fifty-nine sixtieths of the people, an example still fresh in the memory and indignation of every citizen who has felt for the wounded honor and prosperity of his country." FEDERALIST No. 40 (J. Madison) (emphasis is original).

See supra text accompanying note 1643. "The standards...will determine...a judgment that two-thirds of the state legislatures seek a convention on an agreed-upon matter." ABA Report at p.20.

Compare this with ABA Report at p.37:

&quot;A state may wish to say specifically through its legislature that it does or does not agree that its proposal covers the same subject as that of other state proposals." (See supra text accompanying note 1686).

1690 As this suit holds that applications for a convention should be based solely on the numeric count application provided by the several states, the subject matter becomes irrelevant. Therefore, this constitutional trap, under the numeric count concept, is never sprung whereas if "same subject" is accepted, the issues raised here could thwart a Congress or the several states for years in any attempt at holding a convention. We would be repeating the same mistake, i.e., allowing individual states to veto the actions of other states, discovered by the Founding Fathers in the Articles of Confederation.

1 proposals violate the separation of powers doctrine at a fundamental level

2 allowing individual states to veto lawful congressional actions as well as

3 lawful actions by other states.

9

10

11

12

13

14

15

16

17

18 19 20

21

4 The situation is rendered even more chaotic in that the ABA report does

5 not even allow the courts to repair the problem. Under the ABA proposals, the 6 courts would be limited to merely declaring the matter "clearly erroneous"

7 which would not be enough judicial review to answer the problem posed as

8 above. 1691 Thus, such proposals must be rejected outright.

The question then becomes whether or not the states have the ability to rescind applications prior to the two-thirds mark required by the Constitution being reached. While this concept of state withdrawal may present some intuitive appeal, such as allowing that when only one state had applied for a convention, there can be no harm in its withdrawal of the application, that appeal quickly vanishes when it is realized that the withdrawal could come at moment timed to create substantial constitutional chaos. The withdrawal could be made just when two-thirds of the states have applied for a convention, but before Congress can respond. Fortunately, the general trend regarding state acts in relation to causing a federal function to occur seems to be a one-way applications. When voting, citizens do not have the power to withdraw their votes once cast. Likewise, state legislatures composed of citizens should be street. 1692 This one-way street should be followed in the matter of

BRIEF IN SUPPORT OF CONVENTION APPENDIX D-1973 ABA REPORT PAGE 768

&quot;[T]he Committee believes that should be several limits on judicial consideration. First, a Congressional determination should be overturned only if 'clearly erroneous.'" ABA Report at p.28.

See supra text accompanying notes 894-881.

1	held to the same standard: the consideration of the action is made previous to
2	the action, not afterwards.
3	This proposal by the ABA is nothing more than an attempt to allow for
4	factions inside the state legislatures to stymie the Constitution so as to
5	provide a back-up plan to those opposed to a convention should national
6	opposition fail. It would in fact establish a system of vetoes by individual
7	states that would not only stymie the wishes of Congress, but of other
8	individual states. This kind of veto is clearly unconstitutional and thus
9	deserves no further comment.
10
11	ONLY AMENDMENTS ON SINGLE SUBJECTS
12
1 2	To it a summany the ADA Deposit states:
13	In its summary, the ABA Report states:
14	"In summary, we believe that a substantively-limited Article V
15 16	convention is consistent with the purpose of the alternative method since the states and the people would have a complete vehicle other than the Congress
17	for remedying specific abuses of power by the national government; consistent
18	with the actual history of the amending article throughout which only
19	amendments on single subjects have been proposed by Congress" 1693
20	REBUTTAL
21
21
22	The problem with this conclusion is that it completely contradicts the
	The problem with this conclusion is that it completely contradicts the report's earlier conclusions. The report clearly favors heavy congressional 22
22 23	report's earlier conclusions. The report clearly favors heavy congressional $^{\rm 1693}$  ABA Report at p.19. (emphasis added).

- 1 convention, the limits of the convention's authority and even whether Congress
- 2 must submit a proposed amendment to the states for ratification. 1694 With such
- 3 congressional control, the term "complete vehicle other than Congress" can
- 4 hardly apply.
- 5 The second problem with this passage is it redefines the term "single
- 6 subject." As with the rest of the report, the change is subtly, but
- 7 effectively, done. If the meaning of the report is simply that no more than
- 8 one amendment should be offered by a proposing body concerning any single
- 9 subject at any one time, there can be no argument. To have otherwise would be
- 10 constitutional chaos. Clearly, the ratification process does not allow for
- 11 multiple choice amendments.
- 12 However, based on the context of the rest of the report, the report is
- 13 obviously attempting an even tighter control over a convention to propose
- 14 amendments. The report states incorrectly that "only amendments on single
- 15 subjects" 1695 have ever been proposed by Congress or are contained in the
- 16 Constitution. The implication is that this translates into a justification to
- 17 limit the subjects discussed or proposed by a convention to propose amendments
- 18 at any time. In truth, Congress has proposed more than one amendment at a
- 19 time, 1696 and several amendments in the Constitution include several subjects
- 20 within a single amendment. 1697 As Congress itself has not seen fit to limit

ABA Report at p.20. See supra text accompanying notes 1589-1693.

<sup>1695</sup> ABA Report at p.19.

<sup>1696</sup> See supra text accompanying note 489.

The First Amendment deals with religion, speech, assembly, the media, and the right to petition the government. While these rights can be lumped under a group heading such as "freedom of expression", nevertheless these are completely separate subjects and unrelated to one another except as they are placed together in First Amendment. The proof of this lies in the fact that the Supreme Court has interpreted each right in a different manner, i.e., it

1 itself as prescribed by the report, there is no reason to maintain that a

2 convention equal in constitutional power and authority to Congress in

3 proposing amendments can be so bound by such congressionally created

4 constraints unless such restraints are also placed on Congress.

5 Such restraints would include having an outside body determine what

6 subjects regarding amendments it may discuss, requiring two-thirds of each

7 body of Congress to be in concurrence regarding the subject before any subject can even be discussed on the floor of Congress, and allowing an outside body

9 the power to remove members of Congress from their duly elected offices should

10 that outside body find disfavor or disagreement with any amendment Congress

11 might propose. Obviously Congress would, or should, never agree to such terms but has no problem attempting to enforce them when it is they who are the regulators rather than the regulated.

14 The same subject pre-condition as proposed by the ABA requires two-thirds of the states to agree before a convention is convened on a particular subject, and it subjects the states' right to a convention to regulation or outright veto by Congress. It presents so many constitutional Pandora's boxes that the validity of the pre-condition is destroyed by the pre-condition

19 itself.

8

12

13

15

16

17

18

has never formulated a generalized ruling applicable to all of these rights that is then applied across the board without further consideration.

Similarly, the 14th Amendment has at least three different subjects contained within it. The first subject is equal protection under the law, the second subject deals with congressional apportionment and the last subject of the amendment is a loyalty oath.

1698 See supra text accompanying note 2.

1	In any event, the complexity of "same subject" falls away against the
2	clear, simple intent of the Founding Fathers. The convention call is based on
3	a simple numeric count of the states that desire a convention to propose
4	amendments. Congressional power in the matter is limited strictly to the
5	issuance of a call. The call consists of acknowledging the proper number of
6	states has applied and the recommendation of a time and place for the
7	convention to convene. The congressional power then terminates. The convention
8	then proposes amendments which are neither subject to congressional review nor
9	approval. The Congress then chooses a method of ratification, either through
10	the state legislatures or state conventions, and the states vote on
11	ratification of the proposed amendments. The amendments are then approved or
12	rejected by the states and, with this vote, the matter ends.
13
14	APPENDIX BREBUTTAL
15
16	While the ABA Report cites several sources in its bibliography as
17	evidence to support its arguments, a careful examination of the report leads
18	to the conclusion that most if not all of its major conclusions are based on
19	Appendix B of the report in which the actual applications by the states are
20	discussed and summarized. In particular, the "same subject" proposal is
21	basically justified in Appendix B. Thus the credibility of Appendix B is
22	crucial to the credibility of the entire report.
23	It fails miserably in this important responsibility.
24	In such an important area as establishing national policy on a
25	fundamental issue as the interpretation of the amendatory process of the
26	United States Constitution, it is not unreasonable to expect those so BRIEF IN SUPPORT OF CONVENTION APPENDIX D-1973 ABA REPORT PAGE 772

1 proposing to satisfy the bare minimums of accuracy. This is particularly true

2 where authors of such a report are "professionals", whose job it is to

3 accurately express language in a precise form. In short, it is expected that

4 lawyers know their facts and can demonstrate they have mastered the basics of 5 an elementary school education before they attempt to tell other citizens how

6 their Constitution should be interpreted. When it is shown that such lawyers

7 do not have a grasp of such rudimentary skills, the credibility of their

8 recommendations must be thrown into grave doubt if not outright disrepute.

9 Appendix B purports to discuss the history of applications by the states
10 but is in fact nothing more than a slanted view of history by the author of

Appendix B designed to discredit the applications. Much of Appendix B relies on a single work which, for whatever reason, was not deemed publishable at the 13 university to which it was submitted. The author of the report does use a

14 Library of Congress study, but there is no indication the author actually made any intellectual effort to verify or to discover this vital information on her 16 own. Instead reliance was made entirely on other works, one of which was unpublished. Such reliance on unpublished works in the light of there being public record available brings the intellectual quality and value of the work

19 into question.

11

12

15

17

18 20 21

22

23

24

This of lack of intellectual effort is particularly important in that the author creates as a centerpiece of her work a table purporting to show all the applications submitted up to 1973: some 356 applications, according to the table. The table is now entirely out of date as the states have submitted nearly 200 additional applications for a convention since 1973. However,

25 ignoring its dated information there are major errors with the table that are

1 significant whether the date is 1973 or the present date: 1) the number of

2 applying state applications provided by the author add up to a total of 360

3 applications not 356 applications, thus showing the author has questionable

4 math skills, and 2) according to the author herself all applications are not

5 universally accepted by all of the sources cited in Appendix B.

6 Intellectual honesty demands the author do independent research to come

7 up with a definitive, verifiable single list of applications made by the 8 states for a convention to propose amendments. The author apparently was unwilling to do this, and as the primary sources of information available to the author were obviously avoided, the credibility of the entire appendix, 11 and thus the report, comes into the question.

10

13

14

15

16

12 There are other inaccuracies in Appendix B. One concerns the author's understanding of history. In the appendix, the report states: "In 1860 the secession of the lower southern states seemed probable." 1700 As the state of South Carolina seceded from the Union in December, 1860, the use of the word

"probable" becomes laughable if it were not for the fact it indicates the 17 author's historical knowledge, at least as demonstrated in this specific work,

18 is questionable at best. As to the errors of the report such as President

19 Rossevelt instead of President Roosevelt and using the word "devisive" meaning

&lt;sup>1699</sup> There is no indication the author referred to the Congressional Record which is where all applications are filed by Congress, as did Senior Federal District Court Judge Bruce Van Sickle. Further, a second source ignored by the author of Appendix B would have been the secretaries of state of the individual states. As the ABA Report Committee was in existence for two years prior to its publishing of its report, it is reasonable to assume there was sufficient time for such research to have been conducted. In such a vital area of constitutional procedure, the use of one or the other of these primary sources is obligatory.

<sup>1700</sup> ABA Report at p.74.

- 1 "invented or contrived" when obviously the writer meant "divisive" meaning
- 2 "divided", this suit merely assumes the author is simply unprofessional.
- 3 In Appendix B, the author completes the obvious attempt of the ABA
- 4 Report to limit a convention to propose amendments in such a manner as to
- 5 render this constitutional provision meaningless. As usual, the effort is
- 6 subtle but nevertheless present. In discussing polygamy, the author implies
- 7 that state applications must be identical in order to be valid. The report
- 8 said:
- 9 "From 1906 to 1916 twenty-six states made almost identical applications 10 requesting a convention to propose an amendment prohibiting polygamous 11 marriages."
- 12 The implication is obvious. If even one word is different in the
- 13 application, such as a missing comma, then Congress can reject them.
- 14 Based on the overall premise of the ABA Report that Congress shall have a
- 15 substantial, if not total regulatory role in the convention, it is a logical
- 16 conclusion that based on the report's premise (not that of this suit) that if
- 17 Congress does not act, there is no validity in any state action regarding a
- 18 convention to propose amendments. Phrased another way, the report contends it
- 19 requires consent by Congress for a state application or action to be valid.
- 20 The ABA Report maintains the states have right to recess their
- 21 applications prior to the two-thirds mark being reached. The states have
- 22 submitted recessions of applications in the past as noted in Appendix B
- 23 particularly in the effort by the states to rescind the 16th Amendment, but if
- 24 the ABA Report is to be consistent, these recessions must be considered

ABA Report at p.70.
ABA Report at p.12.

_

 $<sup>^{1701}</sup>$  ABA Report at p.76.

1 invalid until they are approved by Congress. Congress has not approved any of 2 them.

12

14

15

18

22

3 Thus, based on the report's own assertion of congressional approval

4 prior to effect, it must be assumed that as Congress has not given its

5 permission for the recessions to be valid, they are without effect, and all

6 "same subject" applications presented in Appendix B are still in effect, the 7 original applications simply having been ignored by Congress. This suit

8 entirely disagrees with this conclusion. The report cannot have it both ways:

it cannot hold the convention procedure requires congressional approval, then

10 support the notion of independent state recession absent congressional

11 approval. Notably, Appendix B attempts to maintain that the problems the "same subject" applications attempted to solve have, in some cases, been resolved,

13 but nowhere is it stated that these applications submitted by the states to resolve the problems noted no longer have effect. Instead, the author attempts to justify congressional avoidance of the applications by maintaining the 16 subject is no longer politically valid. 1703

17 The logic of the report and Appendix B is flawed. If, as the report recommends, that state recession of applications must be permitted, it follows

19 that such actions by the states are now, according to the opinion of the 20 report and this suit, not permitted. If such actions were permissible under 21 the Constitution, there would be no purpose for the recommendation. Hence, the report holds that the states may not recess their applications under any 23 circumstances until their recommendations are accepted by Congress, at which

_

 $<sup>^{1703}</sup>$  ABA Report at p.80-81.

- 1 time, such recessions will require the permission of Congress to be effective.
- 2 Thus, currently, all same subject applications are valid.
- 3 What of the report's contention that Congress must pass on the content
- 4 of applications before they are considered effective? As Congress has never
- 5 acted on this interpretation of the report and could have done so at any time,
- 6 thus dispensing with the applications by a simple legislative act, it is
- 7 logical to assume Congress does not agree with the report's interpretation.
- 8 True, legislation such as the Hatch Bill<sup>1704</sup> has attempted to establish the
- 9 power of Congress, but the plain fact is Congress has rejected such attempts
- 10 and thus has rejected the report's assertions of congressional regulation.
- 11 If all same subject applications are therefore valid, what is the effect
- 12 of these applications? Unlike this suit's assertion that state applications
- 13 are intended to cause the calling of a convention and regardless of content
- 14 have no further constitutional effect, the same cannot be said for same
- 15 subject applications.
- In the table of Appendix B, the author states there have been forty-two
- 17 applications by the states requesting repeal of the 16th Amendment. Even with
- 18 the removal of duplicate applications from the same states, this leaves
- 19 thirty-five states applying for repeal of the 16th Amendment. In addition,
- 20 allowing for the removal of duplicate applications from the same state,
- 21 thirty-seven states have applied for an amendment dealing with apportionment
- 22 in state legislatures. The significance of this fact is that none of these
- 23 applications are combined in Appendix B with the "general" applications shown

-

&lt;sup>1704</sup> See supra text accompanying notes 596-608.

- 1 in that table. Such a combination only serves to make the above numbers
- 2 larger, thus exposing the hypocrisy of the report even more.
- 3 Thus, under the premise advanced by the ABA Report itself, at least two
- 4 amendatory proposals should not have only triggered a convention to propose
- 5 amendments, but should now be amendments to the Constitution of the United
- 6 States. This clear expression of the will of the people has been blocked by
- 7 Congress, and despite the report's "support" of "same subject" there is no
- 8 protest in the report of this action of Congress.
- 9 This point is obvious in the backpedaling of Appendix B when discussing
- 10 the state applications. Intellectual honesty demands any published work have
- 11 enough belief in its findings to unequivocally support them. If the authors of
- 12 a work do not have enough belief in their own findings, how can it be expected
- 13 others can have any faith in them?
- 14 This lack of faith is evident in Appendix B. The ABA Report asserts
- 15 categorically that it "...considers[s] Congress' duty to call a convention
- 16 whenever two-thirds of the state legislatures have concurred on the subject
- 17 matter of the convention to be mandatory." The report further states:
- 18 "Equally improper, we believe, would be standards which permitted
- 19 Congress to exercise a policy-making role in determing whether or not to call
- 20 a convention." 1706
- 21 This suit will leave it to the authors of the report to explain how
- 22 Congress cannot have "a policy-making role in determing whether or not to call
- 23 a convention" yet "has the power initially to determine whether the conditions
- 24 which give rise to its duty have been satisfied." 1707

 $<sup>^{1705}</sup>$  ABA Report at p.11.

 $<sup>^{1706}</sup>$  ABA Report at p.21.

<sup>1707</sup> ABA Report at p.20.

1 In any event, based on the information provided in Appendix B, it is

2 clear the states have satisfied "same subject". Yet the report repudiates its

3 entire assertion of "same subject" by maintaining its information is an

4 "overview" only and states:

"The table maximized the number of applications, i.e., whenever any source recognizes an application, it has been included in the table. For this reason it must be emphasized that the totals are valuable only as an overview and not for the purpose of determining whether any two-thirds of the states have applied for a convention on any given category"  $^{1708}$

If the summation of applications for "same subject" by the states cannot be used "for the purpose of determining whether any two-thirds of the states have applied for a convention on any given category," what good is the summation? As the entire purpose of the applications, "same subject" or numeric, is for the specific purpose of amending the Constitution, the use of application records for an "overview" is entirely irrelevant, their only purpose being to cause a convention for amending the Constitution. Thus, they must be viewed in this context and no other. The report attempts instead to use Appendix B to arrive at a definite "maybe" on the validity of the applications (thus defeating them) while at the same time maintaining emphatic regulations by Congress exist, and that Congress, should the states satisfy "same subject," must call a convention. Either the report holds the applications satisfy "same subject" or they do not.

Thus, as Appendix B repudiates this purpose with the above cited quotation, the conclusion regarding the report is obvious: like the applications it attempts to repudiate, it itself is irrelevant. The report provides an "overview" of a interpretation of the amendatory process of the

 $<sup>^{1708}</sup>$  ABA Report at p.59.

- 1 Constitution that is so full of contradictions, retractions and backpedaling
- 2 that even if Congress were disposed to write legislation along the lines
- 3 prescribed in the report, it would be impossible. The ABA Report must be
- 4 relegated to the dustbin. It serves no other useful purpose than to
- 5 demonstrate what not to attempt in defining the intent of the Founding Fathers
- 6 regarding Article V of the United States Constitution.

7